Yet said patent has been artfully and successfully employed in such manner as to enable the great corporation now owning it to wrongfully establish and maintain a close monopoly of the broad art and business of supplying electric speaking telephones to all the citizens of the United States. The income thus wrongfully derived amounts to many millions per annum, to the great wrong and injury of the citizens of the United States generally, who are forced to pay exorbitant prices, and get therefor a telephone service far inferior to that which would be furnished if the said monopoly were overthrown and a free and fair competition allowed. This to the great detriment also of many worthy inventors and discoverers of improvements in said art, who hold letters patent for the same from the United States, but which are rendered valueless in the hands of these bona fide inventors and improvers by reason of the close and complete monopoly thus wrongfully set up and maintained under said patent.

(8) That no grant should be allowed to stand without inquiry as to its bona fides and validity, when procured in flagrant disregard of law and established usage of the Patent Office; and such was the case with the Bell grant of March 7, 1876, as the following facts will show:

First. On the very day that said Bell filed his application for said grant (February 14, 1876), Elisha Gray filed a caveat for an electric-speaking telephone, in which the principal design and devices were set forth with such clearness and fulness as to manifest beyond question the object of the caveat.

Second. By the positive command of the act of Congress on the subject this caveat should have been filed among the "confidential archives" of the Patent Office, and "preserved in secrecy," yet, in a few days thereafter, without the knowledge or consent of said Gray, the secrets of this caveat were made known to said Bell by an official in the Patent Office; and after said knowledge, and in view of the same, said Bell, on the 29th of February, 1876, made an important and material amendment to his said application.

Third. And within a few days, and whilst the contents of said caveat were still supposed to be held in the inviolable secrecy of the Patent Office, said Bell publicly claimed the very means and devices by which the said Gray caveat proposed to transmit articulate speech, and which means and devices were not specified, claimed, or described in the application of said Bell of February 14, 1876.

Fourth. The examiner of patents being of opinion that there was interference between the said Gray caveat and Bell application, in accordance with the practice of the Patent Office, in order that such proceedings might be had, touching the supposed interference, as the law provides in such cases, without the knowledge or consent of Gray, and in the interest of said Bell, said suspension was removed, and a grant issued without delay to said Bell. This could only be accomplished by over-riding and disregarding the established rule of the Patent Office, which forbade the counting of fractions of days; acts done on the same day were in sense of this rule done simultaneously. Yet, in this instance, said Bell, without the knowledge or consent of said Gray, was allowed the benefit of a fraction of a day upon the pretense of subserving the ends of justice. But nothing could be further from the truth, as the material matter was not whether one of these papers was filed a few hours before the other, but which was entitled to priority of discovery and invention in the interfering matter of Gray, the caveator, or Bell, the applicant; and on the question the merit of priority was with said Gray.

(9) That Philip Reis, a learned German, who died in 1874, was the real author and inventor of the electric-speaking telephone. That everything done since that day has been by way of improving the art which he discovered, made known, and successfully employed.

Every essential principle contained in the electric-speaking telephone of the present day is contained in the art as discovered and expressed by said Reis, in written description thereof, drawings, models, plates, and designs of the same, all of which were well known in Europe and in the United States prior to 1870. Yet, with unparalleled audacity and perseverance, those interested in said Bell patent assert that the said art, as discovered and expressed by said Reis, was inherently defective in principle. That it was incapable of sending and delivering speech, and that no amount of improvement in construction could by possibility make it do so. They procured a ruling from one of the inferior courts that the Reis conception of the art and his device for an electric-speaking telephone were so defective in the principles thereof that a century of improvement in construction would not make it send and deliver speech as an electric-speaking telephone. This decision has been followed by other inferior courts, not because it was right, but because it was made.

Upon the correctness of this ruling and the truth of the fundamental facts on which it rests depends the validity of the claim of said Bell to be the founder of the broad art, and that it is secured and covered by said Bell grants; because, passing by other objections to this claim, if that of Reis is good it anticipates Bell by many years and completely overthrows it. We have the proofs and means of conclusively demonstrating that this vital fact is adverse to the Bell claim, and directly contrary to the said judicial expression so procured in the interest of said Bell grant.

First. We can establish by many credible witnesses that the Reis electric-speaking telephone successfully transmitted and delivered articulate speech on many occasions in the life-time of said Reis.

Second. That it has done so since his death upon a great many occasions can be shown by a large number of credible and disinterested witnesses.

Third. We know the fact ourselves from actual tests which we witnessed.

Fourth. As conclusive and final, we herewith exhibit to you Reis instruments, made in strict conformity to the principles laid down by him, and beg that you test them for yourself, and know, as a fact beyond question or cavil, that they are capable electric-speaking telephones, and that it is a grave error to assert that they are inherently defective in principle and incurably incapable of transmitting and delivering articulate speech, and that a century of mere improvements in construction could not make them do so. And, that there may be no room for mistake, and as the highest evidence we can furnish of our good faith, when you have tested these Reis instruments, we propose to leave them in your custody, to the end that, in open court, they may speak for themselves, and thus conclusively refute and forever silence the groundless charge that they are without capacity to receive, send, and deliver articulate speech as electric-speaking telephones.

Fifth. We submit for a similar test, and to be used in the same way, what are known as the Vander Weyde instruments, which are mere improvements on the Reis art, and are capable of receiving and delivering articulate speech, antedating several years the invention and discoveries of said Bell. We propose to let them talk for themselves in open court, face to face with those who assert that they are mutes, and therefore cannot talk.

We also submit for your inspection, and to be used in evidence, the Pickering instrument, which is an improved Reis telephone, antedating the alleged Bell discoveries, and capable of transmitting and delivering articulate speech, as electric-speaking telephone, and which was known to said Bell prior to his alleged discovery and invention in the said art of telephony.

(10) That said Bell and mesne owners of said Bell grants have suppressed and endeavored to suppress and conceal important evidence of the actual state of the art, and which, if obtained and used against their claim, would show that said Bell was not the original and first inventor of said art, and that it was not a new art, but was well known at the time of his alleged discovery and invention.

(11) That while said letters patent do not claim, in any specific phraseology, or form of words, in the specifications of the alleged discovery and invention of said Bell, the art of transmitting speech by the employment of electricity as an agency therein, and do not set up a claim to the art of telephony, yet said Bell and those claiming under him colorably use and employ the said patent of March 7, 1876, as covering and embracing said art, and as of giving and securing to them monopoly thereof.

Under this colorable claim, said Bell and those claiming under him are wrongfully usurping a franchise, in holding out and claiming that said Bell is the founder and original inventor of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech in every mode in which electricity is employed as one of the agents of said transmission, and when their pretense in this respect is contested they point to the fifth claim in said letters patent as containing such grant and as securing to them art as new, and have obtained through some of the inferior courts the erroneous declaration that said claim is warranted by said letters patent, to the great wrong and injury of the citizens of the United States.

(12) That, well knowing that he was not the founder of the art of transmitting speech by the electric speaking telephone, and also that the said letters patent of March 7, 1876, neither in the drawings, specifications, nor claims in said letters patent describes any apparatus or device by which articulate speech could be transmitted through the instrumentality of electricity as perfectly or as well as articulate speech had for years prior to his alleged invention been transmitted through the instrumentality of electricity by the use of well-known pre-existing devices, methods, and apparatus; and feeling therefore insecure in the grant supposed to be contained in said letters patent, the said Bell sought to fortify himself in his wrongful claim and more completely secure to himself the monopoly contained in said letters patent, and, to further impose on the Government of the United States and the Patent Office, on or about the — January, 1877, made another application for a patent and grant to be issued to him of the letters patent No. 186787, dated January 13, 1877, which said letters patent purport to be granted to him for the specific device and apparatus for transmitting articulate speech through the instrumentality of electricity. That at the time said Bell applied for and obtained said last-named letters patent he well knew that every material and substantial part, portion, device, element, and combination of the apparatus and device described and set forth in the drawings and specifications of said last-named letters patent were not, nor any part thereof, the invention or discovery of the said Bell, but that the separate elements, considered either separately or combined, were taken bodily by him from well-known and pre-existing apparatus and devices and plans invented and contrived by others for the purpose of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity, for a long time prior to his pretended invention, and in common use among scientific men and in institutions of public learning; and not content with thus wrongfully claiming for himself the apparatus, combination, and device of others, he, and those claiming under him, wrongfully used his said last-named letters patent to fortify and protect them in their monopoly for the transmission of articulate speech, claimed to have been granted to said Bell in said former patent, and he so framed the several claims in said last-named letters patent as on the face thereof to give him and his assignees the practical monopoly of well known and essential devices used and combined in all instruments for the transmission of articulate speech by electricity; and now those claiming under him hold on to both of said letters patent as not only giving them a monopoly of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, but of all the essential parts of apparatus by which the transmission of speech by electricity can be effected, and is at the present time accomplished, basing the claim to a close and complete monopoly upon said letters patent.

(13) That said Alexander Graham Bell has, by conveyances duly recorded in the Patent Office, transferred his entire interest in said patents to a corporation called the American Bell Telephone Company, which is using the same fraudulently and oppressively, to the citizens of the United States. That said company charges exorbitant prices for inferior telephone service, to the exclusion of a cheaper and better service, which would be furnished by bona fide owners of improved devices and apparatus for said art and secured by letters patent of the United States, if not so excluded by said monopoly, to the great injury and damage of citizens of the United States.

(14) That said American Bell Telephone Company has stationed its agents and emissaries in all parts of the United States, with a view of purchasing all telephone devices and apparatus from the owners hereof, who are threatened in the event of any assertion of their rights, or in the event of using their own patented inventions, with expensive and harassing litigation, based upon said fraudulent Bell patent, and by these means said company has, in effect, rendered useless and valueless in the hands of honest owners franchise, rights, and property held by grant from the United States, and which, but for these practices, would not only be of great value to the owners, but to the citizens at large of the United States.

(15) Outside of the owners, paid agents, emissaries, and counsel of said monopoly there is a general and deep-seated conviction that said Bell was not the founder of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech through the instrumentality of electricity, and that the monopoly built upon that assumption is grossly oppressive and unjust to the citizens of the United States.

(16) In view of the importance of telephony in the transaction of business, its constantly growing use as an instrument of commerce, the vast value of property rights and interest affected thereby, the general belief that said monopoly was wrongfully and unjustly obtained, and the conclusive evidence herein laid before you, that said belief is well founded, we respectfully submit that it is of great concern to all the citizens of the United States that steps be at once set on foot looking to a prompt issue and determination, by judicial inquiry, in a suit brought by the United States Government itself, to determine the validity and the extent and range of rights granted and secured, if any, by said Bell patent. If said patents have merits, then the owners themselves should be anxious for such a decisive test. If they have not, then, to the citizens at large of the United States, it is a question of the greatest concern that there be an early and authoritative determination to that effect.

We therefore respectfully invite your earnest attention to this communication and the inclosures, and request that you report on the same to the Department of Justice to the end that leave may be granted you to institute suit, in the proper form, in the name of the United States against said American Bell Telephone Company, or whoever may be found to be the owner of said two Bell patents, so that complete judicial inquiry may be made into the validity of each of them, and a determination, upon such inquiry, whether the said patents are effected by fraud and void on that account, or void for any other cause, and, also, whether they should be recalled and vacated; and that these questions be thus put at issue by the United States Government, and finally determined in its courts.

We have the honor to remain yours, very respectfully,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN, New Orleans, La.

CHARLES P. HUNTINGTON, Mississippi.

J. R. BECKWITH, New Orleans, La.

GEORGE GANTT, Memphis, Tenn.

The WITNESS. In connection with the letter there were some affidavits; I do not recall them all. I recollect one from a man named Wilbur from the Patent Office, and also the file wrapper and contents duly authenticated by the Commissioner of Patents, relating to the application of Mr. Bell for this patent.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you that file wrapper?

The WITNESS. I have a document here which contains that and other things which I can furnish to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Please do so.

Mr. EDEN. They had better go into the record.

Q. What file wrapper was that?—A. What they call the file wrapper and contents relating to the proceedings in Bell's application for a patent.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you that here?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. That, you state, was on the 2d of September?—A. Yes, sir; on the 2d of September.

Q. And you took up the papers immediately?—A. Yes, sir; I took up the papers and I spent the day and night upon them. I read first the letter of the district attorney, then I read the memorial and the affidavits and exhibits, and I think there were two questions only which I had to consider; first, whether the Department had the power to order the suit, and secondly, whether the documents and papers presented to me made a prima facie case. I examined a good many authorities as to the power of the Department to order such a suit, and became satisfied it could only be brought in that way. In the second place I thought the papers made out a prima facie case; in other words, probable cause for the institution of such a suit. I did not undertake to decide how a court would finally decide it upon the merits; I formed no opinion upon that myself, and have not yet; but I became fully satisfied from the papers presented to me in that way that there was a case made out entitling them to go into court to test the validity of this patent.

Q. Did you give this application preference over other business in your office?—A. No, sir; I think not. I do not remember everything that was done that day; but I treated it like ordinary routine business. I know I examined the papers pretty carefully and worked upon them that night.

Q. Had you been requested by any person to make a speedy decision upon the application?—A. No, sir.

Q. I believe you have stated that you had no conversation with any one before that.—A. I had no conversation or intimation from any one that there was such a suit in contemplation, and no human being ever spoke to me about it until that morning when Senator Harris and Mr. Casey Young came in and asked me if I had received such an application.

Q. Can you recall another visit from Senator Harris, a second visit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what occurred at that time?—A. On the next day—according to my recollection now, I am sure it was the next day—the morning of the 3d, Colonel Young came into the office first and asked me if I had received the application from the district attorney. I said yes, I had received it and acted upon it. He did not take a seat, but turned around and immediately left. Shortly after he went out Senator Harris came in and said, “I have just met Colonel Young, who tells me that you have given directions to the district attorney to bring suit.” I said, “Yes.” I got up and met him part of the way in the room, and asked him to take a seat. He said, “No, I will not sit down,” and asked me if he could see a copy of the letter. I told him it was down stairs with the clerk to be sent off in the regular mail, and he might go there and see it, but that I could tell him that it was simply a direction to the district attorney to institute the suit.

Mr. EDEN. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this would be the proper place for that order to go into the record.

The WITNESS. I haven't that with me, but I will furnish it so that it may go into the record.

The examination of the witness was suspended temporarily to allow Senator Harris to make a statement to the committee.

Senator HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the committee that I have made a number of corrections, most of them merely verbal, though some of them are not, and to save time (for it would take a good deal of time to go through all the necessary corrections) I would suggest that you appoint a subcommittee of one or two on the subject that I will meet at any hour that is convenient, and go through with them, and indicate such corrections as I desire to make. This would save the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think there is any need of a subcommittee for that purpose?

Senator HARRIS. Oh, I simply wanted the committee to understand the corrections that I have made in the proof of the testimony. That is the only reason I suggest it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to allowing Senator Harris to correct his testimony as he may wish?

Mr. EDEN. I have no objection to his doing so.

Mr. RANNEY. I have looked over hastily the corrections Senator Harris desires to make, and suppose we should have the same rule apply in regard to him as to others in that matter. Of course there would be no objection to his making some of the corrections, but I observe he has made some considerable changes in portions of his testimony.

Mr. EDEN. I do not suppose Senator Harris would make any material changes in his testimony without calling the attention of the committee to it.

Senator HARRIS. Of course not. I want the committee to understand distinctly every correction I make.

Mr. RANNEY. The most of them are matters of grammar or taste.

Senator HARRIS. Yes, sir; the most of them are, either in substance or taste.

Mr. EDEN. I think that in matters of grammar or taste the witness should be allowed to correct his testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. Some of the changes are matters of substance, and, I suppose, the usual practice in such case is (and we had better adopt the rule as to all of them) that if there are any substantial changes the witness can come before the committee and indicate them. It would require considerable alteration of the construction of the testimony to change it.

Senator HARRIS. So far as I am concerned, the suggestion was made simply to save time. I will meet the subcommittee at any hour, night or morning; or I am willing to come before the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I think if you could write out on paper the parts where you want to make changes, and come before the committee at some convenient time and state them, that would be the best way.

Senator HARRIS. How long will it be before this proof of the testimony will be put into permanent shape in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. The printer is urging us now to have the necessary corrections made.

Mr. EDEN. It ought to be done now. Has there been a motion for a subcommittee?

Senator HARRIS. I simply made the suggestion because I thought it would save time.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to that of course. It seems to me that on verbal questions and matters of taste there would be no accountability, but as to substance there would be.

The CHAIRMAN. I see no desire for a subcommittee to bring the matter to the attention of the committee, but if Senator Harris will come before the committee, and indicate the corrections he desires to make, that could be done.

Mr. EDEN. That would be as speedy as having a subcommittee.

Senator HARRIS. Yes; if the subcommittee had to report in detail all the changes made there would be no time saved. However, that is a matter for the committee to determine; either course is agreeable to me. My suggestion was simply made with the idea of economizing time, and I could meet one or two gentlemen of the committee at some hour of the night or early in the morning and go over the testimony with them.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that Senator Harris have the right to correct his testimony, and to call the attention of the committee to such corrections as he may desire to make.

Mr. MILLARD. It seems to me that that is the better way.

The CHAIRMAN. And then let it go into the record as his statement that he had corrected his testimony in certain particulars.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, that is the best way.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that would be less trouble than any other.

Mr. EDEN. When will it suit you, Senator, to come before the committee to make those corrections?

Senator HARRIS. I suppose to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. RANNEY. I notice that one of the corrections you have noted there is, you say that when the application came Mr. Goode said that he had granted "it," and you want to change that so as to say that he had granted "the suit." There would be no objection to that, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course there would be no question about that; it is only in regard to matters of fact.

Senator HARRIS. I could indicate them at this moment, except that I have not got my memorandum of the particular corrections that change the sense at all. I have not had them separated.

The examination of Mr. Goode was then resumed, and the stenographer read the last question and answer made before his examination was suspended.

The WITNESS. It might be proper to add that in giving direction to bring the suit I gave permission, as requested by the district attorney, to associate with him in the conduct of the suit certain gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you name them?

The WITNESS. Yes. There was Mr. George Gantt, Mr. Casey Young, Mr. J. R. Beckwith, and, I think, a gentleman named Wright (but the order will show), and after telling him that he had permission to associate those gentlemen with him, I stated that it was to be with a distinct understanding that he, as district attorney, was to have absolute control of the suit, under the direction of the Department of Justice, and that the Government was to incur no obligation whatever for the fees of these associate counsel.

Q. Had you had any previous acquaintance with Colonel Gantt?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know that all the gentlemen named were the attorneys of or connected with another telephone company at that time?—A. I did not. There was no reference to another telephone company in the application or in the memorial. I did not know at that time of the existence of the Pan-Electric Company, the National Improved Company, or other companies of which I have heard since. I knew very little about telephone companies.

Q. In making the order for the commencement of that suit, did you, according to your understanding, follow the practice in the Department of Justice?—A. Yes; since the organization of the Department there have been not less than ten precedents, I think, for the institution of just such suits, under the administrations of Attorneys-General Brewster, Williams, Pierrepont, and Akerman. I think there have been ten or a dozen suits ordered by the Department.

Q. Did you follow the practice of the Department in those suits in ordering this suit?—A. I followed the practice so far as giving the direction was concerned. I will say that I departed from the usual practice in one respect. It has been customary in the Department, when application is made for permission to use the name of the Government to bring a suit to cancel or recall a patent, to refer the application to the Interior Department for any information which the files of that Department may show, or any suggestions which they may think proper to make. I did not follow that practice in this case, for the reason that the application brought along with it the file wrapper and contents relating to the application of Bell, which furnished the information which could be obtained at the Patent Office. I did not send the papers to the Interior Department for report, for I supposed I had all the information which the Patent Office could afford, and I did not think it necessary or proper to send a question of law to that Department.

Q. Has the practice of referring applications of that kind to the Patent Office been invariable?—A. I think not. It has been the usual practice, but I do not think it has been invariable.

Q. Were these references, as you understand the matter, made for the purpose of obtaining information from the Patent Office, or for the purpose of obtaining an opinion from the Commissioner of Patents or the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Exclusively for the purpose of obtaining information, such information as the Patent Office afforded, in regard to the subject-matter of the application.

Q. And that you say you had already?—A. Yes, sir; that I supposed I had. I had the file wrapper and contents relating to the application of Bell, and the various steps taken which led to the issuance of the patent, and it occurred to me at the time that I could get no further information by sending the papers to the Patent Office.

Q. Did you gather from the first visit of Senator Harris to you, on the 2d of September, that he was personally interested in this application?—A. I did not. The interview was very brief, as I say. I do not think the gentlemen sat down; if they did, they did not sit more than a minute or two. I inferred from all that occurred, and from Senator Harris's manner, that he had been telegraphed or written to by some constituent or friend at Memphis who was interested. But he did not state who was interested, or at whose instance the application was made, or anything about it. He said that he had understood the district attorney, H. W. McCorry, had sent an application for permission to use the name of the Government in the institution of such a suit. But as the papers had not come, and I was busy about other matters, we had no further conversation about it, and that conversation was a very brief one.

Q. I understand you regarded it, then, that he was applying for a constituent in making this application?—A. That was the impression made upon me; that he had come there to get information for a constituent. I think he held in his hand either a telegram or letter.

Q. Did you know, from your second interview with him and Colonel Young, that they were interested in these matters?—A. I did not. Nothing was said except, as I say, Colonel Young came in and asked me if the application had been received, and I said, "Yes, and acted upon;" and he immediately turned around and went out, and pretty soon Senator Harris came in (I think he may have met him in the building or on the elevator), and he said "Colonel Young tells me you have sent direction to bring this suit," and I said "yes," and he did not sit down or remain a minute; and I never did know, if you will permit me to say it, until the newspaper criticism commenced, that Senator Harris had any connection with any telephone company, or Colonel Young either. Neither one of them disclosed to me on either occasion that they were acting on behalf of any company.

Q. You have already stated that you did not know that the Attorney-General had any interest.—A. No, sir; I never knew until the Attorney-General came home; and I wish to state now, in justice to him and myself, what occurred. After seeing in the newspapers these criticisms on the action of the Department, when Attorney-General Garland returned to the office, about the 1st of October, I called on him, and brought his attention to these newspaper assaults, and said to him, "If any mistake has been made or any wrong done, I am responsible," and I never knew until that interview with him, which was early in October, that he had any interest whatever in any telephone company, or had any connection with them. But in connection with that matter I thought it my duty to make the same statement to the President, and I called, at my own motion, on the President, and said to him that I had seen these newspaper attacks on the Attorney-General, and I felt it due to him to say that if any wrong had been done, or mistake committed, I alone was responsible, and I assumed the entire responsibility of the suit.

Q. You say you had no knowledge until that interview that the Attorney-General had an interest in these telephone patents?—A. None.

Q. Had not the newspaper publications you speak of informed you of that?—A. Well, I had no knowledge from the Attorney-General. I had seen in the newspapers that he was interested in the Pan-Electric Company, but I never heard from the Attorney-General until some time early in October that he had any connection with the Pan-Electric or any other telephone company.

Q. Where was this suit directed to be brought?—A. It was directed to be brought in the United States court for the western district of Tennessee.

Q. Was there any reason, to your knowledge, for selecting that particular place for bringing a suit?—A. The district attorney made application for permission to sue in that court; he was the district attorney there, and my response was to his letter. There was no other reason that I am aware of.

Q. The suit was brought in that district?—A. Yes; the suit was brought according to the direction contained in my letter in reply to his and afterwards discontinued.

Q. Do you know when it was discontinued?—A. The order to discontinue was made on the 9th of October, I think. I had a newspaper here containing the date, which I have mislaid, but according to my best recollection now, the order to the district attorney to discontinue the suit was made on the 9th of October.

Mr. EDEN. Can you furnish us a copy of that order to go into the record?

The WITNESS. Yes; I brought it with me here to-day, but cannot find it now. It was a newspaper containing the President's letter to me, and my answer, and the statement of Mr. Garland in connection with the paper. I recollect what was in it, and thought I had the paper here.

Q. Did you know that an application had been made by W. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General on the 12th of July, 1885, for the institution of a suit in the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents?—A. I never knew that until Mr. Garland returned, early in October. In this interview with him he told me what had occurred between himself and those gentlemen. I was at that time in British Columbia. I called upon him, as I have stated, and introduced the subject myself, and in the course of the conversation he told me that those gentlemen had called upon him and asked permission to use the name of the Government to bring the suit, and he told them that he could have nothing to do with it, and that one of them commenced to argue the question with him, and he dismissed them and said that he could not talk about it.

Q. That refers to a different occurrence, I think. There seems to have been a letter addressed to the Attorney-General on the 12th of July.—A. I never knew of that. I never heard of that.

Q. What do you say was the date of your return from British Columbia?—A. I got back here on the night of the 19th of August; I left on the morning of the 26th of June.

Q. You knew nothing then of the presentation of that letter, its filing in the Department, and its withdrawal?—A. I never heard of it; in fact I never heard anything about it until I had ordered the suit, as I have described.

Q. After the discontinuance of the Memphis suit, was an application made for the institution of another suit in the name of the Government?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. McCorry (here is his letter) renewed his application, and about the same time, or within a few days of his renewed application, I received an application from the Globe Telephone Company of New York, the Washington Telephone Company of Baltimore, and from a gentleman named Cushman, in Chicago, Ill.

Q. What was the date of Mr. McCorry's second application?—A. I have it here. [Looking at the original paper.] This bears date Jackson, Tenn., October 14, 1885. His original application bore date August 31, 1885.

Q. This second application was addressed to you, was it not?—A. It was addressed to me as Acting Attorney-General, yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. October 14, you say it was?—A. Yes, sir; October 14. The statement made by the Attorney-General to the President and Cabinet had then been published, in which he said that so far as this matter was concerned, feeling himself to be under disability, he had sat out of the case as it were, and I was Acting Attorney-General as to this matter, and in no sense his deputy or agent.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you any knowledge that this second application would be made to you as Solicitor-General?—A. Not at all. In accordance with the suggestion of the President, on the 9th of October, I think (I will furnish the letter), I wrote to Mr. McCorry, directing him to discontinue the suit, and saying nothing about any renewal of it. I did not know that it ever would be renewed until the letter came.

Q. Have you a copy of your letter to Mr. McCorry?—A. I will furnish it.

Q. Please do so. You say you have the application of Mr. McCorry?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will find the letter referred to on page 17 of the record of the Department of the Interior. The following is the letter:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Jackson, Tenn., October 14, 1885.

SIR: William Van Benthuyzen, of New Orleans, La., Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi, George Gantt, of Memphis, and J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, La., the same parties who preferred the former petition asking the institution of the suit in the name of the Government to have the patent of March 7, 1876, No. 174,455, issued to A. G. Bell vacated, recalled, and annulled, have again applied to me to renew the application, and in addition to the paper formerly submitted they have presented to me a copy of an application made by the Globe Telephone Company directly to the Department of Justice seeking somewhat similar relief, which paper I inclose herewith, together with the same papers forwarded to you on the first application.

I now again ask permission to institute such a suit, or that you permit a continuance of the suit already begun, and which is now in abeyance awaiting the next session of our court at Memphis, to have an order of dismissal as heretofore directed by you.

I have examined this matter very fully, and am now more confident than at first that the suit was within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the patent referred to was improvidently issued to Mr. Bell, and I would like to demonstrate the propriety of the original proceedings by carrying a suit, with the same object in view, to a successful termination.

Very respectfully,
[L. S.]

H. W. McCORRY,
United States Attorney for West Tennessee.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 17, 1885.

SIR: Yours of the 14th instant, renewing the application for permission to institute a suit in the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent has been received, and forwarded with accompanying papers to the Interior Department for examination and report.

It seems that you have omitted to send the exhibits from the Patent Office which accompanied your original application. This Department desires those exhibits to be forwarded for use here, if they are now in your possession.

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General in this instance.

H. W. McCORRY, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Jackson, Tenn.

Q. Had you had any conversation with the Attorney-General with respect to the institution of this second suit?—A. None. The Attorney-General has declined to confer with me on any occasion about this suit. I have had no conference with him about it in any shape or form. I have had with the President, but not with the Attorney-General.

Q. On the receipt of this second application, what was done in respect to it?—A. It was sent to the Interior Department, with a request that they submit any views they desired to submit in regard to it.

Mr. RANNEY. Does the inquiry extend to that? That was subsequent.

The CHAIRMAN. In my view, the resolution covers an inquiry as to the second suit.

Mr. EDEN. It will cover the inquiry in regard to the second suit, I think, at least up to the time of the passage of the resolution under which we are acting by the House.

Mr. OATES. That was after the Interior Department had ordered the suit.

The CHAIRMAN. That is my view of it.

Mr. RANNEY. And that is mine.

Mr. EDEN. I think so, up to the time of the passage of the resolution, which was February 26. That was after the suit was ordered by the Interior Department.

The WITNESS. Yes. I sent the application to the Interior Department with the request to be furnished with any views they desired to submit with regard to it.

Q. You said that you did receive application from the Globe Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; the Globe Telephone Company of New York.

Q. And from the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; of Baltimore, and from a gentleman named Cushman in Chicago, I do not remember his first name; but they were all sent down to the Interior Department.

Q. Did you also receive resolutions of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You referred those, you say, to the Interior Department?—A. Yes, to the Interior Department, with a request to communicate any views they desired, in regard to the application, and, as you know, the matter was under investigation for some time, and I suppose the committee knows the result.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter referring those papers?—A. I haven't it with me, but I will furnish it to the committee to-morrow.

Q. Has the Interior Department replied to that reference?—A. Yes; the Secretary of the Interior replied in a somewhat lengthy opinion, sending along opinions delivered by the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Jenks, the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Muldrow, and the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Montgomery, in which they advised that the Department of Justice should permit the use—

Mr. RANNEY. One moment. Those papers should go in and speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you furnish the committee copies of those papers?

The WITNESS. I will do so. I will furnish the opinion of the Secretary and his assistants. They all agreed in the opinion that the suit should be ordered.

Q. Was suit ordered?—A. Suit was ordered.

Q. Where?

Mr. RANNEY. They should show for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. He can state the fact.

The WITNESS. At Columbus, Ohio; in the southern district of Ohio.

Q. Will you furnish the committee with a copy of the order?—A. I will.

The following papers, referred to in this connection, were subsequently furnished by the witness:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington October 20, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for such suggestions as you may think proper to submit, the petition of the Globe Telephone Company praying that the Attorney-General will order the institution of a suit for the purpose of testing the validity of the Bell telephone patent. Please return the petition with your reply, and oblige,

Yours, very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General in this instance.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington October 31, 1885.

SIR: I transmit herewith a letter from Millard R. Powers, attorney for S. D. Cushman, and also a communication from the North American Telephone Company, referring to the pending proceedings before you in regard to the Bell telephone patent.

Please have these papers returned to this Department after you have examined them, and oblige,

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General in this instance.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, November 6, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith some additional affidavits and other papers which have been forwarded by the Globe Telephone Company to be read as evidence on the hearing of the application now pending for permission to use the name of the United States in bringing a suit to cancel the letters patent heretofore issued to Alexander Graham Bell. After you have examined them, please have them returned to this Department, and oblige,

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General in this instance.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, March 17, 1886.

SIR: You are hereby authorized and directed to institute a suit in equity in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio, in the name of the United States of America, complainant, vs. the American Bell Telephone Company, a corporation under the laws of Massachusetts; the Central Union Telephone Company, a corporation under the laws of Illinois; the Erie Telephone and Telegraph

Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of Massachusetts; the Central District and Printing Telegraph Company, incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania; the Cleveland Telephone Company, the City and Suburban Telegraph Company, the Miami Telephone Company, the Buckeye Telephone Company, the latter four companies incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and Alexander Graham Bell, respondents.

The object of the suit is to test the validity of certain patents issued to the said Alexander Graham Bell. You are requested to proceed to Columbus without delay, and sign the bill which has been forwarded to Hon. A. G. Thurman as special counsel. You will also confer with him about the service of process, and the conduct of the suit generally.

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,

Solicitor General and Acting Attorney-General in this case.

Hon. PHILIP H. KUMLER,

United States District Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Q. Do you know whether suit has been brought?—A. Suit has been brought; the bill was filed on 23d of March. I will state that, in his communication, Secretary Lamar advised that it should be a suit on behalf of the Government for the benefit of all the people, and in no sense—

Mr. RANNEY. Isn't that in his document?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I think it should speak for itself.

Q. Yes, unless you did something in pursuance of that opinion.—A. I was going on to say, that being a matter of importance, I associated with me special counsel for the conduct of the suit Hon. Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, Mr. Grosvenor P. Lowrey, of New York, Messrs. Hunton and Chandler, of this city, and Charles S. Whitman, of this city, and upon consultation we deemed it best not to order the suit in Tennessee, where it had been brought originally, but to select a different forum.

Q. Had any person requested you to order it in Tennessee?—A. Not specially. I think perhaps there were some suggestions made why the suit should be brought in Tennessee.

Q. Do you know what they were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It may not be material, but by whom were they made?—A. I think Mr. Gantt, of Memphis, and Mr. Casey Young, of Memphis, suggested that inasmuch as the original suit had been ordered there, and there was no doubt whatever about acquiring jurisdiction in Tennessee, because they knew the nature of the contracts made by the parent company with local companies there, that it would be a proper place to bring it. But upon consultation among my associates, we determined that it would not be best to bring it in Tennessee because we did not want it to have the appearance to the country of being in any form a renewal of the old suit. We wished it to go out to the country as a suit entirely on behalf of the Government and the people, and in every way disconnected with any private or local interests.

Q. Our investigation here is founded upon newspaper reports, and I have seen something said in the newspapers as to the reason for directing the suit to be brought at Columbus. Will you state what reason there was, if any, for bringing the suit there?—A. I will do so. I say we considered many places, Boston, Washington City, Memphis, Saint Louis, and perhaps other places, and we came to the conclusion that under all circumstances it would be better to bring the suit in Columbus, because there had been no decision in that court of any question bearing upon the telephone suit. We learned that the question in some form or other had been before the courts in nearly all the Eastern States, and thought that in going to Columbus we would get a perfectly fair and impartial tribunal, and a forum where there was no excitement or no preconceived opinion in regard to the suit, one way or the other; we supposed there could be no objection to the selection of that forum.

Q. You have stated that Colonel Gantt, Colonel Young, and others suggested the bringing of the suit in Memphis. Do you recall the fact of any other outside parties, I mean parties not connected with the Department, or any of the counsel selected by you, suggesting any of these other places you have named as the proper one to bring the suit?—A. Yes, sir; I think that Bradley T. Johnson was of the opinion that the suit should be brought in Baltimore. I know that he called and talked about it. Mr. Humphreys, who represents the Globe Telephone Company, made some suggestion; I am rather inclined to think that he concurred with Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young, that inasmuch as the suit had been originally started in Memphis, it ought to be carried on there.

Q. Have you any recollection of any person suggesting Boston?—A. Nobody suggested Boston.

Q. Or Washington?—A. Nobody connected with the case. I think I did get a communication from some gentleman whom I do not remember now, some lawyer in the city here, giving reasons why it should be brought in Washington.

Mr. RANNEY. That had better be produced if it is a letter.

The WITNESS. I do not even recall his name; I did not know the gentleman. He gave some reasons why it should be brought here.

Q. He was a Washington lawyer, was he?—A. Yes, sir; he was.

Q. I can understand, then, why he suggested it.—A. I had no acquaintance with him, and did not preserve the letter. I think I saw some suggestions in the newspapers here that it should be brought in Washington.

Q. Did persons not connected with the Department of Justice suggest the employment of counsel for the trial of this suit?—A. No, sir. I felt that the case was one of too much magnitude for me to manage alone. The Attorney-General positively declined to have anything to do with it, even to confer with me about it, and I examined the law and found that as Acting Attorney-General I had a right to select special counsel, and I did so. I will say that so far as one of the gentlemen is concerned he was recommended to me by some of the members of the bar in this city; a Washington lawyer, Mr. Whitman, recommended by Mr. Davidge and others, supposing we would need the services of some expert patent lawyer here.

Q. Will you name the members of the bar who recommended Mr. Whitman?—A. I cannot recall any name except that of Mr. Davidge. I remember his calling at the Department one day and saying if he had to select a patent lawyer in Washington, to assist in the prosecution of a suit like this, he would select Mr. C. S. Whitman.

Q. What is Mr. Davidge's standing at the bar?—A. He is recognized as one of the leaders of the bar here; I do not think anybody stands better; and it is proper to say that he did this of his own motion; Mr. Whitman never sought employment in this suit. But Mr. Davidge said he took it for granted that in a case like this I would need assistance, and he would take it upon himself to call and suggest that of all the patent lawyers in the city, Mr. Whitman would be the most valuable.

Q. By what considerations have you been controlled in the selection of assistant counsel?—A. I desired to get men in whose personal honor and integrity I had unlimited confidence; men whom I knew to be lawyers of ability and capacity; to render service to the Government. In this suit I will say that Mr. Lowry, of New York, has been retained specially on account of his knowledge of the scientific questions involved in a suit like this; Judge Thurman was retained on account of his high character and great ability as a lawyer and his standing in the country. I knew Messrs. Hunton & Chandler well myself, and I do not know two lawyers in Washington whom I would prefer to have associated with me, because I know them to be men of honor and personal integrity. I have had ample opportunity to witness their management of causes in court, and am satisfied that all of the gentlemen selected would render good service to the Government.

Q. In the selection of counsel, or in anything else relating to the beginning of this suit, have you had in view the interests of other telephone companies?—A. None whatever. I want to say that I do not know anybody interested in any telephone companies; I have no stock in any myself; I do not know who the stockholders are in the Bell Company, and I have no interest in the matter. It is due to everybody connected with the Government, so far as I know, to say they have but one purpose in this matter, and that is to have a fair and impartial trial of this suit. If Mr. Bell is entitled to the patent, the Government, so far as I know, wants him to have the benefit of it. If it has been improvidently awarded or claimed by any mistake or any untrue suggestion, we think it ought to be cancelled.

Q. Have you made contracts with the counsel employed?—A. I have.

Q. Are they in writing?—A. They are.

Q. Will you state what they are?

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to have them if they are in writing.

Q. Will you produce copies of them?—A. I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no objection to his stating the amount, I presume?

Mr. RANNEY. No, with the understanding that he will produce certified copies.

Q. You say you will produce copies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state from recollection the amount agreed to be paid?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. C. S. Whitman has been retained in the suit at a fee of $3,000 for the entire suit, for any service that he is called upon to render. Messrs. Hunton and Chandler have been retained at a fee of $5,000 for the entire suit. Judge Thurman has been retained for $1,000 with the understanding that his future compensation is to be fixed, and depends upon the service performed. I asked him to stipulate what his future fee would be, and he said it was utterly impossible for him to do so because he did not know now what service he would have to perform, but he would say this, that he never had gouged the Government, and he did not propose at his time of life to begin to do so; and I have the most entire confidence in his integrity in the matter and his perfect good faith. Mr. Lowry was specially recommended by persons who ought to know—

I had no acquaintance with him myself, but by some of the patent lawyers who know him. As I say, he is recognized as the electrical lawyer in this suit. We expect him to manage chiefly the scientific features of it. Mr. Lowrey has been employed at a retainer of $1,000 and a per diem of $75 a day when working in the city of New York taking testimony and $100 a day when he is called upon to leave the city, counting a day at five hours.

Q. As I understand you, then, the fees of Mr. Whitman and of Messrs. Hunton and Chandler are fixed and certain?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that of Judge Thurman depends on his services in addition to a retainer of $1,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Lowrey has a retainer and a per diem allowance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has anything, to your knowledge, been paid to these gentlemen, or any of them?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Whitman has been paid $1,000, Messrs. Hunton and Chandler have been paid $2,000, and the other two gentlemen have not yet been paid anything. I presume we will have to pay the necessary expenses of the suit.

Q. I see by the resolution that we are directed to inquire into "the reason and authority for constituting the United States as a party to said suit or suits"; do you regard what you have said as a sufficient explanation of that matter?—A. I will say in answer to that that upon investigation I became thoroughly satisfied that this suit could only be brought that way—could only be brought by order of the Department of Justice. The authorities are very full on that point, and you gentlemen know, as your own Judiciary Committee has reported upon that proposition and furnished authorities, it has been the uniform practice of the Department ever since its organization in 1870 to order suits for the cancellation of patents improvidently issued or obtained by fraud or surreptitiously. Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of Mowry vs. Whitney, says that such a suit can only be brought in that way, by order of the Department of Justice; that it must appear in some form that it was ordered by the Attorney-General. As to the reasons, I will simply say that it was alleged in those papers which were submitted to me that the patent had been improperly granted; that this was a very extensive business; that the telephone had become a commercial if not a social necessity, and people all over the United States were interested in recalling the grant if improperly made; and it occurred to me that perhaps no suit could be brought by the Government which involved larger interests or one that the people would be more interested in, always upon the assumption, of course, that the grant should be recalled provided the case was properly made out.

Q. In the Tennessee suit directed by you, was there any arrangement made for assistant counsel?—A. None whatever. I gave permission to Mr. McCorry to associate with him those gentlemen, but with the stipulation that the Government would not be responsible for the fees, and that the suit was to be absolutely controlled by him under the direction of the Department of Justice.

Q. On that suit, then, the Government was to pay nothing for attorneys' fees?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. Do you know what has been the practice in the other suits spoken of by you as having been instituted at various times for the testing of patents, as to the employment of assistant counsel and paying them?—A. I do not; I have not examined that. The law provides that the Attorney-General may employ special counsel to assist United States district attorneys whenever he thinks proper.

Q. Was there any offer in this last suit to furnish assistant counsel without expense, by any company or person?—A. No, sir. It may be proper to say that we have understood that the Bell Telephone Company has a corps of able lawyers employed. I have heard the name of eight or ten, and I know some of the most eminent men in the country have been employed to defend this suit.

Mr. MILLARD. That would be only hearsay, I suppose.

The WITNESS. Yes, I do not know it of my own knowledge.

Q. You might state it even as hearsay, if it was a reason or inducement for you to employ opposing counsel.—A. That undoubtedly was a very strong inducement; in other words, I did not feel that I was capable, single handed and alone, even with the aid of the district attorney, to cope with those able men in the science of electricity and in the conduct of a great suit like this, and hearing it and seeing it stated that they had employed such men as ex-Senator McDonald, Hon. Koscoe Conkling, Mr. Storrow, Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Thurston, and perhaps others, not less than six or eight, men of great ability and prominence in the profession, I thought as the representative of the Government in this suit it was my duty to see that the Government suffered no detriment from the want of counsel in meeting such opposition as we should have to meet.

Q. Did you regard it as a suit in which lawyers of special qualifications in particular branches should be employed?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Lowrey was employed with special reference to that, and so was Mr. Whitman. The other gentlemen were employed on account of their known ability to conduct causes in court, and their knowledge of the law.

Q. You may state whether, in your judgment, the fees agreed upon are reasonable or otherwise.—A. I certainly think they are reasonable. I am sure that such men could not be employed by private individuals upon more moderate terms for such service as this.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. If you have no objection I would like to put some questions to you. How long have you been acquainted with Casey Young?—A. I knew Mr. Casey Young, I think, for the first time in the Forty-fourth Congress. I met him first in Congress, and it was either the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth, I think the Forty-fourth Congress, that I knew him first.

Q. You have known him a long time?—A. I have known him since December, 1875.

Q. You have been on intimate terms with him, I suppose?—A. I cannot say that I have been on very intimate terms with Mr. Young. I have known him as a Member of the House, and in one Congress, I think, I served for awhile on the same committee with him; a special committee appointed to consider matters in regard to the preservation of public health.

Q. You have been acquainted with Attorney-General Garland for a much longer period?—A. Yes, sir; I have known Mr. Garland since 1862 or 1863, and I must say that there was a long break in our acquaintance. I knew him first as a member of the Confederate Congress, and never knew him after that until I met him here. He was in the Senate when I came to the Forty-fourth Congress in December, 1875.

Q. Did you know Colonel Gantt, of Memphis?—A. I never knew Colonel Gantt until very recently. He was in Washington some time since, two or three weeks ago, and called to see me. I never saw him until then.

Q. You have been a member of the bar for a good many years?—A. I have been a member of the bar since 1851.

Q. Had you prior to your action in this matter had any special practice or acquaintance with practice in patent-right suits?—A. No, sir.

Q. I expect you, like many of the rest of us, had never tried one?—A. I never had tried a patent suit; before my appointment as Solicitor-General I had a law office in this city and practiced law also in Virginia, and there were two or three applications made to me to secure patents, and I generally engaged the assistance of some patent lawyer in those cases.

Q. On the 19th of August you say you returned from that business of which you have spoken?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when this application came to you on the 2d of September—you received it on the 2d of September, after Senator Harris and Colonel Young had been in there—you granted your leave, and wrote that letter, it seems, on the 3d of September, the next day; have you produced here all the papers that came into your office?—A. No, sir; I think not; it seems to me there were some affidavits accompanying that memorial; I recollect now the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur; I do not recall any other affidavit; the papers that I remember now are the letter of Mr. McCorry's, the memorial signed by those gentlemen whose names I have given, and the file wrapper and contents relating to the issuance of the patent.

Q. Have you that there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to see it.—A. (After producing the paper and handing it to Mr. Ranney.) It did not come to me in this form, but the file wrapper and contents relating to case No. 174465, authenticated by the Commissioner of Patents, came.

Q. Is that the paper, the printed paper?—A. That is not the paper that came to me.

Q. I would like to see the original paper that came.—A. I will try and produce it. This paper has been published for another purpose, to be attached as an exhibit in the suit.

Q. I see that has been published since. I want now to ascertain exactly what papers came to you.—A. I will bring them up. I will give you the best of my recollection, and that is that the file wrapper and contents contained what is contained there.

Q. You kept the original papers, I suppose?—A. We have them in the Department. We can give you copies of them.

Q. I would like them. Did you put on those any minutes or memoranda showing the dates when they were received?—A. No, sir; but I know they were received on the morning of the 2d of September.

Q. Don't they file on them the date?—A. No; they have on what they call a "jacket," which contains the date on which they are received. I took these out.

Q. Will you bring the jacket also?—A. Yes, sir; I will bring all the papers. There is quite a budget of them, and I may not be able to recall now from memory everything that was in them, but I will produce everything contained in that letter of Mr. McCorry's.

Q. Do you keep a record of such an application?—A. A clerk at the Department does; yes, sir.

Q. I would like a copy of that exact record. There will be no difficulty in getting it, I suppose?—A. None at all.

Q. That will show the date when you received them?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, as the witness has not these paper with him, and has to bring them to-morrow, I move that the committee now adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection. I am sorry to trouble you, Mr. Goode, but I would like the report, the original paper, and everything that came to you, what you call the "jacket," and likewise, if not too much trouble to you, if the clerk will bring that record, I would like also the original agreement between those counsel.

The WITNESS. As I say, all the papers that came to me were sent to the Interior Department, and have been sent back. I have not examined them, but whatever papers are there relating to this subject shall be produced.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like the original ones.

Mr. MOFFATT. In both suits, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; in both suits.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved by the gentleman from Alabama that when the committee adjourns it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee, after a short executive session, adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, April 6, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m., Mr. Oates in the chair.

Hon. JOHN GOODE resumed the witness stand.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Ranney, you may proceed with the examination.

Mr. HALL. When we adjourned last evening, I understood the chairman to express a wish to continue his examination of Mr. Goode.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Ranney had begun his examination.

Mr. HALL. I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. OATES. I understood that the chairman had finished his examination of Mr. Goode, and that that is the reason he is now absent.

Mr. HALL. I was going to suggest that the privilege might still be reserved to the chairman.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not hear any intimation that he desired to go on. Shall I proceed, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you produced this morning all the papers which you received from District Attorney McCorry?—A. I have produced, as far as I could, the papers called for. When I got to the Department yesterday the office hours were over and the clerks had gone, and I have been hurried this morning, but I think I have gotten everything called for, with one exception which I will explain presently.

Q. Will you now begin, and in order, produce every paper you received from Mr. McCorry, and then in that connection state what you not have produced? Begin with the first application from Mr. McCorry, received on the 2d of September, 1885?—A. Here is a certified copy of the first letter I received from Mr. McCorry, district attorney, bearing date Jackson, Tenn., August 31, 1885, addressed to Hon. A. H. Garland, Attorney-General, Washington, D. C. Shall I read it?

Q. No; that we have had. Let me see it, please. [The paper was handed to Mr. RANNEY.] Is this the original, or a copy?—A. It is a certified copy; I have the original here.

Q. I prefer to look at the original if you have no objection.—A. None at all. I thought the committee would desire copies.

Mr. RANNEY. You may leave certified copies and take back the originals.

The WITNESS. Yes, I brought them for that purpose. That is the original [handing paper to Mr. RANNEY.]

Q. Now give the others.—A. In answer to that I wrote a letter bearing date September 2, 1885, which I signed as acting Attorney-General, a copy of which I have here and will furnish.

Q. That we have a copy of. I am now on the papers you received, not what you wrote.—A. In this letter of the district attorney was a memorial signed by J. R. Beckwith, George Gantt, C. P. Huntington, and W. Van Benthuyzen [paper handed to Mr. RANNEY.]

Q. That we have; you can leave a copy of it.—A. I have not a copy of it; that is the original; I can leave it and take a receipt for it.

Q. You must be in error about this, are you not, because this says "Received October 20, 1865."—A. That means it was received at the Department of the Interior October 20. That was sent down to the Interior Department, and that mark has reference to the date it was received there.

Mr. EDEN. It was sent to the Interior Department.

Q. We have a copy of that one, which you do not need to leave, as it is in the Interior Department record, which is put in.—A. That affidavit of Zenas F. Wilbur was in the papers. [Handing paper to Mr. RANNEY.]

Q. That we have a copy of. This is dated the 30th day of July, 1885.—A. August 3, I think.

Q. And on the 3d of August he made three or four the same as that, except the date. Now, what else?—A. I cannot positively say whether there were other affidavits or not; I am rather inclined to think there was an affidavit made by Mr. Van Benthuyssen. There is such an affidavit in the papers, but I will explain that there is a vast mass of papers at the Department connected with this matter, I suppose enough to fill a wheelbarrow, and in going back and forth between the two Departments some of them have got mixed. Whether Mr. Van Benthuyssen's affidavit, which is in the papers, was in this original application of Mr. McCorry's, dated the 1st of August, I am not positive in my recollection. In my letter to the Department I speak of "affidavits," but my recollection is not positively certain whether that affidavit was there or not; I know Mr. Wilbur's was there.

Mr. MILLARD. This is a copy of the affidavit, not the original.

Q. Is that in the papers?—A. No, sir. There was also a certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents relating to the application for the Bell patent, and that I am not able now to produce. I have had search made for it, but thus far it has not been found by the clerk. I have a printed copy of it here, which I gave to the chairman yesterday, and that is an exact copy of the original file-wrapper and contents.

Q. That was sent to you from Memphis?—A. That was sent from Memphis with the original application, and when I directed suit to be brought I sent back to Mr. McCorry all the papers that he had sent to me, supposing he would need them in the preparation of his bill—

Q. Is that all you have received?—A. I have not finished my statement.

Mr. RANNEY. I beg your pardon.

The WITNESS. I sent back to Mr. McCorry all the papers which had accompanied his original application. Subsequently, when he made his renewed application, he sent all the papers which he had sent originally, except this certified copy of the file wrapper and contents. I wrote to him, calling his attention to that omission, and asking him to forward the document at once, as we might have use for it. He did so, and I received it. That was after the papers had been sent down to the Interior Department, and as soon as that was received it was immediately sent down there. Whether that paper is at the Department of Justice or at the Interior Department, I am not able to say, but I have handed to your chairman a printed copy of the same document. Those are all the papers, according to my recollection, that I received.

At this point Mr. Boyle appeared and assumed the chair.

Q. Perhaps I can refresh your recollection a little. You say there is a record of the Interior Department and that paper appears there. [Handing a book to the witness.] —A. This paper may have been in the bundle.

Q. Read the heading of it.—A. "Affidavits, &c., in support of memorial of W. Van Benthuyssen, Charles P. Huntington, J. R. Beckwith, and George Gantt." There was quite a large bundle of papers, and I do not undertake to—

Q. Look at that schedule.—A. (Reading.) "Find herewith in support of our communication to you on the subject of a bill, in the name of the Government, to have the Bell patents recalled and vacated:

"(1) The affidavit of Professor Neipher.

"(2) Professor Green (Smithsonian Institute).

"(3) Professor Van der Weyde.

"(4) Edison, the eminent inventor.

"(5) Randall, inventor and electrician.

"(6) Of Z. F. Wilbur, former examiner of patents, United States Patent Office.

"(7) W. Van Benthuyssen and C. P. Huntington."

I remember those.

"(8) Affidavit of Serrell, Barker, and Lyon. Certified copy of file-wrapper and contents in Bell's application for patent, filed February 14, 1876.

"(9) Caveat of Elisha Gray, filed in Patent Office February 14, 1876.

"(10) Two Reis telephone instruments"—

There were no telephone instruments.

Q. Telephones were not sent?—A. No, sir.

Q. Look at the next page, and see the authorities there cited, and state whether you used them.—A. No, sir; I did not have all these. In his letter, a copy of which I have here, you see, he cites me—

Q. There are some put in his letter besides?—A. Yes, sir. There is a memorandum at the foot of his letter calling attention to the case of Mowry vs. Whitney, 14 Wallace, and Stone vs. U. S., 2 Wallace, and two cases in the Federal Reporter.

Q. You observe that these papers are certified from your Department. I say your Department; I mean the Attorney-General's Department.—A. I have no doubt that paper was in the package; I did not recall it at the moment.

Q. It seems that you had, first, the letter of McCorry and the memorial on which you acted?—A. Yes.

Q. Affidavits in support of the memorial of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Beckwith, Mr. Huntington, and Mr. Gautt, consisting of affidavits of (1) Professor Neipher, (2) Professor Green (Smithsonian Institute), (3) Professor Van der Weyde, (4) Edison, the eminent inventor, (5) Randall, inventor and electrician, (6) of Z. F. Wilbur, former examiner of patents, United States Patent Office, (7) W. Van Benthuyzen and C. P. Huntington, (8) affidavit of Serrell, Barker, and Lyon. Certified copy of file wrapper and contents in Bell's application for patent, filed February 14, 1876, (9) caveat of Elisha Gray, filed in Patent Office February 14, 1876.

The telephone instruments you did not have sent. (11) We call attention to the Reis publications of his art. (See Professor Adams's compilation, pp. 18 to 27.)

You did not have that, did you?—A. I do not remember that, sir. As I say, there is a very large package of papers, and it has been some time ago, so that I do not recollect with distinctness every paper contained in the package. I had not looked at any of these documents. I remember the original letter, the memorial and affidavits, and file-wrapper and contents, but some of the publications therein referred to I do not recall. If they are certified as having been sent at the same time, I have no doubt that is correct.

Q. These seem to have been put in before McCorry in the first place, in support of the memorial; and I suppose we may infer that they were sent to you?—A. I think so.

Q. But have you looked to see whether you have that compilation of Adams's?—A. I have not. As I say, there is a vast mass of documentary evidence down there; I am perfectly willing to have the committee examine it.

Q. I would like to have Adams's compilation.—A. I will have search made to see if it is there.

Q. Did you get the package by mail?—A. Yes; I got it by mail; it was a very large one.

Q. Did you receive it personally yourself and open it?—A. It was brought up to me from the chief clerk's room and opened by myself, yes.

Q. How was it directed on the outside?—A. "Hon. A. H. Garland, Attorney-General."

Q. You are confident about that, I suppose?—A. I am sure it was not directed to me.

Q. Do you open communications addressed to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes. This may, perhaps, have been opened by the clerk. Sometimes official letters are opened by him and a memorandum made in regard to them, and sometimes they are opened directly in the chief office. I was at that time acting Attorney-General, and I felt entirely authorized to open any document addressed to the Attorney-General.

Q. You are not confident that you opened that letter?—A. No, sir; I cannot remember that.

Q. If you did not open it, are you confident whether it was brought by mail or brought by some private person?—A. I am pretty sure it came by mail; I have that impression.

Q. If you did not open it, how do you know?—A. Because I sent down to the clerk when Mr. Young and Senator Harris asked if such a communication had been received, and the clerk said that no such communication had come. Afterwards, when the mail came, this came up with a lot of other matter addressed to the Department. I would not say positively whether I opened it or whether the chief clerk opened it.

Q. What is the name of the chief clerk?—A. Cecil Clay. It is probable he opened it.

Q. You had a large mass of papers, it seems; can you tell what time of the day it was that that came into your hands?—A. I think about 11 o'clock.

Q. I understood Senator Harris to say that he lived out of town and did not come in until after 11 o'clock; that when he called upon you on the first day you told him they were not there, but that the next day when he came you told him that they came within an hour after he had been there on the first day?—A. I think he must have been at the office before 11 o'clock; that is my recollection; I think he came pretty early in the morning, between 9 and 10.

Q. Have you any mode of fixing it?—A. No; only just general recollection. I know when he came I did not know about the papers, and a messenger was sent down stairs to ascertain whether any such papers had come. Pretty soon the messenger returned with the information, and my recollection is it was pretty early in the day, but I have no way of fixing it.

Q. How early the next day did you write to Mr. McCorry?—A. I think I wrote it pretty early in the morning, perhaps between 9 and 10 o'clock.

Q. Did you do any other business on the 2d of September except to look at those papers?—A. There was very little business at that time; it was in the summer season when business was very slack; I may have done some little routine business; I do not recall any now.

Q. Did you look to see what other business you did transact?—A. No, sir; I did not; I do not think I did much that day except to sign the mail about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The work is distributed in the Department among many persons, and a great many letters are prepared by the subordinates.

Q. At what time did your office hours close that day?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did you go back home then?—A. I went home and came back to the office that night.

Q. At what time did you go home that day?—A. I went home to dinner—I take dinner at 6—and came back to the office, as is my custom during the time the Attorney-General is absent, and during such times I usually keep pretty busy.

Q. What time did you come back to the office that night?—A. I came back between 7 and 8.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I do not remember exactly; probably until 11 o'clock.

Q. Have you any recollection?—A. No, I have not.

Q. Do you recollect what business you transacted during that time?—A. Nothing except to examine these papers.

Q. Had you not examined them during the afternoon?—A. To some extent, so far as I could, yes.

Q. To what extent? How much time did you spend on them before you came back in the evening?—A. It is utterly impossible to say. I know that I consumed the greater part of the time during the day and evening in the examination of these papers.

Q. And finished the examination in the evening of the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was anybody there with you that evening?—A. Nobody at all.

Q. Any clerk in the office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any means of recalling how much time you spent on it?—A. I could not say with anything like certainty. I made such an examination as satisfied me upon two points. I went through the papers and examined the authorities referred to, and examined other authorities.

Q. What two points were these?—A. First, whether the Department had the power to order the suit; and secondly, whether the papers presented made a prima facie case for the institution of the suit. I satisfied my mind thoroughly upon those two points, and I thought there was nothing else involved.

Q. You did that in the afternoon and evening?—A. Yes, sir; that day. I got the papers before the afternoon, according to my recollection now. I may be mistaken as to the exact time, but my recollection is that I got those papers as early as 11 o'clock on the morning of September 2.

Q. Did you read Neipher's affidavit?—A. I cannot say now positively whether I did or not. I examined the papers.

Q. Did you read Neipher's affidavit?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you read Wilbur's affidavit?—A. I did; I recollect that particularly. It made an impression on me.

Q. Did you read the compilation by Adams?—A. I don't suppose I went through with that; I made such an examination of the papers—

Q. The question is, did you read the compilation?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. Unless you desire, you need not repeat. I only desire to avoid repetition as much as I can. Do you remember whether you read Mr. Adams's affidavit?—A. I do not remember that.

Q. Or whether you read Neipher's affidavit?—A. I do not remember that.

Q. Or whether you read Wilbur's?—A. I remember that I read Wilbur's, because it had reference to transactions in the Patent Office that made an impression on me at the time, and that enables me to say that I recollect reading it.

Q. Could you get at all there was in those documents by merely looking them through? Would it not take you two hours to even read the papers through?—A. I do not think so; I do not think it would take as much time as that.

Q. Will you swear that you spent two full hours' time reading them?—A. I will swear that I think I spent two full hours in reading the papers, but I will not say certainly that I did; that is my best recollection.

Q. Did you read any authorities?—A. Yes.

Q. What ones?—A. I read the case of Mowry v. Whitney, 14 Wallace; I read the case of Stone v. United States, 2 Wallace; I read the case of the United States v. Gunning, 18 Federal Reporter. I looked at the index which I have there, and referred to some other cases which are not mentioned in that memorandum attached to Mr. McCorry's application of August 31, 1885. I recall now the case of the United States v. Minor, I think, in 114 U. S.

Q. I am asking what you read then, not what you have examined since?—A. I understand the question. I have examined a great many since, but I have reference to what I examined at that time. I will say, Mr. Ranney, that my opinion as to the legal questions involved was based specially upon the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller in the case of Mowry v. Whitney. I read that opinion very carefully.

Q. Did you read other cases?—A. Yes, sir; I read these other cases.

Q. Did you read them in the afternoon or evening?—A. I read some in the afternoon and some in the evening.

Q. All you did the next day was simply to write the letter?—A. That is all. I had made up my mind that evening before I left the office as to what I would do.

Q. You came to the conclusion that the Attorney-General was obliged to bring a suit?—A. I came to the conclusion that it was proper for the Attorney-General to bring suit. I felt that, as Acting Attorney-General, I had no right to close the doors of the courts against anybody who could only get into court through that avenue, as had been decided by the Supreme Court.

Q. You found that it was discretionary with the Attorney-General, did you not?—A. It was not absolutely obligatory upon him; but, in the exercise of the discretion which belonged to me as the acting head of the Department, I felt that they had made a case which entitled them to go into court.

Q. Did you read the opinion of Judge Shepley, where he held that it could not be done?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you read the opinion of Judge Blodgett, where he held that it could not be done?—A. No, sir. But if I had read these opinions I should not have attached as much consequence to them as to the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Q. I only wanted to know the fact whether you read them.—A. No, sir; I did not read them, but I have no doubt, upon further examination, of the correctness of my opinion.

Q. I understand you. I only wanted to see what examination you had made. Were you of opinion then that the suit could be instituted in the name of the Government for the benefit of particular interests or particular parties?—A. No, sir; I was of the opinion that the suit should be instituted in the name of the United States, and that it ought to appear in some form that it was ordered by the head of the law department of the United States.

Q. Did you not then come to the conclusion that no suit could be instituted in the name of the Government in the interest and for the benefit of private individuals—parties charged with infringement?—A. I did not examine the question with reference to that point. I do not think suit ought to be brought for the benefit of private individuals.

Q. That it should be in the name of the Government?—A. And for the benefit of the people.

Q. The whole people?—A. Yes, all the people.

Q. Not in the interest of private individuals?—A. No, sir.

Q. You examined it sufficiently at that time to come to that conclusion?—A. Yes, that was my impression.

Q. Did you not then come to the conclusion that the power did not rest in the Government to bring the suit except for causes which could not be availed of, in a suit for infringement, by the alleged infringer?—A. I came to the conclusion that the Government had the power to institute a suit to cancel a patent which had been improvidently issued or obtained surreptitiously or through any improper influences.

Q. In a direct fraud upon the Government?—A. In direct fraud upon the Government; and I supposed this was a suit of that character, because in giving directions to the district attorney to institute it, he was cautioned that the suit was to be exclusively under his control, under directions from the Department of Justice.

Q. I do not want to prolong this examination. It is not necessary to repeat any of your statements. I have heard all you have said, but I want to know if you did not come to the conclusion then that a suit could be maintained in the name of the United States only in cases where the ground for vacating the patent was not such a one as an alleged infringer could avail himself of in a suit at law or in equity, such as was the case in Mowry v. Whitney (14 Wal.), that you speak of?—A. Observe that the declaration of the judge in that case is as broad and comprehensible as it is possible to be. He says the only proper way to bring suit to cancel a patent is in the name of the Government.

Q. That was a case where a man had procured an extension of a patent, I believe?—
A. Yes. There was a demurrer, and the demurrer was sustained, and this dictum, if it may be so called, is so broad that I considered it a settlement of the question.

Q. That was a case distinctly relating to a question of fraud practiced upon the Commissioner by the patentee, who had obtained an extension by false representations as to the profits he had realized?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not understand that that opinion was confined exclusively to cases where the ground for vacating the patent was not such as an alleged infringer could avail himself of?—A. No; I came to the conclusion, from reading that opinion, that a suit could be brought by the Government to vacate or annul a patent for any mistake in awarding it or any fraud practiced in obtaining it.

Q. That a suit could be brought by the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. Your idea, then, was that it was limited?—A. Yes.

Q. And it is your idea now, is it not?—A. Yes; I do not think the Government has the right to bring suit for the benefit of private individuals.

Q. With reference to the matter of law, I want to see what your understanding of the law is. I want to read you what is said by Judge Blodgett, where he succinctly states the question of law.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I object to that sort of examination, reading the law to the witness.

Mr. RANNEY. I will state what I think probably the law is, and then I want the opinion of the witness, as he has expressed his opinion on the law.

Mr. OATES. I object to Mr. Ranney's reading what he or any member of the committee considers to be good law for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. I would not, as a lawyer, like to be compelled to swear to what was good law. That is an advantage which you have over the witness.

Mr. EDEN. I do not suppose it is necessary for us to go into the question.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put it in another form, and we will decide the law when we come to it. I think I can state it in my own language without reading it.

Q. You did not pretend to believe, and if I understand you do not believe now, in the Government instituting suits to try patents in the interests of individuals?—A. I do not.

Q. In all cases where the validity of a patent right is in question, that is your view?—A. It seems to me, if you will allow me to say, that the only justification for such a suit on the part of the Government is a prima facie case that a wrong has been done. I think if a patent has the seal of the Government that has been put there through fraud or any improper influences, it should be taken off.

Q. Now I understand your view of the law, and we agree on that; I think so too. In the examination you made of that in the hours you stated you said that you looked to see what the practice of the Government was about referring an application of that kind to the Secretary of the Interior, and you also did that that night?—A. No, sir. I had a general idea of what the practice was. I had been acting there as the head of that Department, sometimes in the absence of the Attorney-General, and I knew that it was customary when an application was made to the Department of Justice to generally refer that to the particular department of the Government with which it was connected or from which it had emanated. I was perfectly aware that that was the practice, but I do not consider it to be a fixed rule; I do not think it has been the invariable practice. So I thought in this instance that there was no necessity to refer these papers to the Interior Department, because we had the information which I supposed the Patent Office would furnish.

Q. While you have been in the Department had you ever had occasion before this time to act upon an application of that kind?—A. Never, on an application for the cancellation of a patent.

Q. A patent for an invention, I suppose you mean?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you that afternoon or evening look to the record in any way to see what had been done in prior cases?—A. No, I did not; I had some general idea what the practice was.

Q. You did not look it up to see?—A. No, I did not; but I supposed that a reference to the Patent Office would bring no more information than was contained in that file-wrapper and contents, showing the steps that had been taken leading to the issuance of the patent.

Q. My question was not what you supposed; I want to know the fact. You have already stated what you believe about it, and therefore I do not care to have you repeat it unless you desire to do so?—A. I do not desire to.

Q. I want to know whether you looked to see what had been done in prior cases?—A. I did not.

Q. You had just come into the Attorney-General's office; you say you had just got back and the Attorney-General was gone. How soon did you expect him back after the 2d of September?—A. He left on the 27th of August and stated that he would be gone about a month.

Q. When that application came did you stop to inquire whether there had been any prior application in regard to it?—A. I did not.

Q. Or whether anything had occurred before Mr. Garland went away with reference to it?—A. Never.

Q. You did not even inquire of the clerk?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had the same clerk that the Attorney-General had, had you not?—A. Yes.

Q. You know that records were kept of all— A. The truth is I did not think about any application—

Q. I am asking about the fact.—A. No, I did not make any inquiries of that sort.

Q. When that clerk who, you think, may have brought the papers to you, did bring them to you and you looked at them, did you make any inquiry whether anything had occurred in the office about it before?—A. No, sir; I treated it as a matter coming to me in the ordinary routine of business, as many other matters there come.

Q. What occasion was there for haste? Why could you not await the return of the Attorney-General? You were there at that time only for the purpose of performing his duties for a month. What haste was there that it could not lie over until the 1st of October, when he came back?—A. There was no occasion for haste, and I do not think there was any haste. If you were there and saw the amount of business transacted in that Department—the law business for 60,000,000 of people—you would see that twenty-four hours is probably about as much time as we could devote to a question of that kind arising from an application to bring such a suit in the name of the Government.

Q. It was a pretty rare thing, was it not, that so much business or so important a matter came in and was acted upon within twenty-four hours?—A. As I say, I had but two questions to pass upon; and permit me here to say, since my judgment has been called in question as to the law of the case, that I have been sustained by a committee of which you are a member.

Mr. RANNEY. No matter about that. Don't trouble yourself about it.

Mr. HALL. Let him state.

The WITNESS. And as to the fact that the Interior Department—

Mr. RANNEY. Don't trouble yourself about that. Please answer my question—

The WITNESS. Very well.

Q. Whether it was not rare to get a communication in and get it out acted upon within twenty-four hours?—A. I do not think so.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Ranney was on the sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee that had that subject under consideration.

Mr. RANNEY. I concurred in the limitation; I do not concur in the law he states.

The WITNESS. Perhaps some men would have taken more time, but my mind was made up after reading the papers. I had never heard of it before, had no interest in it, and did not know the Bell company was different from any other company.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not answer my question.

Mr. EDEN. Let the witness answer.

Q. You have stated all that; I want to know whether it was not a rare thing for any matter to come before the Department and be acted upon within twenty-four hours?—A. My answer was intended to show that in my judgment there was no undue haste. I ought to say here, when speaking now of the business of the Attorney-General, that it is not only in the absence of the Attorney-General that I can act as Attorney-General. You are familiar with the statute which provides that in case of vacancy, or absence or disability of the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General shall discharge the duties of the office; and if Mr. Garland had been present, with the views he entertained of that matter, I should have acted upon this case just as I have done; his absence was not necessary to give me jurisdiction.

Q. I would rather you would confine your answer to the question, and then I should be able to get the information I want. I want to know whether it is not a rare thing for an application like that, involving such a bundle of papers like that, to get acted upon in that office within twenty-four hours?—A. I do not think so; certainly not within my experience, because we have to attend to such a multiplicity of matters that we cannot devote all the time to one case.

Q. You say that the records of the Department show that there had been an application for a Government suit in relation to the Bell patents filed there May 24, 1885, by Dr. Rogers?—A. I have heard of that since the suit was brought; I never heard of it before; I have not examined the files of the Department to find that application, but I have no doubt it is there.

Q. You will find also that on the 14th of July, 1885, Mr. Van Benthuyzen had made a similar application?—A. I understand that to be a fact.

Q. And instead of being acted upon by the Attorney-General otherwise that was referred to the Interior Department. You find that there, do you not?—A. So I understand. I have not made a personal examination to see, but I have no doubt it is there; and permit me to say—

Q. One moment. Just answer this question.—A. All right.

Q. If you had looked at the record, you would have seen that, would you not?—A. I presume so.

Q. You think now you did not look to see?—A. I did not examine any of the records in the office about the suit at all. I examined nothing but the papers that came to me and the authorities.

Q. I understood you to say, yesterday, that at that time you were aware that it had been the practice of the Government from the beginning to order suit in the name of the United States; were you aware of it then?—A. I had a general idea of it from the opinions in the books there, but I did not examine any particular case. I have learned since—

Q. At that time had you looked at any case?—A. No; I had not looked at any precedent.

Q. Had you looked at the records of the Department to see?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have found since, have you not, that before Mr. Garland came in, Mr. Brewster in January declined doing it?—A. I do not recall that case. I have found since, or there have been found since, ten or a dozen precedents that have arisen since 1870 for the institution of such a suit.

Q. The question I propound now is not that, but is whether you do not find that in January, before Mr. Brewster went out, he declined doing it?—A. I have not examined that case.

Q. I want now in my examination to keep within the limits to see what you looked at. You did not look at that?—A. No; as I said a while ago, I looked at the papers that came to me and the authorities.

Q. You got here before Mr. Garland went away?—A. I got here on the 19th of August and he left on the 27th of August.

Q. You knew he was going?—A. I knew it about the time he left, not perhaps more than a day or so before he went away.

Q. You knew and he knew that when he went you would become the Acting Attorney-General?—A. That is the law.

Q. Did he not talk to you about unfinished business?—A. No, sir; he gave me no instructions whatever.

Q. Did he not talk to you about anything in the office that would need attention during his absence?—A. No, sir; I went down to take leave of him about four o'clock—I think he left that night—and wished him a pleasant vacation, and he remarked generally to do the best I could, or something like that, but gave no particular instructions about any matter at all and no particular business was referred to.

Q. Was there not unfinished business on hand?—A. Probably so.

Q. Do you not remember some of it?—A. No, sir. I know I did a good deal of business in his absence, as the books there will show.

Q. Was there not unfinished business?—A. I do not think there was anything of importance left unfinished.

Q. Do you remember of any?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember of taking this case up out of the order of business?—A. I think that I did very little else. I do not think there was anything claiming my attention particularly that day.

Q. Do you not have a docket kept by your clerks there of the order of business done?—A. We have a record book containing everything that is done in the Department, but no regular docket.

Q. Do you not have brought to you every morning by your clerk a list of things on hand to be attended to?—A. No, sir. When the Attorney-General is there my business is to prepare briefs for the Supreme Court and to write opinions in such cases as he sends me. When the Attorney-General is away I am the responsible head of the Department, and sign the mail and transact the routine business of the office generally.

Q. Do you know what business you did from the 27th of August, when the Attorney-General went away, until the 2d of September?—A. The records there will show; I do not recall.

Q. Can you tell any of it?—A. I do not remember anything now specially at all; I will have the books sent up here if you desire.

Q. Or whether you took this up out of order?—A. When I say that I did not take it up out of its regular order, I mean that I attended to it in the ordinary routine of the business, just as anything else. I did not consider that there was anything different in this application from any other.

Q. You say you think a suit should not be brought in the name of the Government in the interest of particular individuals who are contending one with another. Did you observe that in the request Mr. McCorry made to the Department he asked that four gentlemen should be appointed as attorneys to assist in the management of the case, and that without expense to the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. You did notice that, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. You noticed so particularly that you put it into your order in reply?—A. Yes; I stipulated that they were not to be paid any fees by the Government.

Mr. EDEN. I think, Mr. Ranney, you ought to let the witness answer before you put another question.

The WITNESS. I say that I stipulated in my reply that the Government was to incur no expense for counsel to assist the district attorney in accordance with that request.

Q. I therefore simply allude to it. Did it not occur to you that it was a little singular that four men like those, distinguished counsel, should be willing to act in a Government suit without pay?—A. I do not remember considering that matter at all. I granted the permission upon the request of the district attorney. He asked that these gentlemen might be allowed to appear with him in the suit, and I granted the permission, taking care to say that the suit must be absolutely under his control and under the direction of the Department, and that these gentlemen were to receive no pay from the Government.

Q. You say that at that time you were of the opinion, as now, that a Government suit should not be prosecuted in the interest of private individuals; you had before you the request that four such gentlemen as are named there should be allowed to act without pay, and you granted permission to them to act without pay. My question is simply this: In that state of facts did you not regard it as somewhat singular that four such men were to act without compensation from the Government?—A. I cannot recall now what I thought about it. I know that I was impressed with the statement made by the district attorney, and contained in this memorial, that it was a matter deeply affecting the public interest, and if I thought at all about the appearance of those men in the suit, it must have been simply this: that they had an incidental interest; that certainly was not the paramount interest in my estimation. I supposed when I ordered the suit it was for the benefit of the general public.

Q. Did you suppose those four gentlemen were going to give their services in that suit without pay from anybody?—A. I do not remember that I thought about that at all. I remember only that the district attorney was directed that he should incur no expense against the Government.

Q. If you thought it was improper to institute a suit in the name of the United States for the benefit of private individuals, did it not occur to you that possibly those four men were representing some private interests?—A. It did not. I was impressed with the idea from reading the letter of the district attorney, together with the memorial and accompanying documents, that it was a matter that concerned the general public, and that so far as the allegations were true, these patents ought to be recalled, because a wrong had been done.

Q. In your experience you do not generally find four men like those ready to give their services to the Government without compensation?—A. Not outright, but perhaps they had an incidental interest in it; at any rate I do not remember thinking about it. I remember my idea about it was that it was a suit for the benefit of the general public; and let me say, in that connection, if you please, if not out of order, that we have refused since this suit now pending was instituted, to recognize in any shape or form the counsel for these various petitioners who appeared at the Interior Department.

Q. I am coming to that by and by. I am now asking about that time.—A. I do not recollect what I had in mind except this, that I was impressed with the idea that this was a very important matter to the Government and the people, that impression being based upon the allegations contained in these documents.

Q. Do you not think now, looking at it from this standpoint, that duty on your part would have required you to inquire why four men like those—one from New Orleans and the rest from Memphis—were ready to be associated with counsel for the Government in prosecuting that case without any pay from the Government?—A. Of course I am not infallible; I am liable to make mistakes, like other people; but I have never been better satisfied with any act of my public life than with the institution of that suit.

Q. With those men allowed by you to appear as counsel on behalf of the Government to act without pay from the Government?—A. I did not object to those men. The district attorney preferred the request, and I granted it.

Q. You say now, since the institution of the new suit, you do not consider it proper for men situated as those were to be employed as counsel for the Government?—A. I did not regard that suit as one brought for the promotion of private interests.

Q. Did it not occur to you that possibly those men were acting in the interest of their clients?—A. I do not remember thinking of that at all. Here was a polite request from an officer of the Government asking that these men should be associated with him, and I granted that request upon the conditions named in the letter.

Q. Under what authority did you act in appointing assistants to the district attorney?—A. They were not appointed, so far as I was concerned; I gave my permission that they might appear in the suit, if they desired to do so, without pay from the Government and without any control over the suit.

Q. Were you aware of the statute on that subject?—A. Yes. They were in no sense appointees of the Government.

Q. When counsel are appointed as assistants to the district attorney, are you not aware that the law requires that they shall receive commissions from the Government?—A. Unquestionably.

Q. And be sworn, taking the oath required of the district attorney?—A. Certainly; and therefore I say that I did not consider that I was conferring any appointment on these gentlemen as special counsel. I gave permission, so far as I could, for them to appear with the district attorney, but if you will observe the terms of my letter you will see that they were to have no control of the suit and not be compensated by the Government.

Q. Were you aware of the provisions of section 366 of the Revised Statutes? which I will read:

“Every attorney or counselor who is specially retained under the authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the trial of any case in which the Government is interested, shall receive a commission from the head of such Department as a special assistant to the Attorney-General, or to some one of the district attorneys, as the nature of the appointment may require, and shall take the oath required by law to be taken by the district attorneys, and shall be subject to all the liabilities imposed upon them by law.”

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you authorize the appointment and employment of those assistants to the district attorney, as you did in your letter, without sending them a commission?—A. Yes; because I did not consider them in any sense as retained by the Government.

Q. Answer the question.—A. Certainly I did. I say I did not in any sense consider them retained as special counsel on behalf of the Government. I looked upon them more as amici curiæ. If they thought proper to come into the case, and the district attorney wanted them, I saw no objection.

Q. Amici curiæ for counsel or for the court?—A. To the court. I have known in my practice, and I dare say you have, counsel to sometimes volunteer to submit their views.

Q. Did you ever know counsel to act for the Government of the United States in a Government suit, in conjunction with the district attorney, or did you ever know counsel to be allowed to do so, without he was retained and employed for that purpose?—A. I do not recall any case, but I saw no objection to the request of the district attorney being granted upon the terms named in my letter.

Q. Let me call your attention to that request in the application:

“I ask that the Hon. Casey Young, Col. George Gantt, and General Luke E. Wright, of Memphis, and Col. J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, be permitted to appear as associate counsel, without expense to the Government, and that you will direct the commencement of proceedings.”

Your letter has been put in here, and I will read it in that connection. Have you a copy of it? I am not able to put my hands on it.—A. I remember what the contents are.

Q. It was in another book that I found it, not in this.—A. He was told that those gentlemen might come into the case with the distinct understanding—

Q. Will you be kind enough to read the part of your letter of September 3 bearing upon that point?—A. Here it is: “Yours of the 31st ultimo —”

Q. I only want that portion of it read [reading]:

“Permission is also given, as you request, to Hon. Casey Young, George Gantt, Luke E. Wright, and J. R. Beckwith, esquires, to appear as your associate counsel, with the distinct understanding, however, that the conduct of said suit is to be absolutely controlled by yourself under the direction of this Department, and that no liability is to be incurred by the Government of the United States for the payment of any fees to the gentlemen named in consideration of their services as such associate counsel.”

A. The statute you referred to provides for their payment when they are appointed as special counsel.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read it again:

“Every attorney or counselor who is specially retained under the authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the trial of any case in which the Government is interested shall receive a commission from the head of such Department as a special assistant to the Attorney-General or to some one of district attorneys, as the nature of the appointment may require, and shall take the oath required by law to be taken by the district attorneys, and shall be subject to all the liabilities imposed upon them by law."

I see nothing about pay, unless it is embraced in the word "retained."

The WITNESS. I think there is another section providing for the pay.

Q. Another section that provides for their compensation?—A. Yes.

Q. You employed them as associate counsel to assist the district attorney, and, as I understand, you gave them no commission, and you did not have any oath administered to them?—A. No. I merely gave them permission to appear in the suit as volunteers, if they thought proper.

Q. Were you not aware, as Solicitor-General or acting Attorney-General, that the object of that statute was that when counsel were retained for the Government they should do so representing the whole Government, under the obligations of an oath such as is required of a district attorney?—A. If I had regarded them as counsel for the Government I should certainly have required them to take and subscribe the proper oath, but I did not in any sense regard them as counsel for the Government.

Q. You regarded them as associate counsel, did you not?—A. The district attorney asked permission to allow those gentlemen to appear in this suit with him, and that permission was granted by me, but I never considered them as counsel, and I stipulated at the same time that they should have no compensation from the Government.

Q. If you did not regard them as counsel for the Government, as whose counsel did you regard them?—A. I regarded them as assistants to Mr. McCorry.

Q. He represented the Government?—A. Yes; but they were not regularly appointed as counsel.

Q. As whose counsel did you regard them, if you did not regard them as counsel for the Government?—A. I certainly did not consider them counsel for the Government.

Q. Whose did you?—A. I regarded them as coming into the case upon the request of the district attorney, or by his permission, and under the sanction of the Department.

Q. But when they came in, did not they act for the Government in whatever they did?—A. They had no control over the suit.

Q. Ah, but whatever they did, did not they act for the Government, as you understood it?—A. I did not consider that they were acting for the Government.

Q. Did you suppose they were to be admitted as associate counsel and to act for other parties?—A. It was a matter between the district attorney and themselves and the court. If the district attorney and the court thought proper, when the case came on to be argued, to permit them to be heard, I saw no objection. But I never considered whom they represented, and it is not a fair inference from the terms of my letter that they did represent the Government when it was expressly stipulated that they were to have no control of the suit and were to have no pay.

Q. But they were to perform legal services as such associate counsel, were they not?—A. I did not give any special thought to them. I simply noticed the request in Mr. McCorry's letter, and I saw no objection to granting it.

Q. And you did not stop, as I understand you, to make any inquiry of anybody as to why they were desired to act as counsel?—A. No, sir. The only idea I had in directing the institution of that suit was that it was only the facts as stated that called for and justified a suit on behalf of the Government and the people.

Q. The question was a little more narrow than that, if you will pardon me, Mr. Goode. Mr. Reporter, will you read my question? I do not want to repeat it. I want to see if the witness has answered it.

The STENOGRAPHER. (Reading):

Q. And you did not stop, as I understand you, to make any inquiry of anybody as to why they were desired to act as counsel?—A. I did not.

Q. I understand that Senator Harris and Casey Young called upon you, on the 2d of September, 1885, before you had seen the papers, to see whether they had arrived, and that Casey Young likewise called upon you the next day?—A. And Senator Harris also.

Q. Can you give any reason why, when Casey Young was there in your presence, before you read the papers and so before you had sent the order the next day, you did not inquire of him to learn whether he was in a proper position to act as associate counsel?—A. I made no inquiry of him at all. They came in to ask if such papers had been received, and came again the next day, and were told that they had been received and that directions had been given to bring suit.

Q. You have stated those facts. I ask you if you know now any reason why you should not and why you did not inquire of Mr. Harris or Casey Young himself what their relations with the matter were, and why they wanted to be counsel in it, or were willing to be, without pay from the Government?

Mr. EDEN. I did not understand that Senator Harris was seeking to be counsel in the case.

Mr. RANNEY. No; I meant that part of the question to relate only to Casey Young.

A. Well, sir, I did not give any thought to Mr. Young in the matter. I based my conclusion upon the official letter of a Government officer and the documents which he transmitted, and the impression made upon my mind in regard to the propriety of the suit was derived entirely from those documents. I had no conference with Mr. Young on the subject.

Q. If the document gives you any reason why he wanted those four men appointed as special counsel, will you point it out?

Mr. EDEN. I suppose the document will speak for itself.

A. The document simply preferred a request, and seeing no objection to it I granted that request. I thought something was due to the request of an official, and seeing no objection to it, I granted it; that is the only thought I gave to it.

Q. You are aware, are you not, that Mr. McCorry's communication gave no reason why these men should be appointed or why they were willing to act.—A. I read his letter, and I do not remember that he gave any reason.

Q. Then you knew no reason?—A. I knew no special reason for it, and I knew none against it; but I preferred to grant a respectful request coming from an official of the Government, unless I saw objection to it.

Q. Do you not think you did ask Casey Young why he wanted to be counsel or was willing to be associate counsel without pay?—A. I know that I did not. My interview with Casey Young did not occupy two minutes.

Q. You will pardon me, Mr. Goode. It seems to me, from what you say, that you did not stop to inquire whether this matter was already in the Attorney-General's office and had been in there, or whether the Attorney-General had taken any action upon it or refused to take any action upon it. I understand that you made no inquiry to find that out?—A. None at all. I thought the papers made a proper case for granting the permission, and I acted accordingly. I made no inquiry in the office about it; I acted exclusively upon the papers.

Q. Do you remember whether the same clerks were there then who had been there during May, June, and July?—A. Yes; they were.

Q. Then these prior applications on that subject must have been known to them?—

A. It may be so; but I do not take instructions from the clerks in the office with reference to my duty.

Q. But now are you certain that you did not ask the clerk who had that in charge whether there was anything in the office about it or whether anything had been done?—A. I asked no questions whatever, but read the papers and made up my mind from them in regard to the two questions which I consider to be involved: first, as to the legal power; and, secondly, as to the probable cause shown by the papers.

Q. You have been all over that. I want to know whether you can state from your recollection that no one in the office ever called your attention to it?—A. Nobody in the office called my attention to anything. Let me say in that connection that if I had known of this application to Attorney-General Garland, and the disposition he made of it, and if I had known that he had an interest in the Pan-Electric Company, my act would have been precisely the same.

Q. All you would have had to do in order to know what had already occurred in that office with reference to that matter was simply to look at the record in the office or inquire of the clerk who had it in charge; is not that so?—A. I presume so; but it did not occur to me to make an inquiry of that sort, any more than it did as to any other matters that came before me from day to day in the ordinary routine of the business of the office. I had no suspicion that it had been there before.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there anything to indicate that there was any proceeding pending?—A. Not at all. I regarded it as an original application, and did not know, until after the return of Mr. Garland to Washington, that he had ever been approached or had ever received a communication from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or that these gentlemen had ever called upon him, or that he had any connection whatever with any of the telephone companies.

Mr. RANNEY. You have already stated that.

The WITNESS. But, in that connection, I wanted that to appear. You asked for reasons, and I want to give my reasons.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not ask for reasons; I ask for the specific facts. If you desire to repeat it all—

The WITNESS. O, no, sir; I thought it was proper in that connection. In other words, Mr. Ranney, as I say, I do not profess to be infallible; I may have made a mistake; but I want to take the full responsibility of it upon myself.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. We have had all that, if you will pardon me. I want to shorten this record of the examination, if I can. You say that if you had known the facts, your action would have been the same.—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. I do not want to repeat it; but I understand you to say that if you had known that Dr. Rogers had applied on the 24th of May, 1885, to have suit brought, and Attorney-General Garland had not acted upon it; that on the 12th of July Mr. Van Benthuyssen had made an application which the Attorney-General had acted upon and referred it to the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. OATES. Is there any such evidence?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. OATES. That the Attorney-General acted upon it?

Mr. RANNEY. By referring it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. OATES. He refused to have anything to do with the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. You have forgotten. You were not here. (To the stenographer.) Will you read my question as far as I have gone?

The STENOGRAPHER (reading):

“I understand you to say that if you had known that Dr. Rogers had applied on the 24th day of May, 1885, to have suit brought”——

Mr. HALL. It is hard to tell whether this hits hardest on this side or on the other.

Mr. RANNEY. Don't interrupt him while he is reading.

Mr. HALL. Give us all a chance.

The STENOGRAPHER (reading):

“I understand you to say that if you had known that Dr. Rogers had applied on the 24th of May, 1885, to have suit brought, and Attorney-General Garland had not acted upon it; that on the 12th of July Mr. Van Benthuyssen had made an application which the Attorney-General had acted upon and referred it to the Secretary of the Interior”——

Mr. RANNEY. That should read “by referring it to the Secretary of the Interior.”

Q. (Continued.) “And if you had known that Mr. Garland had been applied to on the 30th or 31st of July, 1885, or the 1st of August, to bring a suit or authorize the bringing of a suit, and had declined to do it, you say that when this communication came from Mr. McCorry you would have done the same as you did do?—A. Yes; especially in view of the fact that the Attorney-General had declined to act on account of supposed disability. It is not necessary for him to be absent from the office to entitle me to act. The language of the act is, in the event of a vacancy or his absence or disability to act; and if I had known that the Attorney-General, if even present in the office, deemed himself to be under a disability or incapacitated to act in that case, and it had come to me properly, I should not have been deterred from acting upon it by reason of the fact that he felt himself under disability. In other words, I considered the responsibility upon me. When Mr. Garland is away or under any disability, I am in no sense his deputy or agent. The responsibility is upon me, and I felt that upon such a showing as was made by those papers I had no right to shut the door of the courts to these people.”

Mr. RANNEY (to the stenographer). Will you please now read the question as I have put it, altogether, and then read the answer of the witness to see if he has any further or other answer to make. I do not want to be pressing it.

The STENOGRAPHER (reading):

“Q. I understand you to say that if you had known that Dr. Rogers had applied on the 24th of May, 1885, to have suit brought, and Attorney-General Garland had not acted upon it; that on the 12th of July Mr. Van Benthuyssen had made an application which the Attorney-General had acted upon by referring it to the Secretary of the Interior; and if you had known that Mr. Garland had been applied to on 30th or 31st of July, 1885, or the 1st of August, to bring a suit or authorize the bringing of a suit, and had declined to do it, you say that when this communication came from Mr. McCorry you would have done the same as you did do?—A. Yes; especially in view of the fact that the Attorney-General had declined to act on account of supposed disability. It is not necessary for him to be absent from the office to entitle me to act. The language of the act is, in the event of a vacancy or his absence or disability to act; and if I had known that the Attorney-General, if even present in the office, deemed himself to be under a disability or incapacitated to act in that case, and it had come to me properly, I should not have been deterred from acting upon it by reason of the fact that he felt himself under disability. The responsibility is upon me, and I felt that upon such a showing as was made by those papers I had no right to shut the door of the courts to these people.”

The WITNESS. I want to add that this was an application from a district attorney of the United States for permission to use the name of the Government in bringing this suit, which application was supported by documentary evidence that, in my judgment, made a very strong prima facie case.

Q. Then you would have appointed or authorized the employment of the gentlemen named as associate counsel with the district attorney, would you not, under that state of facts, if you had known it?—A. I see no reason why I should not have done it in response to the request of the district attorney.

Q. And you would have omitted to refer it to the Secretary of the Interior, would you?—A. I would if it had contained the same documentary evidence that these papers contained. In other words, if the papers had shown the information to be obtained from the Patent Office I would have seen no necessity to send down there for information already in my possession.

Q. You would not have thought it worth your while to inquire at the Department of the Interior to ascertain whether there was any ground for the charges of fraud that did not appear on the face of the papers, would you?—A. I thought there was sufficient upon the papers to call for and justify the action. I was seeking simply to inquire whether there was probable cause for the institution of this suit. I was not called upon to say how it ought to be decided finally upon the merits.

Q. Did the transcript which you had from the Department of the Interior on its face disclose fraud?—A. It disclosed some circumstances which I considered suspicious.

Q. What?—A. The papers showed, according to my recollection now—it has been some time since I examined them—that when—

Q. But you examined them at that time?—A. Yes; according to my recollection, I saw at that time that when Mr. Bell made his application on the 14th day of February, 1876, on the same day Elisha Gray filed his caveat, and the examiner finding that to be the case declared a suspension of the application. He was addressed by the attorneys of Mr. Bell, claiming that their application was filed before the caveat. The examiner held that the office could consider no fractions of a day; that a day was an indivisible unit in the Patent Office. Upon the matter being referred to the Commissioner, he held that that was so under ordinary circumstances as a general proposition, but that in this case he thought it proper to make an inquiry as to the exact hour of the day on which the application was filed and on which the caveat was filed. Upon further examination the examiner came to the conclusion that the application had been filed before the caveat, although it had been the rule in the Patent Office that they took no note of fractions of a day. Subsequently to that, according to my recollection now—the papers will show—Mr. Bell had amended his application, and the examiner undertook to decide finally or to say how it should be determined, and I felt that was a suspicious circumstance upon the face of the papers.

Q. The papers which you have you say showed all that at that time when they were put into your hands?—A. Yes.

Q. You have not those papers here?—A. I haven't them here.

Q. Will you show me any papers that will disclose those facts? I will give you time to get them, if you haven't them here.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, have you the paper I handed you yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is probably printed.

Q. Is that an original?—A. I am going to explain why the original is not here. If it can be produced, it will be. When Mr. McCorry was directed to bring suit, all the papers were sent back to him, under the supposition that he would require them in the preparation of his bill. Subsequently the suit was ordered to be discontinued. Then, when he renewed his application, he sent along with it all the original papers which had been sent to the Department, except this certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents. I noticed the omission in the papers, and wrote to him, as the letter book will show; I have a copy of the letter here; I wrote to him calling his attention to that omission, and asking him to forward that certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents. He did so, and as soon as it came it was sent down to the Department of the Interior. All the papers that have ever come to the Department of Justice since this matter has been agitated were sent to the Interior Department, pending the investigation there. There is a vast mass of papers—papers sent by the Globe Company, the Washington Company, and the application of Mr. Cushman. When the papers were returned from the Interior Department to the Department of Justice, as I remarked before, I suppose there was at least a wheelbarrow full of them, but it seems that this certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents was not among them. Since I was here yesterday I have had a search made by a clerk, and he did not find them. But, according to my best recollection and belief, this is a certified copy of the same paper. Let me explain why I think so: I recollect that on the face of those documents which I examined at the time there was a certificate from Mr. Montgomery exactly in these words:

"This is to certify that the annexed is a true copy from the files in this case, of the file-wrapper and contents, in the matter of letters patent granted to Alexander Graham Bell March 7, 1876, No. 174,465, for improvement in telegraphy."

Here follows the application, and you will find on page 11 of this document the statement by the examiner. Here also is a letter to the honorable Commissioner of Patents, signed by Pollok & Bailey, attorneys.

Q. Do not go all over it. Have you satisfied yourself about it?—A. I think so.

Q. I do not want to encumber the record with a long statement.—A. That is my recollection.

Q. I see in the paper referred to, which came to you—that is, the affidavit in support of the memorial of Serrell, Barker, and Lyon, on page 24 of the Department of the Interior record—certified copy of file-wrapper and contents in Bell's application for patent, February 14, 1876.—A. It is a certified copy of the same paper, and according to my recollection—

Q. I do not want to encumber the record, unless there is something you desire to state on these points. I only want to make this inquiry; we do not try patent cases here. The certificate was the same on the other papers as this is.

Q. I understand your reason is that you had a certified copy, furnished you from Memphis probably, of certain papers, embracing the file-wrapper and contents from the Interior Department?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, I do not want to go into the details, because that would encumber the record, but I want to know this: You say at the time you acted on the 2d of September you did not know anything about the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I had never heard of it.

Q. You never heard of such a name?—A. I never heard the name.

Q. You had never heard of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Oh, yes; I had heard of the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Had you never heard of the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Never.

Q. Had you not had an office here in Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not have a telephone in your office?—A. No.

Q. Or use one?—A. No, sir; I knew there were telephones, but I had no stock in any of the telephone companies and I paid no attention to them. I am quite sure that I never heard of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company until this agitation began.

Q. You never heard of it in Virginia?—A. I know they have telephones down there, but not being a stockholder and not being interested in those things, I had not paid much attention to them. I have seen them in use, but really I could not tell you to-day whether the telephone instruments in use in Virginia belong to the Bell Company or any other company.

Q. When you examined these papers in the afternoon and evening of the 2d of September you were aware of the existence, of course, of the Bell telephone, and you had before you papers showing that those Bell patents which you were asked to vacate were issued some ten years before that time; you were aware of that?—A. Yes; the date shows that.

Q. Did you inquire or look to see whether the Bell patents had ever been litigated in court?—A. I did not. I have heard of all that since. But I thought the case was made out upon the papers presented.

Q. You have said that a great many times, if you will pardon my remark. I only want to save expense to the Government in printing and relieve Brother Oates of his impatience. This is my question: Did it occur to you at that time that an application to vacate the Bell telephone patent came pretty late after ten years?—A. No, I only remember that I made as careful an examination as I could, and I was strongly impressed with the case as made out.

Q. You have answered that, and I pray you will not repeat it—unless you desire to do so.—A. No, sir; I only wish to be understood by the committee.

Q. My question was this: You say it did not occur to you?—A. No, sir; it did not.

Q. That ten out of the seventeen years during which a patent runs had already expired; it didn't occur to you then?—A. I don't remember now that such a thought occurred to me.

Q. Didn't you think it a pretty late day in the life of that patent at that time to set up the charge of fraud in the obtaining of it?—A. I thought if the allegations in that paper were true it ought to be inquired into judicially.

Q. You do not answer my question; didn't it occur to you that it was a very late day in the history of that patent to start such a claim?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of that.

Q. Were you aware at that time that the validity of the Bell patent had been the subject of litigation for many years? A.—No, sir.

Q. Had you ever read any of the reported decisions in relation to the Bell telephone patent?—A. No, sir; none of them. I have heard of them since.

Q. At that time, when a party was seeking to attack the validity of the patent because of the grounds alleged here (I will not read them), then, if I understand you, you never stopped to think that ten years had transpired, during which time the Bell telephone had been in operation; you did not stop to think or ascertain whether the validity of the patent had been the subject of contest in suits and the subject matter of judicial decisions or not?—A. I did not. I only formed my judgment from the papers sent to me.

Q. Don't you think that as acting Attorney-General of the United States, asked to authorize a suit in behalf of the United States to vacate that patent, in authorizing it to be done, to vacate it, prudence required you to first ascertain whether the courts of the country had not already established the matter and adjudicated the very thing which was alleged against it?—A. I do not understand that any suit has ever been brought before this, in the name of the Government, to test the validity of that patent, and it did not occur to me that any wrong would be done to permit an inquiry like this to be made when the application was accompanied with such documentary evidence as accompanied that application. In other words, I did not consider the Bell Company as occupying any different attitude in this matter from any other company. I did not understand they were hedged about with such divinity that they could not be called into court like other people.

Q. Of course not. But supposing you had known that the very objections that were urged against the validity of the Bell telephone patents, that could be made a subject of inquiry in a Government suit, had been already thoroughly tried in several States and been adjudicated, don't you think it would have been proper for you to have first looked into that, and see if that had been the case before you subjected the Government to the expense of a new suit?—A. While that is true, it is claimed at the same time that there never has been any thorough trial of this question; that the first suits were collusive suits, and the others were going off on the idea of comity, and I should say that the time had come when, in a case like this, a suit should be brought in the name of the Government to go to the bottom of this business. It is claimed that there never has been a thorough trial of the questions involved in this case.

Q. I am inquiring of your action on the 2d and 3d of September, 1885; did you know at that time of any suits having been brought?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever know of any suits having been brought?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you seek to ascertain before you granted that order?—A. I did not.

Q. You made no investigation?—A. None. You read the—

Q. I am asking about your action then, not since. It is simply this: understand me; when you received that application from Mr. McCorry and granted this leave to bring that suit, you had no knowledge whether any suit had been brought to test the Bell telephone patent during the ten years of its life, do I understand you?—A. None.

Q. And you did not seek to find out?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say that you have been a practicing lawyer during all this time, and that you had never read in the newspapers accounts of a litigation that the Bell Telephone Company had had?—A. I do not recall any such reading. Possibly I may have seen it, but it made no impression upon me; I do not remember it.

Q. Do you now tell the committee (and of course you do if you say so, and I want to know what the fact is) that the suit that had been going on for three years, called the Drawbaugh suit—A. I never heard of that until after this.

Q. Which was argued, if I recollect right, in the summer of 1885, and had been going on, and made a good deal of noise in the newspapers, which was reported, and in which eminent counsel were engaged, you never had heard of?—A. No, sir; I never heard of it. Where was the suit tried?

Q. I am speaking of the Drawbaugh case; don't you know of it now?—A. I have heard of it.

Q. Don't you know it was tried in New York?—A. I have understood that that suit was pending in the Supreme Court upon appeal.

Q. Didn't you know that that suit had been pending in the State of New York for three years?—A. No, sir; I never knew of the Drawbaugh suit until after this suit was ordered.

Q. Don't you know that it was heard in the summer of 1885 before this application was brought to you, in New York, before Judge Wallace; were not the papers full of it, and did you not know it?—A. Well, sir, I don't take any of the New York papers; it is very rarely that I read one of them; it is only when I buy them on the street occasionally. But I will say, that I never heard of the Drawbaugh suit until after that application by Mr. McCorry; never.

Q. Had you never heard of the Dolbear suit that was brought years ago before Judges Gray and Lowell, in Boston?—A. Never. That was tried in Boston? I never heard of that.

Q. Don't you know that that was first heard upon the application for a preliminary injunction, and that Mr. Justice Gray, of the Supreme Court, granted it, and then it was tried on its merits and Judge Lowell gave an eminent opinion in it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of the Molecular cases?—A. I have heard of them since.

Q. Did you never hear of the Overland cases tried in New Jersey?—A. No, sir; I never heard of any suit involving the validity of the Bell telephone patent until after this application was made to me.

Q. You did not know that since this Bell Telephone Company had been in operation it had been in litigation with some seven or eight parties in the State of Massachusetts, in the State of New York, in the State of Pennsylvania, and in the State of New Jersey; you did not know that?—A. No; I did not. Not being a telephone lawyer, and not living in those parts of the country, I do not think it is very strange I did not know about it; there are a great many things I do not know about.

Q. Do you take the newspapers?—A. I do not take the New York or Boston papers.

Q. Don't you know that all those cases have been reported in the Federal Reporter—have been reported in the newspapers, and put into the reports of patent cases?—A. Well, I am not a patent lawyer, and have read but very little on the subject of patent law. I have not read the reported patent cases.

Q. In other words, then, if it be true that there had been numerous cases tried and determined in the courts below, which were then pending, some of them, in the Supreme Court, you never heard of it from any source?—A. Never.

Q. And all the litigation that the Bell Telephone Company had had for the ten years during the life of their company you never had heard of?—A. Never, according to my best recollection.

Q. And before you authorized that suit to be brought, did you not look to see whether it had been the subject of litigation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or whether there were any cases pending in the Supreme Court of the United States here on the docket to be heard?—A. I did not.

Q. And never stopped to inquire?—A. No, sir; I took action on the application as it came to me.

Q. You took particular pains to examine the law to see whether it would authorize you to bring the suit, but you did not take pains to see whether the questions raised to be litigated had already been litigated, or were in due form before the Supreme Court on appeal?—A. No, sir. Here was an application from the district attorney asking permission to use the name of the Government, and supported by proper proof to show that it ought to be done.

Q. And you took it as a matter of course?—A. No. I formed an opinion from the papers presented. As I say, I did not consider but two points.

Q. It would not have made any difference to you if there had been in the Supreme Court reports, the highest court of the land, a full decision overruling them all and sustaining the Bell patent notwithstanding?—A. Oh, I do not say that if the exact point had been decided by the Supreme Court I should have ordered the suit.

Q. Don't you think proper prudence on your part, as acting Attorney-General of the United States, would require you to look and see whether there was or not?—A. Having no suggestions made that any such suit was pending involving these matters, it did not occur to me. I acted upon these papers as any others that came to me.

Q. Did you stop to consider what expenditure the prosecution of that suit might, in the end, entail upon the Government?—A. No, sir, I did not; but if the statements contained in those papers are true, I think the Government might well afford to spend money to correct that wrong.

Q. The question I put was whether you stopped to consider it.

Mr. EDEN. He has answered the question.

The WITNESS. No, I did not.

Mr. RANNEY. And he added to that his opinion.

Mr. EDEN. I think the witness ought to be allowed to make his full statement.

The WITNESS. I want to be in perfect order, but at the same time I do not want to be cut off in my answer. I think I know what is proper from a witness.

The CHAIRMAN. You can make the answer as fully as you like. A person in your position is supposed to know what is proper.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not intend to restrain you, Mr. Solicitor-General, by any means.

The WITNESS. You have treated me very politely; I have no complaint to make.

Q. You never had had any experience in patent suits so that you could form any idea of what it would cost?—A. I had had patent cases, but never managed them myself; I got others to assist me.

Q. You said you thought the public could well have afforded to spend money for that purpose. On that I desire to ask a question. If the result of that suit and the charges made upon it would have been simply the annulling of the Bell telephone patent, the destroying of that monopoly, and then the establishing of another patent and another monopoly, what benefit to the public would it be?—A. I do not see that the benefit would be any. But I did not stop to consider whether another monopoly would spring up or not. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I considered, if the statements in these papers were true, that this was a wrong upon the Government; that the Government had been deceived; that its seal was upon a paper which ought to be canceled; that under that grant, made, as I supposed, improvidently or surreptitiously, from the papers which were brought to me, a huge monopoly had sprung up in this country, and I thought it would be for the benefit of all the people to break down that monopoly (provided, always, the grant was improperly made), and throw the business open to the public. In other words, I do not consider that one of the forces of nature like electricity ought to be appropriated to any man or any set of men unless they have got a patent that will stand the test fully.

Q. My question was whether you considered it your duty to do it, although breaking down the Bell telephone established the Gray telephone as a prior invention?—

A. I should be as much opposed to that monopoly as to the Bell, or any other monopoly. I do not know anything against Bell.

Q. If the direct result of that suit was simply to destroy the Bell telephone and establish another one, it would be of no benefit to the people?—A. No, sir; and I would be as much opposed to the Gray monopoly as to the Bell monopoly. I think the telephone has become not only a commercial, but a social necessity, and no people should be allowed to monopolize it unless they have an unquestioned right to do it.

Q. But the question presented to you on the 2d of September was whether Bell was entitled to the patent for the telephone or Elisha Gray, wasn't it?—A. No, sir; I did not consider that question involved in this suit.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow me a question at this point. Suppose that had been the fact that the controversy in substance was between the Bell telephone patent and the Gray telephone patent, and you had come to the conclusion that the Bell patent was fraudulently obtained, would you have considered it your duty as a public officer to have instituted this suit, notwithstanding the advantage of it might have been to the advantage of the Gray patent?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. I did not consider what benefit would result to the Gray patent; I considered that, acting for the benefit of the people, my duty was to cause an inquiry to be made into the truth of these allegations, and if these allegations were true, the patent ought to be recalled. But I want to say here that I have no feeling in the matter, and so far as I know the feeling of this administration they intend that this suit shall be prosecuted with vigor and at the same time with fairness. They have no feeling in it.

Mr. RANNEY. We will come to that by and by, the second suit; I have not got through the first one yet. The question with me is this: Whether upon those papers presented to you the question was not which of the two, Graham Bell or Elisha Gray, was the inventor of the telephone?—A. I considered the question to be whether the patent had been unadvisedly issued, by mistake, or had been fraudulently obtained.

Q. But in favor of one rather than the other?—A. I did not compare the relative merits of the Gray and Bell patents. I looked only to the allegations contained in those papers, and I supposed if they were true the patents should be canceled, otherwise not.

Q. Did you at that time consider it your duty to lend the name of the United States and the aid of its Treasury to the determination of the question which of those two men was the original inventor of that telephone?—A. No, sir; that was not my view of the case at all; I considered it a matter between the Government and the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. But you did not stop to see Mr. Wilbur, did you?—A. No, I did not. I read his affidavit. I did not know him at all.

Q. And you did not stop to investigate the question at all?—A. I made no investigation beyond reading the papers and the authorities that I have spoken of.

Mr. EDEN. Will you allow me to suggest that the application of the district attorney does not even refer to the Gray patent at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not pretended that that question was directly involved in the suit.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know that it was.

Mr. EDEN. I thought perhaps you might be under a misapprehension.

Mr. RANNEY. No, sir; I know what is in them. (To the witness.) Now, don't you understand the law to be that where it is a simple question of which is the original inventor, that that is a matter which can be determined between the two contending parties, under the law, without the action of the United States Government?—A. Yes, sir; and the judgment of the court will affect those parties. Unquestionably the matter between Gray and Bell may be determined in a suit between those two parties, but then if anybody else complained that the patent had been fraudulently obtained, another suit would be necessary, and so on ad infinitum.

Q. But, supposing the United States had brought suit to annul the Bell patent, and the suit in court had decided that the patent was valid, would that conclude it as regards other parties?—A. If the Supreme Court had decided on a suit brought by the United States, that the Bell patent was valid, I should say that that would be conclusive.

Q. On other parties? Could not a man attack the validity of that patent just as much then as before?—A. I suppose he could, but it is hardly probable—

Q. It is no more conclusive in the one case than another, is it?—A. I mean to say this: that in a suit brought by one individual against another, in such suit a judgment of the court would only be binding upon those parties.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I would like now, as a matter of information, to inquire as to this: In a controversy or suit between Bell and Gray as to these patents, could the question as to whether the Bell patent had been fraudulently obtained or improperly issued by the United States be tried and determined?—A. I understand that defense could be made, but it would only be conclusive upon the parties to that suit; it could not result in the cancellation of the patent.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understood your answer, I think. Then I ask this question: Suppose in that case, the case of the United States against Bell, the Supreme Court decide that Graham Bell was not a fraud, but determine the patent valid. Does that prevent anybody, when sued for infringing, from contesting that question afterwards?—A. I should say that such a defense as that could be made after the decision.

Q. As a lawyer, I ask you if it would preclude them in law from contesting that?—A. I suppose a certain defense would be open to them.

Q. Then a suit by United States would not make it conclusive, mutually, any way, would it?—A. Well, the supposition is that if the United States would bring a suit to cancel a patent, and the decree of cancellation was rendered, that that would settle the patent.

Q. What was the object in bringing a suit in the name of the United States to determine that matter in behalf of the whole public, if it would not be mutually binding on the whole public and Bell when decided?—A. I think that would be practically the result of it.

Q. Would it, as a matter of law, be the result of it?—A. I am not prepared to say.

Q. You did not consider that?—A. No, sir; I am not prepared to say at this time; I have not examined that question; but I am rather inclined to think that would be the end of it.

Mr. OATES. If it is not void, it is avoidance.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Supposing it is sustained?

The WITNESS. I say supposing it was declared void.

Q. But I say supposing the Supreme Court sustained it, does that prevent any infringer from setting up that question to see whether it is valid or not?—A. I suppose he would have the right.

Q. It does not preclude him then?—A. I suppose not.

Q. So that that suit would be one-sided in its result, would it not?—A. To that extent. If the result is one of cancellation, of course that is an end of Bell's patent.

Q. You have but one intent in view, and that is to get the Bell patent canceled?—A. Oh, no; that is not doing me justice. I have no feeling against Bell.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be the position of any contestant—to simply cancel the Bell patent.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; to cancel the Bell patent and leave open all this question as to devices which are made to carry out and apply and put into operation the art of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, would it not?

The WITNESS. I suppose there would probably be questions arising under other claims.

Q. If you should cancel the Bell patent on the broad claim that you speak of, and leave the Rogers patent in force, that would not cancel his, would it?—A. I do not know what the Rogers patent covers.

Q. Well, it covers the carbon microphone transmitter, as they call it?—A. I am not an expert in electricity.

Q. Do you know what that is? Do you know what a microphone is in electricity?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you looked into the principle of the telephone in any way?—A. No, sir; I have not. I think it would take me a year to master all the science connected with the subject of electricity.

Q. Did you at the time of your examination on the 2d or 3d of September look to see wherein the complaint affected the telephone?—A. No, sir; I thought it would take me twelve months to master that science, if I could do it then, and for that reason I have engaged special counsel to assist.

Q. You even have not done it now; you do not know what the appliances of telephones are?—A. I could not undergo an examination as to matters involving the science of electricity.

Q. Do you know enough about it to be able to answer this question. Supposing it true that you succeed in overturning the claim of Bell that he invented a new art or method, to wit, the method or art of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, that broad claim, as you have indicated, that he should not have the broad claim like that in the use of electricity; supposing you did that, does it not still leave open all the patents, untouched, for the devices, instruments, and apparatus by which that thing is accomplished?—A. I do not know what is claimed in the other patents to which you refer.

Q. One is a device by which it is carried out and the other is the principle of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity.—A. I only know this: that if Bell has gotten a patent covering such broad claim to which he is not entitled, I do not think he ought to appropriate it.

Q. Then if you break that claim by itself (and it is the fundamental one on which his patent rests) it still leaves the matter open, does it not, and it becomes a controversy between these different parties who have different microphones or instruments by which it is done?—A. I do not know the claims of the parties to which you refer.

Q. Do you know the difference in the patent law between the invention of an art of itself and that of devices and apparatus; you know that difference?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the committee is directed to go into a scientific investigation of this subject, I suppose we will have to bear that infliction; but I would have asked to be excused from serving on the committee if I had known we were going into that.

Mr. RANNEY. I will save you all the infliction I can, and hope you will me in your remarks; I want to go as far as this—I want to call your attention to this fact: You deemed it your duty in behalf of the public to upset the Bell Telephone as a matter of public good, I understand you?—A. No; I deemed it my duty to have a judicial investigation of the matters involved; I did not deem it my duty to upset anything; and, as I say, if I was called on now and sat as a judge to decide this question, I am not prepared to say how I would decide it; I am thoroughly satisfied, however, that I did right in ordering this suit.

Q. I want to call your attention to this: You, as a public officer, had this question to determine, whether you would allow the name of the Government to be used and its Treasury to be drawn on to prosecute a patent suit, and you claimed that you were doing it for the public good. Now, I want to call your attention to this: Whether you considered this and acted upon it; whether, if you had upset and overturned or destroyed the Bell patent on that broad claim, it did not leave the public inflicted by these other monopolies, if there are such, just as much?—A. I did not examine that. I was satisfied that if the statements contained in the papers were true, that a wrong had been done to the Government and Bell was in possession of a monopoly he was not entitled to.

Q. But you were presumed to be acting for the great public, and the conflicting claims between the patentees could be settled between the parties without the interference of the Government, could it not?—A. I thought I had nothing to do, as I have explained more than once, but to pass upon that application as intelligently as I could, and I undertook to do it.

Q. Well, I want to see what intelligence you showed in regard to it, if you will pardon me; I am not questioning your ability. You did not consider that matter, whether it would be of any advantage to the public or not, or whether it would not leave somebody else in place of Bell?—A. I thought it would be of advantage to the public. My idea was that if a wrong had been committed—

Q. I will come to that by and by; I am not on that part now. I shall go somewhat into that, with the permission of the committee; but now I call your attention to the fact that you authorized the bringing of this suit down in Memphis, Tenn., during the afternoon and evening of the 2d of September. How much did you consider that question; that is, the question of whether it should be brought down there?—A. The application was to bring the suit there, and there was no reason why it should not be brought there that I saw.

Q. Was there any reason why it should be?—A. Yes, sir; the recommendation of the district attorney of that district was a sufficient reason for me.

Q. Why couldn't you have brought it here just as well?—A. There was no such application to bring the suit here.

Q. It is to be brought in the name of the Attorney-General, if brought at all?—A. I know it; but there had been no suggestion made that it should be brought anywhere else at that time.

Q. Do you understand that any district attorney in the United States had a right to bring it himself simply because he—A. Not at all; but I considered his recommendation entitled to respect, and I saw no objection to his application.

Q. Did you stop to think whether there might be some private interests to be subserved by it?—A. No, sir; I did not. It did not impress me from an examination of the papers that it was a matter in which private interests were to be subserved. I looked upon it as a suit for the benefit of the Government.

Q. You have already said that the names of the associate counsel did not suggest anything of that kind to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would the question of jurisdiction occur to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew by those papers that the Bell Telephone Company was a corporation located in the State of Massachusetts, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you suppose, then, that they could be sued in Tennessee?—A. I supposed the district attorney knew his business.

Q. Did you look at it to see?—A. I did not go into the question of jurisdiction to see how it could be acquired. I simply gave him permission to bring the suit there.

Q. If you will answer me squarely, Mr. Attorney-General, did you authorize that suit?

Mr. OATES. He was only Acting Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. I was speaking of him in his capacity at that time. If you mean to say that you authorized the bringing of that suit in the State of Tennessee without stopping to think, inquire, or examine as to whether there was any legal authority to do it, then I will take your answer.—A. I did not consider that question at that time.

Q. What is the law about suing a corporation out of its own district.

A. My understanding of the law is that you may sue a defendant at the place of his residence or wherever found doing business, and if the Bell Telephone Company was found doing business in the State of Tennessee, I did suppose suit might be brought there.

Q. Doing business how?—A. Doing business by an agent.

Q. Merely selling goods?—A. No; I should say that if the Bell Telephone Company has a contract with a local company—

Mr. HALL. As the witness says he did not consider that question at that time, it looks as though it was a contest between you and the witness as to which knew the most law.

Q. You did not consider it?—A. I have no objection to giving my opinion on that subject.

Q. I do not care for your opinion now, but I want to know how far you considered it. I understand that you did not, at the time you authorized such suit to be brought, consider the question whether that company could be sued, as a matter of law, down in Tennessee?—A. I do not remember that I gave any consideration to that matter. I assumed that the district attorney would hardly make application to bring suit there unless he knew that he could acquire jurisdiction. I think jurisdiction can be acquired in Tennessee and anywhere else where the Bell Telephone Company is found doing business.

The CHAIRMAN. Wherever it has an office.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. And you considered him competent as a local lawyer to advise you. Did you stop to find out where the Bell Telephone Company was incorporated?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Now, right on that point. You have been asked by Mr. Boyle, the chairman, about the second or last suit you brought, and you have said that you brought it in Columbus, in the southern district of Ohio?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You considered a good deal about that matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have said that all concurred or had passed upon it?—A. Yes, sir; I say that most of them had passed upon it. I understood that a case had been decided in Boston, one in Baltimore, one in Pennsylvania, some in New York, and some in New Jersey, but no suit exactly like this. We expect this to be a different suit from any that has been tried—

Q. We will come to that by and by.

Mr. EDEN. I think the witness ought to be allowed to give his reasons.

Mr. RANNEY. He is going beyond what I asked. You said your reasons for having the bill filed in Ohio were because the courts East had passed upon it?—A. That was one reason; and another was we considered we would get an impartial tribunal there; a forum which would be perfectly fair.

Q. Who would be the judge to sit in the circuit court there?—A. He has died recently.

Q. Who would have been, if he had not died?—A. Judge Baxter; he was the circuit judge.

Q. Wouldn't he have been the same man that would have sat in East Tennessee, too, in that district?—A. I think his circuit was composed of Tennessee, Kentucky, Michigan, and Ohio.

Q. So that you brought the new bill in a circuit where you would have had the same circuit judge that you would have had if the original suit had gone on?—A. Yes, sir; but I know nothing against that judge—

Q. I haven't asked you anything against him yet. If there is anything on that point I will come to it by and by. Didn't you know that in the Massachusetts district, Judge Colt, the circuit judge there now, and Judge Nelson had never tried a patent case involved in this litigation?—A. I did not know what judges had tried the case. I understood that a patent case had been tried in the courts there, but I did not know before what judge.

Q. Did you stop to inquire whether Judge Colt and Judge Nelson, the circuit and the district judges, had either of them tried a patent case?—A. No, sir; I have no reason to say that either of those judges would not have been perfectly impartial; none in the world. That was not the reason that kept us from going to Boston.

Q. Was not one of the reasons why you determined to go to Columbus, Ohio, as a place for filing that bill, that you could have Judge Baxter sit in the case?—A. No, sir; that was not the reason, because the court would be held by Judge Baxter and Judge Sage. One reason was that we thought, from circumstances that came to our knowledge, that we could get jurisdiction better there perhaps than in some other place on account of some local facts.

Q. Why in the southern district more than in the northern district of Ohio?—A. On account of the presence of these companies there doing business on behalf of the Bell Company.

Q. Then the fact that you would have Judge Baxter there had nothing to do with it?—A. That did not influence me. We conferred about this matter. I did not know Judge Baxter. I knew nothing against him and I knew nothing specially in his favor in trying such a suit as this. I understood that he and Judge Sage would hold court, and that Justice Matthews, of the Supreme Court, would be the Supreme Court judge who would belong to that circuit, and in all probability the court would be held by Mr. Justice Matthews and Judges Baxter and Sage.

Q. When you brought the last suit you had discovered the whole connection of this Pan-Electric Company with it—these gentlemen?—A. Yes, sir; I had heard a great deal of it before the last suit was brought. But I want to say that we considered various places. I do not know everything that entered into the discussion, and there were some reasons why we did not think it proper to go to Memphis, although that was urged. We did not want to have the appearance of having a revival of the old suit. We wanted it to be in fact and in name a suit in behalf of the Government.

Q. But didn't you know—you say you wanted to avoid having that name—didn't you know or hadn't you heard or seen it stated that one of the reasons why they wanted that Government suit brought there was because Judge Baxter was what they called a "patent smasher"?—A. That was never said to me. The only reason ever urged that we should go to Memphis was, they knew the fact that we could get jurisdiction there on account of there being a local company.

Q. Before this bill was filed, hadn't you heard it said and claimed by the papers that these Pan-Electric people were desirous of getting into a circuit where Judge Baxter would sit?—A. No, I have seen that stated since; I did not hear it before. I understand it had been charged in the papers that that was the purpose, but I never heard the suggestion made.

Q. You never heard that he had the reputation of being a man hostile to all corporations?—A. I never heard that until the suit was ordered.

Q. That he was notoriously so?—A. On the contrary I think he was spoken highly of by the gentlemen present. Judge Thurman spoke of him in high terms, as a sound and able judge and a man of good character.

Q. You never heard of such a representation or charge?—A. Never until subsequently. I understand it has been in some of the New York papers since.

Q. But you never heard of it?—A. Never before.

Q. I want to go back to another thing. Do I understand you that in authorizing that suit in Memphis the counsel were not to charge anything for their services, but that the Government was to bear all the other expenses, or that the Government was to be protected against all expenses?—A. I understood that the Government was to bear the ordinary court expenses of the suit.

Q. And the taking of the testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Government was to bear all that?—A. That was my understanding.

Q. Didn't you understand that the Government was not to be subjected to any expense, for the taking of testimony or otherwise?—A. No, sir.

Q. Wasn't there any such contract?—A. No, sir; I supposed the expense was to be borne by the Government.

Q. I understand there are some letters on that subject. Am I in error. Let me turn to Mr. McCorry's letter and see. I read from page 5 of the Interior Department record, where it says: "I am assured that the parties specially pressing this matter will, if required, save the Government harmless against expense."—A. What else does he say?

Q. "But I do not think it proper to require such of them farther than the payment of fees to the counsel whom they desire associated with me in the case."—A. That is my understanding.

Q. I want to put one question to you. You did have it brought to your attention in that communication that there were parties specially pressing that matter?—A. Yes, sir; that says so, but I didn't understand that they appeared in that suit.

Q. You mean those named in the memorial; you took that to refer to the memorial?
—A. Yes, sir; to refer to the memorial. I did not understand that those gentlemen were to be in any sense counsel for the Government, but I did suppose this, that the ordinary court expenses would be paid by the Government.

Q. I want to put this question further than that—not to go into this patent-right business fully, for I have a general knowledge of it such as I gather from this record only. Have you examined and read the evidence in the case as presented before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I have not.

Q. This case was referred by you, ultimately, to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you that after the first suit had been dismissed—which was done by order of the President, was it?—A. It was done by my order, but at his suggestion.

Q. You did not want it done?—A. I had no objection to it; the correspondence speaks for itself.

Q. After that had been done, I understand the same application was renewed, was it not, to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same application from Mr. McCorry, the same affidavits, and then by whose order was it referred to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. By mine.

Q. By whose direction?—A. None.

Q. Did you have any more information when you referred that than when you referred the other?—A. I had a suggestion from the President. He thought under all the circumstances it would be better to send the case there for report.

Q. You didn't do it for your own information, but only on the suggestion of the President?—A. Only at his suggestion. If you have read the correspondence you will see it. If you will allow me, I will read what passed. Before you pass from that I would like to have the committee know exactly how this thing was done.

Mr. RANNEY. Don't read it from the newspaper; give us a certified copy.

The CHAIRMAN. If the witness says that the newspaper contains a true copy, it will be sufficient. I have not been very particular about inquiring for the originals. If he is satisfied that that is a correct copy it will do.

Mr. RANNEY. Be kind enough to let me see that. I want only to be sure it is correct.

The WITNESS. (Handing a copy of the Sunday Gazette to Mr. Ranney.) I know that to be a correct copy. It contains the statement of the Attorney-General about his relation to the matter, and the correspondence between the President and myself.

Mr. RANNEY. This is the communication of the Attorney-General to the President of October 8, 1885, the President's letter to yourself, and your answer in reply?—A. Yes, sir; I know this is a correct copy.

The letters are as follows:

Letter of Attorney-General Garland to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., October 8, 1885.

The PRESIDENT:

SIR: On my return the 1st of this month from a visit to my home you called my attention to what was being said in reference to the granting of the use of the name of the United States by the Solicitor-General, in my absence, to test the validity of the Bell Telephone patent. I stated to you then that all I knew about it was contained in the telegram to the Times-Democrat of New Orleans, on the 27th of last September, from Little Rock, which telegram will be hereinafter alluded to. Since my return to my post of duty a great deal more has been said in reference to it in the public prints and in other ways, and it has assumed a general importance in the country. So much so that I deemed it my duty, upon my own motion, to bring the matter fully to the attention of yourself and the Cabinet at this morning's session, which I did, and explained my attitude in the case, as I understand it, fully. On further reflection, I think it best for me to put this statement in writing, so that you may have it for whatever use you wish to make of it and for the benefit of all concerned, and I now proceed to do so.

About three years ago I, with some six or seven other gentlemen, entered into an organization known as the Pan-Electric Company, based upon what was called the Rogers invention. We formed that company in good faith and started it in its operations, and have gone on from time to time with it, as companies have generally been conducted. In selecting the officers of that company I was made its attorney. The organization was a legitimate and legal one, and one into which each one of its members had a perfect right to enter, and formed at a time when there was not any particular probability that I would ever be called upon to fill the office of Attorney-General of the United States. Some time last summer, I do not recollect the precise day, several gentlemen approached me, stating that they desired to make application in the name of this company, of which I was a stockholder and attorney, for the use of the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell Telephone patents in the courts. Those gentlemen were Mr. Casey Young, Col. George W. Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and one other gentleman whose name I do not recollect.

I told the gentlemen that I could not consider the matter, and being asked by one of them why, I stated that I was disabled because of being a stockholder and the attorney of the company in whose name it was intended to make the application. Several questions were propounded to me as to the manner and mode of proceeding in such matters, which I declined to answer, stating that I was disabled from considering the subject-matter at all. I could not answer these questions, and this response seemed to be satisfactory to the gentlemen present. They retired from my office, and never made any further effort towards an application to me, and I would state that in the interview alluded to they did not exhibit any application to me or say that they were then ready to make it, but that they desired to make it. Whether they wished to make it then or at some future time, I did not know.

I heard no more of the matter in any shape. I left here on the 27th of August for a visit of recreation to my home in Arkansas without ever speaking to the Solicitor-General or any one else in the office about the matter. And the next thing upon this subject that came to my attention was a telegram kindly sent me by the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, already referred to, to which I replied from Little Rock that I did not know the use of the name of the United States had been granted, and that I had not granted any such use. This is all of my connection with the matter by commission or omission. After the interview with the gentlemen already spoken of I supposed that they would come to me with an application, after the statement I had made, to either refer the matter to the Solicitor-General or to present it to you, as the legal head of the executive departments of the Government, for your consideration. Such was not done, but an application was made to the Solicitor-General direct, and he granted the request. Upon this state of facts there is a great deal of misapprehension existing as to my true and proper relation as Attorney-General to this whole subject, and I think I can correct that.

The Solicitor-General, under the law creating that office, is not the deputy or agent of the Attorney-General. He is the officer of the law, and acts as such by virtue of a commission from the people through the President and not under the authority of the Attorney-General, in those matters that come before him in the absence or in the case of the disability of the Attorney-General to act. The latter part of section 347 of Revised Statutes says:

"In case of vacancy in the office of Attorney-General, or of his absence or disability, the Solicitor-General shall have power to exercise all the duties of that office."

The disability here is not limited to the one of physical ability to perform the duties, but has reference to and includes that as well as mental incapacity, or incapacity on account of interest in the subject-matter, and the section would properly read, "or of his absence, or, being present, incapacitated to act." And in cases coming within this statement the Solicitor-General acts for himself. He is not responsible to the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General can exercise no control over his discretion. So, in the case presented, being disabled or disqualified from acting, I, as Attorney-General, simply "sat out," as it were, as the reports show that a justice of the Supreme Court and of other court does when he has previous to coming on the bench or otherwise been connected with a case before the court. This independent character of the Solicitor-General in matters of this sort makes him even a Cabinet officer in the absence of the Attorney-General (see Eames on United States Executive Departments, section 988); and this Department has plenty of evidence of the former Solicitor-General's acting in the Cabinet councils in the absence of the Attorney-General; so that when it came to me that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company wanted to use the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent, I, being disabled to act upon it as hereinbefore stated, the Solicitor-General was the proper person to act whether I referred the matter to him or whether I left the parties (as I did) to seek him or any other remedy as best they could. The fact of my absence is of no moment to this inquiry, because if I was disabled to act and here at the Department of Justice in person the Solicitor-General could act. This appears very plain from the reading of the statutes and from the very character of the organization of the Department of Justice, as it is now called; but, aside from all this, there are plenty of precedents in the Department to enforce this view.

In the matter of the Rancho Guadalupe claim in California, Solicitor-General Phillips gave an opinion to the Interior Department, and at the bottom of that opinion is this note:

"The Attorney-General, Mr. William, having been consulted in regard to the above case before his appointment to office, referred the communication of the Secretary of the Interior to the Solicitor-General on the 4th of January, 1878, to answer the questions propounded therein, and took no further action in the matter." (14 Opins., Attorney-General, p. 606.)

Following immediately on in the same volume, in the matter of the central branch of the Union Pacific Railway, is an opinion by the Solicitor-General, Mr. Phillips, with a note attached:

"The Attorney-General, previous to his appointment to office, had been employed as counsel in the above case for the railroad company, and for that reason took no official action therein further than to refer the matter to the Solicitor-General, with a request to answer the questions submitted by the Secretary of the Interior." (Ibid. 607.)

It may be noted here that in this case of the railroad company, as in the case of Pan-Electric Company, the disability or disqualification was on account of having been employed as counsel. Mr. Williams was counsel for the railroad company, and felt that he was disqualified from considering the questions submitted, and I, as counsel for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, previous to my appointment to office, felt that I could not consider the application or the offer to make an application to me in its behalf.

In the extradition case of Lawrence (15 Opinion, 515), Solicitor-General Phillips gives an opinion, and a note is attached that Mr. Pierrepont, the then Attorney-General, had been consulted previous to his appointment, in behalf of the petition, and he took no part in the consideration of the subject. In the same volume, page 557, in the matter of the ocean-mail service, Solicitor-General Phillips delivers an opinion to the Postmaster-General, and we find a note to it as follows:

"The Attorney-General, having been counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, declined to take any part in the consideration and decision of the case above stated."

The action here noted of the Attorney-General is precisely what I took in the matter of the offer to make an application on behalf of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Further on in the same volume, page 559, in the matter of the contract for the Ocean Mail Service, Solicitor General Phillips delivered another opinion with exactly the same sort of note at the bottom. These are but a few of the many precedents afforded by this Department, and it is not necessary to worry you with any more.

The case, to my mind, is perfectly clear that I had no authority then to consider it; my disability still exists, and if everything else were removed—if I had given away or sold my stock, or had ceased by direct order to be attorney for the company—the simple fact that I had once been counsel or had been consulted in the interest of the company offering to make the application, would disable, or disqualify, or incapacitate me from acting in the premises, and I took, as I thought, the most prudent course, to have nothing to do with it. And I am still, as the head of this Department, the Attorney-General, for these reasons disabled from interfering with it. The only course for me then was not to touch it, and it is the same thing now.

In answering to the question propounded to me at the Cabinet meeting by yourself and others, as to the course of procedure governing such matters, I wish to say that there is a custom in this Department—not any fixed, adopted rule, but a practice—to have these questions all referred, before they are finally passed upon here, to the Department from which the original transaction emanates. There have been a few applications to me since I have been Attorney-General for the use of the name of the United States to test patents for lands as well as patents for inventions, and I have had them in each case referred to the Department from which the particular patent issued for information and suggestions before I acted upon them finally here. Not that any suggestion or advice from that Department would be binding or conclusive upon this, but for the sake of a more harmonious and regular administration of the affairs of the executive department is this custom or practice observed. I do not say that action could not be had by this Department independent of this course, but in the few cases that have been before me I have followed this precedent, and within the last four days I have done the same in an application for the use of the name of the United States to test a patent for an invention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

Letter of the President to Solicitor-General Goode.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, October 8, 1885.

Hon. JOHN GOODE, Solicitor-General:

MY DEAR SIR: I submit to you with this a statement made by Attorney-General, explaining his relation (or, rather, want of relation) to the action by you, in his absence, upon an application to bring, in the name of the United States, a suit to test the validity of a patent held by the Bell Telephone Company.

I call your attention especially to the latter part of this statement, in which the Attorney-General speaks of the usual procedure, in the Department of Justice, upon such applications. The reference to the Interior Department, which he mentions as an ordinary feature in that procedure, seems to have been dispensed with in your treatment of this application. This omission may have been the result of a lack of familiarity with the routine in such cases, or of a perfectly clear and satisfactory persuasion of what should be done, derived from the documents presented to you.

Whatever the cause may be, and while such reference is not vital, of course, to the validity of your action, and though I am by no means prepared to question the correctness of the exercise of your discretion in the matter, still the precedent calling for a reference to the Department with which the matter is connected is so well established, and seems to me so well founded upon considerations of safety as well as propriety, that I desire to suggest for your reflection the proposition whether such action on your part as will preserve and protect such precedent and custom could not well be taken.

Yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Letter of Solicitor-General Goode to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, October 9, 1885.

The PRESIDENT:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 8th instant, submitting a statement made by the Attorney-General with reference to the action by myself in his absence upon an application to bring, in the name of the United States, a suit to test the validity of a patent held by the Bell Telephone Company. It is true it has been a practice of this Department to refer similar applications to the Interior Department for information and suggestion before final action has been taken. It is also true that as acting Attorney-General I granted the application in this instance without making the usual reference to the Interior Department. This omission was not the result of a lack of familiarity with the routine in such cases, but of a satisfactory persuasion derived entirely from the papers presented to me as to what was right and proper to be done in the premises.

In addition to the affidavits which accompanied the letter of the district attorney, who made application for permission to use the name of the United States in bringing the suit, he transmitted an attested copy of all the writings filed in the Patent Office and the proceedings had thereupon, which resulted in the issue and delivery of the letters patent to Mr. Bell. After a careful examination of these certificates, which appeared to be duly authenticated, I came to the conclusion that all the necessary information had already been furnished by the Patent Office, and, inasmuch as the question presented by the papers for my consideration was a legal one exclusively, I did not deem it advisable to refer the application to the Interior Department for suggestions.

But, concurring with you as to the propriety of the practice which has been generally adopted in such matters by this Department heretofore, and being unwilling to take any action which may be regarded as a departure from a wise and safe precedent, I consider it best, perhaps, under all the circumstances, to revoke the permission which has been granted to bring the suit referred to. Accordingly I have written by to-day's mail to H. W. McCorry, esq., United States attorney of the western district of Tennessee, directing him to discontinue the suit which he was instructed to institute in the name of the United States, for the purpose of vacating and annulling the letters patent issued to Alexander Graham Bell, on the 7th day of March, 1876, and numbered 174,465.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN GOODE,
Solicitor-General.

Mr. RANNEY. We are all familiar with those.

Mr. OATES. Has the letter of the Attorney-General been put in evidence yet?

Mr. RANNEY. No, it has not.

Mr. OATES. It would be well for it to go in right there.

Mr. RANNEY. It is the letter of the Attorney-General of October 8, 1885.

Mr. OATES. We had better get that in first; these two go in right after it.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, they should go in in that order. I want to compare this afterwards as it is printed in a newspaper. (To the witness.) I want the official letter of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lamar, addressed to you after the investigation, that one letter.

The WITNESS. I have here the original, and I can give you a printed copy.

Mr. RANNEY. If you can do so, I do not want to take the original.

The WITNESS. I brought both along.

Mr. RANNEY. If you have a certified copy, we will take that without stopping to read it, and put it right in here.

The WITNESS. It is a printed copy, but I will have this copy certified. This is a correct copy. That is simply his opinion. I have also the opinion of Mr. Jenks, the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. RANNEY. The official one of Mr. Lamar is the one I want.

The WITNESS. That is the official one.

Mr. RANNEY. That I put in.

Letter of Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, to Hon. John Goode, Acting Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 14, 1886.

SIR: I have had under consideration the papers referred to me from the Department of Justice, touching the Bell telephone patents. Desiring to be as fully advised as possible, I have called to my aid the assistant secretaries of the Department and the Commissioner of Patents. In furtherance of the same desire I have invited the parties who filed their petitions with you, and also the parties interested in the patent which is assailed, to appear before me with such proofs and arguments as they might desire to submit.

A voluminous record and a prolonged and exhaustive discussion resulted. This record, embracing all the papers sent to me from your Department, and also the printed arguments of counsel, I transmit herewith.

The petitioners, upon the grounds and for the reasons set forth in their petitions, ask the Department of Justice to cause or allow appropriate legal proceedings to be instituted in the proper court by the Government, or in the name of the Government, on their relation, to vacate and annul the Bell telephone patent of the 7th of March, 1876, in the petitions specified.

You have asked me to communicate any information on the subject to be gathered from the files of this Department, and to suggest generally my views as to the action which should be taken by your Department in the premises. As the Patent Office appertains to this Department, I have been especially desirous to understand fully all that is alleged as ground for relief in these petitions in regard to what was done in that office; and I believe I can assure you that all the information on that subject to be gathered from the files of the office is embodied in the record herewith transmitted. I also send you the views of the Commissioner and of Assistant Secretaries Muldrow and Jenks, respectively.

In order to know what suggestions I should make as to the action of your Department upon these petitions, I have heard the oral presentations of the case, and considered it again upon the proof and the able arguments of counsel as they appear in print. I thought that my own consideration should be directed to two questions, and to meet these questions I requested that the argument of counsel should be shaped. They are:

First. Has the Government the right to institute such a suit for such a purpose?

Second. If it has such right, should the proceedings invited in the respective petitions, or either of them, be instituted?

The first of these questions, especially within the cognizance of your Department as it is, has the affirmative answer of numerous precedents in that Department, and has received a like affirmative answer from the courts of the United States. If it had not been thus authoritatively settled I should, on principle, have reached the same conclusion. The Government is asked to institute judicial inquiry as to the patent of the Bell Telephone Company, upon the allegation that such patent was obtained by the fraud of the patentee with the collusion or by the inadvertence and mistake of the executive officers of the Government. If these allegations be true a great wrong to the whole people rests in the name and is sustained by the power of the United States. To say that the Government inflicts the wrong would seem to imply that somewhere among its resources the Government would have the power to redress it. The argument against the prayer of the petitioners does not controvert this, but rests upon the theory that the Government has provided a remedy which excludes all other modes, and therefore precludes further governmental action. By a review of the patent acts of Congress it is sought to be shown that under the law of 1790, somewhat modified in 1793, the citizen was allowed to avail himself of all legal objections to the patent in defense of infringement suits, and under certain circumstances the court was allowed to institute by scire facias an inquiry into the validity of patents, and, upon cause found, to vacate them. By the act of 1836, which is the only other legislation material to this inquiry, it is claimed that the patent law was changed by the establishment of a Patent Office charged with the duty of investigating the claims of applicants, and clothed with the power (formerly exercised by any two Cabinet officers) to issue patents, and that from this law the scire facias section and so much of the defense section as allowed the court to vacate a defeated patent were omitted. Hence it is argued that by the act of 1836 all power to vacate a patent was surrendered, and all remedy, when a patent had wrongfully issued, was limited to a reliance upon the faults or vices of the patent in defense of actions for infringement. Without the aid of decisions made by the courts it would seem to be apparent that the only office of these legislative changes, made in 1836, was to deprive the courts of the power to vacate patents as an incident to private suits or as a part of the judicial determination of private controversies. The power of the Government to vacate patents wrongfully issued under its seal was affirmed in the very act of intrusting its exercise to the courts in private litigation. The logical inference from the revocation of that trust is not a total surrender or abnegation of the power, but the intention to keep it under immediate governmental control. The existence of the power implies the possible occasion for its exercise. The legislation which allowed the courts to exercise it defines what circumstances in the view of Congress would make the occasion; and the changes made by the law of 1836 only seem to indicate that the existence of the occasion shall be brought to the notice of the proper Department of the Government, and the exercise of the power invoked.

Surely, if the power to vacate a patent wrongfully issued exists at all, there need not be a statute to provide a mode of its exercise when a mode exists without a statute. A patent for land may, for good cause, in a proper case, be vacated at the suit of the Government without a statute; there is no difference as to the principles here involved between a patent for land and a patent for an invention. The public domain is held by the Government as part of its trust. The Government is charged with the duty, and clothed with the power, to protect it from trespass; and under certain circumstances to invest the individual by its patent with the sole possession of the title and rights before appertaining to all as the beneficiaries in the trust. If two patents for the same land should issue to different individuals, at least one of them would be wrongful. In such case the title having rightfully passed to one, it may very properly be left to the individuals to settle by private litigation the question of right in which they alone are interested. One of the patents must be void, and the establishment in court of the validity of one must of necessity settle, finally, the character of the other. If it should come to the knowledge of the Department that a patent has been fraudulently obtained, and the fraudulent patent is the only one issued for that land, then, when of sufficient public importance, there would be an occasion which would make it the duty of the Government to exercise its right to have the patent vacated, because private litigation cannot arise, and because the rights of all the people would be involved, without other mode of redress.

The inventor is the sole owner of his invention, but to publish it by use or otherwise is to give it to the world. The rights which would then accrue to the whole people from such publication are confided as a part of the general trust to the Government, with the power, by its patent, to create for the inventor a monopoly in the use of his invention. This patent, just as does the patent to the land, shuts out all the world, except the patentee, from the use and enjoyment of the subject of the patent. If two patents issue for the same invention, one is certainly wrongful. If the other is rightful the whole interest in the question as to which is rightful is confined to the two patentees, and private litigation will secure the needed remedy in determining who has the right to the patent as between rival claimants.

If, however, there is only one patent, and it has been fraudulently obtained to the exclusion of the person really entitled to be patentee, or if a patent has issued for something not patentable—an invention already belonging to the world—it becomes the duty as well as the right of the Government, when of sufficient public importance, to actively seek its cancellation, because private litigation is not a possible or adequate remedy, and because the whole people are wronged without other mode of redress.

Under our Government a trust can never fail for want of a trustee, nor can fraud, mistake, or accident in business transactions escape investigation for want of a tribunal while the court of equity is maintained. Representing the sovereign in his person in the mother country, that court also represents the sovereignty here in a sense and relation of nearness which no other representative can claim. All the other agents are recognized as amenable to judgment upon the strict letter of their commissions and acting at the peril of having their action disapproved and set aside. But a court of equity, specially adapted in jurisdiction and methods to supplement statutory jurisprudence, is the depository of the reserved or not expressly delegated judicial power; it especially has the inherent jurisdiction to cancel and vacate what exists as the creation of fraud, accident, or mistake, and to faithfully apply the remedy for a maladministered trust.

If a patent ought to be vacated it can always be vacated there. But the patent bears the great seal of the Government, and only the Government, even there, can ask to have the seal torn off.

My second inquiry was as to whether, the right of the Government existing, the proceedings invited by these petitions, or by either of them, ought to be instituted.

The grounds of invalidity alleged against the Bell telephone patent may be substantially summarized thus:

First. The patent was procured by the fraud of the patentee through the collusion or mistake of the officers of the Patent Office, and in violation of the rights of a caveator named Elisha Gray.

Second. The invention patented was not patentable, because already public. Referring to what I have said under the other head of inquiry, it is apparent that these allegations describe the occasions in which the Government, upon my view, ought to actively interfere for the cancellation of a patent.

It is manifest that a decision upon the merits of the controversy, as to the validity of the patent, is not embraced within the terms of your request. The issue before me lies outside of the ultimate merits of the case as a subject of judicial investigation. As to what the final judgment should be I have not felt called upon to form, and if I had formed I would not express, an opinion.

The question is whether enough has been shown upon the hearing to require the submission of the matter to the court at the instance of the Government.

The proof adduced in support and defense is very voluminous, and very conflicting in many respects. It involves great scientific research and detail, and perhaps some intricate legal questions. The allegations and the evidence touching the circumstances attending the issue of the patent are of such a nature and have such a support as to render it, in my opinion, improper to ignore or dismiss them.

Such a case is presented as I think ought to undergo thorough judicial investigation. It appears that many suits have been pending and many are now pending between the corporation claiming this patent and others that assail it. In none of these cases has there been, or can there be, as I think, such thorough investigation and full adjudication as to the alleged frauds or mistakes occurring in the Patent Office in the issuance of the patent as could be had in a proceeding instituted and carried on by the Government itself. In a case involving such questions it seems to me especially imperative upon the Government, as duty to its own officers, to vindicate or condemn, and duty to the people, to set on foot and follow up a complete investigation.

In my opinion the proceeding should be in the name of and wholly by the Government, not on the relation or for the benefit of all or any of the petitioners, but in the interest of the Government and the people, and wholly at the expense and under the conduct and control of the Government. I think it should be instituted at such point and in such court as will best subserve the purposes of public convenience and full inquiry.

Such a proceeding, so conducted, will, as I think, comport with the dignity of the Government and the gravity of the subject, and will insure a final and just adjudication of the merits of the controversy.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
*Acting Attorney-General,
Department of Justice.*

Mr. RANNEY (to the witness). Have you the record of that case before the Secretary of the Interior?

The WITNESS. It is at the Department, but I have never looked at it.

Q. Have you ever read any of the evidence or record before the Department of the Interior which preceded this letter of Mr. Lamar's?—A. No, sir; all the testimony taken was transmitted, but I have been occupied since and I have not read it, because I had made up my mind what should be done, and he advised what I had already done.

Q. You have never then, since you gave your original order for the suit, investigated the record of the evidence?—A. No, sir; I have not. I read the opinion of the Secretary and the opinion of his assistants.

Q. So that the second hearing before the Department of the Interior was simply upon the original applications made to you, renewed, which were referred to the Secretary of the Interior; then hearings were held, then Mr. Lamar makes this decision, and upon that you proceed with a new suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is entirely under your control?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have already stated that you have not looked at the evidence in that case; you have stated what examination you made of it?—A. I found that after a most careful hearing down there, occupying probably ten days, he had come to the same conclusion I had, and I did not feel called upon to read all the testimony there. I read his opinion and the opinion of his assistants.

Mr. OATES. Have you the opinion of the assistants also here?

The WITNESS. I have the opinion of Mr. Jenks here. I have not the other two, but will furnish them.

Mr. EDEN. Does the Commissioner of Patents give an opinion also?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. An official one that came to you with Mr. Lamar's?—A. Yes, sir; the others came along as a matter of interest, I suppose, but I acted upon the official opinion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. And that is the only official one you had?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Is this the opinion? [Indicating to the witness.]—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I want to go back to the 2d of September. Senator Harris and Colonel Young came in to see you together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were both in the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that Senator Harris was a Senator?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you knew that Casey Young was from Memphis, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not think Casey Young was there when Mr. McCorry had sent his communication, and had come right on to see about it?—A. Only in this way. Colonel Young said (when he asked if I had received it, and I told him that I had not), that he was a little surprised at that, because he knew it had been mailed.

Q. Did you ask him what interest he had in it?—A. I did not. We did not talk two minutes.

Q. And Senator Harris came in and asked about it?—A. Yes, sir; he had a paper in his hand, either a telegram or a letter.

Q. Did it occur to you to ask Senator Harris what he had to do with it, what interest he had, or if he had any?—A. Not at all; but the impression that he made upon me was that he came in a representative capacity. I did not ask him any questions. He asked me if I had received such a paper, and I told him I had not.

Q. By their activity in the matter didn't you suppose they were anxious to have it done?—A. I supposed they had some interest in it, but I did not consider that. The truth is we have a great deal of work to do there, and I have not time to devote all day to one matter.

Q. You say you supposed they had some interest in it; you inferred they wanted it done, didn't you?—A. That was the presumption. I had no argument with them. They only asked me if a communication had come, and I said it had not, and touched the bell and made inquiry, and the clerk said it had not been received, and not long afterwards he said it was received.

Q. Although you inferred they had some interest in it, you never inquired what it was?—A. No, sir; I did not. I did not give much thought to it. As a lawyer you can understand that when people come to inquire about such matters and you are occupied, you do not pay much attention to them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you say that you inferred that they had some interest in it?—A. I presumed they were interested in some way to know whether the paper had been received, simply from the fact of their seeking to inquire.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You inferred that they wanted the application granted, did you not?—A. I suppose I did; yes, sir. They did not say so; they did not present any reason why it should be granted, but I supposed they would not be apt to come there unless they had some wish on the subject.

Q. You inferred then by granting it you were gratifying them, I suppose?—A. I did not consider that a moment; not a moment, sir.

Q. You at that time were Solicitor-General. How long had you held that office?—A. I had been in office since the 4th of May.

Q. Attorney-General Garland had been confirmed, then?—A. Yes, sir; he was confirmed promptly.

Q. You had not been?—A. No, sir; and I have not been yet.

Q. You knew that Senator Harris was a Senator?—A. Yes, sir; I knew he was a Senator. I knew him while I was in the House here. We met as Senators and Representatives meet, occasionally; but I do not think I ever met Senator Harris half a dozen times in my life. I have no special acquaintance with him. I served with him once on a committee. He was a member of the Senate Committee, and I a member of the House committee. It was a joint committee, and we had some discussion of the matter before the committee.

Q. Do you know whether he had anything to do with recommending you for appointment?—A. I am sure that he had not. I might say in that connection that I was recommended by the Attorney-General at the instance of the entire Virginia delegation in Congress, the Democratic members, some forty or fifty gentlemen with whom I served in the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses, and nearly the entire bar in Virginia, many members of the courts—

Q. I do not care who did do it, but I want to know if these people did it?—A. Well, I want to show that Mr. Garland had good reason for the recommendation that he made to the President. Mr. Garland was not doing me any personal favor in recommending me to the President. It was asked for in the name of the State of Virginia by our representative men.

Q. You need not have answered who did it; I simply asked you whether certain men did?—A. I am very sure that Senator Harris, General Johnston, Mr. Atkins, or anybody else connected with the telephone suit never asked my appointment.

Q. Before these official papers were put in, you had had interviews with Mr. Garland, hadn't you, about it; you had had talk with Mr. Garland before these communications you have taken out of the newspaper were made?—A. Never; oh, I did confer with him when he came back from his summer vacation. I had seen attacks made on him in the public press, and I called upon him and said to him that if any mistake had been made, I had made it, and was desirous of assuming the entire responsibility; and I went from him to the President and told the President the same thing. That much was due to Mr. Garland; it was due from man to man. I assure you that Mr. Garland had no more to do with the institution of this suit than any member of this committee had.

Q. I did not ask that. It was simply whether this correspondence that you put in between the President and yourself was written before you had any interviews with each other, or is the result of it. I did not ask what the interviews were.—A. After receiving the letter from the President, I sat down and wrote my reply without consultation with any human being. I consulted nobody about it.

Q. Hadn't you seen the President personally about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many interviews had you had with him since Mr. Garland got back?—A. I had had one interview with him before that. When Mr. Garland came back I saw him and stated what I told you. I went on my own motion to the President and said the same thing to him that I did to Mr. Garland, and at a subsequent interview the President called my attention to this statement of Mr. Garland's that is in that paper, and we had some talk about it, and he addressed to me this note and I replied to it.

Q. You have been asked by the chairman about the expenses that you are incurring for the Government in the prosecution of this suit. Have you got those contracts he referred to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I won't go over them in detail. If you will give us copies of them we will put them in.—A. Here they are. Here is the contract with Mr. Whitman for $3,000.

Q. You need not go over that again; you have stated that before.—A. I desire to state something in addition. Here is a copy of the commission to Mr. C. S. Whitman stipulating his compensation. Here is a copy of the commission to Messrs. Hunton and Chandler stipulating their compensation, a letter from Mr. Lowrey stating his terms, which I have accepted, and the commission stating the compensation to Judge Thurman. In addition to that I did not state yesterday what I will state now; that I have employed Professor Brackett, of Princeton College, New Jersey, as an expert electrician, at a retainer of $250, and a per diem of $40 when engaged in giving expert testimony in this suit. I have also employed a gentleman named Charles P. Young, a stenographer, to do the work at New York and vicinity whenever we get ready to take testimony and need the services of a stenographer, and the terms of his employment are stated in his letter. Those are all the contracts entered into, and I deem them to be necessary and reasonable. As something has been said about expenses, let me say here that no unnecessary expense has been incurred. This is a great suit, and I want it conducted in a manner worthy of such a suit and such a Government, and knowing the power of the opposition we have to contend with, I felt it to be my duty to engage such number of counsel as was necessary, and such character of counsel as was necessary, and I deem the employment of an expert electrician to be necessary. That was done on the recommendation of Mr. Lowrey, who thought that we could not get along in a suit like this without one.

NEW YORK, March 30, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I now write, in compliance with your request, to state the terms of my professional employment, by you, as counsel to the United States, in the case of the United States versus the American Bell Telephone Company, and others, as substantially agreed upon between us during my first visit to Washington after this employment.

(1) The retaining fee is to be $1,000.

(2) My charge for services in preparing for that part of the case assigned to me, including consultations with experts, taking or superintending the taking of testimony out of court; in short, for all services out of court prior to trial, will be $75 per day when the services are rendered in New York, and $100 per day, with traveling and hotel expenses of myself and clerk, when the services have to be rendered elsewhere.

(3) All expenses for copying, type-writing, or printing, necessary or expedient to be incurred, are also to be paid, not including any salary of the stenographer, whom it will be necessary for me to employ solely in the business of this case for correspondence, &c.

(4) For interlocutory arguments in court, and for participation in the formal trial of the case, counsel fees according to custom will be charged; but as the extent of the service which I may be called upon to perform (there being other counsel in the case) cannot be foreseen, the fixing of compensation therefor is of necessity deferred until after the service is rendered. In case of any difference of opinion in this respect I shall be quite willing to abide the judgment of the Department of Justice.

A day, for the purposes of this letter, is to be understood as including all the time employed in the case on any calendar day not less than five hours. Any less number of hours will be charged for as fractions of a day at that minimum.

I explained to you at our first meeting my reasons for believing that the interests of the case, as well as the economy of managing it, would be served by allowing me a junior associate competent to do many things to which, otherwise, I should be required to give personal time and attention, which could be more profitably devoted to other parts of the work in hand. I understood you to acquiesce, and to say that I should be permitted to provide myself with such assistance when needed, the compensation to be fixed by you. I will notify you whenever it seems to me that it will be to the advantage of the case to employ such further aid.

Your letter of retainer was received February 4, and my acceptance, subject to arrangement of terms, was sent the same day. I began work in the case soon after, but shall make no charge until my arrival in Washington on the 25th of February.

The pressure of duties connected with the beginning of the case prevented me from writing you this letter promptly after our first conversation in Washington about the 25th of February, in which these terms were stated, discussed, and substantially agreed upon. After the suit was begun, and, supposing it to be a matter which could await my leisure, and various things affecting the suit requiring attention, I gave my thoughts to them and the letter was delayed. I was not aware, until my meeting with you on the 21st instant in Washington, that such a letter must be written before I could be constituted counsel in the Government case in the manner requisite for having my bills for services audited and paid.

Trusting that this letter will be found correct as to the statement of the particulars agreed upon between us, I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

GROSVENOR P. LOWREY.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
Solicitor-General, Washington, D. C.

COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY, DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS,
Princeton, March 6, 1886

SIR: I have the honor herewith to submit the propositions which I made verbally in the course of our conversation a few days since in Washington.

My retaining fee for expert services in the suit to be brought by the United States against the American Bell Telephone Company is to be $250. The per diem is to be $40. Of course, traveling, hotel, and other incidental expenses necessarily incurred are to be in addition.

All investigations and all expenses involved I understand are to be submitted to counsel in charge of the suit, for approval and direction.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. F. BRACKETT.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
Solicitor-General United States.

NEW YORK, March 19, 1886.

SIR: I beg to make application for the appointment of stenographer in the suits about to be brought by the Government, relating to the Bell telephone patents.

As evidence of my experience and qualifications for the work, I have the honor to inclose a letter addressed to yourself from Mr. D. F. Murphy, the official reporter of the United States Senate, and also from Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior. I further inclose printed copy of testimonials heretofore used by me, the originals of which I deem so valuable to myself that, having exhibited them to you, I should be glad to retain them in my possession.

I will do the work for 25 cents per folio of 100 words, and 5 cents per folio for subsequent copies, with the right reserved to me as official reporter to furnish copies to other parties; the Government to pay the reasonable hotel and traveling expenses of myself and assistants. If it should be deemed advisable to appoint me as commissioner to take testimony, which I understand has been of frequent occurrence in such matters with the Department of Justice, then the rate of compensation could take the usual course in such cases—20 cents per folio of 100 words as commissioner, with 10 cents per folio additional as stenographer.

Among the printed testimonials I would especially beg reference to that of ex-Governor Hoadley; and would also respectfully refer to Hon. G. P. Lowrey, one of the counsel, who has known me many years.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES P. YOUNG.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
Solicitor-General-Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, March 23, 1886.

CHARLES P. YOUNG, Esq.,
32 Nassau street, New York:

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 19th instant, in which you make application for the appointment of stenographer in the suit relating to the Bell telephone patent, has been received. It is not deemed expedient at this time to select one person to do the entire work which may be needed in different parts of the country. It may be advantageous to the Government hereafter to have the work in different localities done by different individuals. That matter, however, is reserved for future consideration. I will employ you to do all the work necessary to be done as stenographer in the suit referred to at New York and its vicinity, upon the terms proposed in your letter. A large part of the testimony will be taken in New York city and in cities adjacent.

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Solicitor-General and Acting Attorney-General in this case.

GROSVENOR P. LOWREY, Esq.

Q. Are you through? Mr. Lowrey is to work only five hours a day, I observe, and will receive $75 a day while at home, and $100 a day while absent from home?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And his expenses?—A. Yes, sir; and his expenses. That is, the expenses of traveling and his hotel expenses when away from home.

Q. That is $20 an hour while he is away and $15 an hour while he is at home. Then for the amount of work that they do, Mr. Thurman and he are to be paid.

A. Judge Thurman has a retainer of $1,000, and the balance is subject to future arrangements.

Q. Have you attempted to figure up what the probable expense of prosecuting the suit will be to the Government, if the whole thing is gone into?—A. I have made a rough estimate of it. I do not think it will exceed $50,000. I am sure it will not be as much as paid to counsel and assistants on the other side.

Q. Have you figured up or tried to ascertain what it cost to fight the six patent suits now that have been tried involving the validity of the Bell telephone patents?—A. No, sir; I know what we have still to pay those gentlemen, and I have formed some estimate of the probable number of days that Mr. Lowry will be engaged. I do not think the expenses will exceed $50,000, and perhaps not as much as that. That is the best estimate I can make. I think the money well expended to settle that question.

Q. Are you aware that it cost in preparing the Bell and Drawbaugh cases, putting in the evidence for trial, and getting ready for the Supreme Court half a million dollars?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that was shown to be so before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. No; as I say, I have not read the testimony taken before the Secretary of the Interior. But in my opinion we could not do less than we have done on that subject. I deem those expenses to be necessary.

Q. Have you personally examined the record in the Dolbear suit?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you personally examined the record in the McDonough suit?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you examined the record in the Pennsylvania suit?—A. I have not.

Q. Or in the New Jersey case?—A. I have not.

Q. In any case?—A. I have not. My associates are examining those records now.

Q. I asked you if you had examined them?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. I want to know if you have looked into the record of those cases to see how many of them are pending now or about to come up for trial in the Supreme Court?—A. No, sir: that examination is being made by some of the special counsel.

Q. Have you looked to see whether in those suits, and, if so, in which ones, the issues which are presented are to be determined by the Supreme Court?—A. I have not. That work is being done by Mr. Lowry and Mr. Whitman.

Q. Before filing this bill did you examine the record of those cases to see whether in the bill which you present in the name of the Government there is a single issue which is not fully and fairly raised in those cases that the Supreme Court must determine when it decides them?—A. I am informed by my associates—

Q. Have you looked personally?—A. I have not.

Q. I did not ask what your associates did.—A. It is utterly impossible for me to transact the routine business of the Department and represent the Government in the Supreme Court, write three or four briefs a week, and examine the Molecular record, the Dolbear record, and the McDonough record that you have referred to, but it is being done by my associate counsel, as I am informed by them, and they are gentlemen in whom I have confidence.

Q. I do not ask you by whom you were informed.—A. But this suit will be altogether different from any suit ever presented before in this country, and, if I am not greatly mistaken, the sequel will show—

The CHAIRMAN. You had better not disclose your line of procedure.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not ask you that. I want to know if in this suit there is a single issue presented by you not raised in other cases, and evidence taken on it?—A. I think so, positively, but I have no personal knowledge.

Q. What is it?—A. I do not think I am called upon to state that.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be brought out upon the trial. I suggest to the witness that the line of procedure upon the part of the Government ought not to be disclosed.

The WITNESS. I am bearing that in mind, sir. I only say this, that if I am not greatly mistaken, the suit will be a different one from any yet tried. I do not feel disposed to go further than that.

Q. I simply want to know this, without going into the details. I am speaking of suits already instituted in court, and not of secrets not divulged in the papers; I am seeking to find out whether as a matter of fact you have presented here and are presenting any issue which has not already been before the Supreme Court for adjudication?—A. Yes, sir; we are, most undoubtedly.

Q. Do you know what it is?—A. Yes, I do; but I do not feel called upon to state it now.

Q. I speak of issues, not facts.

Mr. MOFFATT. The bill sets forth the grounds.

Q. Have you a copy of the bill?—A. I have not with me.

Q. Will you produce it if you have one?—A. If the committee think it proper I will produce it. There has been a bill filed on the records of the court, and I have no objection to producing it.

Q. It will save us the trouble of sending for it.—A. I will furnish a copy. I will say this, that I have some printed copies and I do not suppose there is any impropriety in giving one to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I sent to the district attorney for a copy, but failed to get it.

The WITNESS. I will obtain one for you.

Q. Have you a copy of the bill presented at Memphis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like one of those also.—A. There is this difference; I will explain—

Q. You need not explain the difference.—A. I do not want to mislead the committee. I have a copy of the bill as filed there, stating when it was filed, but the bill as printed does not contain some exhibits subsequently printed and sent out there.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You are referring to the last bill, are you?—A. Yes, sir; I am having those exhibits printed, and I will attach them to the printed copy and furnish the committee with a copy.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did Senator Harris ever call on you at the Attorney-General's Office since you have been there, before the time to which you allude, the 2d of September?—A. I think not.

Q. Hadn't you ever seen him?—A. I am very sure he never called on me before that morning. He may have been in the Department, but he did not come to see me.

Q. Your office is in the same building with the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; my office is just over that of the Attorney-General in the same building. I do not recall ever seeing Senator Harris before that morning.

Q. Has Mr. Young ever been there?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have never seen him in the Department?—A. No; as I say, I was away the whole of the summer. I went away on the 20th of June and came back on the 19th of August. I never saw one of them in the Department before that morning according to my recollection.

Q. I want to put one question to you without having any implication attached to it. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that you had held some stock in one of the telephone companies and had pledged it in a bank at Richmond or Norfolk.—A. Well, that is just like many of the newspaper stories that get afloat. I never held any stock in any telephone company in my life. I never held stock in any company that could possibly be affected by legislation. I had some bank stock at one time in Norfolk, but I never had any telephone stock or stock of any sort that any man might not hold with perfect propriety. Unfortunately, I wish I had more of such stock as I did have, bank stock. I am very glad you asked me that question.

Q. I should not have asked you after what you have said, except that I saw the statement in the papers.—A. I am glad you did, for I desire to put on record the most emphatic denial that I was ever connected in any shape or form with a telephone company or with stock or otherwise.

Q. This Washington telephone embraced Virginia, and I did not know but what you might—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. You have no certificate or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; and I am astonished to hear that any such rumor has gone abroad.

Q. It was in the newspaper, and I thought it but fair to you that your attention should be called to it.—A. I am glad you did; I am obliged to you for the opportunity of denying it in the most emphatic terms. I suppose if there is a man in the country who stands indifferent to telephone companies and to parties engaged in those transactions, it is myself. I do not know any of them personally or in any way.

Q. I did not make any imputation of the kind.—A. I understand that.

Q. I see in Attorney-General Garland's letter (it is the one I think where he alludes to the call made upon him by Casey Young and other gentlemen, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, and Mr. Huntington, when application was made to bring a suit in the name of the Government, which he declined doing) that he says later that he expected or supposed—I do not remember the exact language—that another application was coming in. Assuming that to be so, I call it to your attention particularly. It seems to me it may be argued, at least it is a little queer, that if when he left on the 27th of August he was expecting an application to be made again that he did not speak to you about it.—A. Well, I can only say that he did not. He did not speak to me about any business in particular. I went down and had, as I say, a very brief interview with him, took leave of him, and wished him a pleasant vacation, and he said we must get along as best we could, or something like that. I was there only a few minutes; I did not sit down.

Q. If he had had an application which he had objected to and expected another, and then was going away, and knew that you were to take his place and act upon it, it may be considered rather singular that he should not speak to you about it?

Mr. EDEN. I expect that he could tell better than the witness can.

A. I only tell you the facts.

Q. I only want the facts.—A. I say again I never knew until Mr. Garland returned that he had ever been spoken to on the subject. I did not know that he had any stock of any telephone company until after his return.

Q. And you are sure none of the clerks in the office told it to you?—A. No, sir; the clerks in our office do not come and speak to us unless sent for; they do not volunteer suggestions about the business of the office.

Q. You are sure when you got in there acting as Attorney-General you had not heard of that?—A. No, sir; I took the business as it came. The chief clerk would send the mail up to me and I would act upon the matters from day to day as presented to me. If it is a matter of interest to the committee I am perfectly willing for the record books to be brought up to see what I did in the absence of Mr. Garland.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it is important for us to know, except about this matter.

Q. I would like to look over the business that you did on that day; pardon me for my inquisitiveness.

The WITNESS. Will you have the books sent up?

Mr. RANNEY. No; but if you will let a couple of the committee come up and look at them we shall be glad to do so.

The WITNESS. I should be glad to have you come, and will furnish every facility.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want to save you what trouble I can.

The WITNESS. I would say that if you desire I will send the books up, except that they are in use in recording the business of the office. I want the committee to understand that there is nothing connected with this matter that I am not perfectly willing to have come out. I know nothing that I wish to withhold about Mr. Garland or about the suit or any interest involved.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that. I have exhausted the subjects that were in my mind upon which I desired to question you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Oates can proceed with the examination.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to ask any questions.

Mr. MILLARD. There are a few questions that occur to me, which I will ask.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you state whether these papers that came from McCorry came by mail or by messenger?—A. My impression is—I do not know how I derived it—that they came by mail. I am not positive whether the package came up to me unopened or whether it was opened in the clerk's office and sent up, but that matter can be easily ascertained.

Q. Do you recollect whether or not the envelope containing the papers was opened by you?—A. I think not.

Q. Do you think you did not open the envelope?—A. I think not. I think when the matter came up to me there was what we call a jacket on the letter of Mr. McCorry, and that was on the top of the other papers with some straps over them; a very large package.

Q. Was there anybody else beside yourself authorized to open Mr. Garland's mail?—A. The chief clerk usually opens the mail, unless he sees something private. He is authorized to open the public mail that comes there. Upon reflection, thinking about it since I was here, I am inclined to say those papers came up to me with a jacket on McCorry's letter, on top of a large package, strapped around with India rubbers.

Q. You think the envelope had been opened by some one?—A. I think so. I think it had been opened in the office of the chief clerk, before it came up to me.

Q. Do you recollect whether or not it was addressed to Attorney-General Garland?—A. The letter on the inside is addressed to him.

Q. I refer to the envelope.—A. No, I do not; I do not think I saw the envelope containing the entire package.

Q. Have you the envelope in your Department now?—A. I haven't it.

Q. Would it not be retained in the Department?—A. I should think so.

Q. Will you give us the name of the chief clerk?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Clay; Cecil Clay I think is his name. We call him Colonel Clay there.

Q. You stated, if I understood you correctly, that you considered that a prima facie case had been made?—A. After examining the papers; yes, sir.

Q. Upon what papers did you base your opinion?—A. I based my opinion upon the district attorney's letter, and the memorial signed by Colonel Gantt, Mr. Beckwith, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and Mr. Huntington, and the affidavits which I read. I remember particularly the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, and I think I read the affidavit of Van Benthuyzen, and probably the affidavit of Colonel Gantt. I read two or three, and also the certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents from the Patent Office.

Q. Was the memorial sworn to?—A. No, sir. It is very full, you will see. It was not sworn to.

Q. Did you know any of the parties who signed it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you know anything of their character or standing in the community?—A. No, sir; only from the indorsement of the district attorney, who sent it along.

Q. Did you know anything outside of the document as to the truth of the facts alleged in it?—A. No; except from these affidavits.

Q. I will come to those directly. I will pass the memorial. Take the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur. Was the original affidavit of Wilbur sent to you?—A. His affidavit was among the papers; I don't know whether it was the original or not. I know the affidavit was among the papers.

Q. Look at it now.—A. (Examining paper.) As I stated, there were so many papers I couldn't tell. I recollect distinctly reading his affidavit.

Q. Is that an original paper?—A. Really I cannot say.

Q. It is a copy made by a type-writer, is it not?—A. It is in type.

Q. Look at the signature and see if the signature was not made by a type-writer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also the verification?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know anything about this man Wilbur?—A. No.

Q. As to his credibility or standing?

Mr. OATES. Wait a moment before you pass from that. Do you assume that this paper is a copy?

Mr. MILLARD. It is certainly a copy.

The WITNESS. I said this morning when I was producing the papers I could not say whether this was the affidavit which I read or a copy of the affidavit which I read; that there have been so many papers produced and sent from the Department of Justice to the Interior Department, and from the Interior Department back to the Department of Justice, that I could not keep track of them. They have all been sent together and have not been kept separate; and they have been examined so often that really I don't remember, and could not now say upon my oath whether this is the identical paper that I read in connection with that application or a copy. This seems to be a copy.

Q. I understood you to say this was the affidavit that accompanied the letter of McCorry.—A. I said this morning it was either the affidavit or a copy of the affidavit. I explained it this morning according to my recollection. I cannot say whether this is the identical paper or the copy of the paper I read. I am sure the contents are the same.

Q. If this is not the identical paper, you have it in your possession, as I understand you?—A. I presume it is there; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other affidavit of Wilbur?—A. These papers have been called for very frequently. Mr. Brown, an agent of the Bell Telephone Company, made application for a copy of all the Wilbur affidavits, and the clerk was directed to furnish a copy of them, and they have been taken out from the original papers for the purpose of being copied for the benefit of the Bell Telephone Company; so I really could not say now whether this is the identical paper I read on that occasion or whether it is a copy; but I know the contents are the same.

Q. Mr. Ranney asked you yesterday to present the papers upon which you made your order, and I inferred from what you said this morning that this Wilbur affidavit was one.—A. I say the affidavit I read was identically the same as this; but whether this is the paper I read on that occasion or a copy of it I do not know, as many copies have been made. It seems that several copies have been made by different people during the progress of this investigation. Whether this is the one that came in McCorry's letter to me or a copy made by somebody else in the progress of the investigation before the Interior Department I do not know.

Q. Then you are not able to state whether this is the paper that you had before you at that time?—A. I know the contents are the same.

Q. But whether it was the original affidavit you are unable to state.—A. I am at this moment.

Q. Show us the Huntington and Van Benthuyzen affidavits, if you have them.—A. They are not here, sir. I presume they are among the papers. I recollect reading one or two other affidavits besides this of Mr. Wilbur.

Q. Where are they?—A. I presume they are at the office. I have not seen them since. All the papers that came there from Mr. McCorry were sent to the Interior Department, and, in addition to those, all the papers sent by the Globe Company and the Washington Company and by Mr. Cushman; and together they would make a very large mass. They all came back together from the Interior Department.

Q. So far as you have presented to this committee, the only facts stated in the form of an affidavit as a foundation for the granting of your order are found in the affidavit of Wilbur, which purports to be a copy?—A. Yes, sir. Whether this is the paper that I read or a copy of the paper that I read I do not remember.

Q. Sitting as a judge hearing an ex parte motion, without knowing the persons, would you grant an order upon such a paper as you have there in a case involving $10, $25, or $50?—A. Why, I think when the United States district attorney made such an application as he did, sustained by such a memorial —

Q. It was only a request, was it not? Please answer my question.—A. It was not simply a request. He gave reasons why the suits should be instituted—very fully.

Q. Would not you as judge of a court require that the application should be made upon sworn papers?—A. I did not consider I was sitting exactly as a judge of a court would sit. I was not sitting to try the question by legal rules, or with that exact precision that would be required in a court of justice. I was only called upon to determine whether, in my judgment, a prima facie case had been made out for the institution of this suit.

Q. Upon the papers presented?—A. Upon the papers presented; and I came to the conclusion it had been.

Q. Then the letter of the district attorney had as much to do with it as the papers?—A. Well, I dare say it had, because he went into the matter very fully; but I considered that his application was fully sustained by the papers he sent, and I attached a good deal of importance to the certified copy of that file-wrapper and contents.

Q. Would you be willing to testify that any other paper purporting to be an affidavit or copy of an affidavit was sent to you other than the Wilbur affidavit?—A. As I say, my recollection is that I read one or two other affidavits. I think there was one from Mr. Van Benthuyssen. It has been some time, and I don't remember. I know I read the papers that were sent. I read all the papers that were sent. Of course I cannot undertake now at this day to state with entire accuracy what each paper was. I know I read everything in the bundle.

Q. What I want to get at is this: Whether the original affidavit of Van Benthuyssen or Huntington was sent to you in that package?—A. I think it was, sir.

Q. If so, it is now in the Department.—A. It ought to be there; yes, sir.

Q. And can be produced?—A. Yes, sir; it certainly ought to be. I have not gone through the papers. They have been gone through at the instance of Mr. Brown to get a copy of this Wilbur affidavit. They certainly ought to be there. I have never examined them.

Q. Will you look at the affidavit of W. Van Benthuyssen, under date of August 28, in the proceedings before the Interior Department, and see if that will refresh your recollection as to the contents of the affidavit that came to you?—A. (After reading affidavit.) I think that is the affidavit.

Q. That affidavit merely goes to show that on a certain day Wilbur made an affidavit; that in the presence of Casey Young and other parties he made certain statements?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Really, then, all your order is based on is a copy of Wilbur's affidavit, this affidavit of Huntington, McCorry's letter, and the memorial?—A. No; I do not say a copy. I cannot say. My impression is it was the original; but I know I read that Wilbur affidavit, whether it came to me as the original or as a copy. I do not now undertake to say which it was, but my best recollection is that I read at the same time this affidavit of Mr. Van Benthuyssen, and I am confirmed in that since I read it.

Q. You do not claim that those two affidavits state facts sufficient to authorize the Government to order a suit, do you?—A. I think those affidavits in connection with the other papers did it, sir.

Q. But the other papers were not sworn to?—A. I do not consider that material in a matter of this character.

Q. Not as to furnishing fact to the Government?—A. No, sir. When I am called upon to say whether a suit shall be instituted or not, I do not think it necessary to have the papers sworn to as I would if I were trying a case in a court of justice.

Q. I know; but you were making an order for the commencement of a Government suit?—A. And the question was whether there was probable cause for the institution of it.

Q. And you did not require any affidavits as to fact?—A. I did not require anything. I based my action on the papers that were presented.

Q. I will ask you this question: When you granted your order and forwarded it to McCorry, did you make any memoranda in the books of the Department or upon the order itself of the papers that had been used upon the application?—A. No, sir; I wrote the letter and had the papers sent back to him.

Q. Is there anything in your Department showing upon what facts the order was made?—A. Nothing but those papers; the letter, the memorial, the affidavits, and the other papers referred to. We did not enter them in a book. They were sent back to the district attorney with the order directing the institution of the suit.

Q. Is there not any record in the office showing when this application was made?—A. Certainly there is a record.

Q. What is the record?—A. The original jacket—

Q. Is there anything outside of the jacket?—A. No; nothing else that I know of. It may be. The clerk can tell you better about that than I can. I am not the custodian of the papers, but I think the custom is to make a jacket like this and file original papers in it. That is the record.

Q. Then, if the package of papers is taken out of the jacket you have no record?—A. These papers are not all copied in a book in the office; it would be an interminable task. We have not force enough to begin to do it.

Q. Have you not a ledger or some minute book showing that on such a day such an application was made in such a proceeding, and such action was taken by the Government?—A. As I say, not being the clerk, I am not able to state.

Q. I understood you to tell Judge Ranney that when this application came in you made no examination to determine whether any action had been taken by Mr. Garland or by the Government in the matter?—A. None.

Q. When did Mr. Garland return?—A. He returned early in October, the first week in October, I think.

Q. When did he go away?—A. He went away the 27th of August. He was gone away a little more than a month.

Q. How did you know he was going away?—A. He told me he was going away.

Q. When was it he told you he was going to leave?—A. I think the first I knew of his going was probably the day before he left. He told me he was going to spend his summer vacation, and would leave the next afternoon; and I went down in the afternoon about 4 o'clock and bid him good-bye. I think he told me the day before he left that he was going the next day.

Q. Do you know whether he made that statement in the Department?—A. Oh, yes; I had not seen him anywhere else.

Q. When he came back were you informed that there had been a Cabinet meeting, and that the ordering of this suit by you had been discussed in the Cabinet meeting?—A. Not until it had occurred; I was not informed until then. I heard about it. I don't recollect whether I heard it from Mr. Garland or from the President. I know the matter came up in the Cabinet. I had a conversation with Mr. Garland, sought by myself, and I had a conversation with the President, in which I stated to each one of them my action in the matter; and subsequent to that I had a conversation with the President about discontinuing the suit; and either in conversation with the President or in conversation with Mr. Garland I learned that the matter had been brought up in Cabinet meeting by Mr. Garland.

Q. My question was only preliminary. The Cabinet meeting was prior to the letter of Mr. Garland to the President?—A. I think the letter of Mr. Garland was laid before the Cabinet, perhaps. No; I think the letter was written after the Cabinet meeting held in the morning. The matter was reduced to writing that evening; that is my recollection of it.

Q. Was not the Cabinet meeting in which this matter was discussed the very next day after Mr. Garland came back?—A. I am not able to say.

Mr. EDEN. Unless Mr. Goode was there I do not see how he could state, and if he was there it would not be proper for him to state what occurred.

Q. I do not ask you what occurred; but whether President Cleveland sent for you before you wrote your letter to him, or not?—A. He did.

Q. Where did you have your interview with him?—A. At the White House; the Executive Mansion.

Q. Following that interview was this letter to you that you had neglected to pursue the usual practice of the Department in not referring the papers to the Interior Department?—A. I don't think he used the word "neglect."

Q. That you had omitted?—A. Omitted; yes, sir. That letter of the President to me followed an interview which I had with him.

Q. The letter of the President does not say a word about discontinuing this suit, does it?—A. No, but it is very plain to be seen from reading it—

Q. Does he state anything further than the fact that you had omitted to pursue the regular course?—A. Yes, sir; he calls my attention to it and suggests whether such action ought not to be taken which would preserve the custom of making a reference in such cases; and that was enough for me.

Q. Did you discontinue that suit entirely upon that letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wholly?—A. Substantially. I had a conversation with him about it, but he said no more in the conversation than is contained in that letter.

Q. Had you not also had a conversation with Attorney-General Garland?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you had seen him?—A. I had seen him, certainly.

Q. And talked with him?—A. Certainly; but not about discontinuing the suit.

Q. Something about the suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. But you said you had talked with him about what had been said in the newspapers?—Oh, yes, sir; about his having an interest in the Pan-Electric Company, and all that sort of thing; but I had not talked with him about discontinuing the suit, and I never have talked with him about the suit in any way since it was brought.

Q. After you had your conversation with the President and the Attorney-General you did order the suit to be discontinued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon after that conversation?—A. I had the conversation one day and the suit was ordered to be discontinued the next day, I think.

Q. How long had you been in that Department?—A. I went there on the 4th of May, 1885. Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated the 4th of March, 1885.

Q. And you had had about how many months' experience?—A. I had been there from May until September.

Q. Were you ever the judge of a court?—A. Never.

Q. And, as I understand, had never tried any patent suits yourself?—A. No, sir; I never tried a patent suit. I have made application to the Patent Office for the issuance of patents. I never tried a patent suit, though.

Q. I understand that when you made this order to McCorry you knew the custom of the Department had been to refer such applications to the Interior Department?—Oh, I knew that that was the usual custom, but not invariably. There was no fixed rule about it.

Q. You say not invariably. That is precisely what I am coming to. Can you state to us a single case commenced by the Government under the order of the Solicitor-General, as in this case?—A. No, I cannot; but I understand, since you have mentioned it, that it is more a matter of courtesy and comity than anything else. You will see yourself that it is done upon the principle that there cannot be any fixed rule about it. The action of the Interior Department was in no sense binding upon the Department of Justice. The application was addressed to the Department of Justice and was to be decided by the Department of Justice. The Interior Department could not order this suit.

Q. It was not addressed to the Department; it was addressed to Attorney-General Garland.—A. It was addressed to the Attorney-General, the head of the Department, and the Attorney-General had a perfect right, if he had thought proper to do so, to order this suit without any reference whatever to the Interior Department. It was sent there more upon the idea of courtesy and comity than anything else; not that any recommendation has any binding effect upon the Department of Justice. It is a question of law and fact to be decided there. It has been customary, though, as I say, to make these references. It was not done in this case, for the reason that I have already stated.

Q. It was of so much importance that the President called your attention to it.—A. After the hue and cry made in the newspapers and its being made a matter of public criticism. The President acted very delicately and very properly in the matter. He made no order to me, merely a suggestion, and occupying the position I did a suggestion from the President was sufficient.

Q. When you ordered the discontinuance of the suit, did you suppose that was the end of it?—A. I did not suppose anything on the subject. I dismissed it from my mind. I made no intimation then about renewing it in any shape or form. My dear sir, I have a great many other things to think about besides the Bell telephone suit. I do not understand that that is the whole aim of life.

Q. Do I understand you to say when the application came back for renewal you had never received, directly or indirectly, from any source any intimation that a renewal was to be made?—A. I do, sir.

Q. No intimation that another application would be made to you?—A. If you will read the letter that I sent to the district attorney you will see that he is ordered to discontinue the suit and no intimation is given about renewal. I did not know whether he would renew it or not. I did not consider it and I did not care. I had no interest in it.

Q. My question is a little different from that. It is whether you had received from any source any intimation that a renewal would be made?—A. I think not. I certainly do not recall any now.

Q. Are you willing to state under oath that you did not?—A. I am, to the best of my recollection and belief. I am testifying all the time under oath, I would like to give you to understand, sir, and I do not make any statement otherwise.

Mr. MILLARD. I understand that. I only want to get a positive answer.

Mr. HALL. Let the balance of us understand, too. Don't interrupt the witness.

Mr. EDEN. We want to hear what the witness says.

The WITNESS. According to the best of my recollection and belief now, I state that I had no intimation from any source that there would be any renewal of this application; I did not consider it; I did not care in any way; it was a matter of indifference to me.

Q. What is your recollection now?—A. My recollection now is that there was no suggestion made to me at any time that the application was going to be renewed; I did not give it a thought; I directed the discontinuance of the suit because I knew it would be agreeable to the President, and then I dismissed it from my mind and gave my attention to other matters, and when the renewed application came I treated it as I have stated by sending it to the Interior Department.

Q. Out of what fund have you paid this $3,000 to associate counsel?—A. Out of a fund provided for the payment of counsel appointed to assist district attorneys; that is my impression; I only approved the accounts; I did not follow them to the Treasury; these gentlemen presented their bills; I approved them, and they have been forwarded to the Treasury Department, but they have not been followed up by me; that is a matter for the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Q. To make it more definite, I understood you said you had paid some $3,000 or $4,000?—A. Mr. Whitman has been paid $1,000, and Hunton & Chandler have been paid $2,000.

Q. Out of what appropriation or what fund has that payment been made?—A. I presume out of the fund provided for the payment of counsel to assist the United States district attorneys in the prosecution of suits.

Q. You say you presume. Do you know?—A. I do not. I approve the accounts. It is not my business to follow them to the Treasury to see.

Q. Under what statute or authority do you approve the accounts?—A. Well, sir, if you will hand me the Revised Statutes I will show you. There is a section of the Revised Statutes under which I do it.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose any member of the committee can look at statutes.

Q. Can you refer to the section?—A. It is under the head of the Department of Justice. The "Watch-dogs of the Treasury" you know, look after these things. I employed these gentlemen, and knew they were entitled to their pay, and I approved their accounts.

Mr. MILLARD. We are directed by this resolution to make very searching inquiry.

The WITNESS. Certainly; and I will give you all the information I have.

Mr. OATES. No; the resolution does not say "very searching inquiry." It directs us to inquire.

Mr. EDEN. As to what payments have been made and to what attorneys.

Mr. RANNEY. We are directed to make an inquiry which embraces that subject, and everybody except Mr. Gibson, of West Virginia, said they wanted it to be very searching and thorough.

Mr. OATES. Everybody in the House did not speak of it.

Mr. RANNEY. And we intend to make it very searching.

Mr. MILLARD. Yes; it is our duty.

The WITNESS. I will give you all the information I have.

Q. I ask the question because I was not aware any appropriation had been made for this particular litigation.—A. The accounting officers will tell you what fund it was paid from. Section 363 provides:

"The Attorney-General shall, whenever in his opinion the public interests require it, employ and retain in the name of the United States such attorneys and counselors at law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties, and shall stipulate with such attorneys and counsel the amount of compensation, and shall have supervision of their conduct."

I take it for granted there is a fund set apart for the payment of special counsel employed to assist the district attorneys, but I have not followed it up to see.

Mr. MILLARD. That does not quite reach my inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. There is a general appropriation for the Department of Justice.

Q. There is no question but what you had a right to employ counsel and retain them. The question is by what authority you now pay, no money having been appropriated by the Government for that particular purpose?—A. I do not think any special appropriation for this suit is necessary; I do not see any difference between this suit and any other suit in which persons are employed to assist a United States district attorney.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. There is an item in the general appropriation bill for the Department of Justice?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It is probably paid out of the same fund which was used to pay the Star Route counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. There was no special appropriation to pay them?—A. No; there is a general fund. It has been the practice, as I understand, whenever a gentleman was employed as special counsel to assist a United States district attorney, to pay him out of that fund.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You did not pay the money?—A. I did not pay it. I approved the accounts and they got the money from the Treasury. The accounting officers are better informed about what particular fund they pay it out of than I am. I know I approved it.

Q. You do not really know it has been paid, I suppose?—A. I see it stated in the papers it has been paid.

Q. You have no other knowledge?—A. No; I do not know it otherwise.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. In what manner were these respective counsel commissioned to act in this suit?—A. I have a copy of the commissions here, sir. I will put all these papers in evidence. Mr. Ranney asked me yesterday for a copy of the letter addressed to Mr.

Lowrey, and you will find it among these papers. I have made copies of everything relative to the matter. I will read one of the commissions:

"You are hereby appointed an assistant to the attorney of the United States for the southern district of Ohio to assist in the suit of the United States against the American Bell Telephone Company, authorized to test the validity of the Bell Telephone patents. You will be allowed for your services a retainer of $1,000 and such further compensation as may hereafter be determined. Execute the customary oath of office and file the same in this Department.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN GOODE."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have the oaths been filed?—A. Yes, sir; all the oaths have been filed. That commission was addressed to Hon. Allen G. Thurman. I have commissions here to Hunton & Chandler, Mr. Whitman, and Mr. Lowery, all to the same effect.

Q. Why did you give commissions and require oaths in these cases and not make the same requirements of the attorneys employed in Memphis?—A. Because I never employed those men, and I did not consider they were representing the Government.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You gave the district attorney permission to associate them with him as counsel?—A. Yes, sir; he requested it and I made no objection to it; but he was told at the same time that the Government was not to pay them anything, and the Government was to control the suit.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you regard those gentlemen as holding the same relation to the Government that these gentlemen hold?—A. Not at all. These gentlemen are appointed under the act of Congress that I just read.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you know that in the application, after the matter had been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, or to the Interior Department, Colonel Gantt and Casey Young appeared there as counsel and argued the matter before the Interior Department?—A. Only through the public prints. I did not go near the Interior Department while the matter was under investigation. I saw it stated in the newspapers that they appeared there.

Q. Did you know that fact when you made the order for this second suit?

Mr. EDEN. They had not gone there yet, I should say.

A. When I made the order for the Columbus suit I knew it; but not when I made the order to Mr. McCorry in Tennessee. When I made the order for the suit in Columbus, I knew from the newspapers that Mr. Young and Mr. Gantt had appeared in the Interior Department representing certain interests, but I did not know what interests they represented, whether the Pan-Electric or the National Improved, or what.

Q. Was it not stated in the newspapers for whom they appeared?—A. I don't remember; I recollect seeing a statement of the names of counsel, pro and con, on the respective sides; I recollect seeing some account in the papers about Mr. Young's address, and Mr. Gantt's, and Mr. Storow's, and Mr. Dickerson's, &c.; I read it as I read the current news in the papers; I didn't pay much attention to it.

Q. How long had you known Casey Young?—A. I had known Mr. Casey Young since I met him in the Forty-fourth Congress, December, 1875.

Q. Did you, at the Riggs House, before your appointment as Solicitor-General, have any conversation with him in regard to your appointment, in the presence of any one?—A. I don't recall it; I think not.

Q. Are you quite sure?—A. I have no recollection of it.

Q. My question is whether you had any conversation in regard to your application for appointment under Garland?

The WITNESS. At the Riggs House?

Mr. MILLARD. At the Riggs House or the Ebbitt House?—A. I have no recollection of it; I have no recollection whatever of any such conversation.

Q. I call your attention to any conversation with Mr. Casey Young in regard to it. Do you remember any?—A. None, sir; I do not remember having seen Mr. Young before my appointment and after the inauguration of the President. I do not say that we may not have met casually and had some conversation, but I do not remember it. Certain it is, if that is the point of your inquiry, that it had nothing on earth to do with ordering this suit. I don't think Mr. Young had anything whatever to do with my appointment. I don't think he ever recommended me.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Young at the Department of Justice?—A. I never saw Mr. Young at the Department of Justice, according to my recollection now, until the morning of the 2d of September.

Q. That was the time he came in company with Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you learn with certainty whether these papers came by mail, or whether they were brought by messenger or brought by Mr. Young himself?—A. I will endeavor to do so. I will make inquiry and send the clerk up here.

Q. I wish you would, and also ascertain, if it is thought proper by the chairman of the committee, just the papers you had before you in connection with the application for the order; whether you had any facts stated under oath—not any copies, but whether you had any original affidavits showing any facts that a court would act upon in bringing such a suit, or any suit.—A. Well, as I say, I recall now the letter of the district attorney and that memorial and two or three affidavits and this certified copy of the file-wrapper and contents—a very large package. I do not now have a recollection of any other papers, except those.

Q. You see we have before us as a committee no affidavit containing any facts upon which this suit was brought.—A. As I have explained, I don't know whether the affidavit that I bring here was the identical paper that I read that day, but I know the contents are the same. It was either the same paper or a copy of it.

Mr. MILLARD. It is not a certified copy.

Mr. OATES. He swears it is the same as the affidavit he did receive and on which he acted.

Mr. MILLARD. You would not grant any order upon a copy of an affidavit, would you?

Mr. OATES. If I were satisfied it was a correct copy it would be just as good as an original.

The WITNESS. I have no doubt that the original affidavit was sent; but as I say the papers have gone back and forth and they have all been put together by the different people who have been looking at them. They have not been kept separate.

The CHAIRMAN. As I recollect, the Solicitor-General was requested yesterday only to produce certain papers.

Mr. RANNEY. All the papers on which he acted.

The WITNESS. I was asked specially to produce the papers I have brought here. I can send up here, if the committee wish, all the papers that are on the files at the present time. What is it the committee wishes in addition? You wish to know from the clerk whether this application came by mail, and whether he opened it?

Mr. RANNEY. And we wish every original paper that you acted on.

Mr. MILLARD. And the envelope, that we may see to whom it was addressed.

The WITNESS. Here is the original jacket of the first McCorry letter and the second. Here is the jacket containing the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior when it was returned [exhibiting paper].

Q. I notice some lead-pencil marks on the outside of one of the jackets, "A. G." Can you tell me in whose handwriting that is?—A. I do not see it. I see "Solicitor-General."

Q. It is in lead-pencil, over the date of the paper.—A. I see "Solicitor-General" on that paper.

Q. That is not the one.—A. Here is another with "Solicitor-General" on it also. I do not know what paper you refer to.

Q. Here is the paper. I call your attention to the pencil marks over the date of the order for the suit to McCorry.—A. I don't know whose handwriting that is. The clerk can tell.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I want to put one question right there that has occurred to me during the examination of Mr. Millard. It seems by the record which I have here of the suit in Maryland against the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in favor of the Bell Telephone Company that the district attorney in Maryland appeared on the 15th of September with a copy of the proceedings in the Memphis suit, in the name of the Government, and asked the court to refrain from giving a preliminary injunction and postpone the decision to await the result of the Government suit. Was that by your direction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it with your knowledge?—A. I saw it in the newspapers. I did not know of it in any other way.

Q. How was it that the district attorney used that in a private suit?—A. He had no such authority from the Department of Justice.

Q. Urging that, as a Government suit had been brought, no private suit should go on?—A. No such application was made, and no such authority was given.

Q. You are sure that nobody told you that if the Government suit was hurried it would be in time to be used in the Maryland suit that was about to come to hearing?—A. No, sir; I had no communication with the district attorney on the subject, and no order has been given about it. Whatever he did he did of his own motion.

Mr. MILLARD. I am through.

Mr. EDEN. I have no questions to ask.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You were appointed, as I understand you to say, on the 4th of May?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you enter immediately upon the discharge of your duties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the 27th of June you took your leave?—A. On the 26th of June I went to British Columbia.

Q. And you returned on the 19th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this order was made on the 3d of September?—A. The 3d of September.

Q. So that you were absent out of the four months and a few days fifty-five days. If you have not made the calculation, you can easily do it.—A. I was absent from the 26th of June to the 19th of August.

Q. So that you were sixty-seven days in the Department?—A. I have not made the calculation.

Q. You will find it correct. You took these papers up on the 2d of September?—A. Yes, sir; I took them up on the 2d.

Q. At what time in the day?—A. I think about 11 o'clock. I remained in the office until 5, and returned in the evening after dinner.

Q. Between 7 and 8?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that night by 11 o'clock you arrived at a conclusion?—A. Yes, sir; and I wrote the letter the next morning after I came to the office, or had it written.

Mr. HANBACK. That is all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand you to say that you do not know whether there is a record kept containing the minutes of the day's transactions in your office?—A. No; I am not certain. The truth is that not being on the same floor with the office of the chief clerk, and my duties being to prepare briefs in the Supreme Court, I have not been down there to see exactly how the business is transacted. My impression is that when a paper like this comes they put what they call a jacket on it and put it away among the archives of the Department; but I do not think there is any regular entry made in the books showing every particular item that comes in.

Q. Would it be too much to ask you to make an inquiry in that direction?—A. I will do so.

Q. And if such a record or memoranda is kept, to have an abstract made of what business was transacted on the 2d and 3d of September, and furnish it to the committee?—A. Yes, sir. The record books will show the letters signed by the Acting Attorney-General on that day. They copy everything sent out; but what I mean to say is that I do not think there is anything like a docket kept on which they put down in detail everything that is done.

Q. When these papers came before you you understood that they presented for your consideration the simple question whether in your discretion a suit of that character should be brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you inferred that as the request came from the United States attorney, he had probably looked into the existence of the facts and satisfied himself as to them sufficiently to decide him in making the application?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And upon the statement of facts made by him in connection with the other papers you proceeded to determine the question; first, as to the method of procedure, and, second, as to whether there was reasonable cause existing to justify an order to be made.—A. Those were the only two matters I considered at all.

Q. When Senator Harris and Mr. Young called did you have any idea or any suspicion in your mind that they called as interested parties in the subject-matter of the controversy?—A. Well, no, sir. I supposed they had some reason for calling. I really did not know what had brought them there. Senator Harris, when he came in, held a telegram or a letter in his hand and asked the question. I don't think they sat down. I supposed they wanted to know for some reason; whether they had a personal interest in the suit or whether they had been requested by others to call and see, I did not determine; but if I gave it a thought at all I supposed there was something that prompted them to come there and make the inquiry. But it did not occur to me at the time that it was their application I was going to consider. I told them if the papers came I would look at them; and when the papers did come I read the letter of the district attorney and the accompanying documents and made up my mind. There was no suggestion made to me by either of the gentlemen about it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Inasmuch as they were interested, don't you think it rather singular that they did not mention it?—A. Well, that is a matter about which there may be a difference of opinion.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is it not usual for Senators and Representatives to call upon matters of business in which they are not personally interested?—A. It is an every-day occurrence.

There is not a day that Senators and Members do not come in there and ask about matters pending in the Department. I suppose that Senator Harris had some such interest as that. I did not stop to consider whether Mr. Young was counsel, or how he was interested. I know this very well: That neither one of them presented any considerations or urged any reasons why I should take action. I told them when the papers came I would consider them, and the action I took was based upon those papers entirely.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Right there, if you will pardon me, I will put a question that I forgot to ask. I see by the report of the reporter of the New York Tribune that he called upon you in relation to that matter afterwards and represented that you told him Mr. Harris and Mr. Young came in and you and they discussed the matter.—A. Well, he was mistaken, as reporters very often are; that is, it depends upon what he means by discussion. We certainly did not discuss any such questions. We discussed the matter of the arrival of the papers, and perhaps he understood me that way. We did not discuss the questions involved in the suit.

Q. Will you say you did not tell him you discussed the matter?—A. I do not think I did. If I said we discussed the matter, I meant the arrival of the papers. I certainly did not tell him we discussed the matter of the bringing of the suit.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. How would it sound as a matter of politeness when a gentleman comes into your office and asks such a question as Senator Harris or Mr. Young put to you, to say, "Have you any interest in it?" or "What business have you to ask this question?"—A. That has not been my style. I endeavor to treat everybody who calls there with courtesy. I do not stop to pry into men's business.

Mr. RANNEY. When anybody else puts such questions Mr. Oates objects; but he is quite liberal to himself.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. State whether the fact of those two individuals having called upon you as stated had anything to do with hastening the subject of the investigation.—A. None whatever. I gave it all the investigation I thought it was entitled to, and made up my mind and acted accordingly.

Q. I understand you to say that at that time you had no knowledge upon the subject of this Pan-Electric Telephone Company or who was interested in it?—A. None in the world.

Q. Or that any officer of the Government was interested directly or indirectly?—A. The first I ever heard of the Pan-Electric Company was after that suit was ordered, when the newspapers took up this discussion.

Q. You had never received any communication verbally or by letter, or in any other manner at all on that subject?—A. Never.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You are quite sure Mr. Young did not tell you he had been to see the Attorney-General about it, and what the Attorney-General had done or refused to do?—A. I am perfectly sure of that. I do not know why Mr. Young did not tell me. I have not read his testimony; but he certainly did not. If he had been to see the Attorney-General he withheld it from me. Whether he thought he would take the chances of my acting independently, or whether he thought I would be embarrassed if he told me, or what his motive was I do not know; but certain it is Mr. Young never told me he had been to see the Attorney-General.

Q. You were entirely in the dark as to what had occurred?—A. Yes, sir; I knew nothing at all. Whether he thought it was not proper to tell me, or why, I do not know; but he did not tell me. I flatter myself though that Mr. Young took this view of it: That being then the responsible head of the Department he would take the risk of having the application considered by me, and supposed if he had said anything to me about having approached the Attorney-General I might make that a reason for not acting.

Q. Did not he ask you to authorize the suit to be brought on the relation of these parties?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. HALL. He says he went there for that purpose.

Mr. EDEN. But he says he did not ask it.

Mr. MILLARD. He says he did not know Mr. Garland was away.

The WITNESS. I do not know what he asked the Attorney-General. The only thing he ever asked me was if the papers had arrived.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say that, in your judgment and in your opinion, the practice of referring such questions as this to the Interior Department was merely one of courtesy?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I do not think it is at all binding. In other words, if I had made up my mind that suit ought to be brought, and Mr. Lamar had advised against it; I would not have felt bound by Mr. Lamar's decision.

Q. Do you know of any reason why that courtesy should have been overlooked in this case?—A. No, sir; except that I had what I supposed to be all the information the Patent Office would furnish.

Q. But you do not refer to the Interior Department for information; only as a matter of courtesy?—A. Well, courtesy, and to preserve that sort of comity between the different Departments of the Government. I think, perhaps, the motive is more one of courtesy than anything else. They ask for such information or such views as the Department sees proper to submit. It certainly never has been understood, as I have heard, that any advice or suggestion in response to a reference of that sort is at all binding upon the Department.

Q. Then, it not being binding, and not being for information, what reason was there that the same courtesy should not have been extended in this case as in all others?—A. The only reason was I supposed they could not furnish me any more than I had.

Q. But it is not to furnish information you say; merely an act of courtesy?—A. Not altogether courtesy.

Q. I understood you to say so.—A. No, no; I said not altogether. I suppose that is one reason—to preserve harmonious relations, as far as possible, between the different Departments.

Q. Did that matter of courtesy suggest itself to you at that time?—A. No; it did not.

Mr. OATES. Will you allow me to interpose a question that has occurred to me during your examination?

Mr. MOFFATT. Certainly.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Were there not cases under Attorney-General Brewster and preceding Attorneys-General where suits were brought to vacate patents, without any reference of them in the first instance to the Secretary of the Interior from the Department of Justice?—A. I have not examined to see whether there are any such precedents or not. I have a general idea that while this is the general usage it is not the invariable practice. I know there are several precedents of this kind; that whenever the Attorney-General has felt himself under any disability, not mental or physical, but any disability from interest, that the Solicitor-General has acted.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know of any suit that was ever maintained in any court that was brought in that way, except the case of Gunning, tried by Judge Wallace?—A. No; that is the only case in which that direct question has come up, that I have knowledge of. But Judge Miller says, in the case of Mowry against Whitney, that the court will not be particular as to the form; it must appear that the suit has the sanction of the Department of Justice. I do not recall any case in which that exact question has arisen except that case.

Q. You do know a case where Judge Shepley said it could not be done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When Judge Clifford sat with him?—A. Yes, sir; but I do not think that is the received opinion.

Q. Is not the decision of Judge Wallace in the Gunning case the only case where any subordinate judge has maintained such a position?—A. The only case in which the exact point has been decided, that I remember; but I think it is abundantly clear, from the statement made by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case I referred to, that he would hold and the Supreme Court would hold that a suit ordered by the Acting Attorney-General would be maintained.

Q. Is it not true that the decision of Judge Wallace stands alone in that regard?—A. That is the only case I recall which decides that exact point.

Q. And Judge Shepley and Judge Blodgett have decided otherwise?—A. Well, sir, we will know hereafter what the law is. I suppose it will be settled in this case.

Q. Did you not observe that in that case Judge Wallace decided an issue which was not argued?—A. I looked at the case.

Q. There was no controversy and there was no argument on it?—A. But I have already said I attach more importance to what Judge Miller said in the case of Mowry and Whitney than any other case I referred to. I don't think any lawyer can read that—

By Mr. HALL:

Q. That case was not in your mind at that time, was it?—A. I examined to see whether I had the power to order the suit.

Q. But did you look at any authorities?—A. I did not examine the authorities very minutely; but I examined sufficiently to satisfy my own mind that the Department had the power to order the suit.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you not regard that as mere dicta?—A. Well, it is pretty full. It was not the point decided, because it was a case between individuals; but the court said the demurrer was sustained because a suit could only be properly brought in this way.

Q. The court did not say it could be done without legislation of Congress, did it?—A. I think that is the fair inference. I think it is very clear that is his opinion from the language employed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have the courts ever passed upon the question whether a reference to the Interior Department is necessary?—A. Oh, no. The application is addressed to the Department of Justice and the responsibility is with that Department. Of course they treat with proper respect any recommendation made by the Interior Department; but it is not binding.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Under what provision of the constitutional law is that done without act of Congress? Where is the power to maintain a suit in the name of the Government?—A. I think it is the inherent power in every Government. I think it is a part of the common law that was brought over by our ancestors. In other words, I think a Government can do what an individual can do. If I make a deed and there has been any fraud committed or any mistake, I have a right to bring a bill in equity to cancel it.

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me, but I understand you are one of the men who don't believe there is any sovereignty in the United States?

Mr. EDEN. I do not think we should go into a discussion of State's rights.

The WITNESS. I think the United States as a Government has certain inherent powers, and one of them is to recall a grant improperly made of its own motion. I think every Government has that power. I think it is a common-law principle.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In other words, the Government has all the power incident to the granted powers.—A. Yes, sir; I think it would be strange indeed if a patent should be obtained by fraud and there should be no power in the Government to recall it.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to state to one of the gentlemen, I think Colonel Oates or Mr. Hall, that you did not recall any instance in which suit had been instituted without reference to the Interior Department?—A. I have not examined to see.

Q. And you did not at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. In regard to the habits of the office: When a letter is received there containing matter for the attention of the Department, is it generally considered directly by the Attorney-General or the head of the Department, or is it referred in the first instance to some Assistant Attorney-General, by him looked up and briefed and presented to the head of the Department in the ordinary routine of the office?—A. Sometimes the Attorney-General takes charge of matters himself, sometimes he sends them to the Solicitor-General, and sometimes he sends them to one of the Assistant Attorneys-General.

Q. Is there any general rule about it?—A. No general rule. It depends upon the character of the business and the opportunities that gentlemen have to attend to it. It depends upon what they have on hand. The Attorney-General controls that matter himself. He takes some matters in charge and he sends other matters to other officials in the Department.

Q. Did you make any inquiry of any of your assistants to see if they could investigate this matter?—A. No; I did not. I took charge of it myself.

Q. Are you in the habit of returning evenings to perform the duties of your office?—A. I did that last summer almost invariably.

Q. By reason of the large amount of work?—A. That was one reason; and, then, frequently interruptions would come during the day. I went there nearly every evening. If you have been acquainted with these offices here you know that there are a good many interruptions during the day, and it is very difficult to pursue any matter consecutively; and I am in the habit of going back there after dinner and remaining until bed-time, so as to work without interruption.

Q. I understood you to say, in answer to a question of Judge Ranney, that you did not think this case received any more speedy consideration than other cases. Do persons having business before the Department generally get it acted on within twenty-four hours?—A. I think so; generally in matters of this character.

Mr. MOFFATT. It has not been the experience of all of us. I wish all the Departments were as expeditious.

Mr. EDEN. It depends upon what matter it is.

The WITNESS. I have endeavored to dispatch matters that came to me without any unnecessary delay.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. It is stated, as I remember, in that letter from the district attorney, that certain parties there were willing to indemnify the Government against the cost of that suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you understand from that statement that they were acting in the public interest, or in some private interest?—A. Well, sir; I do not recall now that I gave that any consideration. I supposed that the application was made in the public interest to order the suit. The whole tenor of the letter and the memorial and the exhibits showed that. I cannot say now what consideration I gave to that statement.

Q. He refers in that letter, as I remember it, to parties who were urging the bringing of the suit, and added that they were willing to indemnify the Government against expense. Did that make the impression on your mind that they were acting for the public, or in some private interest?—A. If I gave it any thought at all, I supposed they must have had some private interest that they supposed would be subserved in the suit.

Q. And that the suit was being brought at their suggestion?—A. Yes; that would be the fair inference.

Q. Primarily for their interest?—A. Certainly, it would have been the inference; but when the suit was ordered I did not suppose it was ordered in the interest of any private parties.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I wish to ask you whether you know of any other expenses having been incurred by the Government than those for counsel fees in this suit?—A. None; and this contract made with the expert electrician, Professor Brackett.

Q. You have approved, then, no other bills?—A. I have approved no bills, except a bill of Mr. Whitman and the bill of Hunton & Chandler.

Q. In your examination by Judge Ranney and also by Mr. Hale, you have spoken of the private interest that parties may have had in this Tennessee suit. Would you regard it as an objection to the use of the name of the Government in such a suit that private advantage might result to certain parties?—A. No; I would not.

Q. Do you mean anything more than to say that the suit ought not to be brought in the name of the Government for the use of certain parties or on the relation of certain parties?—A. That is what I intended to say; and that the paramount object ought to be the public good and not the subserving of private interests in the institution of such a suit.

Q. Can you conceive of the setting aside of a patent without advancing some private interest?—A. Why, of course, where there are so many rival companies in the land they would be incidentally interested in it.

Q. And if there were another patent upon the same subject-matter, would the fact that the setting aside of the one would benefit the other be any objection to the use of the Government's name?—A. I do not think that ought to be considered. I do not think the Government ought to refrain from bringing a suit to rescind a patent surreptitiously obtained, because, peradventure, some private interest might be affected by it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Supposing the conflicting claim was as to which was the prior invention? Simply that.—A. If that was the only matter involved I should turn it over to private suit; but that is not this case.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you ever hear of a suit of that kind to determine a question of priority?—A. I never did.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Would not that be the question between Gray and Bell; that and that only?—A. If Elisha Gray were to bring suit against Bell that would be a question between those two, but that is not this suit. That is not the question involved in this Government suit.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is not the only question here one involving the validity of the Bell patent?—A. That is it, sir: whether that patent was properly obtained or not, and whether Mr. Bell is entitled to it or not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That is because of what occurred in regard to Gray's caveat, is it not?—A. That is one matter that enters into it.

Q. Then, it would simply be a question between Bell and Gray?—A. But Mr. Gray is not the only man who claims to be the prior inventor. There are many others, a whole lot of them. I do not consider that the Government is trying this suit to settle any controverted question between Mr. Gray and Mr. Bell.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It has also been suggested that the setting aside of the Bell patent would only result in the establishment of another monopoly. Do you so understand it?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Would it result in the establishment of a monopoly to the same extent?—A. I do not so regard it. If I am correctly informed this American Bell Telephone Company has most extensive operations all over the land. They are making a large amount of money, according to common rumor, and it is said that for very small expenditures they are receiving very large rentals. I have received a great many letters since the institution of this suit from all over the country, saying that the popular sympathy is with the suit; that they regard it as a monopoly which ought not to exist unless Mr. Bell is in law entitled to the patent.

Q. My inquiry was not directed to that point. In your view is it possible with the Bell patent standing to establish any other telephone?—A. I don't see how it could be done.

Q. Suppose the Bell patent should be set aside; is it not then a mere question between other inventions of telephones as to the particular mechanical devices?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Bell patent, as I understand it, is a patent for the transmission of articulate speech by electricity?—A. Yes, sir. When any question arises it would depend upon what the claim was as to what the controversy would be.

Q. Should that patent be maintained, would it not be impossible to maintain any other patent for transmitting articulate speech by electricity?—A. Well, if this broad claim of Mr. Bell is defeated I do not see how it would be possible for any other company to have such a monopoly as he now enjoys.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That is, if the Bell Company got a patent on that broad claim, nobody else could?—A. Nobody else could. In other words, I think it will be found to be too broad and to cover too much.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Had you supposed at the time you made your order that the application to McCorry was made in part by the Pan-Electric Company, would your action have been the same?—A. I think so.

Q. A company of which Mr. Garland was a stockholder and director?—A. That would not have made any difference with me. I do not think there would have been any impropriety in Mr. Garland ordering the suit himself; but he took a different view of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you had known that suits had been brought by private parties against the Bell Company and were pending, would that have deterred you from bringing the Government suits?—A. No, sir; because as I say we expect to make a case in the Government suit that has not been made in any of these other suits.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Not even if the Supreme Court had adjudicated it?—A. If a suit had been brought and determined settling the exact point involved, of course it would, but I do not understand any such suit has been brought.

* By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. As I understand, you think more can be accomplished by a Government suit than could be accomplished by any private individual?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Have you made any examination of the records of your office to see upon what sort of papers other suits have been ordered heretofore?

The WITNESS. Do you mean other suits to vacate patents?

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir; I have not. I can furnish a list of the suits that have been ordered, but it would take considerable investigation to see what papers they were ordered on.

Mr. OATES. I move the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The WITNESS. I do not understand I am expected to attend here to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; we are through with your examination.

The WITNESS. I will send up the papers.

The committee then adjourned until to-morrow, April 7, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, April 7, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I have requested General Johnston to be present, and if it is the pleasure of the committee we will proceed with his examination.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Do you hold any office under the Government of the United States at this time?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. Commissioner of Railroads.

Q. By whom were you appointed?—A. By the President, on the 3d of April of last year.

Q. Has your appointment been confirmed by the Senate?—A. Yes.

Q. At what date?—A. Well, very soon after the nomination. I think, by the way, that the confirmation was on the 3d of April, perhaps the 2d; but my appointment was completed on the 3d of April, and I received my commission.

Q. Will you state generally and briefly what are the duties of that position?—A. The Commissioner of Railroads has the duty of looking to the interests of the United States in connection with the roads that have been subsidized either with money or land. The largest portion of the business is connected with the accounts of those that have received bonds of the United States. There were six of those roads, but the number was reduced by combination to four.

Q. Had you previously held any civil office under the United States?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever a member of Congress?—A. I was a member of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Q. When did your service terminate?—A. The 4th of March, 1881.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you interested in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir; as one of the original six stockholders.

Q. At what time did you become interested in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. In the early part of March, 1883, I think it was. The association was formed at that time. It was an association of six—five besides the inventor, Mr. Harris Rogers.

Q. Do you recall the circumstances under which this enterprise was brought to your attention?—A. I was invited by Senator Harris to join an association to bring into use some inventions of Mr. Harris Rogers, which he considered very valuable, especially a telegraphic instrument and a telephone. He told me that Mr. Rogers desired to get him, with such friends, to the number of four others, as he should select, to join him in order to bring his instruments into use.

Q. As I understand from your testimony, you were not at that time connected with the Government in any way?—A. Not in any way.

Q. You may state what occurred between yourself and Senator Harris in the first instance.—A. He made this proposition and explanation to me, expressed a very high opinion of these instruments, and gave me a note of introduction to the inventor, Mr. Harris Rogers, which enabled me to examine them; and I was equally pleased with them, and agreed to become a member of the association. There were five besides Mr. Rogers, and the arrangement was that the property should be divided into ten parts, four to be owned by Mr. Rogers and five by Governor Harris and his four friends, the tenth to remain at the disposal of the association.

Q. You have stated that Governor Harris gave you a note to Mr. Rogers. Had you prior to examining the inventions had any conversation with any other of the gentlemen who subsequently became interested with you in that company?—A. No, sir; I had no conversation in regard to it. The fact is I don't believe I saw any of them between the time of my conversation with Senator Harris and my examination of the instruments and agreeing to become a member of the association.

Q. Who was present when you examined the instruments?—A. Well, I only remember the inventor, Mr. Harris Rogers himself.

Q. Were you present in New York when the written agreement was made upon which the association was formed?—A. No, sir; I was the only one of the six absent.

Q. Senator Garland, I believe, was not present.—A. I thought he was.

Q. He does not sign the paper in person. Had you given authority to any one to represent you in the New York meeting?—A. To Senator Harris, sir.

Q. Had you had conversations with any of the gentlemen associated with you besides Senator Harris prior to the New York meeting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom?—A. Well, I cannot remember any conversations on the subject, but I saw all of the gentlemen. I knew them all very well. I don't think there was any conversation worth remembering.

Q. In the conversation with Senator Harris or with any other of the gentlemen who became associated with you, was there anything said as to the use of their official positions in the enterprise in which you were about to engage?—A. I never heard such an idea expressed. The general idea was, and that was Senator Harris's object as well as the object of Mr. Rogers, to get gentlemen who were best known in the country. I had been a great deal through the Southern country, especially all the country south of Missouri, and I suppose for that reason I was invited to join the association.

Q. Was there any consideration paid by you to the inventor or to any person for him for the interest you were to have in the invention?—A. The arrangement made was upon a principle that is very common in forming business associations. Mr. Rogers had this property and he wanted the assistance of others to bring it into use, and we were to be paid by the profits—our share of the profits—that we would make. That was the only consideration.

Q. What were you to do; what were you to contribute?—A. We as members of the association were to work together to bring the instrument into general use, and the mode which was attempted was that of selling the privilege of using it in the different States. We made I think nine contracts of that kind, each for the privilege in a State.

Q. I notice by the written agreement that the gentlemen associated were to contribute proportionately to the expense of perfecting the inventions and making them available, and that the limitation put upon the managers, or the three persons named as a committee, in the way of assessment, was $150. Was that the limitation of your liability, or did it extend beyond that?—A. I think that that was simply an understanding that it was a limitation upon the committee, as I remember.

Q. Did you understand it to be more than that?—A. No, sir; I cannot profess any very accurate recollection of the subject, however.

Q. Did you, in point of fact, contribute only that amount, or did you contribute more?—A. I really don't remember, sir. The amount contributed was small. These contracts brought us in some funds, which made it unnecessary to make assessments upon members of the association.

Q. Were there not some assessments?—A. There were some, I think.

Q. Prior to the receipt of the funds?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. Do you recall any conversation with Senator Garland prior to the New York meeting, or did you have any?—A. I don't think I had any special conversation with him. As I said a little while ago, I had conversations with those gentlemen merely as acquaintances. There were some allusions probably to the chances of the success of this enterprise we were going into.

Q. I believe you were made chairman of the association and you are president of the Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There seems to have been another corporation organized, or, at least, incorporated—the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?—A. Yes, sir. These six got two charters. We attempted first to get a charter that would enable us to use any invention that Mr. Rogers had made or might make, but we could only, as far as we examined, get a charter for one instrument; and we formed, therefore, two associations, one for using the telegraphic instrument and the other for the telephone. We never succeeded with the telegraphic instrument at all.

Q. Do you mean to say one instrument or one class of instruments?—A. One class of instruments.

Q. Your design, then, was in the first place to obtain a charter that would cover all the inventions of which you had become the owners?—A. Yes, sir; and in that event there would have been only one company.

Q. Did you find any State where the laws permitted such an incorporation?—A. I think not. I think it was for that reason we got two charters to begin with.

Q. Was the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company ever organized, and did it elect officers?—A. Well, as we never did anything, I am not at all certain as to that.

Q. You do not know, then, whether you are the president of that company or not?—A. I don't remember whether there was a formal organization or not. It never went into any practical operation, and I do not think any organization was made.

Q. Have you rendered any services to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in the way of testing its instruments or in any other way?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state what you have done.—A. During that meeting in New York I remained here, and we tried the telephone and also the telegraphic instrument. Both of those inventions were tried then, the telegraphic instrument by me and the other between the gentlemen who were in New York and me. I afterwards tried the telephonic instrument between Richmond and Washington.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What was the result of your experiments?—A. We were extremely well satisfied, sir. We thought it the best instrument in the world of its kind.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you ever accepted or taken a certificate of your stock in the Pan-Electric

Telephone Company?—A. There is one written, which is in the stock book where it was written. I never took it out.

Q. Do you know of any effort to dispose of the stock of that company?—A. Oh, yes, sir; there were a good many sales of it by Mr. Rogers. There were no sales of it that I ever heard of by the association. We did all that we could to prevent its sale before it had a real value.

Q. I wish you would explain why you did not desire the stock to be put upon the market.—A. Simply as a matter of common honesty. We thought it necessary that it should be worth something before we attempted to bring it out. If we had put it upon the market before we knew whether it would succeed or not, of course all the purchasers would have been swindled. That was the sort of consideration that guided us.

Q. Did any members of the company desire, to your knowledge, to have the stock put upon the market?—A. Only the Rogerses; I never heard of anybody else. I say the Rogerses. The younger Rogers was the actual owner, but he was directed mainly by his father. I think that he divided his stock afterwards, and that his father became a stockholder in that way.

Q. Was the subject ever under consideration in a board meeting as to the propriety of putting the stock upon the market?—A. At the very commencement, sir, and a determination formed and a rule made that it should not be put upon the market.

Mr. RANNEY. It appears of record.

The CHAIRMAN. The record is not conclusive evidence, though.

Mr. RANNEY. You were referring to the action at a board meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. As affecting the individual conduct of each member only. [To the witness] I understand you that no member of the board except Mr. Rogers favored putting stock upon the market?

The WITNESS. Mr. Rogers transferred something like three-eighths of his four-tenths to Colonel Looney, of Memphis, and he was anxious to transfer or sell occasionally.

Q. In this connection I will call your attention to a letter, or what purports to be a letter from you to J. W. Rogers, dated the 23d of December, 1883, and will read it, so as to bring it to your recollection:

"Your note of the 21st was received yesterday afternoon, and I saw Mr. J. Harris Rogers immediately in regard to its contents, as officially I can communicate with no one but him in regard to the stock which is borne on the company's records as his.

"I reminded him that the sale of stock is not permitted by the company, and also that such sales, even if not prohibited, would be very dangerous. For if the enterprise did not succeed, all concerned in them would be considered by the public as swindlers. I mean all concerned—all of us.

"Most respectfully, yours truly,

"J. E. JOHNSTON."

Q. Do you recall the writing of that letter?—A. I remember writing such a letter about the time, and it is rather fixed upon my memory from the fact that I mentioned I had tested this telephone between Richmond and this place. I went to Richmond with Mr. Harris Rogers to use the instrument there, and I remember that just after our return Mr. J. W. Rogers was very anxious to make sales of stock, and put his stock upon the market.

Q. Had your test made at Richmond been successful?—A. Yes, sir; we were very well satisfied with it. Speaking from Richmond to Washington along the telegraph wire, of course, was not so favorable as a test would have been over telephone wires, as telegraph wires are put much closer together, making a great deal more of what electricians call induction.

Q. Were you influenced in any degree in withholding your stock by doubts as to the validity of your patents?—A. Not at all, sir; I never doubted the validity of the telephone patent or either patent, at all, but it was only a doubt as to whether we should be able to bring it before the country and bring it into use. We found what I think none of us knew—at least I did not—that there was a great number of those inventions and there would of necessity be a great deal of competition. I had only heard of the Bell telephone, and did not know there were hundreds of others.

Q. Did you at that time believe, or had you any reason to believe, that your telephone patents were infringements of the Bell patents?—A. Not at all, sir; we got the best evidence we could on the subject. The difference was explained to us by Mr. Harris Rogers, and we employed a gentleman who, we were assured, was one of the leading patent lawyers here, and who had been, we were told, the Commissioner of Patents—Mr. E. M. Marble. After a careful examination, he told us that there was not the slightest infringement; that there was a very decided patentable difference.

Q. Did you know at that time that the Bell patents were claimed to cover the transmission of articulate speech by electricity in every case?—A. I was just going to add then that I had never heard of the broad claim made by the Bell Company that any telephone or every telephone is an infringement upon their patent. It was some time before we learned that.

Q. Then I ask whether I am to gather from your testimony that you hesitated or refused to put your stock upon the market simply because the usefulness and value of your instruments had not been established or sufficiently tested?—A. Because the success of our enterprise was not assured. I thought it was necessary that we should succeed and get the instruments into use in such a manner as to make the stock really valuable before putting it upon the market.

Q. In that connection were you influenced in any degree by doubts as to the validity of your patents?—A. Not in the slightest degree, sir. I had no doubt of it, sir. I say it was a good while before we learned of this broad claim of the Bell Company that nobody had the right to use any telephone but theirs.

Q. In that connection, your company seems to have sold certain territorial rights for the use of the telephonic instruments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you explain how you distinguished between the sale of territorial rights and the putting of stock upon the market as affecting the question of honesty?—A. Because the purchasers were as well informed as we were. We gave them all the information we had. We informed them not merely of the possibility, but of the probability of suits, but we were bound in the contract to defend those suits.

Q. If you had had doubt at that time as to the validity of your patents, or as to their infringement upon the Bell or any other patents, would you have sold territorial rights?—A. No, sir; I would have dropped the matter at once, but, as I say, we had not the slightest doubt, and therefore we did not discuss such a question as you are making.

Q. I will put the question the other way. Assuming that you had known that there was a possibility of infringement, would you then have put it into the power of other companies to have put stock upon the market?—A. Oh, no, sir. You have there exactly the principle that I expressed in the first case. We determined not to put stock upon the market until the value of the instrument was determined, or rather until it was determined that it was valuable.

Q. But you put it into the power of other persons in certain districts to form companies and put stock upon the market. How do you distinguish between putting it upon the market yourself and putting it in the power of others to do the same thing?—A. Well, we made those sales afterwards, and indeed we thought we were giving it value by those sales. They were modes of bringing it into use which gave it value. Otherwise, if you carry out that principle it would not make it possible to put it upon the market at all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. If you had not taken that course you could not have given value to the stock, could you?—A. Certainly not.

Mr. RANNEY. If you had done that yourself, instead of allowing others to do it, it would have had the same effect, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. In fact, you seem to have put it in the power of others to organize companies and put stock upon the market, although you had declined to put it upon the market yourself, because the success of your enterprise was not established.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that they had only declined to put on the market the stock of their own corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman will be satisfied with my question, when I put it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you had doubted your right to the patents at all, or if you had doubted the validity of your patents, would you have done that much; would you have sold these territorial rights?—A. I would not have attempted to bring the instrument into use at all, sir. If I had any reasonable doubt of the validity of the patent, I would not have attempted it. In the contracts which we made we thought we were bringing the instruments out. We could see no better mode of bringing them out. We were obliged to bring them out in order to give the stock any value.

Q. The view you then entertained was simply that the stock should have market value?—A. Yes, sir; we considered ourselves as doing all we could to give it market value.

Q. Suits were brought against your company alleging that your patents were infringements of the Bell patents. Do you recall that fact?—A. Yes, sir; in Pennsylvania. I do not know of any others.

Mr. RANNEY. Pennsylvania and Maryland.

Q. Did you after the institution of these suits, or after they were threatened, if they were threatened, make any disposition of territorial rights?—A. I don't think that we did, although I cannot remember exactly the order in which those contracts were made. They were made in the West, with a company in Illinois and one in Missouri.

Q. It has been shown from the minutes of the company that in January, 1884, I think, the board resolved to dispose of no more territorial rights, and also resolved to forfeit all the contracts which had not been complied with by the purchasing parties. Do you recall that fact?—A. It must have been much later than 1884.

Q. It may have been January, 1885.—A. I don't think any contract had been made in 1884.

Q. At a meeting of the stockholders?—A. We made a contract that never went into effect, with a gentleman in Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana.

Q. That was in the winter of 1884-'85?—A. No; the winter of 1883-'84. It was some time after that before another contract was made.

Q. There was a meeting of the stockholders in January, and of the directors in April?—A. That must have been in 1885.

Q. At which action of that kind was taken; do you recall the fact of that action having been taken?—A. I do not think that such action was actually taken. I remember very well that there was such a discussion, and perhaps it may have been decided; but I don't think it was ever carried out. I think we have been considering those contracts as existing now.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You were not to forfeit any contracts usually existing, but those that were in negotiation?—A. Ah, I did not understand; I thought the chairman was speaking of cancelling those already made.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will call your attention to the minutes, which will enable you to speak more intelligently. I will read you the minutes of April 7, 1885. You are right as to the date:

"The president stated the object of the meeting to be for the purpose of considering various propositions for the purchase of the right to use the Pan-Electric telephone in different localities in exchanges for the benefit of subscribers, and after discussion of the same it was decided by the board that no more rights to establish exchanges should be disposed of pending certain contemplated litigation with the Bell Telephone Company, unless ordered by subsequent motion of the board of directors. It was decided, however, to sell telephones in pairs for individual use on private lines to such parties as may wish to buy them, and the secretary was instructed to furnish telephones on application for such use, charging therefor the sum of $40 for each telephone complete, including transmitters, receivers, bolls, coil battery, and boxes.

"Mr. Harris offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the secretary be, and is hereby, directed to give notice to the various parties to whom the company has sold rights to use the Pan-Electric telephone within certain States, districts, and territories, which contracts have, by their terms, been forfeited, that the company will on a specified day proceed by resolution to declare said contracts and each of them forfeited and annulled."

Do you recall any reason that was given at that meeting for the passage of these resolutions?—A. Simply that those contracts had been existing for something like a year, a good while, and it came to be very evident that the other parties did not consider themselves bound by the terms of the contract, and therefore we concluded it was better for us not to be bound either. The terms of the contract required them to have made a certain progress in a given time, I don't remember what, perhaps thirty or sixty days; and it had not been fulfilled anywhere, and we considered that it was very bad policy to have a set of contracts that did not bind the opposite party at all.

Q. It is stated in the first resolution that it was determined to sell no more territorial rights because of the pendency of this litigation. Do you recall that fact?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember any discussion in the board upon that subject?—A. Nothing but the general agreement that in the first place we were bound by the contracts that we had made to defend every suit, and we were not disposed to impose any more heavy obligations of that kind upon ourselves. That was one strong reason, and we were very anxious to get a case tried which might settle the question. We thought that we could make contracts to much better advantage, and we were then discussing a course which we afterwards took to institute suit against the Bell Telephone Company in West Tennessee, where it made a great many publications very derogatory to us and our instruments. We thought that such a suit would test the question of the validity of our patents, and would publish it.

Q. Do you know of your company or any member of the company having been concerned in any attempt to procure legislation which would have resulted to the advantage of your company?—A. I do not think that any of the five, including Governor Harris, ever thought of anything of that sort; I am very sure it never was thought of.

Q. Did you recommend Dr. Rogers for appointment to office under the administration of President Cleveland?—A. I have no recollection of anything of that sort; I am told, though, that my name is on a paper, among eight or ten others.

Q. Was it ever suggested in your hearing that his appointment would be in any way beneficial to the company with which you were connected?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. Did that fact ever occur to you in signing such a paper?—A. As I just said, I have not the slightest recollection of ever having signed it, and was very much astonished to hear that my name was on it.

Q. Why were you astonished to hear that your name was on that paper?—A. Because I am told that it is a recommendation of him as an Assistant Attorney-General. I had not the slightest idea he was a lawyer, and never had heard it. That is the only evidence—that application—and my hearing of it very lately.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the recommendation is for Assistant Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. Well, as an attorney of some sort.

Mr. RANNEY. An attorney in some of the Departments.

Q. You say you did not know he was a lawyer?—A. No, sir. I knew that he had been a clergyman. I did not know that he had ever been a lawyer, and I believe that his title of doctor comes from his position as a clergyman.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. From the beginning of this enterprise.

Q. You had had no previous acquaintance with him?—A. Not at all, sir. I never heard his name even.

Q. Did you join in recommending the appointment of J. Harris Rogers as electrician of the House of Representatives?—A. I do not remember, sir. I think it is very probable I did. If there had been a chance to procure him the appointment I would have recommended him without any hesitation.

Q. Do you recall the fact that he was an applicant?—A. I am not certain as to that. I have a glimmering recollection of something of that sort, but it is too indistinct for me to make any assertion. I had a very high opinion of him as an electrician.

Q. If you did join in the recommendation, did you have in view any advantage to be secured to your company from his obtaining that position?—A. I cannot imagine any advantage to be derived to the company from such an appointment for him. If I had joined in recommending him for such an office it would have been solely for his own benefit; no other object.

Q. Were you consulted at any time with reference to the bringing of a suit to test the validity of the Bell Telephone patents in the name of the United States?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Attorney-General Garland upon that subject?—A. Never, sir; and this company never made any application of that sort; never joined in it.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any of the members of this company as to the desirability of having a suit brought in the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell patents?—A. I do not remember any. If any, it was a very slight one. It was not enough to fix itself in my memory. We were at that time discussing a matter which we afterwards determined upon, of bringing suit against the Bell Telephone Company ourselves, in Memphis.

Q. What was that suit for?—A. The Bell Telephone agent in West Tennessee published a great many attacks upon us, some of them almost scurrilous, but they were all intended to injure the standing of our little association, as well as the character of the instruments. We determined to bring a suit, which we thought would decide at the same time the validity of our patents. That was the real object. We thought that such a suit would decide the validity of our patents.

Q. Do you still hold your interest in these companies?—A. Yes, sir. Now that I think of it, you asked me if the telegraph company had been organized. It must have been organized, because I got, or rather we got, an order from the Western Union to its agent here to test the telegraphic instrument I referred to, and it was tested by him.

Q. (Handing paper to witness.) I show you the recommendation for the appointment of Dr. Rogers. Is your signature there?—A. It is. There is no mistaking my signature, sir.

Q. But you do not recall the fact of having signed it?—A. No, sir. I remember very well that Dr. Rogers asked me to recommend him for a consulship to some French port, and I think I must have assumed that was the recommendation for the consulship. It is the only application of his that I can remember ever having heard of. I remember that distinctly, because he made the request of me in a letter and gave his object for wishing for the office.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That was subsequent to this application, was it not?—A. Oh, I do not know at all. I say I do not remember that at all, so I cannot fix its time as compared with another.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I call your attention to a letter which I find among those printed by the committee, dated March 26, 1884, and which seems to have been written at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes in the evening. It is addressed to Dr. J. W. Rogers and J. Harris Rogers. I will read it to you:

"On receiving your first dispatch at 6.15 I sent it to Senator Harris, who keeps our contracts. He replied immediately that he would comply with your request. Your second dispatch came about three and a half hours after the first. I carried it to the Senator's lodgings, and he being absent, left the dispatch with a note telling him 'I cannot break Colonel Young's locks.' This I telegraphed you at once. I regret this very much, for I will do anything for your advantage that does not seem to me wrong. I don't see, however, how those who insist on the impress of the seal of the party of the first part can be satisfied with its impression by the other party. I do hope that when they see the missing sheet supplied they will be willing to wait until the seal can be obtained without violence.

"With best wishes, yours, very truly,

"J. E. JOHNSTON."

Q. Do you recall the writing of that letter?—A. I recall the circumstances.

Q. What were the circumstances?—A. There was a contract which had not the company's seal affixed, and I was requested, if I remember, to get the seal itself for the use of the other party to the contract. The seal was in Colonel Young's quarters and he was absent, and the only mode of getting hold of it was to break open one of his pieces of furniture, which I declined to do.

Q. Do you recall what contract that was?—A. No, sir; I suppose, though, that it was Dr. Rogers's contract in Pennsylvania.

Q. You say they wanted the seal of your company?—A. Yes, sir; to the contract with Dr. Rogers. Dr. Rogers had the right to use this instrument in Pennsylvania.

Q. In entering into the formation of these companies, did you at any time doubt the integrity, the honesty, or the propriety of the conduct of yourself and your fellow members?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think that is exactly necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask that question simply to give him an opportunity to make the statement.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not seem to me proper to ask a gentleman if he doubts his own integrity.

The WITNESS. I have expressed myself as well as I know how on those subjects, Mr. Chairman. We made these contracts believing that we were giving the contractors the full worth of what they gave us. We believed that our instrument was the best extant, and that industrious men would certainly succeed with it.

Q. I speak of the original association between yourself and the Rogerses, and the formation of this company. Was there anything about it in your mind that rendered it of doubtful honesty and propriety?—A. Nothing under heaven, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask the question only because the same question has been asked other witnesses by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney), although not just in that form perhaps. He has put substantially the same question.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no. If I had put such a question as that I would have deemed it an insult.

The CHAIRMAN. I think if the gentleman will look at the record he will not only find that he put such questions, but also that he made direct imputations against the witnesses.

Mr. RANNEY. I asked for facts that; is all.

Q. So you say you never doubted it?—A. No, sir; and as little now. It was as plain a matter of business to me as could well be. We united together to bring two or three inventions into use which we thought very valuable. We did not doubt at all that we could be able to bring them into use, and that we would give Mr. Rogers at least as much as he gave us; that we would be at least as useful to him as he was to us.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You were speaking of the value of the instrument. Am I to understand that before you went into this matter you had any special knowledge on the subject of telephones?—A. I confess, sir, that I had really never heard of any instrument at the time but Bell's that was in general use, and I never saw any other, and did not know that there were others.

Q. Had you had any practical experience with the art of telephony?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Or electricity?—A. My knowledge of electricity was too old; what I knew of electricity was in my youth, and of course it is worth nothing now. It was when there was very little more knowledge of electricity than Dr. Franklin had,

Q. By that remark I am not to understand that you considered this enterprise a "kiting" enterprise?—A. Very far from it, sir; I was contrasting "kiting" with this enterprise.

Q. You alluded to the way Franklin regarded it, and therefore I asked you the question. When you first came to look into this matter, at whose instance was it?—A. Senator Harris, sir, proposed to me to join this association.

Q. Can you fix the date when that was?—A. It was in the early part of March, 1883.

Q. You were then occupying what position?—A. I was the general agent of a fire insurance company, sir.

Q. In Washington?—A. In Washington.

Q. And Mr. Harris was then a Senator?—A. A Senator.

Q. How soon did you look into the matter?—A. Immediately after he suggested it to me. He proposed to me to join this association, and I went to see the instruments. They were shown to me and explained to me, and tested by Mr. Harris Rogers in a small way.

Q. When you did go into it you were satisfied it was a genuine thing and of great value?—A. Yes, sir. Then we obtained the opinion of a gentleman who was very strongly recommended to us as a patent lawyer, and who had been for some time Commissioner of Patents also.

Q. You became satisfied the patents were valid and did not infringe on anybody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were satisfied that it was a good thing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of great value?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you tested it from Richmond to Washington, did you?—A. Yes, sir; and afterwards from Washington to New York.

Q. So that you were satisfied it would become of great value. Of course you did not go into an enterprise intending to impose upon the public then. Do you remember what value you placed on this transmitter to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Governor Harris and myself, in the office of the Bell Telephone Company in Boston, saw them compared, with the help of our electrician, Mr. Harris Rogers, and Mr. Lockwood—I think his name is—the electrician of that company.

Q. In that negotiation do you remember what value you and Mr. Harris placed upon the transmitter which you then proposed to sell to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. There was no proposition of that sort. There was no attempt at expressing a money value.

Q. You gave some indication, did you not?—A. Governor Harris made a proposition which I never exactly understood myself.

Q. It was some millions, was it not?—A. No, sir; there was no expression of any money value at all. Governor Harris proposed—

Q. You were endeavoring to sell, I suppose—

Mr. HALL. I suggest that the witness be allowed to make a full answer.

Mr. RANNEY. If at any time you have not finished an answer, General, when I interrupt you, I would thank you to let me know you have not finished. I do not mean to interrupt you.

The WITNESS. I say I did not understand exactly Governor Harris's proposition. It was that the Bell Telephone Company should permit our instrument to be connected with their wires and used by their customers in some way; but I could not understand exactly the meaning of his proposition. It was one which Mr. Vail rejected at once. It was a mode of using it; and I suppose his object was to convince the Bell Telephone Company of its value. I suppose it was a sort of test.

Q. I am not alluding to it as implying any impropriety in your conduct, but I understand this to be the fact: That you had an idea of selling out the telephone of Rogers to the Bell Telephone Company, which you had a perfect right to do. I do not allude to it as an improper thing. That was so, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; there was an idea of making some sort of bargain.

Q. It was to sell this transmitter, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; it was to make some proper arrangement with that company, either an alliance or a sale.

Q. Were you cognizant of the fact that Senator Harris mentioned that their idea of the price was some millions?—A. I do not think he made any estimate of its value in money.

Q. Were you not asked to name a price which you wanted or would like for it?—A. He asked Mr. Vail, after Mr. Vail had rejected his proposition, what he thought of its value; and Mr. Vail said he evidently had such an extravagant idea of its value that it was not worth his while to name what he should regard as its value.

Q. What had Senator Harris said to Mr. Vail to give him that idea?—A. He had spoken of a sort of use that I told you I did not understand. He proposed that Mr. Vail should permit this instrument to be used in some way or other by his customers alongside of the other.

Q. I understood you to say that Mr. Vail said to Senator Harris that his idea of the value was such that he could not entertain it. That would imply that Senator Harris had in some way communicated his opinion of its value.—A. Not in a money way; at least, I have no recollection of anything of that sort. We were always together, the three of us.

Q. If you were talking of selling to the Bell Telephone Company, you and Senator Harris and your associates, among yourselves, must have said something to indicate what you estimated its value to be in case you should sell it?—A. Mr. Harris went there, as I explained, very badly, of course, because I did not understand his scheme exactly, so that I cannot explain it; but it was the permission by Mr. Vail to his agents to use this instrument in some way alongside of their own, having connection with their wires.

Q. And to be paid a royalty?—A. I do not know what it was.

Q. Perhaps you did not notice my question. I understood you to say there was an idea on the part of your associates of selling out this transmitter to the Bell Telephone Company. My question was whether among yourselves you had not talked over the price you would ask for it?—A. I don't remember, sir.

Q. You do not remember that you ever talked about the price you estimated it at?—A. I have no doubt we did; but I don't think there was ever any deliberate discussion of the question as to an agreement upon a sum.

Q. What was the talk among yourselves as to the price you would ask for it?—A. I don't remember. I don't remember that its value was ever precisely estimated in that way.

Q. Did you not estimate the value among yourselves?—A. That is what I am speaking of. I don't remember any sum being fixed upon as its value.

Q. Do I understand you to say you cannot tell whether it was $5 or $5,000,000?—A. I did not use those terms.

Q. I use them as a limitation each way.—A. I don't remember that any sum was ever fixed upon.

Q. I understand your answer, and will therefore leave it. You did not understand that Mr. J. Harris Rogers claimed to have invented the art or method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, did you?—A. Oh, no.

Q. All you understood was that Mr. Rogers had invented an apparatus by which it could be done?—A. Yes, sir; that he thought he had made a great improvement upon preceding inventions.

Q. So that he did not claim to have invented the thing which had priority to what we term Bell's invention?—A. No, sir.

Q. In fact, his claim of invention on the telephone matter was that he had invented that instrument called a microphone, what is called the transmitter, was it not, by which the thing could be accomplished in part?—A. The transmitter is a part of every telephone, I believe.

Q. That was the invention that you were exhibiting?—A. The construction of that transmitter was Rogers's invention.

Q. That is, it was what he claimed was a new form of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Better than the Blake transmitter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you participate in getting the charter at New York?—A. I think that Mr. Rogers got the charter in New York. We had several charters; we had charters in New York and Tennessee, I know.

Q. I do not want to waste any time in regard to matters with reference to which others have testified; I only want to put to you general questions. I simply want to know whether you took charge, personally, or had anything to do, or much to do with getting the charter of incorporation?—A. Nothing, sir.

Q. Then I will not spend time on it. You say you had had Mr. Marble's opinion; did you ever have Senator Garland's opinion likewise?—A. Well, Senator Garland was not an expert in those matters; I do not think that we consulted him as to the validity of the patent; that required an electrician.

Q. You went into association with him, and you got his opinion on the matter of infringement, did you not?—A. Well, I do not think that Mr. Garland's opinion would have been valuable in that matter, because only the opinion of an electrician, I should think, would be worth anything on such a matter.

Q. Are you aware, then, that Senator Garland, one of your associates, had issued or delivered an opinion of his own as to the patent question?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not aware of it?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Were you aware that Senator Harris, who is a lawyer himself, had given his opinion at the time?—A. I conversed more with Senator Harris on the subject than anybody else, and I think he derived his opinions from the electrician. I do not think he gave any opinion as a professional man.

Q. Have you read the several opinions that have been put into this case, one by Senator Garland, and one also by Senator Harris?—A. No, sir; not one that Senator Harris had written.

Q. Did you know of any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never knew of them at the time?—A. No, sir; this is the first mention to my ear.

Q. Were you aware of the opinion that Senator Garland sent to Mr. Myers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know anything about the negotiations for the sale to Mr. Myers of rights in the several States?—A. I knew of the sale of rights to use the instruments in Indiana.

Q. There were several other States included in the contract; did you ever know anything about that?—A. Yes; it was a matter of agreement; we agreed upon it.

Q. If I recollect rightly, the aggregate sum paid in the several States was about $90,000; I may be mistaken about that, but that is the impression I have. Did you ever know anything about those negotiations?—A. They were brought before four or five of us. The contract, whatever it was, was written by Senator Harris; he wrote all those contracts.

Q. Did he submit it to you?—A. It was signed by me.

Q. Of course you read them before you signed them, or didn't you?—A. O yes; I read or heard them read.

Q. Had you aught to do with the negotiations preceding the execution of the written agreements?—A. The negotiations, I suppose, were conducted in our little party of four or five, all of us present.

Q. Were these negotiations made verbally, or by correspondence?—A. Verbally.

Q. Did you know Mr. Myers?—A. I never saw him before.

Q. Do you know whether he was purchasing those rights under that contract for himself or for other people?—A. It was supposed that he was purchasing for himself.

Q. Did you know anybody else associated with him?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Do you know of any verbal arrangement in connection with him that is not incorporated or merged into the written agreement—any understanding about the profits?—A. I remember very little of it, for the contract never went into operation.

Q. Do you remember whether, before that contract was made, Mr. Myers obtained a written opinion from Senator Garland about the patents?—A. I never heard of it; at least, if I heard of it, I have forgotten it.

Q. You were not aware, if it was the fact, that Mr. Myers, before he made the agreement and entered into it, procured from Mr. Garland his written opinion about the patents?—A. No, sir. I can hardly imagine, though, that anyone would have depended upon the opinion of the best lawyer in the world, who was not an electrician, in a matter of that sort. Only an electrician could decide upon the validity of such a patent.

Q. You thought it very strange that Mr. Myers sought the opinion of Senator Garland, or do you mean that you thought it strange that Mr. Garland gave it?—A. I was speaking simply of Mr. Myers's view of the matter. I cannot imagine what he could want with the opinion as to the validity of an electrical patent from one who was not an electrician.

Q. There is a question beyond that mere matter of science, a legal question of infringement, is there not?—A. Well, but that infringement can only be detected by an electrician. At least that is my idea on the subject; I may be wrong.

Q. It depends on legal questions, too?—A. Yes, but the legal questions cannot be applied very well without a knowledge of electricity.

Q. That may be. The law is not of any consequence unless it is given with reference to a state of facts. Senator Garland was a lawyer of some note and distinction in the Southwest, I take it?—A. Yes.

Q. Very well known as a lawyer and a Senator?—A. But not very likely to have observed or to have had before him cases in which electricity was involved, or in which telephonic instruments were involved.

Q. If he gave any opinions you have them. You mean that you would not place much stress on an opinion which he might give?—A. I mean that in such a case as you have described I would not have thought of applying to him for an opinion.

A. I do not want to go over these matters repeatedly, but I will allude to it. I understand that, from examination, you gentlemen were perfectly satisfied that these patents were good and valid; that there was no infringement; that they were valuable, and you took this interest in them which you have mentioned understandingly?—A. Yes. I will say, sir, that our opinions were, to my mind now, very extravagant; we had the highest possible opinion of the value of those inventions.

Q. Pardon me. It is the opinion which you then formed and on which you then acted that I am speaking of, and not your present opinion. You said that you understood from Dr. Rogers and his son, who made this distribution of interests, that they relied on you gentlemen for your influence and position in the Southwest. I understood you to make an answer substantially to that effect?—A. That was my understanding, sir.

Q. And you understood that it was not any wealth that you gentlemen might have?—A. No. I do not think there was a rich man among us.

Q. It was for your influence and position, and well-known reputation for integrity of character—which nobody will deny—that you took the interest, and not for the capital that you might be expected to put into it?—A. No, sir; it could not have been, as there was no capitalist among us.

Q. In order to utilize the patents and get them before the public and make them a success, he desired the association with him of such men as have been named; that is your understanding?—A. That is my understanding.

Q. To give confidence in the matter; it was with that view, as you understand, that you all went into it?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not concern yourself, you say, as to the details of the corporation? You wrote this letter in December, 1883, in regard to the impropriety of putting on the market or selling the stock, because if it did not prove a success you would all be called swindlers. That was in 1883, I believe?—A. I think about the end of 1883.

Q. Subsequent to that time, how many territorial rights within your knowledge did your associates proceed to sell?—A. One in Pennsylvania, one here, Illinois, Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, and Texas.

Q. If I remember rightly about those contracts it was contemplated to form corporations, and your company as a part of the consideration was to take certain shares of stock in those corporations which are specified.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are aware of that. Were you likewise aware that in those contracts for the sale of territorial rights, the formation of corporations and the issuing of certificates of stock, there was no restriction against those subordinate corporations putting their stock on the market?—A. There was none that I know of.

Q. You were aware that there was none?—A. I believe there was none.

Q. And you were aware likewise that the value of that stock in the subordinate corporations depended upon the value of the territorial rights which the parent company sold them?—A. We believed that they depended upon the value of the instrument in the hands of industrious people who would bring it into use. We had no doubt that those companies would bring the instrument into use; they had no opposition, or next to none.

Q. Perhaps you did not comprehend my question; it was my fault undoubtedly; my question was designed to be this: Whether you were aware that the foundation of these subordinate companies—the right to use instruments and put them into operation, the right to form corporations and manage them—depended upon the value of the territorial rights which you sold them. If they got no interest in those patent rights of which the parent company held exclusive control, of course they could not form corporations to carry on their operations. You knew that, of course?—A. I do not think that I understand you, sir.

Q. Were not the subordinate companies based entirely on the territorial rights which the parent company sold them?—A. They depended upon the territorial rights, yes, the right to use that instrument and the value of that instrument.

Q. Your parent company and your original associates held the exclusive property in the letters patent of young Mr. Rogers, present and all prospective or future ones he might make; that embraced the whole of it; and this sale of territory was only of the same right you had to those particular localities?—A. Yes.

Q. In those contracts you made with those corporations you were aware that you were to have a certain amount of stock as the consideration for the sale of those rights?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were aware likewise, I presume, that they proceeded to organize those corporations and issue certificates of stock in due form?—A. That was a right, of course; I do not know how many have exercised it.

Q. As president of the parent company you, of course, received, or you seem to have—they have been produced here—certificates of stock issued by those subordinate companies. You were aware of that?—A. I must have been.

Q. There was no limitation in those certificates as to the rights of the parties owning them putting them on the market and selling them?—A. There was no limitation of that sort by us.

Q. So that, if I understand you, General, you had scruples or reasons sufficient for you why the parent company who held the entire interest in the patent rights should not put stock on the market; you had scruples against that and did not want it done lest, if you did not succeed, you might be called swindlers; but you had none against these local companies doing so who had only a partial interest in it.—A. I think your argument would have prevented any possibility of our ever getting our instrument into use. The sale of the instrument was the only mode of bringing it into use and and getting it before the country.

Q. Undoubtedly.—A. We believed that in each case there was a good prospect of success on the part of the company formed—the company in Missouri, for instance;

we looked upon its success as certain. It was the only mode by which we could get the instrument into use. If we did not sell it of course we should stand still.

Q. I do not exactly see why the parent company, the company in Tennessee, could not have gone and done that same thing, as well as the subordinate companies, with equal propriety.—A. I do not know that it is very much worth while to discuss that. There was no harm in our keeping the stock unsold, undistributed.

Q. In your judgment, was there any reason why it would have subjected your associates of the original company to such charges as you indicate in your letter any more than it would have compromised the subordinate companies who issued stock and put it on the market?—A. There was this difference: That at the time when we made this rule we had not adopted any mode of bringing the instrument into view. We applied it in those contracts where we thought success was so certain, and therefore we had no scruples about making such contracts. We did not think there was the danger of worthless stock in the subordinate companies which I believe we had thought there was in the parent company.

Q. What seems to trouble me, and the chairman too, if I understand you, is when you had stock based on the entire capital constituted by the patent—had stock issued—why there could be anything worse in issuing that stock and putting it on the market than there should be on the part of the subordinate companies doing it when they had only a limited interest.—A. I was attempting to show that it was not inconsistent in us to make those contracts—not inconsistent with the first provision. If I understand you, you were arguing against our first provision to sell.

Q. I do not make any charge that you were in that position, General, but I say simply, following the line of the chairman's inquiry, that I do not see how you in that letter could regard it as improper in the parent company, and possibly an improper thing in you, to put it on the market, and at the same time sanction that very thing on the part of the subordinate companies.—A. Pardon me, sir, it was not at the same time; it was much later; but if we had made such contracts, then we should have done it with the utmost confidence; we believed that we were running no risk whatever, and it would have taken a number of those small companies to make our stock valuable, if you think a moment. So I cannot see how much inconsistency arose from our action.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the witness a question.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would not interfere. Let us observe the rule.

Mr. EDEN. It has been customary, when a member of the committee desired to ask a question, for the gentleman who is examining the witness to allow him to do so.

Mr. RANNEY. It will break down the rule.

Mr. EDEN. It has been done by yourself very frequently.

Mr. HALL. Half a dozen times.

Mr. RANNEY. If the other members of the committee will consent to it—

Mr. EDEN. I shall not insist upon it at all. I only wanted to ask a question on the point you are just leaving.

The WITNESS. What I was attempting to do—attempting, I say—was to show that there was no inconsistency, in our agreeing to this arrangement in the States, with the general position.

Q. I do not want to dwell upon it, but as you were president of the company you were perfectly familiar with it. As a matter of fact, as I understand, your parent company as such never proceeded to set up and operate the telephone, to receive royalties and do it as a business?—A. No, sir; not directly.

Q. You really became a company in your practical operation which engaged in the sale of territorial rights.—A. But if you will excuse me, sir, we had barely begun; we were stopped.

Q. We have seen how far you went. You organized a corporation in Tennessee before you allowed to be organized two subordinate companies in Tennessee, or one which was it?—A. One, I think.

Q. And that subordinate company was the one practically to operate the telephone. I believe I understand the position which you had. The profits which you were realizing out of these patents—A. Which we hoped to realize.

Q. Which you did realize, so far as you went, were from the sale of territorial rights. So far as you went you became simply a dealer in territorial rights. We have the details of the corporation, and I do not want to take time in repeating them. You have said, however, in answer to brother Boyle, with reference to the action of the company directors in January, 1885, that you then stopped issuing stock in the parent company. Do I understand you to say that after that vote which you read, you or your company actually did not issue any stock of the parent company?—A. We did not begin to issue stock of the parent company. We never did issue stock of the parent company.

Q. I do not know whether you call it stock. We have a stock-book here with certificates of stock in it. You do not call that stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then do you wish to qualify your answer?—A. Well, when you spoke I was thinking of sales. That was forbidden.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the question and answer before, as I recollect. I asked him nothing about issuing stock.

The WITNESS. It was the selling of stock——

Q. Did the vote forbid the sale of stock?

Mr. HALL. Let the witness answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Let him answer.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly satisfied myself.

Mr. RANNEY. I know, general, that you mean to be fair.

The WITNESS. I say I am perfectly satisfied with your manner of asking.

Mr. HALL. He could probably observe some courtesy.

Mr. RANNEY. I addressed General Johnston.

Q. Now, I mean to treat you with the utmost respect, for I have nothing but the highest respect for you, and if any question I shall put shall intimate otherwise, I hope you will remind me of it.

Mr. EDEN. It would be more comfortable in listening to the testimony if you would permit the witness to answer one question before putting another to him.

The CHAIRMAN. If the witness will indicate at any time that he desires to finish an answer there will certainly be no objection on the part of any member to his doing so.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not my purpose to interrupt any answer before it is finished, and if I do so unintentionally I hope the witness will say so.

Mr. EDEN. I do not ask it on account of the witness so much as on my own account, for I want to hear what he wishes to say.

Mr. RANNEY. I am dealing with the witness, but if I am breaking the rule I am not doing so intentionally, and will be only too glad to have the matter called to my attention.

Q. The chairman read the vote to you, which embraced, as I now remember it, not only the sale of rights, but the sale of stock in the company.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman is in error about that. My recollection of the vote was that there was no selling of stock referred to. I think there was no allusion to the sale of stock.

Mr. RANNEY. That was a stockholders' meeting?

Mr. MILLARD. There was no allusion to sales of stock.

The WITNESS. There was one matter which, perhaps, created a little confusion. At one time last year we determined that it would be necessary to raise money with which to meet expected expenses of suits, and so a stock assessment was made of 10 per cent. for that purpose.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me understand. Did you refer to the directors or stockholders?

The CHAIRMAN. To the directors' meeting, as to the sale of rights.

Q. Were you aware of the vote which restricted the sale of stock of the parent company?—A. The sale of stock of the parent company was forbidden—I do not think it was restricted, but that was in the beginning, in 1883.

Q. And were you aware that notwithstanding that, subsequently the company did go on and allow sales and transfers of stock?—A. The company could not help itself; but they did not issue stock to purchasers.

Q. What did they issue when a sale was made?—A. Something like an order from Mr. Rogers setting forth that the bearer had purchased so many shares; and generally in those cases a paper was given to the effect that whenever the company determined to issue stock the holder should receive that amount.

Q. But were you aware that the stock ledger shows that they went right along selling whatever stock was sold and keeping a ledger account of the transfers?—A. No, sir; I was not aware of that.

Q. I see that on the ledger which I have here, called a stock-book, the stock is charged to the Pan-Electric Company, and then on the transfers sales are credited, running from page 66 to 137, original page. On that page, 137, there is an account of stock and transfers, where they are charged with certificates. You will see what it is, and it will be better than to put it into the record and encumber it. [Book handed to witness.]

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it has not appeared that the company ever issued a single certificate of stock.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to mislead the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. I make the suggestion because I think you are under a misapprehension.

Mr. MILLARD. You do not mean the telephone company, do you?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not under any misapprehension. I am familiar with everything about it so far as it has gone. I am not under a cloud myself, and I certainly shall not mislead any one.

The CHAIRMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the evidence so far is to the effect that not a single certificate of stock was ever issued to any party whatever.

Mr. MILLARD. They issued certificates that they were entitled to so many shares.

The WITNESS. That they would be entitled to stock?

Q. Have you looked at the record?—A. I have looked at three or four pages of the book you handed me.

Q. And you find, do you not, the entries of certificates issued to various parties?—A. Yes.

Q. Purporting to be certificates of stock?—A. (After looking through the book further.) The names are all of persons who did not belong to the association; of course they became stockholders.

Q. That is what I had reference to. Are you aware of what was the form of certificate issued? There is the certificate book that has been put in evidence. Look at the first one in it—the others follow—and state whether, to your knowledge, that is the form of certificate?—A. This is undoubtedly the form.

Q. Do you know of any other certificate book that you had?—A. No, sir.

Q. You observe there that it begins in 1885, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the form of certificate, if there was any, which was adopted prior to that time?—A. I think that this book was made a year or two previously, but the certificates were not filled until the date here.

Q. I observe on that book—you will correct me if necessary—that prior to that time, in 1883 and 1884, there purports to have been stock issued; in some places the certificates are mentioned. Do you know what form of certificates was used before that book?—A. I know of no other than this. I think this book was in Colonel Young's office for a year or so before any certificate was filled.

Q. You were not aware of any other? Then I pass from that. I do not want to waste time on this, because I only wanted to direct your attention to it.—A. I do not myself consider it time wasted. (Witness makes further search in the book.)

Q. If not, I certainly would not deprive you of the privilege of using the time in your own way, but I do not want it charged to me.—A. This was made in 1885; I remember it, sir. That is not the stock-certificate book; it is a certificate that the holder will be entitled to a stock certificate whenever the board of directors choose to issue stock.

Mr. RANNEY. These books are just alike.

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. Then why spend time on them?

Mr. HALL. I do not know who is spending time on them.

Q. The two books are just alike?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand you to say that they are the only ones you ever knew about?—

A. I had not then read the certificates.

Q. You have now.—A. I have now.

Q. There will be no mistake about that. Do you know of certificates being issued by the Pan-Electric Company of New York?—A. No, sir. Immediately after that meeting in New York, I think, the two Rogerses remained there, and they sent me a stock-book which they themselves had gotten up, and they put forth a sort of prospectus which you will find in this little pamphlet of letters.

Q. Yes, we have had that. That stock-book they sent you from New York was prepared and proposed to be issued by the company organized in the State of New York, was it?—A. I fancy not, because we had a charter from the State of New York, but no company was ever organized there.

Q. Was not that stock-book gotten up in view of going on there?—A. Mr. Rogers was pretty wild occasionally, and I do not know what object he had.

Q. You did not go on under the New York charter, did you?—A. I do not remember, sir, whether the New York charter covered the telephone or telegraph company.

Q. It appears here, I believe, that it covered only the telegraph.—A. But we considered each of those charters as covering our business.

Q. I understand from the papers put in here that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company had conveyed to it only the telephone patents. Did you ever put in operation, utilize, or monetize, or whatever you call it, the other patents, not the telephone patents?—A. The only attempt was my getting the telegraphic instruments tried by the manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company here.

Q. That is all you have done about it?—A. That is all.

Q. So far as you know, the old company embraced, together with its branches, the telegraph and telephone?—A. A little more.

Q. If there is anything more, state it.—A. Mr. Rogers invented an electric light, and we discussed in his presence whether or not it was worth our while to attempt to bring it out; but we all thought, he among others, that it would not be a promising enterprise.

Q. Is there anything else that you know of?—A. I do not know of any other instrument. There was nothing that attracted my attention except those.

Q. Then the Pan-Electric Telephone Company the parent company as it would seem, was the one with reference to which what was done was confined; and in that all you did was to sell rights in the States, and in those sales you agreed to protect the patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without being liable or undertaking to be liable for any damages?—A. Our contract was to defend the suits instituted.

Q. But not to pay any damages?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were to step in and defend the suits. You say that after a while you knew that it was claimed that your telephone patents—I say yours, meaning those of yourself and associates, those owning them—infringed the Bell telephone. You became aware that it was claimed that that was so?—A. This claim to the exclusive use of electricity in telephoning was the only manner in which we considered ourselves as infringing.

Q. You said you were anxious to meet that contest and have it decided, I understood you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you aware that the Rogers company organized in the State of Pennsylvania was sued by the Bell Telephone Company, in which suit they claimed that there was this infringement? Were you aware of that suit being brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And under your contract your company was required to defend that suit. What steps did you take to do that?—A. We employed a lawyer who was recommended to us by several of the Philadelphia members in the House of Representatives; I cannot remember his name. But when the time came, I think that he let the suit go by default.

Q. Did you understand why, after employing counsel and when you were under a contract to defend the suit, you did not defend it?—A. That was the course taken by our lawyer.

Q. Did you know why it was taken?—A. Well, I think, sir, that I can only judge from what he said on the subject in the beginning, that it was idle to try a case there against the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Did he give a reason?—A. He said that they had possession of everything there in the courts.

Q. Had possession of every thing in the courts?—A. Yes; they managed and controlled the courts.

Q. Did they control the judges?—A. He did not say judges; he said the courts and the bar.

Q. You did not have any difficulty in finding lawyers who would engage for your case if you would only pay them, did you?—A. This one we engaged at the recommendation of a friend in the House of Representatives from Philadelphia.

Q. Do you remember who that was?—A. I have just said that I cannot think of his name.

Q. You did not find any difficulty in employing able counsel in Philadelphia, notorious for its able men, "Philadelphia lawyers"? You did not have any difficulty in getting good lawyers, did you?—A. Mr. Young employed him.

Q. I do not mean to press it too far, but I want to know this: If the reason of it was that the Bell Company had retained all the good lawyers, so that you could not get good ones, or was it something else?—A. Well, I did not mean to give that impression, and the truth is I do not know exactly how, but it was something very like that. I should like very much if you would let Mr. Young answer that question.

Q. We have had him. You were president of the company, and I may have more confidence in your answers than in his.—A. But Mr. Young managed the case at that time as a lawyer, so far as we were concerned.

Q. You were president of the company?—A. I was president of the company, but he managed the case, he being a lawyer.

Q. What I want to know is, if I do not interrupt you, was it reported that it was because all the good lawyers in the State of Pennsylvania were retained and controlled by the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No; that the Bell Telephone Company had an influence there which made it idle for people in our position to attempt to contend with it. That is about the amount of it. I cannot pretend to give the words.

Q. Frankly, general, was it this: Because you could not get lawyers to properly try your case, or because you could not trust the courts?—A. This gentleman who was employed was recommended to us as an eminent lawyer.

Q. And there was no trouble on that score?—A. Certainly not.

Q. Then the trouble was where?—A. I cannot express it any better than I have, because I tell you I was pretty ignorant of the matter myself; I did not attend to it at all. We put it into the hands of Mr. Young, who was a lawyer himself, and he went to Philadelphia and employed this gentleman.

Q. Who made that report to you, Mr. Casey Young or the lawyer himself?—A. The whole report was simply—

Q. No, who made it?—A. I think Colonel Young himself did.

Q. Now we will get what Colonel Young said. Did he say that you could not get an honest judge in Pennsylvania?—A. What I attempted to say was that the influence of that company was so great in Pennsylvania that we could not contend against it.

Q. You knew that it had to be decided by the courts, did you not?—A. Of course.

Q. Frankly, did not Colonel Young say that you could not trust the judges of the State of Pennsylvania?—A. No, sir; this is not Colonel Young's language, but the language which he repeated from this lawyer.

Q. Did he say the trouble was with the judges of the courts of Pennsylvania?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. I have said, as well as I know how, that the influence of that company was such in Pennsylvania that it was not worth our while, that we could not contend against it in court in a suit.

Q. That is as far as you can go, is it?—A. That is as far as I can go.

Q. Did he not say that the courts had had telephone cases before them and had already formed an opinion on them?—A. No, sir; he did not go into details, but it was a general expression like that I have given you.

Q. He advised going into Tennessee, did he not, to bring suit? I mean Casey Young.—A. Casey Young advised going somewhere else than to Pennsylvania. We had contracts in five or six Western States, and we all thought it would be more advantageous to make a suit in the West.

Q. Did he mention any judge that he would prefer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where was the conference, if you had one, when it was determined to go to Memphis with the suit that the company brought there?—A. The suit in Memphis was brought on account of the attacks made upon it in Memphis by the Bell Telephone Company's agents.

Q. That was not confined to Tennessee, was it?—A. I do not know whether it was or not, but it was stronger there than anywhere else.

Q. Was it not said that they had circulated newspapers or circulars in the Southwest?—A. My attention was called only to that in Memphis; we had a great deal of that. There were attacks made on us in New Orleans by other people, by a different company.

Q. Frankly, General, I wish you would recall whether the judges were not talked about in the talk you had with Colonel Young; was it not suggested or concluded that a suit in the district where Judge Baxter sat would be most advisable?—A. I do not think that Judge Baxter was considered as particularly advisable.

Q. Was his name mentioned?—A. I have heard his name mentioned frequently, and particularly as very antagonistic to Senator Harris.

Q. I only want to confine it to the time of your conferences about that matter.—A. That is what I am speaking of.

Q. Was it mentioned?—A. It was mentioned in that way, talking of judges all over the country.

Q. What did they say about Judge Baxter?—A. That Judge Baxter was very hostile to Senator Harris.

Q. What else did they say?—A. I do not remember anything else particularly.

Q. Did they make any allusion to his hostility to monopolies in patents?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. No, sir; I am not sure. I am only saying what I remember. Of course I am not sure that I remember everything, because conversations of that sort did not make a great impression on me.

Q. You will pardon me for my inquiry; I do not know whether you are a member of the bar; my familiarity with your name has come from another direction. Are you a member of the bar?—A. No.

Q. So you do not know Judge Baxter's reputation in that way?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Was he a Tennessee man?—A. I have not the slightest idea. I think from what I have seen since his death probably he was, but I never heard it before.

Q. You do remember that in conversation the name of Judge Baxter was canvassed among other judges?—A. I remember his being spoken of in just that way.

Q. You remember that some one said about him that he was not on good terms with Senator Harris?—A. Yes, strongly hostile.

Q. Where was that said?—A. In the conversation about the bringing of this suit.

Q. But I would like the place. Where were you when that was said?—A. I do not know.

Q. Can you not recall the occasion when that was said and where that was discussed?—A. Not at all. It was in Washington.

Q. Who was present?—A. I cannot remember. As I just said at the first conversation, that did not make any impression on me.

Q. Do you remember whether it was after Casey Young came from Pennsylvania, where he concluded to withdraw from that suit?—A. I do not know that he did conclude to withdraw; I had the impression that the gentleman whom he employed there—

Q. Do you recollect who suggested that Judge Baxter was hostile to Senator Harris and would not be a good judge?—A. I think it was Senator Harris himself. I mention that as a probability.

Q. Did he object to him?—A. I say I mention it simply as a probability that Senator Harris may have said it.

Q. You do not remember the fact?—A. No; I do not remember. Those conversations made very little impression on me; they were mere matters upon which I could not act, for I had no information.

Q. As you were president of the company, I thought possibly you might have been consulted about it?—A. Oh, those were matters for the lawyers to decide. Senator Harris and Colonel Young decided everything connected with the law matters.

Q. I thought possibly they might have reported to you. You say Casey Young did report to you the result of his Philadelphia experience and his action on the advice of counsel there.—A. My idea was that the counsel decided that matter.

Q. I did not know but Mr. Young might, as counsel, while expressing his views about the judges of the courts in Pennsylvania, have expressed his preference for some other judge.—A. That case could not have been tried anywhere else, of course; the Bell company brought it in Pennsylvania; the infringement was in Pennsylvania.

Q. What is the last meeting of the board or of your associates that you remember attending?—A. I think that the last was in the spring of last year, 1885.

Q. Where was that?—A. In Washington.

Q. Have you never met since then?—A. I think not. There was a meeting with reference to this assessment I have just mentioned, of 10 per cent. of the stock, to raise money. I think that is the last I remember.

Q. I mean formal meetings first, and then informal ones?—A. There have been informal meetings of two or three of us, but none of consequence enough to have made any impression on my memory.

Q. Were you present in Washington at any meeting in 1885 after July 12, after Casey Young came from Pittsburgh?—A. I was not in Washington at that time.

Q. Were you aware of Casey Young, your counsel, going to Pittsburgh to see Mr. Van Benthuyzen in the suit which he had at Pittsburgh?—A. I heard it a few days ago for the first time.

Q. For the first time that you ever heard of it?—A. Yes, sir; I have no recollection of having ever heard of it before.

Q. Where were you during the last days of July and the first days of August, 1885?—A. On the Pacific coast.

Q. Where were you during the last days of August and first days of September?—A. In the western part of Pennsylvania.

Q. Did you during those months meet Casey Young?—A. No.

Q. Or Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I don't think I have ever seen him.

Q. You never met him?—A. If I ever met him it was so casually that I do not remember it.

Q. Do you know whether before that time your company had had a controversy with him or with his company down in New Orleans?—A. Yes; he charged that Rogers had sold to us the instrument which Rogers had some years before sold to him (Van Benthuyzen).

Q. And the controversy grew out of that?—A. And I had the patents examined here by Mr. Marble, who announced that there was a plain patentable difference between them.

Q. Was there any feeling between your company or its directors and Van Benthuyzen, growing out of that controversy?—A. Not that I know of. Mr. Marble was requested to make a report on the subject, and that report, when made, was sent to our agent in New Orleans for publication.

Q. It was printed in the New Orleans Picayune, was it?—A. I do not know what paper published it; all I know is that it was sent down there for publication.

Q. Have you heard anything more about any controversy between you and Van Benthuyzen, or known anything of it, since the 1st of August, say, 1885?—A. I have never heard anything except that which you mention in New Orleans.

Q. Do you know, if it is true, how it happened that your differences arose with Van Benthuyzen or with his company about the 1st of August, 1885? Have you any personal knowledge about it?—A. No.

Q. Did anybody ever show you any contract that had been made with him or his company, any contract between him and yourself, or between him and your company, Casey Young and Senator Harris signing for your company?—A. No, sir; I did not see such a paper.

Q. They did not show you any in August?—A. I just said that I was in California and Oregon in those times.

Q. Did they write to you about it?—A. No, sir. A letter could not have found me if they had.

Q. After your return were you present at any meeting of any number of your associates when Senator Harris told them what he had done about signing the contract?—A. No, sir. I never heard Senator Harris say anything on that subject. I do not think I could have forgotten it if I had.

Q. Nobody, then, ever spoke to you about any contract, if there was any, made between Van Benthuyzen for the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Company, or the officers thereof, about the 1st of August, 1885?—A. I feel sure that I could not have heard it myself.

Q. Did anybody ever speak to you at that time or subsequently, before this investigation began, about a supplemental agreement?—A. No, sir; I should not have understood a supplemental contract not knowing the first.

Q. Did you ever know that there was one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Colonel Young ever tell you that there had been one made?—A. No, sir; if there had been such a contract I would have been obliged to see it, I should think; I do not see how it could have been concealed from me.

Q. I am asking for the fact, whether that fact was true.—A. I have just said.

Q. Is not the first time you ever heard of it since it was brought out in this investigation?

The WITNESS. Do you speak of an actual contract?

Mr. RANNEY Yes, a written contract. Casey Young says he signed with Van Benthuyzen a written contract, and that Mr. Harris signed it on behalf of the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Van Benthuyzen on behalf of his company; that the agreement was made first verbally at Pittsburgh, then put in writing, and signed soon afterward here in Washington about the 30th of July or 1st of August.

The WITNESS. Colonel Young told me a few days ago that such a paper had been drawn up.

Q. I do not ask you what he told you recently—that would be after this investigation began. Before this investigation began had you ever been informed of that paper?—A. I was just going to tell you what I was informed of, but I do not know whether it is the one you mean or not.

Q. I interrupted you because I understood you were telling what Casey Young told you within a few days.—A. I was going to say simply that Colonel Young told me that they made such a paper.

Q. When was it he told you?—A. Within a week, I should think.

Q. You see that does not come within my inquiry, what he has been telling you since this investigation began.—A. I never saw any such paper even, and I could not have possibly forgotten it if I had.

Q. Then before this investigation was begun, if there was any written paper drawn between Van Benthuyzen, representing his company and the Pan-Electric Company, it had never been communicated to you?—A. I am sure it could not have been.

Q. Either personally or by writing?—A. I am sure it could not have been.

Q. If there was any paper supplemental to that signed on the 27th of August, 1885, that had never been communicated to you before this investigation began?—A. No, sir; I had never had a hand in any contract of that sort.

Q. No, I did not suppose you had, general, and I wanted to give you the opportunity to state it. Do you know any reason why, if such a paper had been made, it should have been concealed from you?—A. I do not know at all the character of the paper, sir, and I cannot state.

Q. You have not seen it even now?—A. No, sir.

Q. You, of course, were not here, according to your statement, during these transactions in Washington in relation to bringing a Government suit and in relation to these contracts during the months of July, August, and September. Who was the vice-president of your company at that time? Who acted as president?—A. Senator Harris was vice-president.

Q. And Casey Young had been your principal attorney, had he not?—A. Senator Garland was nominally, but Colonel Young was very active in our business and attended more to it than anybody else.

Q. You understood that Senator Garland was appointed as attorney of your company, and, so far as you know, remained so down to this time, for aught I know?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose he is, but he has never attended to the business.

Q. He has never resigned, withdrawn, or been discharged?—A. No, sir. He has never attended to the business; Colonel Young attended to it.

Q. By any appointment of the company making him attorney by substitution for Garland?—A. Simply as one of the executive committee.

Q. He has been pretty active?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the last year the business has been left substantially in his hands, has it not?—A. Very much, I think.

Q. You seem to have had no meetings?—A. I do not remember any meetings since last spring, or perhaps as late as June.

Q. It seems to me remarkable—explain it, general—why since May 4, 1885, during the time of the transactions that are now under investigation, there is no record of any meeting on the part of you men associated with or interested more or less in this matter.—A. I think it may very well have been because there has been nothing to do. These companies that we formed in different States were all idle.

Q. So far as any business was concerned you have not seen any occasion to have any meetings?—A. I have not seen any occasion for a meeting, and I have been here since the middle of September last.

Q. Perhaps you have not at this time been informed of what was done by Senator Harris and by Casey Young in matters affecting your company?—A. Well, I have not been informed of anything that made any impression upon me. I thought there was nothing to do.

Q. You had nothing to do with the business. Whatever has been done in trying to get a Government suit brought in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company you have had nothing to do with it?—A. I do not think anybody has had anything to do with it, because as far as my knowledge goes, we were opposed to it.

Q. Pardon me; I would like to have you answer for yourself. You have had nothing to do with it?

Mr. EDEN. I think the gentleman ought to be permitted to answer.

Q. If you know anything of anybody else doing anything else you may state it.—

A. My conversations with Colonel Young and Senator Harris gave me that impression. Colonel Young was last spring and summer opposed entirely to our company's making any such petition.

Q. Colonel Young was?—A. Yes.

Q. He has always been opposed to any suit being brought for the benefit of the Pan-Electric Company, do you mean?—A. No.

Q. In the name of the Government?—A. In the name of the Government.

Q. He has always been opposed?—A. I think so. It has only been talked of, I think, since last spring.

Q. When did it first begin to be talked about?—A. I say last spring.

Q. Where was it?—A. Here in Washington. That is as near as I can come.

Q. Who was present, to your knowledge, when it first began to be talked about?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Recall it, if you can, General.—A. I did not hear any earnest conversation on this subject; it never was formally discussed by us.

Q. Who mentioned it, please?—A. As I said a little while ago, there was no formal discussion, so that I do not remember.

Q. What was said on the subject?—A. Simply an opposition to our going into it.

Q. Who said it?—A. I remember Colonel Young had that opinion.

Q. In "opposition to our going into it." What?—A. That application to the Government.

Q. Who suggested it? There must have been some conversation preceding that?—

A. Certainly; I have said that there was. But I have said that it was not formal enough to make any impression.

Q. You do not know who made it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know where it was?—A. I only know it was in Washington here.

Q. In the street, at a hotel, or in a room?—A. Well, we used to meet in Senator Harris's room and in Colonel Young's room, and once or twice we met in a room in the Ebbitt House, but I cannot remember.

Q. Can you remember which one of these places it was?—A. No, sir; because, as I tell you, there was no formal discussion. It was not earnest enough to fix itself upon my memory.

Q. Will you fix how early in the spring it was?—A. I think it must have been in May; I do not know positively; I cannot come very near the time; it might have been in June.

Q. You went away how soon after that?—A. I went the latter part of June or the first of July.

Q. So that it must have been before that time?—A. Yes, sir; it must have been before that time; that is as near as I can come to it.

Q. I don't want to tease you or doubt your word about it, you will understand me; I just want to see how much you remember and how much you do not remember. You do remember, then, that at some interview before you went away, here in Washington, the subject matter of a Government suit was discussed?—A. It was spoken of, not discussed; it was not earnest enough for that.

Q. But you don't remember who spoke of it?—A. I have the impression that Colonel Young was unfavorable to our engaging in it. His idea was that we should bring our own suit against the Bell Telephone Company in Memphis; that is my recollection.

Q. You see the difficulty with me in understanding you is, that you remember something Colonel Young said in objection to it, without remembering what the talk was preceding it that led to that objection. You see my difficulty?—A. I confess that I cannot see that it is a difficulty. It is very natural for a man to remember one thing spoken and not another, not some other.

Q. I only want to get what you do remember. But when you say that you remember Colonel Young objected to it, I want to know what thing had been said to which he objected?—A. It was this idea of our being engaged in this application for a Government suit. It was known that some company or possibly companies were disposed, or perhaps had determined, perhaps had made the application; I do not remember what the state of the case was; but that produced the conversation.

Q. And do not remember what that conversation was?—A. Only in a general way mention of the fact that the National Improved Company, as it is called, that New Orleans company, was either taking steps or had taken them in that direction.

Q. And that as early as June?—A. It was before I left here.

Q. And you left here before the 1st of July?—A. About that time.

Q. Can you fix the exact date when you left?—A. No, I cannot fix it.

Q. Have you no means of determining the date when you left?—A. No, sir. I could, I suppose, obtain it at the Interior Department.

Q. I am sorry to trouble you, but I would like that date fixed. Let me see if I can refresh your recollection. Was not the subject raised by a reference to the fact that Dr. Rogers had on May 24, 1885, I think it was, filed an application to Mr. Garland to have a suit brought; was not that the occasion of the conversation?—A. It might have been; I do not remember that it was.

Q. Had you been informed, as you now remember, that Dr. Rogers had sent in to Mr. Garland a request that a Government suit should be brought?—A. I saw a reference to it in a publication of Dr. Rogers not very long ago, and it was new to me then. I do not remember ever having heard of it before.

Q. But you are now unable to state whether that fact was alluded to as giving rise to the conversation?—A. That possibly might have been it.

Q. You are unable to state now, after dwelling on that fact, any more of the conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you now recall who was present at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Pardon my ignorance, but you said you thought you could learn at the Interior Department. Are you connected with the Interior Department now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what relation?—A. I am Commissioner of Railroad Affairs; Commissioner of the Pacific Railroads.

Q. When were you appointed to office?—A. On the 3d of April of last year.

Q. I was not present when the question was put to you before. I was aware that you were on that Commission, but I was not aware that that placed you under the Interior Department. Is that office under Secretary Lamar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Lamar?—A. About five and twenty years.

Q. I suppose the fact that you were connected with this Pan-Electric Company, this stock, was a thing known in the South pretty generally, was it not?—A. It was known in certain States, but the company has done so little that I do not think it was much known in the South.

Q. I understand there were circulars sent out and companies formed?—A. I never heard of any circulars issued here.

Q. Well, down in Mississippi?—A. Those State companies no doubt issued circulars.

Q. Do you know (if you needed anything with your great reputation) who aided, assisted, or recommended you in getting your appointment?—A. Well, there were a good many.

Q. How many of your associates in this Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, none of them—well, there was Senator Harris.

Q. Did not Mr. Garland recommend it?—A. There was Senator Harris, and Mr. Robert McLane, who is my brother-in-law, they aided in the matter.

Q. And Mr. Garland likewise?—A. No, sir; Mr. Garland did not recommend the appointment.

Mr. OATES. I saw a list with fifty or one hundred members of Congress' names appended to it recommending General Johnston, and I signed it myself.

Mr. RANNEY. If the general had brought it to me I would have signed it. [To the witness.] Do you know whether Mr. Lamar knew of your being concerned in this Pan-Electric matter?—A. I do not know that he did. I do not suppose that he did, for the company was so small, and had so little business, that I think very few persons knew of its existence.

Q. Let me see; is Mr. Atkins in that Department, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Upshaw?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of anybody else—I do not speak of it as an impropriety—who was interested, directly or indirectly, in the Pan-Electric Company who is connected with the Interior Department?—A. No, sir. I did not know that Mr. Upshaw was connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. He was the one who had a contract to purchase?—A. I did not know that.

Q. I do not mean to intimate that you used any improper influence, general. I have too high a regard for you to do that.—A. I haven't the slightest suspicion of it, sir.

Q. Nobody will suspect you of it.—A. I have conceit enough, sir, to suppose so.

Mr. RANNEY. I believe that is all. If you will be kind enough to ascertain—we will take your word for it, I will for one—the date when you left Washington.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. When you wrote that letter in 1883 to Dr. Rogers objecting to the issuing or selling of stock of the Pan Electric Telephone Company, you had not then been satisfied of its utility by all the tests that were made?—A. Yes, sir; we were satisfied of its value then. At the time I wrote that letter I had just returned from Richmond, where we had tried it between Richmond and Washington, and the articulation was very distinct over that 116 miles, and we had no doubt about the value of the instrument at all.

Q. I am speaking of the letter which you wrote to him, in which you objected to putting the stock on the market, because, you stated, if it should prove a failure you would be regarded by the public as swindlers.—A. Yes, sir; but that referred to our want of success in bringing it into use, and not to a doubt as to the value of the instrument.

Q. When was it that your company first sold territorial rights; that is, the right in States to the use of that telephone?—A. It seems to me that it was in the early fall of 1884, but I have a very indistinct recollection.

Q. Missouri was the first State sold, was it not?—A. I think so.

Q. That was about May, 1884, was it not?—A. Well, May of 1884 is as far back in my memory as May of 1864; I cannot identify it.

Q. I think the record shows that from May along through 1884 those sales were made. At the time when you began and your company continued to make those sales to local companies, the right of the State for the use of that instrument, were you satisfied that there was no humbug about it, but that it was an excellent telephone, and that you were selling a thing of value?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly satisfied. We took every means in our power not only to ascertain that it was an excellent instrument, but that it did not infringe upon any other patent.

Q. Why was it that your company resolved not to make any further sales in January, I believe it was, or April, 1885?

The WITNESS. Was it as early as January?

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution was passed in January.

The WITNESS. There were two reasons; the principal one was that we were not disposed to subject ourselves to the liability of more suits and the expense of more suits, and another was that the companies which had been formed under contracts with us were all standing still; we had gained nothing.

Q. Do you know why it was that they were standing still?—A. On account of the apprehension of applications for injunctions upon them, and their losing whatever expenses that might cost.

Q. Then, the true object of that part of that resolution was to suspend operations until the questions involved were settled by the court?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. Did you not, at the very next meeting, authorize the further sale of territory?—A. I really cannot remember. That book is better than my memory.

Q. I call your attention to what occurred on Monday evening, May 4, 1885, according to the record in this book. On that date I find this entry:

"The secretary informed the meeting that Mr. S. H. Newsom, of Las Vegas, Territory of New Mexico, desired to negotiate with the company for the purchase of New Mexico and certain States in the Republic of Old Mexico, for the purpose of putting in operation therein the Pan-Electric telephone. On motion of Mr. Rogers, the president and secretary were authorized to make such contract with Mr. Newsom as they might see proper.

"On motion, the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the president.

"J. E. JOHNSTON.

"CASEY YOUNG,

"Secretary."

The WITNESS. Was anything ever done upon that?

Mr. MILLARD. I do not know. I simply want to know whether they were authorized to make contracts for the further sale of territory.

The WITNESS. I have just read it.

Q. It so appears, does it not?—A. What you have just read must be true, but the thing was not done.

Q. Do you know why it was not done?—A. Nobody was anxious to do it; that was the reason.

Q. Was it not because you were not able to effect the sale?—A. I do not think we ever tried.

Q. It is a fact, isn't it, that after you had learned of these litigations, and after the meeting of April, 1885, you did authorize contracts to be made for the further sale of territory?—A. I certainly would not contradict that record there, but I know we did not sell any more.

Q. Let me call your attention to this letter to which the Chairman and Mr. Ranney and Mr. Oates called your attention: "I reminded him that the sale of stock is not permitted by the company, and also that such sales, even if not prohibited, would be very dangerous." I want to get your idea of what you meant by saying it "would be very dangerous"?—A. Simply from the possibility of our failing to get this instrument into use, when, of course, all the stock put out would be worthless and all the purchasers swindled.

Q. What, in your mind, at that time, was to prevent you from getting it into use?—A. Nothing but the doubt that there is upon the success of every business enterprise; nothing more.

Q. Did you not, after writing this letter, in fact, sell to Senator Vest?—A. I do not know. I do not think the company made a sale to Senator Vest.

Q. In Senator Vest's evidence he sets out a bill of sale signed by yourself, J. Harris Rogers, Casey Young, Isham G. Harris, A. H. Garland, and J. D. C. Atkins, under date of July, 1884, for stock on which he paid Senator Harris a thousand dollars. Do you recall anything about that?—A. I remember that Mr. Vest did make a purchase, but I had no idea that I had any hand in it.

Q. You had forgotten that you had signed the bill of sale?

Mr. HALL. That does not necessarily follow.

The WITNESS. I cannot imagine why a bill of sale should be signed by all those people.

Q. It says: "In testimony whereof we have hereto set our hands and affixed our seals on this the fourth of June, 1884." Then follow the signatures.

Mr. HALL. It does not follow that they signed it individually.

Mr. MILLARD. Then I will call your attention further to this:

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

This certificate entitles George G. Vest to 90 shares of the capital stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, of the par value of one hundred dollars each, so soon as the validity of the patents is judicially determined in any litigation instituted for that purpose. But this certificate is not transferable except with the consent of the president and secretary of the company marked hereon.

In witness whereof, the company has caused its corporate seal, and the official signatures of its president and secretary, to be hereto attached at its office in the city of Washington, D. C., on this the 28th day of April, 1885.

[SEAL.]

J. E. JOHNSTON, President.

CASEY YOUNG, Secretary.

The WITNESS. Well, what does that certificate set forth?

Mr. MILLARD. That the company, by you as president and Casey Young as secretary, issued a certificate for ninety shares to Senator Vest.

The WITNESS. Is it a positive stock certificate?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is not a stock certificate at all.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a certificate showing that Senator Vest is entitled to ninety shares.

The WITNESS. That he "will be," is it not?

Mr. MILLARD. No.

Mr. HALL. Will you give me the page on which that is printed?

Mr. MILLARD. It is printed on page 300 of the testimony.

Mr. HALL. It is always competent for a witness when called to speak of a paper to be allowed to see it. I suppose there is no objection to my showing it to him?

Mr. MILLARD. No; I want him to see it.

The WITNESS. I think if you will look at this certificate you will see that it is not a stock certificate; it is conditional.

Mr. MILLARD. Entirely so.

The WITNESS. There are a number of others like this.

Q. What others are there besides this?—A. Those books show [indicating] that the holder will be entitled to such certificate whenever the company thinks the time has come for issuing them.

Q. Not quite that. Is not this a true copy of the certificate set out here as subscribed by you? Please look and see.—A. I don't know anything about that. I do not pretend to take ground of that sort. I only say that it is not a stock certificate.

Q. I will read you the evidence of Senator Vest on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you read the certificate?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, I did. This is what Senator Vest says: "In June, 1884, I purchased 100 shares of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, for which I paid to Senator Isham G. Harris, treasurer of the company, $1,000 cash, giving my check on the National Metropolitan Bank of this city for that amount, and which check my bank book shows to have been paid on the next day. At the time of the purchase I received from Senator Harris the following paper." That is the first paper that I showed you that purports to be signed by all of you collectively, and then follows the certificate, which was signed.

The WITNESS. There is a book of certificates here which was made after that, but embodying pretty much that idea; but they were not transferable.

Mr. MILLARD. It says not.

The WITNESS. But entitled the holder to a stock certificate at a given time, just as that does.

Q. And it was signed by you, and he paid a thousand dollars for it; that is the sum and substance of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much stock did you receive in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company yourself?—A. There were five of us, and they estimated the stock at $5,000,000 and we five had equal shares of half of that, which would be $500,000.

Q. At the time of your receipt of that, how much had you limited your expenditures to—$150 each?—A. Oh, that was a particular matter.

Q. The reason I ask you that is, I find this letter purporting to have been written by yourself under date of March 31, 1883: "I agree with you that it will be best to exhibit first the automatic telephone, especially in view of our being limited to an assessment of $150 each member, for expenses."

The CHAIRMAN. To whom is that addressed?

Mr. MILLARD. That is addressed to J. Harris Rogers, under date of March 31, 1883.

The CHAIRMAN. One of the members of that committee.

Q. So I ask you this question: If at the time you received your stock you had not limited each of yourselves to an expense of $150?—A. I think that was a limit to the authority of the executive committee; that it was not permitted to go further in expenses than a sum that would require $150 each from the members of it; that is my recollection.

Mr. EDEN. I think that is plain enough not to require any explanation.

Q. And I understand you have paid nothing more for your stock than was paid from all your assessments to the extent of $300 or $400?—A. Well, I do not think that we have the same ideas on that subject.

Q. I mean in money.—A. Our association was formed in a manner very common in the establishment of business firms. The amount of it was—

The CHAIRMAN. The amount of money paid in by each was about $400, or nearly that.

The WITNESS. Let me state that that money was not paid for our stock; our stock was given to us for the services that we were to render.

Q. That is precisely as I understand it; and afterwards certain assessments were made for the purpose of utilizing the patent?—A. To meet the necessary expenses; and this assessment included the Rogerses.

Q. And has been paid back to you by the company?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understood you just now to say that the real consideration of the transfer of your interest in these patents was the services and personal influence that you supposed might be brought to bear to aid in utilizing them.—A. For services that we might render.

Q. As is often the case in forming a copartnership, one man puts in the capital as against the personal service and business experience of the other?—A. Yes, sir; precisely; that is what I refer to.

Q. Now, in regard to the subordinate companies. After you had organized the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, it was the purpose of the members clearly of that organization not to put its stock upon the market until the success of the enterprise was insured and it had obtained a value?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your idea as to what constituted the practical value of a property of that kind belonging to a corporation?—A. Well, it scarcely can be considered as having a value. I think our language shows that we were considering the value as a thing in the future entirely; that it had none at the time.

Q. Is it not one of the essential qualities of a patent that its value is whatever the owner chooses to ask for it?—A. It is whatever the owner can get for the property.

Q. And an article which has no market price or market value the owner may put a price upon it whether he can find a buyer or not; that is the essential feature of a patent, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANBACK. We need not argue upon that; we admit that always.

Q. However ingeniously devised, does not the essential value of a patent consist in putting it on the market in such a way as to find purchasers?—A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. And giving it a publicly known market value?—A. It is that which gives it and determines its value.

Q. And it was to accomplish that feature of the enterprise that you gentlemen to whom these transfers were made by Dr. Rogers, proposed to devote your energies and personal services?—A. Precisely.

Q. After your company was organized you were certainly at liberty to sell or to extend territorial rights to individuals as well as corporations in the various States, were you not?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. So that in Missouri, if you had seen proper, you could have sold the right which you did sell to the company there, to a mere individual or to two or three individuals instead of to a corporation?—A. I think that the bargain was generally with an individual who acted for the company, and then the contract was confirmed.

Q. Did the Pan-Electric Telephone Company take any active part in organizing those local companies?—A. None at all; that was their own affair.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether the stock of those local companies was issued as paid-up stock without any money being paid in or not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there not reason to believe that money was paid in on the capital stock of those corporations?

Mr. MILLARD. I submit that is going too far, unless the witness knows about it.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HALL. I am glad you made that suggestion, for if we are going in any direction where we are not authorized to investigate, I will accept it. But the inquiry was made of this witness as to what his ideas of propriety were, not in regard to the issuing of stock by the parent company, but in putting it in the power of the subordinate companies to issue shares, and it proceeded on the idea that it was issued on the capital stock, without having a fund paid in. [To the witness.] I will ask you if those local companies did not pay money into the parent company as a consideration?

The WITNESS. Some of them.

Q. The Missouri company?—A. The Missouri company did.

Q. Do you know how much?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was several thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. That has all been put in.

Mr. HALL. I know you did it, but for an entirely different purpose. I will ask you if you object to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. If you persist after the objection I made there would be no value in insisting on my objection.

Mr. HALL. I suppose your objection is all right.

Mr. RANNEY. I made a suggestion, not an objection. I am not in the habit of interfering with an examination if I can help it.

Mr. HALL. Oh, yes, you interfere as much as anybody in examinations. [To the witness.] Now, if those companies, in order to secure the license to vend this patent in the territories, paid funds to your company at their very inception, it is a reasonable inference, is it not, that they did not issue paid-up stock without having funds to pay it?

The WITNESS. I should think that was a very conclusive evidence.

Q. In regard to those local companies, have you ever heard any complaint made by any persons as stockholders in them that they had been imposed upon in having that stock put upon them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever heard any persons as creditors or otherwise claim that they had been wronged in any way by those local companies?—A. No, sir; never.

Mr. HALL. I have no further questions.

Mr. MILLARD. Before the general leaves, I wish you would pass that paper to him, Mr. Hall, and see if he recognizes it. [Handing a paper to the witness.] I simply want you to identify the paper, and say if you signed it. I refer to the paper purporting to be an agreement between the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Upshaw.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; with Mr. A. B. Upshaw.

Q. It was executed by yourself as president?—A. Yes, sir; that is my signature.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say that you were not aware that your company was interested in any of these applications to the Government to institute suit to vacate patents. Were you aware who were the applicants who made that application?—A. The National Improved Telephone Company of New Orleans, I have always understood. I have no precise information on the subject.

Q. Were you aware that the attorney of your company, Colonel Gantt, signed that application?—A. No, sir; I do not know that Colonel Gantt is exactly attorney of this company. I do not think he had that position; he may have been employed. By the way, he was employed by those engaged by this company to prosecute this suit against the Bell Telephone Company in Memphis.

Q. Were you aware that Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt came here and appeared before the Interior Department to argue this application?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you understand they appeared here; in what capacity?—A. I understood that they did not appear for the Pan-Electric Company. I have an idea that they were engaged either by this New Orleans company or by individuals.

Q. Who informed you of that fact?—A. I say I inferred that, because they were not employed by the Pan-Electric Company, and I did not trouble myself to ascertain who their employers were.

Q. Were you aware that the Pan-Electric Company paid the expenses of both Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt to come here and argue those cases?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you aware that the Pan-Electric Company paid for the printing of the briefs in that case presented to the Department?—A. No, sir; I had no knowledge of that sort.

Q. If they did do it, you would think the Pan-Electric Company had something to do with it?—A. Well, I did not think it had that to do with it. It is a very unprofitable part of it.

Q. You would not think that the Pan-Electric Company would be paying those bills of Colonel Gantt's and Colonel Young's, the printing of the briefs, without some interest?—A. An individual might do it.

Q. Not if you found it charged up on the books of the company?—A. I might think that it ought not to have been charged up.

Mr. MILLARD. But if it was actually paid by the company it ought to go on the books.

The WITNESS. The question is whether it was paid by the company or by an individual.

Q. It would not be on the books if it was paid by an individual. You expressed an opinion that the legal opinion of Attorney-General Garland on a question of patent rights, involving electricity, would not be worthy of a great deal of consideration probably?—A. In regard to patents I think not, unless he was an electrician.

Q. Then what would you think of the opinion of Mr. Goode, a person not a patent lawyer and not acquainted with electrical patents, after a very few hours of examination of the matter?

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it is necessary to go into that question. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. As this investigation involves all these gentlemen, their opinions might be very important.

Mr. EDEN. The witness is asked as to the value of Mr. Goode's opinion as a lawyer.

Mr. MOFFATT. He has given an opinion in regard to Mr. Garland.

Mr. EDEN. Judge Ranney asked him that. Besides, Mr. Garland is connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. MOFFATT. I would like to have the question answered.

Mr. HALL. There is no pretense that Mr. Goode has given an opinion on that subject.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not ask him what his opinion would be on that subject, but I asked him what he would think of an opinion of Mr. Goode's under those circumstances.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no claim that he ever gave an opinion or had any on anything.

Mr. HALL. I do not understand that remark.

Mr. RANNEY. It is in reply to yours.

Mr. HALL. It is just as well then if it is not understood.

(The stenographer read the pending question.)

The CHAIRMAN. I do not see any harm in that.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see any harm in it, but I do not think it is proper to ask his opinion about the conduct of Mr. Goode, unless all the facts are known to the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. I take it for granted that the gentleman from Michigan has some purpose or reason for asking the question, and so far as I am concerned I do not object to it.

Mr. EDEN. I object to it. It cannot amount to anything in this investigation, and it is for that reason I object. It don't affect anybody in the world.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it ought to be left to the judgment and discretion of the interrogator.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been the course before.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Goode has been here and given his testimony, and of course a question of that kind reflects upon him in a professional sense.

The CHAIRMAN. It is entirely conjecture, but I suppose it is connected with the speedy disposition that Mr. Goode made of the application.

Mr. MOFFATT. That is all.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the witness should be required to answer such a question; I do not think it would be proper.

The WITNESS. I should prefer not to answer the question. I should dislike to, very much.

Mr. RANNEY. Let that go in as his answer and leave it there.

Mr. EDEN. I think Mr. Goode is entitled to decent treatment by the committee.

Mr. MOFFATT. I see nothing improper in that question any more than in similar questions relating to Mr. Garland.

Mr. RANNEY. The witness has answered that he prefers not to answer it, and I think we ought to leave it there.

Mr. MOFFATT. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri can interrogate the witness.

Mr. HALE. I have no questions to ask.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I have observed, since I examined you, a letter of yours on the 13th page of the printed appendix, No. 224, written in Washington under date of August 3, 1883, and addressed to J. Harris Rogers, the first sentence of which I will read to you: "To my great disappointment, I find nothing in regard to Philip Reis in the Encyclopedia Britannica, nor in a voluminous biographical work." Do you know the occasion of your writing that?—A. Yes, sir; it was in regard to the German, Reis inventions.

Q. Had there a question been raised then as to the validity of either the Rogers patent or the Bell patent?—A. No, sir. That was entirely in connection with the Bell patents. It was claimed by a good many people that Reis had invented an effective telephone ten or fifteen years before Bell's patent, and I was looking for some evidence on that subject.

Q. It had been mooted whether Philip Reis had himself invented the telephone before Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how that question arose, so that you happened to write that letter?—A. I was looking for evidence in regard to the German inventions, and had been referred by Dr. Rogers to the works named there.

Q. With a view of attacking the Bell telephone?—A. I was looking for evidence.

Q. This seems to have been in reply to something. Do you know how the question arose, whether on your own suggestion or the suggestion of somebody else, by reason of which you wrote this letter?—A. It was by Dr. Rogers's suggestion, I take it.

Q. I remember somewhere in this correspondence a letter of yours; the exact language I do not remember, but I think you wrote a letter in which you spoke of some one being in town ready to pay $75,000 for a State right. Have you that letter?

The CHAIRMAN. I have the letter you speak of [producing the letter].

Mr. RANNEY. This is among the letters which were laid aside as not being material. I will read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your telegram of this morning. You are the judge of the time of leaving New York, but I give circumstances here which you may consider.

There is a gentleman from the west here with $75,000 in hand to be paid for our privilege in Missouri and a royalty of $10. To my mind's eye that is attractive. Think of the necessary expenses that sum would cover, leaving a dividend, and the market value it would give our stock. But this gentleman will not contract until he has seen Harlan's lines in operation. So I beg you to send us as soon as possible eight or ten telephones to sway this customer. Now, we have also to help Myers as much as we can with a small number of instruments that will enable him to show in cities how much it is worth. We promised Harlan fifty, the first ten to be delivered as soon as they could be made, and the use of these by Harlan's customers is to decide our $75,000 bidder. Now, take these matters in connection with what you have before you, and come to us with eight or ten instruments as soon as possible.

In reference to Mr. Gantt, he and not J. has the privilege and power of appointing the day of exhibition.

Very truly, yours,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

Do you remember that letter?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. We had better look up the original if there is any doubt about the authenticity of it.

The WITNESS. I do not express any doubt, but I cannot understand about the $75,000; that seems to be incredible.

Q. Do you remember who the bidder from Missouri of $75,000 was?—A. No, sir; I say that sum is so much larger than any we saw that I can hardly believe it.

Mr. HALL. That letter is not in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is not printed.

Mr. RANNEY. This is as printed in a newspaper, and it is dated February 25, 1885. It must be among the letters laid aside as immaterial, though I do not know why that should be. Colonel Young suggests to me what may serve your recollection that he told you that was from Mr. Boffinger, from Missouri, or some such name.

The WITNESS. Yes, I remember the name.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the letter numbered 144 in the list of those letters supposed to be irrelevant.

Mr. RANNEY. There are a good many of those letters not deemed material that I have looked at. It was suggested originally that they might become material. Here is another letter dated February 28, 1884. I will hand the originals of these letters to the witness.

(The letters referred to were handed to the witness for his inspection.)

Q. Do you find them to be your letters?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have identified those two letters, one of February 25, 1884, and the other of February 28, 1884. Do you now recall that man who was here as a bidder for $75,000?

—A. If I remember the name I do not remember the sum. It seems to be rather incredible, so much above any offer that we had.

Q. You do not doubt the fact that you wrote that at the time and mentioned $75,000?—A. No, sir; not at all; that is my writing.

Q. As the thing looks now, it may seem to be a large sum, but it was rather rose colored then, was it not?—A. Yes, it was too large; too rosy.

Q. Do you doubt whether $75,000 was the sum that a man was here as a bidder, depending on certain things?—A. Well, he must have said so. I fancy that that was the authority for what I wrote there.

Q. Now let me read the second letter. This is written to Dr. & J. H. Rogers:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1884.

DEAR SIRS: Your letter was received at 11½ to-day, and shown as soon as practicable to Senator Harris and Colonel Young, and it was agreed that I should (Congress being in session) direct Colonel Young's secretary to carry the contract for Washington with Messrs. Gustin & Harlan to the colonel. However, the young man was absent, so I left written instructions for him.

All this made it evident that the contracts could not be dispatched by to-night's mail, and so I "wired" you. They will go as soon as possible, however, but I doubt if they can reach you to-morrow. Would it not be feasible for Mr. Harris Rogers to come Saturday, as you have been intending, while Dr. Rogers remains to attend to the Pennsylvania business?

We have several conditional proposals, for which instruments are necessary. These people want so see the instrument as it is in common use, they say, not as it is for exhibition; so they wait to see Gustin & Harlan's customers using theirs. Myers writes the same thing from Indianapolis, so we are pining to have the result of your recent labors. If you give them to us at once you'll find in a short time that the Pennsylvania contract will be a small part of your wealth.

Telegraph me your wishes on receiving this.

Yours, very truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Messrs. J. W. & J. H. ROGERS.

You say that is your handwriting also?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You seemed to think the contract of Dr. Rogers in Pennsylvania, then, would be a very small portion of his wealth. You had a very great idea of the value of this thing, then?—A. Yes, sir; I have remarked in the beginning we had very extravagant notions in regard to the value of that instrument and those things. The Rogerses were then supervising or making the same instrument for exhibition.

Q. Did your associates seem to agree with you in that opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that if that was so, you men that had got this instrument thought you had got a pretty good thing?

Mr. MOFFATT. What is the date of that letter?

The WITNESS. It is dated the 28th of February, 1884.

Dr. RANNEY. Here is another letter I find which alludes to you:

WAR RECORDS OFFICE, 2005 G STREET, N. W.,

Washington, D. C., October 31, 1884.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: I send the inclosed papers to you at the request of our common friend, General A. D. Upshur, who is one of the finest business men I ever knew, and who ought to be in charge of the company's office in this city. General Johnston was to see me this morning, and I urged on him to open and keep open a Washington office, with an intelligent, courteous gentleman in charge. I hope you and Harry will urge this. You have caught several Tartars. My dear Rogers, stick to the friends "whose adoption is tried." You have enough to make you a good fortune, but you must have proper confederates. Big names do not always win. Acknowledge receipt.

Your friend,

MARCUS J. WRIGHT.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

I see that alludes to something connected with you, and you were to see Dr. Rogers and write that morning in relation to that matter. Do you remember it?—A. No, sir, I do not. I doubt if I went to see him in relation to anything. Mr. Wright is a clerk in the War Records Office, where I used to visit Colonel Scott occasionally. In those days I did not have much to do, and probably I saw him in that way.

Q. Is General A. B. Upshaw the gentleman who bought Alabama?—A. Yes sir.

Q. It is spelled here Upshur and somewhere else Upshaw.—A. It is Upshaw.

Did you know him?—A. I did not know him then.

Q. He is now in the Interior Department?—A. I believe so.

Q. He is spoken of as a man proper to take charge of the office in this city. Do you remember about that?—A. No, sir; that was not written to me.

Q. No, it was written to Dr. Rogers, but alludes to Mr. Upshur and that you were to see Mr. Wright about having Upshur in an office here. Do you recall anything about that?—A. No, sir; I never had any idea of that kind. I fancy that he thought such an office was to be established, just as before an election, to do the canvassing.

Q. Were you canvassing for this thing as in an election?—A. No; I say I take it that that was General Wright's idea that that was the proper mode of proceeding.

Q. He is in the War Department?—A. Yes, sir; he is in the war records office.

Q. It would be more likely to be a matter of strategy than war, wouldn't it, by analogy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is one letter of January 23, 1884, written by you to Dr. Rogers, which I will read:

"Since writing in reply to your note to the Pan-Electric Company I have seen several members of the company who reminded me that the telephones you ordered were expressly for the directors, mainly those here, and that a gentleman who wishes to purchase our right in Missouri is waiting to see Harlan's lines. That is why my anxiety for your return is expressed. I have had that anxiety without doubting that the object of your work in New York was accomplished.

"Yours, truly,"

That seems to have preceded the others. There are two letters of yours on the subject. Don't that recall it to you?—A. Well, the Rogerses were supervising the making of some telephones at the time——

Q. That does not recall anything more about the Missouri matter?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. I see in a letter of yours here, of February 25, 1884, you write about giving telephones to Myers to help him. How were you proposing to help Myers by giving him telephones?—A. Mr. Myers at that time was negotiating for the privilege of using instrument in Indiana, and wanted some instrument for exhibition.

Q. I suppose all there is about it, general, is, that for a part of this time, the early part, you all supposed there were millions in this thing?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You say that Marcus J. Wright, who wrote that letter that has been spoken of, was a clerk in the War Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But not recently appointed?—A. No, sir.

Q. He has been there for a number of years?—A. He is in the office of war records. He brought a great many papers from the South, and is retained in that office in connection with them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Speaking of the value of these improvements, did you regard them as then having this great value, or as having a future value of that kind?—A. As having a future value. They could have no value then.

Q. Had they at the time they were put into the company any market value?—A. No, sir; I think not. They were not known at all.

Q. I see that the capital of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was fixed at $5,000,000. Was that regarded as an indication of the value of the stock at that time?—A. No, sir; as the value it would have.

Q. That it might have?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I observe also that some stock was actually sold at about three-and-a-half or four cents on the dollar?—A. Well, Dr. Rogers has sold it at almost any price, for a few cents on the dollar.

Q. The company made two or three sales, one to Senator Vest at 10 cents on the dollar; and to Mrs. Howard, and Mrs. Carlisle, I think, at the same rate, or at 5 cents on the dollar. I speak of that as indicating the value of the stock at that time. Do you recall those things?—A. I remember the two ladies that you speak of. I did not know at the time Senator Vest purchased his.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. One question suggests another. You say that although you did not consider the patents in the market then worth $5,000,000, that was a sum named which you expected they would be worth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was a scheme into which you entered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that the opinion, so far as you know, of your associates, too, as to why that was worth $5,000,000?—A. I do not think I was at all ahead of the rest in my estimate of the value.

Q. So that you did not get up a capital of $5,000,000 on an inflated, fictitious stock, but a sum that you thought the patents would be worth, a genuine incorporation, not a kiting concern?—A. Yes, sir; we expected by the time we were satisfied it was safe to issue the stock, it would come to a value something like that.

Q. The fact has been called to your attention that there were some sales made to Senator Vest and others. I suppose those sales were simply to let those people in on the "ground floor" at a nominal sum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the way you took Colonel Looney in, I suppose?—A. Colonel Looney was taken in by the Rogerses. They let him have something like three-eighths of their four-tenths.

Q. And that is the way you were going to let in that man who took the tenth for which Mr. Hewitt had been named. I don't know that you had anything to do with that.—A. No, sir; I don't know when that occurred.

Q. You were not at New York?—A. No, sir. The scheme had been arranged when I came into the association, not as to the value but that this tenth was to be reserved for the use of the company to furnish funds and to pay certain obligations that Dr. Rogers had contracted before.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Never directly.

Q. You are aware that they formed a corporation of $5,000,000, embracing the States of Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, and that you took certificates of stock for your share?—A. I fancy I did at the time, but I have forgotten it. I must have known it at the time.

Q. Did you think that was to represent the real value or the prospective value?—A. I never supposed the stock would go up to that value.

The CHAIRMAN. There seems to be no further interrogatories, and we shall not require the further attendance of General Johnston.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, April 8, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.40 p. m.

The Chairman (Mr. BOYLE) read a dispatch from Mr. W. Van Benthuyzen, dated at Danville, Va., stating that he would reach Washington late Thursday night and be ready to appear before the committee on Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Harris has sent me the corrected proof of his testimony for the first day, and asks that the corrections indicated by him may be made. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. HALL. Have you examined them, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I have looked over them; I do not think there is anything material. I do not know how it may appear to the committee. There are not a great many of them. I will read them, and if there be no objection, hand them to the reporter and let the proof be corrected.

(The corrections were read, and there being no objection, they were ordered to be made.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Gardner is here under subpoena. Is it the pleasure of the committee that he be sworn?

THOMAS H. GARDNER then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE):

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Baltimore city; that is, I claim my residence there; I spend most of my time in Washington.

Q. How long have you been a resident of Baltimore?—A. I was born there, and have lived there nearly all my life, except about ten or twelve years.

Q. Have you at any time had any connection with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company? I speak of the principal company.—A. Yes.

Q. What connection have you had with it?—A. None except so far as related to our own company.

Q. I want to distinguish between them.—A. Our company is the licensee of the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. You have no connection with the original company?—A. Not directly connected with it, except that their office is in the same room with ours.

Q. Where is your office?—A. No. 600 Thirteenth street northwest, in this city.

Q. Have they any person in their office?—A. No, sir; occasionally General Johnston and Mr. Young come there, but very seldom.

Q. What company do you say you are connected with?—A. I am the secretary and a director of the Washington Telephone Company.

Q. Does it hold its rights, whatever they may be, under the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. It is the licensee of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. What territory does its license cover?—A. The two Virginias, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

Q. Where was it incorporated?—A. In Tennessee.

Q. Was there a contract between the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the gentlemen who formed the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is its title?—A. The Washington Telephone Company.

Q. Have you the contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you produce it?—A. I am not sure that I have the original contract, but I have a copy on the minutes of the company.

Q. Produce the original if you have it.—A. I will see among the papers. [The witness produces several packages of books and papers]. I am under the impression that General Johnson has that in Baltimore.

Q. What General Johnson?—A. General Bradley T. Johnson, who is the attorney and president of the company; but I can find a copy in the minutes; here is a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to receiving a copy?

Mr. RANNEY. Of what?

The CHAIRMAN. Of the contract between the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the Washington Telephone Company. (To the witness.) You may look at this book of minutes and give us the date of this contract.

The WITNESS. The date of the contract is the 14th day of March, 1884.

Q. Are you correct about that?—A. The date upon which it was executed was the 24th day of May, 1884.

Q. What date do you refer to as the 14th of March, 1884?—A. That was the date of the preamble to the contract.

Q. That refers to the contract between the Pan-Electric Company and Dr. Harlan?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What date do you say?—A. The 24th of May.

Q. I see the date is changed.—A. Yes; but that date is correct; the alteration was made afterwards by me.

Q. What was the other date written there?—A. The 9th day of June. This was the actual date at which Senator Harris signed it; Dr. Harlan signed it on the 9th day of June. This was copied by myself.

Q. What was the consideration paid to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company by yourself?—A. One-fourth of the capital stock.

Q. Any bonus for the use of the instruments?—A. No, sir; one-fourth of the capital stock was all absolutely.

Q. Who was to furnish the instruments?—A. They were to be manufactured by ourselves at our own expense, or paid for by ourselves. We had the right to use all these patents.

Q. You say that under the rights acquired under this contract you had a company incorporated in Tennessee?—A. We had, in the State of Tennessee.

Q. Who attended to obtaining the charter?—A. Dr. Harlan, I think. I was not at that time secretary of the company.

Q. Were you connected with the company at that time?—A. No, sir; I became connected with it in July, 1884.

Q. Have you any knowledge whatever of the steps taken to procure the charter?—A. I have not, sir; my impression is that Dr. Harlan and Mr. Gustin were the parties who obtained the charter.

Q. You became the secretary in July of 1884?—A. Yes, the minutes will show; I think it was in July, 1884.

Q. Did you then go into the office you now occupy?—A. No, sir; our office then was at 1226 F street.

Q. Was the office of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in the same building at that time?—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. When did you move into your present quarters?—A. I think some time in 1885, probably about May.

Q. At what time did you become associated in office with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. About May, 1885.

Q. Did you take the office together?—A. The Pan-Electric had previously had the first floor of that building, and had not used it, and I applied to them for desk room in their office as it would be more economical and better for our company; they agreed to it, and we took the third floor—the top floor.

Q. What is the capital of your Washington company?—A. It was originally $5,000,000, but was afterwards reduced to $2,500,000 by a supplementary charter, which is in this book.

Q. At what time was that done?—A. That book will show. I think it was about July, 1884. [Referring to book.] The supplemental charter was obtained on the 13th of September, 1884.

Q. What is the date of the original charter?—A. The 24th day of May, 1884.

Q. The same day that the contract was executed?—A. Oh, the original charter?

Q. Yes.—A. Excuse me; the original charter appears here as bearing date the 1st of May.

Q. That was before the date of your contract?—A. Yes, sir; the original charter was obtained before the date of the contract.

Q. I understand that you were not connected with the company then?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the fact, or can you state from anything you have since learned, how it came to be incorporated before you had your contract with the parent company?—A. You see that this contract sets forth that: "Whereas on the 14th day of March, 1884, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company entered into a contract with J. A. Harlan and G. A. Gustin," which was afterwards confirmed by this other company.

Q. Have you that contract?—A. No, sir; we have never had that; that was a contract entered into between J. A. Harlan and George A. Gustin and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. It is in that box, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Who were the parties named in the original charter of incorporation?—A. J. A. Harlan, C. W. Long, George A. Gustin, E. K. Goldsborough, and Casey Young.

Q. Who were named as incorporators in the supplemental charter, if there was any change?—A. J. A. Harlan, C. W. Long, George A. Gustin, Casey Young, and R. A. Hooe.

Q. The parties are the same, then, with the exception of the last named gentlemen?—A. Yes, the substitution of Hooe for Goldsborough.

Q. Was this last charter intended to supplant the first one, or was it an amendment to it?—A. It was an amendment, a supplemental charter, reducing the capital stock and making provision for the payment of the one-fourth of the stock due the company as the stock should be issued—one-fourth of the aggregate amount issued, not one-fourth of the whole capital stock at once, but to be paid as the stock should be issued.

Q. What was to be paid?—A. The capital stock due the parent company was to be paid as the aggregate stock was issued.

Q. I understand you that the original charter provided for a disposition of the stock, of one-fourth of the stock?—A. The original charter provided that we should pay the parent company one-fourth of the stock for the right to use the instruments.

Q. Is that set out in the charter?—A. No, sir; it is set out in the contract.

Q. Is there anything in regard to that in the supplemental charter?—A. No, sir; I got the two confounded, the charter and the contract. "The capital stock of this company shall consist of 25,000 shares, of the par value of $100 each, making a total capital stock of $2,500,000, instead of $5,000,000, as provided and authorized in the original articles of incorporation." That is all there is in the charter.

Q. Then were the terms of the contract made with the company modified in that respect?—A. Yes, sir. It says: "The capital stock of the Washington Telephone Company shall be reduced by amendment to its charter to 5,000 shares of $100 each, all which may be issued at the discretion of the party of the second part as full-paid and non-assessable stock. The party of the first part shall be entitled to one-fourth of the whole of the capital stock as payment for the rights and franchises assigned by it to the party of the second part; but it shall only be entitled to vote on stock actually issued to it, and certificates for the same given, equal to 25 per cent. of the whole of the stock actually in existence and issued."

Q. Is that the provision of the supplemental charter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is to say, that it should be allotted the one-fourth of the entire capital, but should vote only to the extent of one-fourth of the stock actually issued?—A. No, sir. It says further: "It being the intent and meaning of the parties hereto that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company shall at all times be entitled to 25 per cent. of the stock of the Washington Telephone Company actually issued."

Q. Does that provide for delivering to the parent company the one-fourth of the entire capital stock?—A. No, sir; not in that charter. It did in the other.

Q. I so understood it from the reading.—A. No, sir. Shall I read it again?

Mr. RANNEY. They had one-fourth of the reduced capital.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow me to read it.

"The capital stock of the Washington Telephone Company shall be reduced by an amendment to its charter to 5,000 shares of $100 each, all of which may be issued at the discretion of the party of the second part as full-paid and non-assessable stock. The party of the first part shall be entitled to a quarter of the whole of the capital stock as payment for the rights and franchises assigned by it to the party of the second part; but it shall only be entitled to vote on stock actually issued to it, and certificates for the same given, equal to 25 per cent. of the whole of the stock actually in existence and issued, it being the intent and meaning of the parties hereto that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company shall at all times be entitled to 25 per cent. of the stock of the Washington Telephone Company actually issued, so as to be entitled to 25 per cent. of all earnings and dividends and one-quarter of the voting power of the stock in existence as long as it holds stock issued and paid to them."

Q. Was this supplemental charter obtained after you became connected with the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any recollection as to who attended to procuring it?—A. General Bradley T. Johnson, the attorney of the company, attended to all that matter.

Q. Have you any recollection as to why the capital stock was reduced one-half?—A. None specially, except that it was deemed too large an amount, and it was thought that it would be better to reduce the capital stock.

Q. Had you any conversation with any members of the Pan-Electric Company upon that matter?—A. No, sir; I never had any conversation with the officers of that company.

Q. Was there ever any money put into the company by the stockholders?

Mr. RANNEY. He means at the organization.

The WITNESS. At the organization?

The CHAIRMAN. At the organization, or afterwards?

A. There was at the organization.

Q. How much?—A. Fifty dollars apiece, I think, was the amount paid in.

Q. How many of them were there?—A. There were ten at that time.

Q. And they paid in $50 each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any money paid in subsequently?—A. None, except from the sale of stock. They organized a company in Baltimore, a certain amount of the stock of which they were authorized to sell, and the subscribers had the right to the use of telephones for two years. In that way the capital was paid in.

Q. I will ask you what disposition you made of the capital stock originally; was it allotted or issued or retained by the company?—A. Some of it was allotted to Dr. Harlan and Mr. Gustin for promotion. Each of them were allotted 500 shares of the stock of the company for promotion, and that was issued to them, and then it was determined to pay the president and officers of the company such an amount of stock as salary, and that was to be retained in the treasury by the treasurer as trustee, and not to be offered for sale. Then 500 shares were authorized to be sold by the Baltimore agent to organize the company in Baltimore and in Maryland.

Q. At the par value of $100?—A. No; it was authorized to be sold at $20 a share.

Q. I mean the par value of the shares?—A. Yes, the par value of the stock was $100.

Q. You say your agent was authorized to sell how many?—A. Five hundred shares at $20 a share.

Q. Who was your agent?—A. E. J. Henkle.

Mr. MILLARD. Have you your stock book here?

(The witness produced the stock book called for.)

Q. Five hundred shares were to be sold on account of the company?—A. Yes, sir; to organize a company in Maryland. The company was organized there, and there is an exchange in operation in Baltimore City now on the strength of the money obtained.

Q. Did you organize a company under the Washington Telephone Company?—A. That was subsequently done; that was done last summer.

Q. But the sale of stock was the 500 shares of the stock of the Washington Telephone Company authorized to be sold, as I understand?—A. Yes; that became afterwards the property of the company we licensed in Maryland, known as the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland.

Q. Was there any part of these 500 shares sold?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state what amount?—A. I cannot tell exactly, but very nearly $10,000 was obtained by the sale of stock in Baltimore City, which was invested in organizing an exchange, putting up private lines, &c., in the State of Maryland.

Q. Ten thousand dollars' worth at $20 a share?—A. Yes, sir; about that.

Q. That would take the whole of the 500 shares?—A. Yes, sir. I think the whole of it was sold, but each subscriber was entitled to the use of a telephone for two years without pay.

Q. What disposition was made of that money?—A. That was invested in private lines and in an exchange which is now in operation in Baltimore.

Q. That, I understand you, was done prior to the organization of the Baltimore company?—A. Yes, sir; the Baltimore company, I think, was organized somewhere in June or July; the book of minutes will show.

Q. How was that stock made available to the Baltimore company? I understand you that that passed through the Baltimore company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way?—A. After the organization of the Baltimore company we turned over to them all the rights, franchises, &c., that were enjoyed in Maryland.

Q. But you had sold 500 shares of the stock?—A. Yes, sir; it had been sold for the company, but had been used in Baltimore in the development of the Baltimore and Maryland properties.

Q. Did the purchasers of the stock become organized as the Baltimore company? Were they the gentlemen who constituted that company?—A. No, sir; this book of minutes will show the names of the parties who obtained the contract from us to organize the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland.

Q. Then do these purchasers still hold stock in the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; they are stockholders in the Washington Telephone Company.

Q. They have no connection with the Baltimore Telephone Company?—A. None specially, except that it obligated itself to perform all contracts entered into by these parties, and it assumed all indebtedness of the company there.

Q. You have no indebtedness of the purchasers of stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. What the Baltimore company assumed then, I presume, was the obligation to allow them to use telephones for two years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you name the purchasers of these 500 shares?—A. I could not exactly identify all of them; their names are on the books of the company; I think there are somewhere about two or three hundred of them; their names are contained in this stock ledger.

Q. I speak of the original purchasers from the company.—A. Yes, sir; their names are here.

Q. Two or three hundred of them?—A. Several hundred of them; yes, sir.

Q. It would average only a couple of shares apiece?—A. It was limited to five shares apiece; each one took five shares of stock.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. At $10 a share?—A. Yes, sir; each party subscribed $100 and got five shares of stock and the privilege of the use of a telephone for two years.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that $10,000 used for the establishment of lines in Baltimore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those lines turned over to the Baltimore company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any part of the money ever divided among the shareholders in the original company?—A. No, sir; never a cent.

Q. Have you established any other companies under the rights granted to the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; we have some private lines in Virginia and West Virginia, and a few private lines in the District of Columbia.

Q. You speak of private lines; but have there been any other companies organized?—A. In Virginia there is a company called the Loudoun and Fauquier Company, which purchased the telephones from us. They simply formed that company, but it was not really chartered.

Q. Any other?—A. I think not in Virginia. There were several in Maryland, but of course when we made the assignment to the Maryland company it was transferred to them.

Q. Are you connected with the Maryland company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether that company has sold any of its stock?—A. I do not, of my own knowledge; I have heard they have.

Q. Do you know whether that company extended the lines which had been established by the Washington Telephone Company of Baltimore?—A. They were proceeding to do it as rapidly as possible until they were restrained last fall by the court from proceeding with any new business.

Q. To what extent had they gone in the way of extending their lines?—A. We had an exchange of more than a hundred telephones, and a large number of private lines in the city furnished to these subscribers, and were prepared to put up five hundred additional telephones at the time the restraining order was issued in the suit by the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Was there a final injunction in that case?—A. No, sir; the court was to have heard it on the 25th of January, but at that time Judge Bond was very ill and could not attend, and I do not think they have been able to get a hearing since.

Q. Did the Washington Telephone Company ever establish any lines in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; we have a few private lines here. We would have established them very generally, but we were not allowed the poles. We could not put up poles, and it was difficult to obtain the use of house-tops, and there was no underground system that we could use. We think now that we shall be able to obviate that difficulty at an early day, because we have an underground system that we think will answer the purpose, and we think we shall be able very shortly to establish an exchange, or attempt to do so, at least.

Q. Has your Washington Telephone Company obtained any money from any other source than the sale of those 500 shares?—A. No, sir.

Q. What has been the business of the company? For what purpose does it maintain an office?—A. It is obliged, under its charter, to have its principal office in the city of Washington.

Q. But it is doing nothing?—A. Not a great deal here, but it was doing something in the rest of its territory, in Virginia and West Virginia.

Q. Is it still doing business in Virginia and West Virginia?—A. We are temporarily restrained, you know, from proceeding there. Judge Bond's circuit includes the two Virginias and Maryland, but the restraining order does not operate upon us here.

Q. Does the Baltimore injunction extend beyond restraining the Maryland company?—A. Yes, sir; it was against the Washington Telephone Company that this suit was brought.

Q. You have spoken, Mr. Gardner, of having difficulty about the establishment of your lines in this city; you were not able, you say, to obtain the use of poles?—A. The District Commissioners passed an order some time ago that no more lines should be allowed above ground and providing that those already up should be taken down as rapidly as possible, and substituting an underground system.

Q. Have you any lines at all in the city?—A. We have some private lines here.

Q. Had there been any attempt to procure legislation in relation to the establishment of lines in Washington?—A. None, whatever. In Baltimore we obtained from the city council the right to put up poles, but we have never made any attempt in that direction in Washington.

Q. What did you do in the way of procuring the consent of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?—A. We made no effort to procure the consent of the Commissioners, as it was understood that they would not grant it. It was generally understood that the lines all had to go under ground, and they would not allow any additional poles to be erected.

Q. Have you made any application to the Commissioners?—A. Our company has not to my knowledge.

Q. Has any company, or any person connected with these companies, or either of them, made any such application?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Has your company a part of its stock yet undisposed of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of it?—A. I suppose about one-half of it has not been disposed of.

Q. How many shares were there originally?—A. Twenty-five thousand shares, at $100 a share.

Q. So you think you have over 12,000 shares yet, or about that?—A. There are 12,000 shares that are disposed of, and there is some that is not finally disposed of.

Q. Can you state what disposition has been made of the 12,000 shares?—A. Yes, sir; 1,000 shares were appropriated first for promotion, and the balance has been issued to subscribers in Baltimore, and to the officers of the company.

Q. What number of shares was allotted for promotion?—A. One thousand shares.

Q. To whom?—A. Five hundred shares to Dr. J. A. Harlan, and 500 shares to George A. Gustin.

Q. Who were the other gentlemen to whom shares were allotted?—A. The president—

Q. That is Bradley T. Johnson. How many shares did Bradley T. Johnson get?—A. The company voted him 400 shares per annum as president, and 250 shares per annum as director. The then secretary and treasurer, Dr. Goldsborough—he is not now either secretary or treasurer, but a director of the company—was voted 400 shares per annum.

Q. Who else?—A. The directors were each voted 250 shares per annum, and the attorneys of the company were voted 100 shares each per annum.

Q. How many directors?—A. There were ten directors. There are nine now.

Q. Do you recall any others?—A. No. The books will show precisely the allotment.

Q. Mr. Young spoke of having been allotted a certain amount of stock—I have forgotten the amount—$50,000, I think.—A. Mr. Young was mistaken. It was afterwards reduced to 2,500 shares, to $2,500,000, and the allotment was 250 shares, or $25,000 instead of $50,000.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was $50,000 originally?—A. Yes; but that was never carried out.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How much was Mr. Young allotted?—A. Two hundred and fifty shares.

Q. Twenty-five thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that the same amount that the other directors were allotted?—A. The same amount precisely. I will state in that connection that Colonel Young never received any stock at all. It is on the book, and was never delivered to him.

Q. Was this $25,000 in addition to his annual allotment?—A. No, sir; that was the salary for the directors.

Q. And I understand you they have an annual allowance?—A. That was the annual allowance.

Q. That was the first year, was it?—A. Yes, the first year; there was only one year. The company was organized somewhere in June, 1884, and has only been in existence a little over a year.

Q. Are the directors all entitled to another allotment of stock for the current year at its close?—A. The salaries were all stopped in December—the salaries of the directors were stopped, and an amount of stock voted them in lieu of all salaries.

Q. What amount was voted to them?—A. Five hundred shares apiece, to be assessed whenever called upon for the benefit of the company.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You mean they were to have that number of shares annually as salary?—A. No, sir; they were to have that in lieu of all pay in the future, and that was subject to any assessment that might be made by the company for the development of the company. You will find that noted in the record of the proceedings of the last meeting.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did they undertake to serve as directors for any certain time for that allowance?—A. I suppose they were to continue as long as the stockholders chose to elect them.

Q. Would they be obliged to serve?—A. Not necessarily obliged to.

Q. You see they might get the 500 shares for the first year's service?—A. They are not men likely to shirk any responsibility.

Q. You say that this stock voted to the directors is subject to assessment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. To any extent that may be required; it could be wiped out entirely.

Q. Has there been any meeting latterly?—A. Not since the last meeting recorded in the book which was, I think, the 10th of September. There has been no meeting since that time.

Q. Have you named a sufficient number to cover the 12,000 shares?—A. I don't know that I have; but you will find the matter contained in the books. I will not undertake from memory to say exactly, because I kept a record of every transaction of the company, and the books will show exactly.

Q. Take out any class? You say the company has provided for the payment of the president, secretary, treasurer, attorneys, and directors.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has it made any other disposition of the stock?—A. None whatever. This inquiry relates, as I understand it, simply to whether any stock has been issued to any member of the legislative, executive, or judicial service, and under that resolution I can say that our company has never issued any stock to any one in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall the resolution, but I do not think those are the terms.

Mr. EDEN. That is it substantially, I think, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it speaks of issuing stock to any member of the legislature.

The WITNESS. (Reading from the House resolution authorizing this investigation.) "And to make full inquiry into the issuance of stock known as the Pan-Electric Telephone stock, or any stock of any other company, companies, or organization springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, to any person or persons connected at the time of such issuance with either the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the Government." That is as far as the inquiry seems to go. I think this investigation into the private affairs of the company is probably not warranted by the resolution. Still, I am not disposed to withhold anything at all.

Q. We have not gone very far yet into the private affairs of your company. You do not seem to have issued any except to the officers of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. And one of them is a member of Congress?—A. No member of Congress or member of the legislature or member of any of the Executive Departments holds any stock of our company.

Q. Is there any person connected in any way with that company who holds any office under the Government of the United States?—A. None whatever; I do not think there is a single member of our company holds any office under the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney, you can take the witness.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. By the records I see that this company was organized June 6?—A. The first meeting was held June 3, and the charter was accepted and adopted, and a committee appointed to prepare by-laws. At the second meeting, June 4, the by-laws were adopted, and at the third meeting, June 6, I think, the officers were elected under the by-laws.

Q. On May 15, 1884, I see by your records, Casey Young was present and called to the chair?—A. May 15, 1884? Look at the top for the correct date.

Q. Oh, yes; the first meeting was June 3, 1884. You are right. At that meeting Casey Young was present and presided?—A. Yes. I don't think he has attended more than two or three meetings since I became secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you go on, Mr. Ranney, I wish to ask the witness about another matter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are you acquainted with J. Harris Rogers?—A. Well, sir, I have a limited acquaintance with him.

Q. Have you any recollection of having had a conversation with him during the year 1885 with reference to a contemplated suit in the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell patents?—A. I never had any such conversation as he details in his statement which I have here before me.

Q. On what page is that?—A. On page 19. He came to my office, as he stated in his testimony, some time in July, the exact date I don't remember. Some general conversation ensued, and I believe something was said about a suit; but the suit I referred to, and supposed he referred to, was a suit about to be brought, or which had been brought, by the Pan-Electric Company against the Bell Telephone Company, at Memphis, Tenn., and there was no allusion made, so far as my recollection goes, to any Government suit; I am positive about that. Subsequently, several weeks afterwards, Mr. Rogers came to my office and wanted me to refresh his memory about it—wanted to know if I didn't recollect that there had been some conversation about a Government suit. I told him emphatically that there had never been any such conversation in my presence; that I had never heard anything about a Government suit, and didn't know anything of it at all until the 10th of September; that the first knowledge I ever had of any Government suit was at a meeting of the board of directors, when General Bradley T. Johnson, president, received a telegram from Mr. Gantt, of Memphis, stating that a Government suit had been brought. That was the first knowledge I ever had of any Government suit. Mr. Rogers is entirely mistaken.

Q. Had Colonel Young, prior to your conversation with Mr. Rogers, ever said anything to you about the bringing of a Government suit?—A. Never; I never had any conversation with him on that subject. I had very little acquaintance with Colonel Young until after the Government suit was brought; in fact, until about the time they were to appear before the Interior Department. I did not know him when I was elected assistant secretary. I knew him by reputation, of course, but I had no personal acquaintance, and he did not attend any of our meetings after I was elected secretary, certainly not more than two or three meetings; and after my election as secretary he did not attend a single meeting except the first one.

Q. You say that Mr. Rogers did come to your office?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you had any conversation with Colonel Young in regard to this matter that Mr. Rogers has testified to?—A. None whatever. He states here that he was sent to my office by Colonel Young, for what purpose he does not state. I know of no business that I had with Colonel Young that would have caused him to send Mr. Harris to my office; it was of course used as the Pan-Electric office, but it was seldom attended by any of the Pan-Electric officers.

Q. Do you recall what Mr. Rogers said when he came to your office?—A. No. He came in, and we had a general talk about the interests of the company. At that time the suit in Tennessee, in Memphis, was being talked of, and I had in my mind entirely the suit of the Pan-Electric Company against the Bell Telephone Company. In fact I knew nothing about that suit until it was brought. The first I ever saw of that was in the Baltimore Sun, I think, of the 21st of July, which set forth that on the 11th of July there had been a suit brought by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company against the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. You say you did have a conversation with Rogers in regard to some suit?—A. Yes, sir; but it is distinctly in my recollection that it was in regard to a suit pending, or about to be brought in Memphis by the Pan-Electric against the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Can you say that you did not talk to him about a Government suit?—A. Yes. I never knew about any Government suit, as I said before, until it was brought, and until this paper, drawn by General Johnson, which I will submit, was read at the meeting of the board of directors. I happened to find this among my papers. It was presented by General Bradley T. Johnson at a meeting of the board of directors on the 10th of September.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us see what you are proposing to read.

The WITNESS (handing the paper to Mr. Ranney). It is a paper signed by General Bradley T. Johnson; there is his signature. He submitted this, and that was the first knowledge I ever had of any Government suit; it was announced by telegram, which he read at the meeting. That is simply a report submitted to the meeting, and on the back of it you will see an addition. That report was not adopted.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. September 10. You will find it in the proceedings as having been presented, but other provision having been made, it was not incorporated in the proceedings.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I see the part you speak of is this: "I have been assured last Thursday"—A. That would have been the 3d of September. He may have had some assurance, but he never mentioned it to me. He speaks of having had some assurance on the preceding Thursday, which would have been the 3d of September; that was the day the Solicitor-General said the suit was ordered.

Q. The 3d of September would have been the date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This was on the 10th?—A. Thursday, 10th, and the preceding Thursday would have been the 3d. He said he was assured, but where he got his assurance he did not state. In fact, I had overlooked that paper.

Q. "I have been assured last Thursday that a bill would at once be filed by the United States to vacate Bell's patents. I am unable to ascertain if it has been so filed."

Mr. MOFFAT. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a report made by General Bradley T. Johnson, president of the Washington Telephone Company, to the directors, dated September 10, 1885.

Mr. RANNEY. In which he says that he was assured on the 3d of September that the bill would be brought?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I will read it:

"If that suit has been brought, or when it is brought, some value may be imparted to our stock; but in the pressure for time now upon us I am obliged to take the action I have taken."

The WITNESS. That was with reference to the suit of the Bell Company against us in Baltimore. There was some provision made by our company to pay counsel fees to defend that suit in Baltimore brought by the Bell Company.

Mr. MOFFAT. Did I understand you to say that he got that information from Colonel Gantt?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I did not say so. I don't know where he got it, I said. That was the first intimation I had of anything of the sort; in fact, reading that part of it never struck me; but when the telegram was afterwards received on that day, which he refers to on the back of that report—

Q. Here is something on the back of it.—A. Yes, that is the part I refer to.

The CHAIRMAN: I will read it:

"After reading this I have received a telegram from Gantt & Patterson, attorneys at Memphis, stating that the bill by the United States against the Bell Company has been filed in the United States court there, and they will send a copy, which telegram I read to you."

The WITNESS. It was read at that meeting, and that was the first knowledge I ever had of any Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. Does he say whose telegram?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, it was from Gantt & Patterson.

Mr. RANNEY. When you are through with that I would like to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I find an indorsement on this paper as follows: "Report of General B. T. Johnson, made to the board of directors, September 10, 1885; not acted upon because of satisfactory provision otherwise made."

The WITNESS. Yes, I made that indorsement on the back of it; I did not incorporate it in the proceedings for that reason.

Q. What did you refer to by "satisfactory provision"?—A. He asked a certain amount of stock as compensation for the defense of that suit in Baltimore, and that amount was rather more than we were willing to allow, but we afterwards made an allowance which was satisfactory to him and to the rest of the directors.

Q. I observe in that report that he asked to be relieved from the office of president, so that he can take upon himself the duties of counsel?—A. Yes, but the board refused to accept his resignation, and at the next meeting he withdrew the request.

Q. You say the suit was pending in Baltimore at that time, on the 10th of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know when it was brought?—A. Some time in July, I think. I have got a slip from the Baltimore Sun stating the time; I happened to keep this slip.

Q. When was the hearing set, if you remember?—A. I see by this slip from the Baltimore Sun of Friday, July 17: "The American Bell Telephone Company, of Boston, and the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, of New York, by ex-Attorney-General Charles P. Gwinn, filed a bill in the United States circuit court"—

Mr. RANNEY. We all know about that. I think it is hardly proper to encumber the record with a newspaper statement of that kind.

Q. But have you any personal recollection as to the time set for the hearing of the motion for the preliminary injunction? If so, you may state it.—A. Yes; that was, I think, on the second Monday of September. Yes, I was at the meeting which was held for the purpose of making provision for that hearing.

Q. That would be the 14th?—A. Yes, sir. This meeting was held just in advance a few days, to make provision for that meeting of the court; that court met, I think, on the second Monday of September.

Q. You say this was the first knowledge you had of the bringing, or intention to bring, any Government suit?—A. Yes; the first knowledge I had; I knew of no other suit; it was always in my mind up to that time that it was the suit of the Pan-Electric Company against the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Who were the counsel for your company in the Baltimore suit?—A. The counsel in the Baltimore suit were General Bradley T. Johnson, and his son, John P. Poe, and Archibald Stirling, jr.

Q. Who was the district attorney there at that time?—A. He was Archibald T. Stirling, jr. He is still district attorney. I understand that Mr. Hayes has just been appointed to supersede him, but he is still there, and has been in that office for a number of years.

Q. He was employed by your company as counsel?—A. Yes, sir; at least General Johnson said so; I know nothing about that part of it.

Q. Did he appear in the suit?—A. Yes, sir; my memory is that he did appear in the suit at the September term of the court.

Q. Had you any conversation with Colonel Young, before the visit of J. Harris Rogers to your office, respecting any suit?—A. I never had any conversation with Colonel Young, prior to the 10th of September, respecting any suit. In fact, I don't think I saw Colonel Young; Colonel Young was away a greater part of the time, and I had no occasion to see him; I was not very intimate with him, never was until the commencement of this suit, and I never saw much of him, and never met him, until I became assistant secretary of the company, to make his acquaintance.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all that I desire to ask.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see by your records, page 5, that the first meeting, held June 3, 1884, was held at Casey Young's office?—A. Yes, sir; so it appears; I was not secretary of the company at that time.

Q. This is the record you have produced here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to the fact, and put in the fact, that "a called meeting of the Washington Telephone Company was held at the office of Hon. Casey Young, No. 606, Thirteenth street, Washington, D. C., June 3, 1884, at 4.30 p. m.; present, Hon. Casey Young," and others whose names I need not give. And then, "On motion of Dr. Harlan, Hon. Casey Young was called to the chair, and by request explained the object of the meeting and the prospects of the company." The next meeting was called June 4, the following day, as appears on page 11 of this record, "Meeting held pursuant to adjournment. The directors of the Washington Telephone Company met at the office of Hon. Casey Young. Present, Hon. Casey Young" with others whose names are unimportant. On the same page: "Hon. Casey Young nominated Dr. J. A. Harlan, of Washington, D. C., for vice-president." On June 6 (page 19): "Meeting held at the office of Hon. Casey Young." Page 20 of the record, June 9, 1884: "Meeting held at the office of Hon. Casey Young," the same place as before. Present, the first one named, Hon. Casey Young.—A. That happened because the company had not provided for an office at that time.

Q. I am reading the record. We will come to that by and by. Next, on page 21, June 1, 1884: "Office of Washington Telephone Company, 1226 F street." Was that the company's office afterwards?—A. Yes, that was the company's office and continued to be the place of meeting of the company until the office was taken where it now is.

Q. Up to that time you held all the meetings at Casey Young's office?—A. Yes, sir; at the request of the directors, as I understand. I was not then assistant secretary or connected with the company.

Q. "Office of Washington Telephone Company, 1226 F street, June 14, 1884. Present, Messrs. Young" and others. Young's is the first name. You do not know any other Young connected with that company than Casey Young, do you?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not read the details of the business transactions. On page 25: "Washington, June 20, 1884, room of Hon. Casey Young, 4.30 p. m., the board of directors met."—A. I think that was a meeting called by General Bradley T. Johnson.

Q. I am reading now. "Present, Young, Harlan," and others. There was business transacted at that time, but I will not read it. I will put in this vote among the other votes passed at that meeting when he was present: "That the following number of shares be paid to the officers, agents, and promoters of this company," and it goes on and states the amounts and details, which, perhaps, it is not necessary to put in.—A. That was afterwards rescinded.

Q. One moment. I do not say that that is material here. The fourth vote on page 26 is: "Voted that the pool so formed shall be at any time terminated on the demand of the holders of three-fourths of it." That is signed by Bradley T. Johnson, Casey Young, and E. J. Henkle. I also read the third vote: "That the stock issued to each of the directors for his services on payment of $500 called for, and to the officers and agents, according to the above schedule, shall be fully paid and nonassessable; that half of it shall be transferred to a trustee, who shall hold it with the power of voting it, and shall issue certificates for the stock so pooled for the owners of it."

"Fourth. That the pool so formed shall at any time be terminated on the demand of the holders of three-fourths of it." Which report, on motion, was adopted.

Mr. EDEN. Is Mr. Young's name in that?

Mr. RANNEY. It is a report that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. What pool is that?

Mr. EDEN. I object to putting that into the record unless it is shown that some officer of the Government is connected with it.

Mr. RANNEY. I read the report and it is signed by Casey Young.

Mr. EDEN. I asked you if Mr. Young's name was in it.

Mr. RANNEY. And I said it was.

Mr. EDEN. You did not answer me; I presume you did not hear me.

Mr. RANNEY. I had previously read it. Casey Young was present at that meeting, and he and Bradley T. Johnson and Mr. Henkle signed the report and the report was adopted.

Mr. HALL. What is the date of that meeting?

Mr. RANNEY. June 20, 1884, page 25 of this record.

The WITNESS. If you will turn over you will find that that was rescinded.

Mr. RANNEY. That is not my object. I want to show that Mr. Young was active in it. "July 3, 1884, met at the office of the company."

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose these minutes are accepted as true, but they do not prove the presence of Casey Young or anybody else.

Mr. EDEN. The reason I suggested an objection was this: The witness very properly, as I thought, suggested that it would not be necessary for the committee to investigate the private affairs of his company, only as to stock issued to officers of the Government. It has been decided by the Supreme Court that a committee of Congress has no right to the private books of anybody.

The WITNESS. I have always thought so.

Mr. EDEN. There may be a great many things in that book that were entirely proper, but which the company would not want to be published to the world. Of course, if there is anything that implicates any officer of the Government, it is our duty, under the resolution, to investigate it.

Mr. RANNEY. We are now investigating this company, which is one of the subordinate companies to the parent company. An objection of that kind does not come properly from a member of the committee, I think. If any objection of that kind is pertinent, it should come from the company itself.

Mr. EDEN. The witness has made the point.

The WITNESS. I did make the point that it referred to the issuance of stock to no person connected with either the executive, legislative, or judicial branches of the Government.

Mr. EDEN. I will state, in reply to the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that I am not the only member of the committee who has made objections. I have heard others make a great many.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection to making objections, that is certain.

Q. July 31, 1884, there was a meeting held at which Casey Young was present, and a resolution was passed repealing and revoking the allowance of stock previously voted. That is what you referred to?—A. That is what I referred to.

Q. Page 57, April 25, 1885, there was a meeting of the board of directors, and Hon. Casey Young, among others, was present. Business was transacted.—A. I don't think that out of the whole twenty odd meetings ever held Mr. Young ever attended more than four or five.

Mr. RANNEY. This is the evidence, and you will be kind enough to let me put it in.

The CHAIRMAN. The evidence of a witness, it seems to me, would be better on that point. The minutes do not prove it at all. He was constructively present.

Q. On the same page there is a note of another meeting held by the board of directors, at which, among others, Casey Young was present. Considerable business seems to have been transacted, the details of which are probably unimportant. July 13, 1885, page 66 of the record, this vote was passed: "The president and counsel of this company is hereby instructed to notify the Pan-Electric Telephone Company of the existing condition of the contention between this company and the American Bell Telephone Company, and the C. and P. Telephone Company"—what is that?—A. The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company.

Q. (Continuing.) "And to call upon the Pan-Electric Telephone Company to comply with its contract with the company to furnish counsel and pay expenses of defending the rights of this company."

Mr. MILLARD. What is the date of that?

Mr. RANNEY. July 13, 1885.

A. General Bradley Johnson is mistaken in that, because he thought of bringing suit himself, and the parent company was not obliged to prosecute any suits brought by our company, but only to defend suits brought by the Bell Company. When Johnson had been informed of that nothing was done.

Q. "The president is instructed to notify said Pan-Electric Company that this company will proceed in such manner as is necessary, and will hold the Pan-Electric Company responsible for all costs, loss, damages, and counsel fees expended and incurred by it; and the president is hereby directed to employ counsel to assist the regular counsel of the company, and to proceed forthwith in such manner as he may deem necessary. In case of the failure of the Pan-Electric Company to furnish funds for protecting the patent rights of this company acquired of it, the president is hereby directed to call a special meeting of all the stockholders of this company to lay before such meeting a report of the condition of affairs, and to ask authority from it to use all the stock of the company yet undisposed of, with the rights and property of the company, including stock-list and contracts with other companies, for the purpose of paying the expenses of litigation with the American Bell Telephone Company, and to notify the Pan-Electric Company that this company will hold it responsible for such costs, fees, and damages incurred. On motion, adjourned." Then, September 10, 1885, you voted the last vote. "General Johnson read a report, upon which no action was taken."—A. That is the report referred to.

Q. "Because of satisfactory provisions already made for the defense of the suit of the American Bell Telephone Company against this company." Do you remember what day was set down for the hearing of that application for a preliminary injunction in that suit, brought in the United States circuit court by the American Bell Telephone Company against the Pan-Electric Company and the Washington Company?—A. It was set down for the second Monday in September.

Q. What day of the month would that be?—A. I think that would be the 14th; Thursday was the 10th.

Q. That would be the day appointed for the hearing of that application for a preliminary injunction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On that day, when they were assembled for the hearing there, did not the United States district attorney appear with a copy of the bill in the Memphis case?—A. I am not able say.

Q. Was not an application made for an injunction, and was not the fact that the Government had brought suit at Memphis given as a reason why the injunction should not be granted?—A. That may have been one of the reasons. It is more than probable that between the 10th and 14th of September General Johnson may have obtained a copy of the bill in the Memphis case; it is very likely he did, and it was certainly very proper that he should have done so.

Q. I am not asking about the propriety of it; I am asking for the fact, and I wish you would confine yourself to that.—A. I was not at the trial; I was here in Washington, and did not charge my memory with it. I was not aware, as I stated before, that suit was to be brought; I have stated that I was not aware of that until the 10th day of September. If I had been the attorney of the company at that time I should certainly have applied for a copy of the bill, and filed it in the case.

Q. Were you not aware that a previous time had been set for the hearing of that case in Baltimore, and that it was postponed until the 15th of September?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Are you a lawyer?—A. No, sir; I am not a lawyer; I have been in the circuit court for six years.

Q. Then you were not aware of that?—A. No, sir. I think the original hearing was some time in July, and I think it was set down then, because the court could not take it up at that time.

Q. Be kind enough to read that report of Mr. Johnson.—A. It is rather a difficult handwriting to read.

Q. That is why I ask you to read it.—A. (Reading:)

SEPTEMBER 10, 1885.

To the directors of the Washington Telephone Company :

GENTLEMEN: After the passage of your resolution directing me to notify the Pan-Electric Telephone Company when suit was brought by us against the American Bell Telephone Company and to demand that it undertake the expense of that suit, and on failure to do so we would hold it responsible for costs, suit was brought against us by the American Bell Telephone Company on July 16. I addressed a notice to that effect to General Joseph E. Johnston, president, Hon. A. H. Garland, director and counsel, and Hon. Casey Young, secretary and treasurer of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and required it to furnish counsel and pay expenses. I have received no response except that Colonel Young informs me here that they are without means so to do. Acting, then, on the spirit of your resolution, I have determined to appropriate 10,000 shares of this company and 5,000 shares owned by it in the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland to pay counsel fees and those of associates, and to try with it to raise some money to pay expenses. I have tried and am unable to raise any money at all by sale or by the hypothecation of this stock. At the last meeting of the board, although the resolution then passed looked to giving full authority to dispose of all the stock and property of this company in defense of its rights, I had a verbal understanding with the board that I would conclude no arrangement without first notifying them. I have tried since September 1 to get a meeting of the board to get it to ratify or reject this arrangement, but unsuccessfully. All our stock will be worthless if the injunction is issued on the 15th instant. I purpose to use the stock specified to try and save it. I have been assured last Thursday that a bill would at once be filed by the United States to vacate Bell's patents. I am unable to ascertain if it has been so filed. If that suit has been brought or when it is brought some value may be imparted to our stock. But in the pressure for time now upon us I am obliged to take the action I have taken.

I respectfully request to be relieved from the place of president, so as to devote myself exclusively to my duty as counsel.

BRADLEY T. JOHNSON.

The CHAIRMAN. Now put in what is on the back of it.

The WITNESS. (Reading:)

"After reading this I have received a telegram from Gantt & Patterson, attorneys at Memphis, stating that the bill by the United States against the Bell Company has been filed in the United States court there, and they will send a copy, which telegram I read you."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say the district attorney appeared in that suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know that fact?—A. I saw it in the newspapers, I think, at the time.

Q. And then when you answered Mr. Boyle that the district attorney appeared by the 15th—did you ever know of his appearing before the 15th?—A. Before the second Monday in September? No, sir.

Q. That was the first time that he appeared. Did you not also say—

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say that was the first time he appeared?

The WITNESS. My understanding is that he was retained as counsel, and appeared at the first hearing of the case, in July.

Q. Were you there?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Did you see it in the papers?—A. I am not sure; I have some such impression.

Q. I do not like impressions of that kind if the fact is material. Your answer to Mr. Boyle would seem to imply that you were stating a fact within your knowledge.—

A. What was my answer to Mr. Boyle? Mr. Boyle did not ask me that question.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked you whether he appeared as counsel for the company.

The WITNESS. I stated that I thought he had been retained as counsel.

Q. What personal knowledge had you of that fact that he had been retained?—A. I had been so informed by either General Johnson or Dr. Henkle.

Q. Do you know when you were informed?—A. No, sir; I cannot fix the time.

Q. Have you any knowledge of his appearing in that suit before September 15?—A. No, I would not be positive about that. I have an impression that he did, but I am not sure about it.

Q. You have an impression that he appeared, then?—A. I think he did.

Q. Now, are you sure of that?—A. The impression was made on my mind by reading the papers at the time. I read the Baltimore Sun of the next day.

Q. You read the proceedings as published in the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not find it in the proceedings that he appeared on behalf of the Government, with the record of these proceedings at Memphis and ask to set aside all those proceedings because of it?—A. No, sir; I never understood that he appeared in behalf of the Government, because I knew that he did not, and my recollection is that he so stated to the court, that he did not appear on behalf of the Government.

Q. Were you there?—A. No, sir; I was not there.

Q. You are merely stating what you read in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir; what I read in the newspapers.

Q. We will not waste time on that species of information. You did have an interview with young Rogers at your office, to which you have testified. Can you fix the date of that?—A. Not exactly; but it was some time in July, I am pretty sure. I am not positive, but it is my impression it was in July.

Q. Can't you fix the date?—A. Not exactly; no, sir. I think it was somewhere about the middle or latter part of July, but exactly I could not fix it.

Q. You are only going on probabilities anyway?—A. Well, I did not charge my memory with it.

Q. Might it not have been as late as August?—A. It was not as late as August; I am very sure of that.

Q. How are you sure of that?—A. Well, I am reasonably sure of it—as sure as I can be of anything in the past that I made no note of.

Q. Is there anything in your mind to enable you to fix the date when it was?—A. I cannot fix the date any nearer than to say it is my belief it was some time in July; what time I cannot say. It was some time after the publication in the Baltimore papers of the bringing of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company's suit at Memphis.

Q. And you have got no means of fixing it?—A. No, sir; no positive means of fixing it.

Q. Do you remember copying any contract between Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I do.

Q. When?—A. I cannot fix the date of that, but I think it was about the latter part of July or first of August.

Q. At whose request did you copy it?—A. At the request of Colonel Young.

Q. How many copies did you make of it?—A. I made several; I don't remember whether it was two or three. I will state that Colonel Young came into my office at No. 600 Thirteenth street. There was no one in the office but myself. He said he wanted a paper copied, and had no one whom he could get to copy it, and asked me if I would do it. I said I would with pleasure, and I set to work and copied the paper—not as was stated by the witness the other day. He made no request to me not to disclose the contents of the paper.

Q. Don't go beyond my question.—A. I happened to recollect what the witness stated the other day, and I state positively that that is not so. I made those copies, two or three, I will not be positive which, and I took the original of the copies and placed them in an envelope, sealed it, and addressed it to the Hon. Casey Young or rather I carried it to the office, and left it on the desk, a desk in the same office; at any rate, I understand that he got it. It was sealed up.

Q. It was a copy of a contract already executed?—A. I am not sure whether the contract was executed or not. In making a copy of a paper a party is not apt to charge his mind carefully with what the contents of the paper may be. I made those three copies in a short time.

Q. Three copies of the original?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you mean to say that you had an original paper put into your hands of which you made three copies?—A. Yes, sir; I think I made three.

Q. It was a contract between whom?—A. Between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; that is my recollection of the matter.

Q. Was it signed by Casey Young or Senator Harris?—A. I could not say whose names were appended to it.

Mr. HALL. I did not understand him to say that anybody's was.

Q. Can you fix the time when it was?—A. I cannot fix it any nearer than I think it was the latter part of July or the 1st of August.

Q. Can you swear whether it was signed by anybody at the time you copied it?—A. No, sir; I could not.

Q. Will you swear that it was not?—A. I will not swear that it was not, for I do not remember definitely. It made no impression on my mind. It appeared to me simply a contract between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company to join issues in regard to the defense of certain suits against those companies.

Q. I did not ask you for the contents of it.—A. I am not giving the contents.

Q. Do you know in whose handwriting the paper was that you made a copy of.—A. No, sir; I do not. I did not identify the handwriting. I made it just as I would make a copy at the request of anybody.

Q. Will you hand me that supplemental paper? Was it not in Casey Young's handwriting?—A. I am not sufficiently familiar with Colonel Young's handwriting to identify it.

Q. Who did you first tell it to that you did make copies of the contract?—A. I never have told it to a living soul, according to my recollection, and I was surprised the other day—

Q. When you were here you said you were coming on next.—A. You asked me to bring the copies, and I said I had no copies.

Q. And you asked me how I knew it, and I said it was a spirit telegraph. You say you never mentioned it. How do you suppose that anybody found it out and told me that you made three copies of that contract?—A. I cannot imagine; it is something inexplicable to me. I know I never told any one.

Q. You had no telephone that would indicate that to me?—A. I don't know how you got it, unless you got it from the same source—some mysterious source—from which you have gotten a good many other things during the progress of this investigation.

Q. I told you that I wanted some of those copies, didn't I?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you expressed some surprise, and asked me how I knew of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had kept it religiously secret up to that time, hadn't you?—A. I had never told any one, because I would not tell any one of a matter of that sort.

Q. Why not?—A. Because it was a confidential matter.

Q. What do you mean by saying it was confidential; did he tell you to keep it quiet?—A. No, sir; I said he did not.

Q. Why did you treat it as confidential?—A. Because I consider all matters of that sort as confidential.

Q. You do not know what has become of that contract, do you?—A. No, sir; I do not. I have not seen it since I inclosed them with the original in the envelope.

Q. Please look at this paper which I hand you, and see if that is it [handing a paper to the witness.] I do that simply for identification. I do not want your recollection of the original contract, but I want you simply to identify that if it is the one.—A. Do you want me to identify this?

Q. I want you to read it, and perhaps you may have recollection enough about the contract of which you made three copies, to tell me whether it is the original which you copied?—A. No, sir; I see at once that this is not the original.

Q. Did you ever see that before?—A. No, sir; I never saw that paper before.

Mr. HALL. It would be well to have the stenographer note what paper you hand the witness, so that it can be identified.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the paper called the supplemental contract.

Mr. RANNEY. I was calling the witness' attention to it for the purpose of identifying it.

Mr. HALL. But the record does not show what paper it is.

Mr. RANNEY. Your suggestion is a good one, and I was acting on it before you made it. This paper says, "In addition to the agreement made and entered into between the above-mentioned companies at the city of Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of August, A. D. 1885, it is hereby further stipulated and agreed by and between the same, as follows, viz." That identifies it. It is what is called the supplemental agreement.

Mr. MILLARD. You never saw that paper before?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I never saw it before. I believe the paper referred to is the one I made a copy of. I said it was about the latter part of July or the 1st of August, but I could not state positively.

Q. This much you remember about the contents. You could not recite the contents of the paper?—A. I would not attempt to do it.

Q. But you remember enough of it to say that it was a contract between the parties you name. Are you confident that that was not already signed by Casey Young for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and by Mr. Van Benthuyzen for the National Improved Telephone Company?—A. I am not sure; I would not state positively either way.

Q. What is your best recollection?—A. I would not say, because I did not pay enough attention either way.

Q. You have answered that you will not say whether it was signed or not?—A. No, sir; I won't say; I cannot remember whether it was a duly executed paper or not.

Q. Did you copy it yourself personally, or get some one else to do it?—A. I copied it myself.

Q. Where?—A. In the office of the company, at No. 600 13th street.

Q. Did Casey Young bring the paper there?—A. Colonel Young brought the paper there, handed it to me, and asked me to make a copy of it.

Q. How long did it take you to make it?—A. I am not a very rapid writer, and I suppose to make three copies of a contract as long as that would take me an hour.

Q. Did he pay you anything for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never charged anything, so that you have an entry on your book which would help you remember?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can't you remember how many pages there were of it?—A. No, sir; it was not very long, according to my recollection. I don't think there was over a page or two, probably two pages; not over that, I think.

Q. Will you swear there were not three?—A. I tell you that my memory is not sufficiently distinct. I do not think anybody who has not charged himself with remembering the contents of the paper could remember it.

Q. You say you are totally in the dark now. Don't you know in any way how that fact became known? You cannot conceive that you ever mentioned it to anybody, can you?—A. I have said that I have no recollection of mentioning it to anybody, and it is not likely that I would have mentioned it; it was a matter not concerning anybody else.

Q. You had a conversation with Mr. Rogers after you did it, had you not?—A. No, sir; I think the conversation with Mr. Rogers, was prior to that.

Q. I do not wish to keep repeating it, but I will ask you if, subsequent to that time, Mr. Rogers did have a conversation with you in relation to the Government suit, and whether you did not then in that conversation tell him that you had drawn three copies of that contract?—A. No, sir; I positively state that I never had any conversation with Mr. Rogers about my Government suit whatever. I stated that in my testimony before—that I never had.

Q. I will tell you frankly I got my information from young Mr. Rogers; he says that you told him of that conversation. That is where I got my information.—A. He never got it from me, because he is not a person that I would ordinarily have much to say to.

Q. You see I am informed of what is the truth. You would not be likely to sleep with anybody where you would talk in your sleep about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Young Rogers is the source of my information, and he says at the time you told him about this Government suit.—A. Mr. Rogers called at my office, and we had a conversation, and my recollection is distinct that it related to the suit of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I never had any conversation about any Government suit. If he had any such thing on his mind he didn't disclose it to me, and in his testimony here he states that—

Q. We will not argue it. We know what he states. I have no objection to your stating your recollection about it. Now, can you fix the date of these conversations with young Rogers?—A. I cannot be positive, but I know at the second conversation a colored man, John Fletcher, the man who acts as electrician of our company, was present, and he remembers Mr. Rogers coming in—

Q. Let him state what he remembers, not you. Have you any means of fixing it, except that the colored man was there the second time?—A. I have no means, and he has none, of fixing the date.

Q. Have you been trying to refresh his recollection on it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you take enough interest in it to go and hunt him up?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you taken interest enough in it since this investigation began to go and hunt up the colored man to see what he remembers about it?—A. Yes; I was sufficiently interested in it when I saw a misstatement to go and refresh my recollection about it.

Q. That was the occasion of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It had reference to see whether he knew anything about these three copies of the agreement you made?—A. That was not in reference to the three copies of the agreement; the colored man heard the conversation.

Q. How long ago was it that you went to the colored man to see how much he remembered about it?—A. Fully a week or ten days, or something like that; but I don't want you to insinuate that I had that conversation with the colored man for the purpose of getting him to remember it.

Q. I only want the fact that, in view of what Mr. Rogers said about it, you went and saw the colored man.—A. No, sir; the colored man is at my office every day, and volunteered his testimony to say that he remembered about it.

Q. Is he Mr. Harris's colored man or Casey Young's colored man?—A. I don't know that he is the colored man for anybody. He is acquainted with the telephone, and has been doing work for us.

Q. Where is he now?—A. He can be found at the office. I can find him for you.

Q. Is he in your employ?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Is he now?—A. Occasionally; not now.

Q. He is an off-and-on man, now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was he Mr. Rogers's man, or in his employ?—A. I think he learned his business with Mr. Rogers; he was with him four or five years—with Harry Rogers—and knows as much about telephones, I guess, as Mr. Rogers does. He is quite an intelligent man; not an educated man.

Q. You have no means of fixing the date yourself?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you any means of fixing the length of time that elapsed between the two interviews?—A. No, sir; but I think it was several weeks. It struck me as being very strange that Mr. Rogers—

Q. No matter what strikes you unless it is something that fixes the date.—A. But I desire to make this statement—

Q. You need not unless it bears on the date.—A. It does not bear on the date, but on the time between the two dates. It struck me as being very strange that he should have come there a second time to ask me if I remembered the conversation held on the first occasion, and I told him that that conversation, according to my recollection, related entirely to the suit of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company against the American Bell Telephone Company. And then he met me another day on the street, when he was under the influence of liquor, and commenced to talk, and seemed to find some fault because my memory did not agree with his, and I turned on my heel and left him.

Q. When was that?—A. That was some time after the second interview.

Q. How long after?—A. I could not fix it, but some time afterwards. I think, however, the suit had been brought by the Government at that time.

Q. What occasion was there to have any talk about it?—A. He seemed to feel aggrieved that I did not recollect that he had talked about the Government suit.

Q. What consequence had it become then?—A. I don't know; it seemed to be of great consequence to him.

Q. Was it before or after this thing had been disclosed in the newspapers?

The WITNESS. Before or after what?

Mr. RANNEY. Was it before or after this information about this affair had come out in the newspapers; in the World and the Tribune?—A. It was after; this conversation that I refer to last was after the suit of the Government on the 10th of September; I think so.

Q. It had not become of any particular consequence, had it, then, what your conversation related to the first time that he came to see you?—A. I did not know what his purpose was; but it struck me as queer that he wanted me to remember that the talk had been about one thing when it was about an entirely different affair. I had not talked about the Government suit.

Q. I would like your exact conversation. Tell me how the first conversation began, and how it proceeded. Give the first conversation that you had with young Rogers.—

A. If you will let me read a paper which I prepared afterwards, and which was in consequence of my memory, you will get it exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. You can refer to it.

Q. Is that what you recollect since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you write it?—A. Two or three weeks ago.

Q. That is not a proper paper.—A. Well, it merely corroborates my present statement.

Q. If you made a memorandum about the time it would be proper; but if you have been writing down statements since, I prefer to go on your memory.—A. Very well; it is substantially the same thing. You asked to have it exactly.

Q. At whose request did you write that down?—A. At whose request? What do mean by that?

Q. I mean this paper that you wrote down three weeks ago.—A. Why, who could make any request—

The CHAIRMAN. Just answer if anybody did.

The WITNESS. No, sir; not at all; nobody ever talked to me about it.

Q. Was it before or after Mr. Rogers testified here that you wrote that down?—A. It was after.

Q. How long after?—A. A short time.

Q. Who had been to see you about it?—A. No one; not a soul.

Q. Won't you from your memory go back to the first conversation that you had with Mr. Rogers; where was it?—A. It was in my office, as I stated to you. He came in there. He states here that he was sent by Casey Young—

Q. Don't tell what he states here; please confine yourself. When was it, to the best of your recollection?—A. I said I could not fix the time; some time in July, I think.

Q. How early?—A. I cannot fix it.

Q. How long before you wrote the copies of those agreements?—A. I cannot fix that, because it had no connection in my recollection with the matter at all.

Q. Is there anything that you can fix it by?—A. No, sir; I would not be positive about its being July.

Q. Wasn't it in June or August?—A. No, sir; I think not. I think it was in July, and I said about the latter part of July. I cannot fix the date.

Q. What part of the day was it?—A. I don't know that I can fix the time of the day. I think it was probably in the forenoon.

Q. Was anybody present?—A. No one at that interview, I think.

Q. How long did the interview last?—A. Not very long.

Q. About how long?—A. I should suppose ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. What was first said?—A. I could not remember, and probably it never would have been fixed on my mind.

Q. Who spoke first?—A. That is a question that you would not undertake to answer, would you, in regard to any conversation that you held months ago?

Q. What is the first that you remember about the conversation?—A. I don't remember anything particularly. The conversation was general, and it drifted into a talk about the company and the suit.

Q. Tell me in specific language all that was said, who said it, and in what connection it was said.—A. I would not attempt to do that, because I did not charge my memory sufficiently for that.

Q. Can you state a word that was said?—A. No, sir; I cannot state a word that was said. I could not recollect now what I said two days ago, the words, but I might recollect the substance of them.

Q. Can you remember of that interview a single remark that he made or that you made?—A. No, sir: I do not know that I can. I could only remember the substance of the talk, and that there was nothing said on my part—

Q. The substance is what I mean, not the exact language. Give me the substance of any remark that you made.—A. I don't think it is possible for anybody to do that in a matter that occurred several months ago.

Q. But this much is true; you did talk about suits?—A. We did talk about the interests of the telephone companies.

Q. You did talk over the matters of suits?—A. I think so.

Q. And the method of litigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say?—A. As I said it was in my mind—

Q. Not what was in your mind, but what did you say?—A. I say I could not repeat a conversation that occurred months ago.

Q. But you talked it over about some of the suits?—A. Oh, I don't know. He came in there, I was not at all expecting him, or any thing of the sort; he just dropped in and took a seat and we entered into a conversation, and something was said about suits probably, and if it was, it was in relation to—

Q. Ah, you say something was said probably. I want something definite; tell me what was said.—A. I say most positively that in that conversation there was nothing said on my part or understood to be said on his part, in reference to any Government suit.

Q. This is a matter of memory, and I want to deal fairly with you, and want you to deal fairly with me. Tell me the substance of anything that was said or what it was—not your argument about it, but your recollection.—A. I don't propose to enter into an argument, but my recollection is that we had some talk about suits; that it was in relation to a suit pending, and the only suit that I knew anything about pending or to be brought had been brought. I am sure of that, for it was a conversation that did not affect my mind particularly except in one point. I had in mind simply the suit of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company against the American Bell Telephone Company in Memphis.

Q. Will you swear positively it was not after the time you copied the contract?—A. I cannot fix the time, as I said before.

Q. Well, that is all I want of you on that subject. Do you say there was no capital stock in this Washington Telephone Company paid in in money?—A. No, I did not say that. I said that each director paid—

Q. There was a capital stock of $5,000,000 ostensibly. Was there subscription by money for that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you the certificate book of stock of that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a stock ledger?—A. Yes, we have a ledger containing the names of the stockholders.

Q. Here is your stock book. I understood you to say that the stock was all assessable?—A. It was non-assessable and fully paid.

Q. I thought you said that the stockholders were liable to be assessed?—A. That was the provision made at the last meeting of the board.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the stock allotted to the directors.

Q. The stock you issued was full-paid stock and non-assessable.—A. Non-assessable so far as money was concerned, but the stock itself could be taken.

Q. Do you mean that you could make every man give his stock back?—A. Yes, sir; a portion of it; they agreed to do that.

Q. Your only resources were stock, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much money did this company ever earn? Have you the cash book here, and can you tell me how much money this company ever received or earned in its business?—A. I could answer that question, but it strikes me it is not pertinent to the issue at all. I do not think you have any right to know about our private business.

Q. We want to know whether this is a bogus thing or a real one?—A. You can find that out from the books themselves; you can take the books themselves. What was your question?

Q. If you are willing to tell, I would like to know how much money this company ever received or earned in its business.—A. I have nothing to conceal at all, but I do not think the money we received and paid out is a proper subject of inquiry.

Mr. HALL. You are the secretary of this company?

The WITNESS. I am the secretary and bookkeeper of the company, but that subject is not within the scope of the inquiry, it strikes me.

Mr. HALL. So far as I am concerned, I do not care about your further examination but I do not want to be a party to an improper inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney has said that the witness need not answer unless he wishes to.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not propose to pry into what is outside—into a man's private business—but can you tell us how much cash you ever had?

A. I stated generally, in reply to a question by the chairman, that about $10,000 has been collected from the Baltimore subscribers, which was devoted to the organization of exchanges and the building of private lines in Baltimore City.

Q. I see it will take too much time to examine these books and trace out all the stockholders.—A. I will state that there is not a stockholder of this company who holds any Government office or is in any way connected with any of the legislative, judicial, or executive branches of the Government.

Q. Did you ever try to sell any stock to any member of Congress?—A. No, sir; never a share. I do not think members of Congress generally are buyers of that sort of thing with cash.

Q. Do you know Mr. McComas, a Representative from Maryland?—A. Yes, sir; I know him; but his name does not appear among our list of stockholders.

Q. I know it don't. Did you ever have any dealings with him, or try to have, in regard to this stock?—A. Never at this office.

Q. Did you ever personally?—A. Never.

Q. See him or talk with him about this stock?—A. Louis McComas? No, sir; never. I know him very well, but I never had any conversation with him on the subject.

Q. You knew that he was a member of the District Committee?—A. I know that he is now.

Q. A member of the Committee on the District of Columbia?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. He was a member of that committee in the last Congress; he is not now.

Q. Have you been acquainted with him some years?—A. About ten years; probably more.

Q. You are sure that you did not ask him, in substance, to take some of the stock of this company?—A. Never; never in my life. I am sure that I never spoke to Mr. McComas on the subject.

Q. Did you tell him that Senator Gorman was in it?—A. Senator Gorman is not in it.

Q. Did you tell him so?—A. No, sir; I never had any conversation with Mr. McComas on the subject.

Q. Are you secretary of that company in Baltimore?—A. No, sir; I have no connection with it.

Q. And have not their books—the books of the subordinate company—and do not know who their stockholders are?—A. No, sir; I do not know. He may be a stockholder in that company for aught I know; perhaps he is.

Q. I am going to examine that subject.—A. Well, there is not a member of Congress or any one connected with the executive, legislative, or judicial branches of the Government who is interested in our company as a stockholder.

Q. You spoke about putting up your lines in Washington. Do you remember a time when the Commissioners had forbidden that to be done?—A. Yes; I understand that has been the case for a year or two.

Q. Did you, after that date, go and see Senator Harris about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that, after they had forbidden that, Senator Harris went to ask the Commissioners about it? You were not here when he testified, were you?—A. Yes, sir; I heard his testimony; but he did not say that I ever conferred with him. I never spoke to him on the subject. In fact, I have very little acquaintance with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Millard, do you desire to examine the witness?

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Were these three copies you made of this agreement compared before they were delivered to Colonel Young?—A. I compared them myself with the original as I made them, and satisfied myself that they were correct, put them in an envelope, as I stated before, and addressed the envelope to Hon. Casey Young, and sealed it.

Q. Did anyone see you doing that, so far as you recollect?—A. No, sir; my recollection is that no one was in the office during the time I was making the copies.

Q. Do you recollect whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen was in town at that time?—A. I do not. I know him only by sight; I have no personal acquaintance with him, and never exchanged a word with him in my life.

Q. Do you recollect whether Colonel Gantt was in town at that time?—A. I met Colonel Gantt after the September suit, and was introduced to him when he came on here and appeared before the Interior Department, but I never had a five minutes' conversation with him in my life, except perhaps to say something about the weather.

Q. Did you see them when they were at the Ebbitt House?—A. After the 10th of September?

Q. No, at the conference in July.—A. No, sir; I did not. I have no recollection of seeing either of them there.

Q. Did you see Colonel Gantt when he was here before the Interior Department?—A. I saw him occasionally, but had not any talk with him.

Q. Where did you meet him?—A. I think at the Ebbitt House once, and was introduced to him by Dr. Beckwith in the lobby of the Ebbitt House. I knew Dr. Beckwith as one of the parties connected with the Globe Company, and had had some conversation with him about another enterprise outside of the telephone.

Q. Now I call your attention to the proceedings of the board of September 10, 1885. The proceedings are in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir; that was the meeting at which that report was read by General Johnson.

Q. Were you present at that meeting yourself?—A. Yes, I was; it is so stated in the minutes.

Q. At the close of the minutes I see you make this memorandum: "General Johnson read a report, on which no action was taken because of satisfactory provision already made for the defense of the suit of the American Bell Telephone Company."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What provision had been made?—A. Now again there comes a question as to whether or not it is right to disclose the arrangements made with private counsel on a matter not relating to this subject of inquiry. It is there in the books and you can see it, but I do not think it is a matter which should be made public. It was a matter between the counsel and attorneys of the company and the directors, and communications between counsel and client are usually deemed to be confidential.

Q. Let me see about that: "General Johnson read a report upon which no action was taken, because of satisfactory provision already made for the defense of the suit." Did you know of any provision having been made other than the bringing of the Government suit or the getting of the Government suit to be brought, of your own knowledge?—A. There was provision made to pay counsel.

Q. That you have stated.—A. I supposed that was the question you asked me. That is the only provision referring to the payment of counsel. This report relates to the payment of counsel, and he asked more than we were willing to give and we reduced the amount considerably, and voted the amount.

Q. On the back of the report is a memorandum that the Government suit has been brought.—A. A memorandum that he had received a telegram on that day; yes, sir.

Q. That is the date of this meeting?—A. Yes, sir; that is the date of the meeting, precisely.

Q. Who were the counsel employed?—A. As I stated awhile ago, my recollection is that they consisted of the two Johnsons, John P. Poe, and Archibald Sterling, jr.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Was General Johnson the president of one of the companies?—A. Yes, sir; General Johnson and his son are the attorneys of the company, and they asked permission to have additional counsel employed and payment for that additional counsel, and that we did by appropriating an additional amount of stock for that purpose.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you give the date of their employment?—A. No, sir; that is a matter of which I have no personal knowledge. General Johnson could tell about that.

Q. Do you know whether it was before or after this 10th of September?—A. I do not.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Is there anything in your minutes here showing that counsel have been employed—A. No, sir; I do not think there is anything given in the minutes at all. There was authority given to General Johnson (and I think that appears somewhere in the minutes) to employ additional counsel, but there is no name of the counsel employed; the whole matter was left in his charge.

Q. Will you swear this does not refer to the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir; I will most positively—which do you mean?

Q. The clause I have read.—A. I will. It relates directly to this paper, and to the provision made in this paper. General Johnson asked for so much stock to be appropriated to pay counsel.

Q. It relates to the report that General Johnson had made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. This clause here refers to the report which General Johnson had made, which you hold in your hand?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Has that clause read by Mr. Millard any relation to the Government suit?—A. None whatever; it referred to the stock to be given General Johnson to pay for counsel. The proceedings of the meeting will show exactly what it related to. You will see that a certain provision was made to pay counsel.

Q. When was this paper that you hold in your hand handed to you?—A. It has been in my possession all the time since September 10, 1885, among the files of the office.

Q. When it was handed to you, was the memorandum on the back of it that is on there now?—A. I made it then, and I think I made it after writing up the minutes, because I did not wish to incorporate the paper in full in the minutes, and I referred to it and put it on file so that it could be seen.

Q. But the statement was made by General Johnson before the minutes were made up?—A. Yes; this report was read to the board of directors and came to me as secretary of the company to file, which I did.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not think of anything else that I wish to inquire about.

Mr. RANNEY. I made a remark a little while ago which may have been misunderstood when I said that Harry Rogers personally told me that he had information about that written contract. I think perhaps it came through another; I cannot say.

Mr. MILLARD. He told me that—that the witness made three copies. I will call your attention to it now. This is what he told me; he either told me that he heard Casey Young make the statement to you that you should make for him three copies and say nothing about it, or that he saw you after Casey Young had been to you and ordered three copies, and you told him that he had made such a request.

The WITNESS. I never did.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I will ask you the question whether Mr. Rogers was present when Casey Young brought the paper to you?—A. No, sir; no one at all was present; there was not a soul in the office. I made the copies without a soul coming into the office, and proceeded as I have stated.

Q. How do you think it could have gotten out that you made the three copies?—A. That is the mysterious part of it, as I have said.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Can I be allowed to ask a question or two?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Is it true or not that you had occasionally done writing before for me?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Was Harry Rogers aware of that fact, that you did writing for me?

The WITNESS. I think it is likely that he was; I never told him.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Was it or not known that you did writing for me when my arm was disabled?

The WITNESS. I do not know. In that connection I would like to present the only correspondence I had with Colonel Young. There are two letters here. I thought possibly you would call for this correspondence.

Mr. MILLARD. I would like to ask you a question. What did you do with the three copies?

Mr. HALL. Before the witness concludes, I desire to ask him this: Do I understand you to say there were three copies, or more or less than three?

The WITNESS. I am not sure which.

Mr. MILLARD. He testified there were two or three; he thought three.

Mr. HALL. He did not say that. He said he was not certain, and we are all proceeding on the theory that there were three copies when he has not said positively that there were.

Mr. MILLARD (to the witness). What do you say now about it?

The WITNESS. My impression is that two or three were made, and those copies were placed in an envelope, sealed, and placed on the desk. You were asking the other day about correspondence with Colonel Young. The only correspondence I had with Colonel Young was those two letters.

Mr. RANNEY. We might look at them and see if they relate to anything material.
The CHAIRMAN. The witness produced a letter dated July 21, 1885.

Mr. RANNEY. You have said that there is one of June 23, 1885, which I should like to have put in.

Mr. MOFFATT. Let us have them read.

By Mr. MILLARD

Q. Did Colonel Young state at the time why three copies were wanted?—A. No, sir; he handed the paper to me and asked me to make the copies he wanted. I said certainly, and I do not think there was any talk between us. There was no clerk to hand it to, and he felt a delicacy in asking me to do it, but I volunteered to do it for him. I did not have anything to do at the time. I did it, and put them in an envelope, as I have stated.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You have not any more letters of Colonel Young's?—A. No, sir; that is all the correspondence I ever had with him of any character whatever.

Q. Have you a copy of your correspondence to which these were replies?—A. I do not think these were replies. I simply sent him copies of the proceedings of the meeting.

Q. These are his replies to the notice of the meeting which I read?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you the telegram which General Johnson received from Colonel Gantt?—A. It may be among the telegrams, but as it was addressed to General Johnson I think it likely he took it away with him.

Q. Have you any telegrams here?—A. Yes, sir; I have all ever received by the company, but they were all telegrams between the Baltimore office and myself in relation to the calling of meetings; nothing else outside of that. They were either telegrams from Dr. Henkle or General Johnson in reference to calling the meetings of the board. I have not a telegram here that has any connection with the matter under investigation.

Q. You have not the one from Colonel Gantt to General Bradley Johnson?—A. No, sir; he kept that himself. That was addressed to him. He read it, and I made a minute on the back of that paper I have read. He kept that, I take it, himself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You produce two letters, one dated June 23, 1885, and the other dated July 21, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say those were received by you from Colonel Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever receive any other letters from him?—A. No, sir.

Q. The first letter seems to be in response to a letter of yours of June 18. Have you a copy of that letter?—A. I have not. I think it was simply a copy of the proceedings of the meeting. I do not think I accompanied it with anything at all.

Mr. RANNEY. I think if you will look at those proceedings you will find the vote is subsequent to the date of that letter. July 13 was the date of that vote.

The WITNESS. What is the date of the letter?

The CHAIRMAN. The 18th of June. The letter of July 21 is stated to be in reply to one of the 18th of July.

The WITNESS. Yes; that is the one related to the copy of those proceedings on the 15th.

Mr. HALL. Read the letter.

The Chairman read as follows:

Letter of Casey Young to Thomas H. Gardner.

MEMPHIS, TENN., June 23, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your favor of 18th instant, inclosing copy of contract between the Washington Telephone Company and the Baltimore Telephone Company, for which I return you my thanks. I have examined the contract casually, and while I think it probably less advantageous to us than to the other parties, yet, under the circumstances, I presume it was proper for the Washington Company to assent to it; and should the Baltimore Company go ahead with energy and put up an extensive exchange, the contract will, I have no doubt, result largely to the advantage of both parties. I have been hard at work since I left Washington, endeavoring to get ready for suit with the Bell Company, but in spite of every effort I have not yet got things in condition to bring it. Everything, however, is now nearly complete, and I expect to institute suit within the next eight or ten days, with every confidence of success.

Yours, very truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Col. THOS. H. GARDNER,

Secretary of Washington Telephone Company, Washington, D. C.

The WITNESS. The Memphis suit was brought July 11, so this Baltimore Sun says.

The CHAIRMAN. Now I will read the letter of July 21, 1885.

Letter of Casey Young to Thomas H. Gardner.

MEMPHIS, TENN., July 21, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your favor of 18th July, in reference to the suit brought against us by the Bell Company in Baltimore. I would come or send our leading counsel, Colonel Gantt, to Washington at once, but I must wait until I can arrange for other persons with whom we have recently become associated to meet me there. I will write to these parties to-day and ask them to let me know by telegraph when they can meet me in Washington, when Colonel Gantt or myself will come on and make arrangements for defending the suit. I think we have such combination now made as will assure our success. I will write to General Bradley Johnston this evening.

Yours, very truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I would like to ask another question about a matter concerning which there is a wrong impression.

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Extracts have been read from the minutes of your meetings by which I am represented as being present a number of times. Do you remember whether I appeared at those meetings in person or by proxy?

The WITNESS. On one occasion when you are noted as having appeared, General Johnson appeared.

Mr. RANNEY. General Johnson appeared by proxy for Colonel Young in one case?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. On the 25th of April, 1885, I see I am made to be there. Do you know what my condition was then?

The WITNESS. You were very sick, as I remember.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. And not able to walk.

The WITNESS. You had just been stricken with paralysis, and were confined to your room, I think, at that time.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. You read a contract or agreement that seemed to be signed by me about pooling the stock. Have you the original of that? I do not think I signed it. I think somebody must have signed it for me.

The WITNESS. I do not think the original is here, and I do not think you signed it. I think the majority signed it. I think Dr. Henkle and General Johnson, the other two members of that committee, signed it.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would find the record, because it is recorded with your signature.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I do not remember anything about it. I think I authorized General Johnson and Colonel Manning to act for me several times. I have no recollection in the world of being present.

Mr. RANNEY. It was referred to you as a committee, and then there is a report purporting to be signed by you three men.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I would like to ask another question. Did I at any time ever say anything to you about a Government suit?

The WITNESS. Never in your life prior to your appearance before the Interior Department, and I do not think you did even then. We may have had some talk about it, because it was a matter of common talk, but I had very little conversation with Colonel Young at any time upon any subject; I have seen him very rarely.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What did he say to you then?—A. I don't remember any conversation with him at any time about a Government suit.

Q. Why did you say "prior to the time of his appearance at the Interior Department"?—A. Because I knew I did not before that time. But I was there every day before the Secretary of the Interior attending that examination there, saw him very frequently and had opportunity, and it may have been that I said something about the matter then. I have no recollection about it, but I know I never had any conversation with him prior to the 10th of September, because I knew nothing about any Government suit.

Q. I thought from what you said that you had no conversation prior to the time that he appeared before the Interior Department in regard to the Government suit?

A. Yes, I am positive that I did not have any before that, and I will not say that I had any then. But it is likely that seeing him there every day I said something to him about it. I would not swear that I did or did not.

Q. Did he tell you what he was there for?—A. No, sir; I never had any conversation with him on that subject.

Q. Did you see Colonel Gantt there?—A. Yes, sir; but I never had any conversation with him; not a word of conversation with him in my life. I was introduced to him by Dr. Beckwith, merely passed the compliments, and that was the last I saw of him.

Q. You have been present here every day, I believe, since the investigation opened?

A. Yes, sir; very nearly every day, particularly since my name was alluded to by Mr. Rogers. I saw that in the paper, and I have been in attendance ever since. I was told shortly afterwards by Mr. Oates who was acting as chairman, that he wanted me as a witness. I had told him all about the matter that had happened; that Mr. Rogers had said that Mr. Hine had told him that Colonel Oates was acting as an attorney for Casey Young—

The CHAIRMAN. You had better not introduce that now.

The WITNESS. I was simply going on to say that this party met on the street and said that he never told Mr. Rogers anything of the sort; that it was a lie.

Q. Did Casey Young tell you why they were before the Interior Department?—A. I never had any conversation with him on the subject; I never had any occasion to, because I was not of counsel, except I felt an interest in it as an office of a telephone company, and was anxious to see the monopoly broken up. There is one branch of the inquiry that seems to have been overlooked, and that is in reference to the subsidizing of the press.

The CHAIRMAN. Give yourself no concern about that.

Q. Are you interested in that?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Why did you speak about it?—A. Because I saw two members of the press standing over there [indicating Mr. Crawford and Mr. Clark], and it just happened to remind me of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not be alarmed; we have not forgotten them. But do you know anything about the subsidization of the press? If you do I will be obliged to you to give the committee all the information you have.

The WITNESS. I don't know anything about it. We are too poor to attempt it; I know that.

Q. You have not subsidized them?—A. No, sir; we have not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri a few minutes ago made a motion to adjourn, which I do not think was observed.

Mr. HALL. I will renew it.

The committee thereupon adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow, Friday, April 9, 1886.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, April 9, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE). The committee will now proceed to examine Mr. Stilson Hutchins.

Mr. JOHN GOODE. Will the committee hear me for a moment? I have the permission of Mr. Hutchins to occupy a few moments before he is called.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Mr. GOODE. When I was here the other day the committee asked me to produce certain papers which accompanied the letter of District Attorney McCorry, making application for permission to use the name of the Government to bring this suit. I have had search made in the Department of Justice and now produce these papers [producing papers] in answer to that request. I have here the affidavit of Zenas F. Wilbur, which appears to be the original affidavit. The affidavit that I produced the other day was a copy. I have also the affidavit of Francis E. Neipher, the caveat filed by Elisha Gray, the affidavits of Watson Van Benthuyzen, George Gantt, and Charles P. Huntington, the affidavit of P. H. Van der Weyde, and the affidavit of Watson Van Benthuyzen.

I was also requested, I think by Mr. Ranney, to furnish a list of cases in which suit had been ordered by the Department of Justice to set aside or cancel the patents. I have had the records examined, and the list I now present was furnished me by the clerk. I will add that with the exception of the list which I have furnished for Mr. Ranney, the papers are original papers that should be returned to the Department. I will leave them with the committee for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Have we not copies of the papers?

The WITNESS. I think you have copies of each one; but I was asked to produce the papers which came to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the desire of any member of the committee to retain these original papers?

Mr. RANNEY. We will see when we get through examining them. I want to ask some questions about them.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I do not see that these original papers which you produce have any mark on them indicating that they were received by the Department of Justice.—A. No, sir, no mark to indicate that they were received by the Department of Justice. My letter to the Interior Department, inclosing them, was written on October 17, and you will notice that these papers have marks on them showing they were received by the Interior Department on October 19. I am sure those are the papers, because the papers in connection with the other applications for permission to bring suit were sent subsequently. My general recollection is that those are the papers I read at the time.

Q. There are no marks on them showing they were ever received by the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir; there are no marks on them to show they were received by the Department of Justice. There are marks showing they were received by the Interior Department. The record shows that my letter to the Interior Department, inclosing Mr. McCorry's application and accompanying papers, bears date October 17, and those marks show that they were received at the Interior Department October 19.

Q. The hearing at the Interior Department proceeded under a renewal of the same application?—A. Yes, sir; and when he renewed his application the letter making the renewed application and the accompanying papers were sent by me to the Interior Department. We did not retain copies, but requested in the letter, as the letter will show, that after examination the papers might be returned. It is not the habit to copy all such papers, but we request that the inclosures be returned after examination. This is the common practice between the Departments.

Q. Have you a memory of examining these papers before you gave the order to McCorry?—A. Yes, sir; I do not remember the Neipher affidavit. I remember the affidavit of Wilbur and the affidavit of Mr. Van Benthuisen. As I said the other day, I do not recall now particularly the examination of any papers except the letter, the memorial, the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur and the affidavit of Mr. Van Benthuisen. It seems there are other affidavits among the papers.

Q. Those are all you remember?—A. Those are all I remember, but I know I read the papers contained in the letter of Mr. McCorry, whatever they were. At this late day it is impossible for me to say particularly as to each paper. I do not remember the Neipher affidavit.

Q. Who made out this list of cases authorized in the name of the United States?—A. I directed the chief clerk to make it out, and he either made it himself or had some one of his assistants make it.

Q. Is this the same as was handed to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I have not compared them. I take it for granted it is the same. He was directed to furnish the list.

Q. Have you ever looked to see how many of these suits were actually brought?—A. No. I understand it is a list of cases in which application was made and suits ordered. How many of them have been brought I do not know.

Q. Is this a list from the beginning of the Government?—A. Since the organization of the Department of Justice, in 1870. That is what I was asked for, and that has been furnished me in answer to my request. Of course, I have not had the opportunity to search personally all through the record there.

Q. I see here a case where the United States attorney for Rhode Island was instructed to bring an information in the name of the Attorney-General against the Rumford Chemical Works, April 17, 1885. That is the case that was heard before Judges Shepley and Clifford, and reported in the books, in which they decided that no such suit could be maintained; is it not?—A. I do not know. I have only furnished the list as asked for. I have not pursued these cases to trace their history and see what has been done with them. It would be utterly impossible for me to do so and perform the other duties that are incumbent upon me.

Q. Is there any one of these cases that you know that was ever brought?—A. No;

I have not examined to see that they were brought. I have caused the records of the Department to be examined to see what suits have been ordered, and that list was handed to me by the clerk as a correct list of the suits ordered by the Department.

Q. Were not several of them, or many of them, first ordered, then a hearing had, and the order revoked?—A. I do not know about that, sir.

Q. Have you looked to see?—A. I have not, sir; I have done what you requested me to do, but I have not had the time to pursue that investigation. The Attorney-General is confined to his house by sickness, and my duties are such that it would be utterly impossible for me to make a personal examination of all those matters, and I did not deem it called for by the committee. You asked me to furnish that list.

Q. Have you looked over the list to see whether there are any cases analogous to the present one there?—A. I have not. I took it for granted that they were called for only upon the point raised, that is, as to the power of the Department to order a suit to vacate or annul a patent.

Q. You have not looked at this list to see that there are several cases here not of that kind at all?—A. No, sir; I have not. I called upon the clerk to furnish a list of papers in which suits had been ordered by the Department of Justice. Beyond that I have not gone.

Mr. RANNEY. I am sorry you did not verify it yourself.

The WITNESS. My dear sir, I have not the time and it is not my duty. I am not the custodian of the papers in the Department of Justice.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want to get at the facts.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing that you should come there and make the examination with the clerk. I will put him at your service.

Q. I want to call your attention to this list, so that you may know what some of the entries are. "May 26, 1876. Secretary of Interior informed that United States district attorney has been instructed to enter an appearance for the Government in the case of Thomas A. Edison and others against the Western Union Telegraph Company." That is not a case where a suit was ordered to be brought by the United States?—A. As I told you I furnished the list as furnished to me by the chief clerk in answer to a request to produce a list of cases in which suits were ordered by that Department to test the validity of patents.

Q. I wish you would make a minute to the effect that I would like to know how many of these cases, and which ones, were revoked on hearing.—A. I do not know that the files of the Department would show that. I think the records of the Department only show such as were ordered to be brought. I presume the records of the courts would show what you wish to know; the records of the courts where they were brought.

Q. Have you looked to see how many applications were made and how many refused?—A. I have not.

Q. Are you aware of a case, within a short time before this order was given for the Memphis suit, coming from Rochester, N. Y., where an application was made for such leave?

The WITNESS. To the Department?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. During the administration of Mr. Garland?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you not aware that an application came from the district attorney at Rochester, N. Y., during the administration of Mr. Garland, before this action of yours, to have just such a suit as this brought in the name of the United States to annul a patent, and that the Attorney-General declined to act on it?—A. No; I never heard anything of that kind.

Q. And that then the man went to the President and he wrote a letter to Mr. Garland?—A. That may all be so, but I never heard of it.

Q. That Mr. Garland declined to grant any such order for want of power or supposed want of power?—A. Oh, I think that must be a mistake, sir.

Mr. OATES. To annul what patent?

Mr. RANNEY. A patent of a party in Rochester.

The WITNESS. I do not think that is the view of the Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. It was in the northern district of New York. I wish you would look up that case.

The WITNESS. If you will give me a memorandum I will direct the clerk to look it up. It is impossible for me to do so in person.

Mr. RANNEY. I will give you a memorandum. I do not know that I have the data here at present.

The WITNESS. If you will send it to me by mail I will give it attention.

Mr. RANNEY. It was a case coming from the northern district of New York since Mr. Garland went into office; within six weeks or two months of the time you acted.

The WITNESS. I will have an examination made.

Mr. RANNEY. Look at the application from the district attorney and also for any communication from the President about it, as well as the action of the Attorney-General on it.

The WITNESS. I will do so. I never heard of it before.

Mr. OATES. I did not understand what patent it was proposed to annul.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know now myself. I have a paper that states the fact.

Mr. OATES. Was it a telephone patent?

Mr. RANNEY. No; not a telephone patent. I cannot tell you what it is at present; I cannot give you the name.

Q. I see on this list an entry under date of October 21, 1885, since this affair.—A. I directed the clerk to furnish me a list of the cases in which suits had been ordered by the Department of Justice since its organization, in 1870, and he furnished me that this morning. I have made no examination.

Q. The last but one is dated July 30, 1884, the United States against Frasier. That is the one that was decided by Judge Blodgett and dismissed on the ground he stated in his opinion, is it?—A. Yes; but we do not take the law from Judge Blodgett.

Q. You do not seem to take it from anybody but yourself. You did not consult anybody.—A. You do not do me justice in that matter. I stated distinctly that I examined the authorities bearing upon the subject, and I satisfied my mind that the Department of Justice had the power to order such a suit, and that was the only way it could be done; and I am willing to stake my reputation, whatever it may be, upon that proposition. Let me say, also, that in that view I am sustained by the Judiciary Committee of the House, of which you are a member.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better wait until the reports are all in, and then you will find out what the Judiciary Committee decides.

The WITNESS. I have seen the report made by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to argue the matter with you, Mr. Goode.

The WITNESS. But I do not want to be put in a wrong position.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to put you there, unless the facts put you there. I only want the facts.

The WITNESS. You were making a comment upon what I had done. I did not go to Judge Blodgett; I went to the decisions of the Supreme Court.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Judge Blodgett is a district judge, is he not?—A. He is a district judge in Illinois.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is it not true that it is reported in the 22d Federal Reporter that in two of these cases the circuit-court judges decided that the power did not exist?—A. I believe that is true.

Q. And that those cases were never carried to the Supreme Court?—A. I believe that is true; but if the opinion of the court in the case of Mowry against Whitney does not establish the proposition that a suit to test the validity of a patent can only be brought by order of the Attorney-General, then I am not capable of understanding anything.

Q. You rested your action upon that case of Mowry and Whitney, did you?—A. In the main.

Q. Was not the case of Mowry and Whitney a case to set aside an original patent?—A. That was a case brought by one individual against another, in which a demurrer was sustained, and in giving the reason for sustaining the demurrer the court discusses the matter fully and states how such a suit can only be brought.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) that we have gone over this ground very fully in the previous examination of the witness.

Mr. RANNEY. Not on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. I have a distinct recollection of the case of Mowry and Whitney and the dicta on the subject.

The WITNESS. I expect to have to argue this question, Mr. Ranney, and if you are here when the Columbus bill is demurred to, and take the opposite view, I will endeavor to put you fully in possession of my views on that proposition.

Q. I simply ask you if it is not true that the case of Mowry and Whitney was a case where an original patent had been extended, simply?—A. Yes; but I did not base my action upon the facts of that case, but upon the broad declaration of the court.

Q. Was not that simply a case where the validity of granting an extension was involved?—A. I think so; but I say I did not look to the facts of the case, but to the law as laid down by the court.

Q. It was simply this: Whether the extension was not void because the party had misrepresented the amounts of profits he had made on a patent during its life, was it not?—A. I believe so.

Q. And it did not involve at all the question whether the Government could bring a bill to set aside a patent, where the question involved was simply which was the prior inventor?—A. That was not the only case I read. I read the case of Stone against the United States and the United States against Gunning and others, and upon principle I thought it must be so. It would be very strange if a patent was obtained by fraud or improvidently issued and the power that granted the patent could not recall it upon a proper case being made.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did it occur to you that the time had come when the question might be settled?—A. I did not feel that I was settling any question. I was merely sitting there to act upon a prima facie case; and it would have been a grave responsibility on my part to say that such a suit should not be instituted in the face of these precedents and authorities. If any wrong has been done, it will be corrected in the courts.

Q. May not the question of the power or the right of the United States to intervene in a case like this be settled in this case?—A. Unquestionably; and no doubt it will be. I suppose they will demur on that ground, and both parties can go to the Supreme Court with it.

Mr. RANNEY. I am only trying to confine myself to these questions here.

The WITNESS. I did not furnish the list to show anything at all, but only in answer to your request.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want anything but what is proper, Mr. Solicitor-General. I would like to know just how many of these cases that you have furnished me a list of were ever brought to suit?

The WITNESS. If the records of the Department of Justice will show it, you shall have the information, sir. I suppose the records there only show the action of the Department. Whether they were brought by the district attorneys, to whom the orders were given, or whether they were recalled for any purpose, I cannot say.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you looked at the case in October, 1885, where an application was made to the Department, and Attorney-General Brewster refused it?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Have you looked to see in how many of these cases where the order was granted there was at first a reference to the Department of the Interior?—A. I have not looked myself, but I asked the clerk to bear that in mind in making this examination, and he says as a general thing there was a reference to the Department of the Interior.

Q. If there is any exception I would like to know in what case.—A. I do not know. I was not asked to produce that information; but I understand that to be the general practice, and I would have conformed to it in this case had I not supposed I possessed all the information the Patent Office would afford. I believe, myself, it is the general practice.

Q. I do not care to go over that. Please note my question. If there is any exception in this whole list, I would like to have it pointed out.—A. I will direct that examination to be made, sir.

Q. Also what cases, if any, on that list were ever brought; in how many cases the orders were revoked after you first gave them and the parties so informed?—A. I will have the information looked up.

Q. Have you found the envelope in which these papers came to you?—A. I asked the clerk about that, and he says it is not usual to preserve the envelopes; I asked him about the manner in which the mail was opened, and he tells me it is opened by himself and one of his assistants and the envelopes are cast aside; he is perfectly confident that that package came by mail that morning.

Q. Have you ascertained whether you or he opened it?—A. He opened it; that was my recollection the other day.

Q. You have never seen the envelope?—A. I have never seen the envelope; when it came up to me it had a "jacket" on it, inclosing the letter of Mr. McCorry, and that was strapped on top of the other papers.

Q. Have you found that "jacket"?—A. It was brought here the other day; you have seen it.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not remember looking at it.

The WITNESS. It was here.

Q. You have got the original jacket?—A. Yes, sir; the original jacket, containing the letter.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose you took the original papers back the other day?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I brought the original jacket up here and took it back. I didn't bring the envelope, because it had not been preserved.

Q. You have no personal knowledge so that you can tell the committee to whom that envelope was directed?—A. No, sir; the chief clerk, Mr. Clay, says it was directed to the Attorney-General.

Q. You have no personal knowledge?—A. No, sir; the first I saw of it——

Q. Who was the messenger at that time in your Department?—A. There were two, a man named Cherry and a man named Davidson. I do not know the first names.

Q. Are they still there?—A. They are still there. There is a man named Berry that acts as a messenger sometimes, and he may have been acting at that time; Cherry, Berry, and Davidson.

Mr. MILLARD. You do not know their given names?

The WITNESS. I do not know their given names; I can furnish them, if necessary. They have been there a long time.

[To Mr. Ranney.] If you will make a memorandum of what you wish, I will get the information.

Mr. RANNEY. I will send it to you during the day.

The WITNESS. May I take those original papers with me?

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

The WITNESS. You have copies of the papers. Sometimes two of the messengers are there, sometimes three, and sometimes one. I do not know which one brought up this package.

Q. Mr. Millard reminds me that in the record of the Interior Department is a communication which I wish to read to you and about which I wish to ask you a question.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Jackson, Tenn., October, 14, 1885.

SIR: William Van Benthuyzen, of New Orleans, La., Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi, George Gantt, of Memphis, and J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, La., the same parties who preferred the former petition asking the institution of the suit in the name of the United States to have the patent of March 7, 1876, No. 174455, issued to A. G. Bell, vacated, recalled, and annulled, have again applied to me to renew the application, and, in addition to the papers formerly submitted, they have presented to me a copy of an application made by the Globe Telephone Company directly to the Department of Justice, seeking somewhat similar relief, which paper I inclose herewith, together with the same papers forwarded to you on the first application.

I now again ask permission to institute such suit, or that you permit a continuance of the same already begun and which is now in abeyance awaiting the next session of our court at Memphis, to have an order of dismissal entered as heretofore directed by you.

I have examined this matter very fully, and am now more confident than at first that the suit was within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the patent referred to was improvidently issued to Mr. Bell, and I would like to demonstrate the propriety of the original proceedings by carrying a suit with the same object in view to a successful termination.

Very respectfully,

H. W. McCORRY,
United States Attorney.

Hon. JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

It was upon that application or letter of McCorry, a I understand you, that the same case was renewed with the addition of the paper from the Globe Company, and the matter referred to the Interior Department.—A. I referred that letter with the accompanying papers to the Interior Department in a letter dated October 17.

Mr. RANNEY. I have not got your letter of October 17 here.

The WITNESS. I think it is among the papers I furnished the other day.

Q. That is not material. I only want the fact that on that renewed application you made the reference to the Interior Department which has been put in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is one paper that I would like to get, the Wellington Adams' pamphlet. Have you that?—A. I cannot find it; I have no recollection of it at all; I told the clerk to examine particularly for it. You asked the other day for it and called it the Adams compilation. Is it in book form?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; in pamphlet form.

The WITNESS. I have no recollection of ever seeing it. I do not think it was in that package that came to me.

Q. Perhaps you might recall it by a fact that I will now call to your attention. In that compilation of Adams's he stated that figure 7 in the application of Mr. Bell and in the description of his invention, would not talk.—A. I have no recollection of it whatever. I am sure I did not read any printed matter in connection with his application.

Q. Perhaps you may recall it by another fact: That in the Neipher affidavit he stated that he and the same Wellington Adams had constructed an instrument, or had one constructed in accordance with figure 7, and it did talk.—A. I do not recall that at all.

Q. You cannot furnish that pamphlet?—A. No, sir. If it was ever at the Department it is not there now.

Q. If I recollect aright, you said the other day you had never read the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; the truth is I have not had the time. It is very voluminous.

Mr. RANNEY. Therefore I will not pursue that branch of the inquiry any further with you.

The WITNESS. I based my action upon the letter of Secretary Lamar when the papers came back.

Q. Mr. Millard suggests an inquiry to me in continuation of what I have said, that there is nothing on these original documents to indicate that they have ever been to the Department of Justice. Is it not customary when you receive papers there to have them marked, or was it not the custom?—A. No; not inclosures like those. They marked the jacket which contained Mr. McCorry's letter.

Q. Only the jacket?—A. Only the jacket. These were the inclosures that came along in the letter. They were all sent with his letter. It seems that at the Interior Department they mark each paper. Our Department requested them to return the papers after examination, and those are the papers they returned.

Q. I asked you the other day whether you did not keep a docket of your action on these matters?—A. I have made inquiry since. The clerk keeps an entry book showing, in short, what letters are received, and from whom, and what disposition is made of them, and a brief synopsis of the matter referred to. He has the book.

Q. Do you find any entry to show what you did on the 2d of September, 1885?—A. The records will show what I did.

Q. You have not looked at them?—A. I directed the clerk to look.

Q. Have you the result of the examination?—A. Yes, sir; he says he finds only two matters that I acted on on the 2d of September.

Q. What were those?—A. One was a telegram received from Port Townsend, stating that certain Chinese who had been sent there—

Q. I do not care for that, unless you want to state it.—A. I want the committee to understand it was a telegram which did not take a great while for me to dispose of. The marshal wished to know what he was to do with these Chinamen. They had been sent out by the United States judge in Washington Territory, and upon reaching British Columbia they would not allow them to be landed there. The marshal was in a quandary and did not know what to do with them, so he telegraphed to the Attorney-General for instructions. I telegraphed to the marshal to apply to the judge under whose order he was acting for further instructions. The only other matter that day was an application of some judge for an extension of leave of absence.

Q. Besides the routine?—A. You understand in these Departments the letters are prepared usually by the subordinates, and all we do is to look them over and sign the mail at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. We cannot write every letter ourselves.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no; that would take some little time, I suppose.

The WITNESS. At that season of the year there is very little doing in the Departments.

Mr. RANNEY. It is pretty hot, I suppose.

The WITNESS. It was pretty hot then, and everybody had gone who could get away. I know I sweltered here myself.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desired to retain the original papers?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not desire to retain them.

The CHAIRMAN. Then Mr. Goode may take them with him.

The WITNESS. Mr. Ranney wants the list of cases, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; but before we put that in I would like to have it completed.

The WITNESS. I will endeavor to do that, if you will send me the memorandum.

Mr. RANNEY. I will do it to-day or early in the morning.

Mr. STILLSON HUTCHINS then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE):

Question. What is your relation to the Washington Post?—Answer. I am the proprietor of it.

Q. I wish to inquire of you about a single matter. Are you or have you been in any way connected with the Pan-Electric Company or with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. In no way that I know of.

Q. Or the Washington Telephone Company under the Pan Electric Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. It appears by the testimony of Senator Vest that he became the purchaser of 100 shares, or became entitled to 100 shares of the stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, for which he paid $1,000, and that subsequently you offered to take it off of his hands at the same price. Have you any recollection of that fact?—A. Yes, sir; I have a distinct recollection of all that transpired in connection with that matter. It seems that there was an advertisement in the columns of our paper offering to purchase Pan-Electric stock—I think it specified parent stock—and Senator Vest, who was ill at the time, sent me a note asking if I would not call up and see him. I did so and found him in the lobby of the Senate Chamber. His inquiry was to know if I knew who was the author of the advertisement. I told him I did not, and I made inquiry subsequently at the office and did not find out, as the answers were to be addressed to some anonymous character, some borrowed name. When I returned to him with that information I inquired why he wanted to know, and he said he had 100 shares, or, at least a certificate for 100 shares when the shares would be issued, and they were making so much clamor about it in the newspapers, he did not know but that if he could find a bona fide purchaser in a regular business way he would sell it. In a spasm of generosity, I suppose, I told him if that embarrassed him at all I would take it from him at the price he paid for it.

Q. Did you make that offer at the instance of any other person?—A. No, sir. I had never had any conversation about it up to that time with any other person. Senator Vest is an old friend of mine. I lived in Missouri with him and have known him for a long time, and I thought it might relieve him of some little embarrassment. I supposed that if the stock was worth anything it was worth what he originally paid for it.

Q. What response did the Senator make to your offer?—A. He made no conclusive response at the time. I don't remember what the conversation was, but afterwards he wrote me a note, thanking me for the offer, and stating that he considered the clamor and the strictures upon him entirely unjust and that he had come to the conclusion he would retain the stock. I think I have that note, if you want to embellish your proceedings with it.

Q. I will read you the testimony of the Senator:

"Since this matter has been agitated in the newspapers an offer has been made to me for the purchase of my stock upon terms which would prevent any loss on my part; but I declined to sell at any price, for two reasons: first, because I did not choose to even appear in the attitude of apologizing for what I had done, or attempting to evade the issue as presented by certain newspapers; and second, because I do not propose to be coerced by any sort of clamor from any source into disposing of property which I had bought and honestly paid for until I thought proper, on my own judgment and for my own interest, to do so."

You say the Senator made a reply to you by note?—A. Yes, sir; very much to the purport of his remarks in his testimony. I will say that he afterwards saw me, after he had given this evidence, and in a measure excused himself for having brought my name into the transaction. He said he did not state the name originally, and did not care to make me at all conspicuous in it, but somebody put the question to him and asked him to give the name, and he did give my name. That is all I remember about it. I never had a share of this stock and knew nothing about its value at the time I made that proposition.

Q. I do not recall that the Post has taken much part in the agitation of this question?—A. I have been away so much, sir, during the time that it has been agitated that I am probably more ignorant than almost anybody else as to what the paper has said about it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I care to ask you.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you say you had the letter from Senator Vest?—A. I haven't it here. I did not know what I was being called here for.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to see it.

The WITNESS. Would it serve the purpose equally well if I inclosed it to the chairman of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Q. Do you say you went to see Senator Vest at his request, or at your own instance?—A. At his request. He was quite ill at the time. It was just after he had been taken ill. He was reclining on a sofa in the lobby of the Senate at the time. He had noticed this advertisement in the want column of the paper—somebody wanted to buy Pan-Electric stock—and he sent for me to inquire if I knew who was the author of the advertisement.

Q. And then you tried to ascertain?—A. Yes, sir; I went to the cashier of the establishment and asked him, and he said he did not know. I think the name signed to the advertisement was "Banker."

Q. All you knew was it was some anonymous person?—A. We knew it was an anonymous advertisement as the answers were to be addressed to "Banker." Anybody having a card authorizing him to take out the letters addressed to that name could come and get them. It is very easy for a person to put an advertisement in the paper and we not know who he may be.

Q. Somebody paid for it I suppose?—A. Somebody paid for it at the time it was put in.

Q. Who paid for it?—A. "Banker;" whoever put it in.

Q. Didn't he leave his address?—A. Oh, no, sir. We give them a card and on presentation of the card they can receive any communication addressed to the name given. We do not seek to know who they are.

Q. Did anybody ever call for the answers to that advertisement?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. Did anybody ever call for the stock?—A. They called for the answers received to the advertisement, if there were any, probably. I don't know whether there were any answers.

Q. Did you go to Senator Vest for the purpose of buying his stock for that man?—A. Oh, no, sir. It seems I have not made myself understood. There was an advertisement in the paper stating that anybody having Pan-Electric stock to sell—I think the advertisement said the original stock—could find a purchaser by addressing "Banker," care of the Post newspaper. Senator Vest saw that advertisement and sent a note to me asking if I would not come up to the Senate chamber and see him, as he was too unwell to come to see me. I went, and found his object was to inquire if I knew who was the person who put that advertisement in the paper. I told him I did not, but I would inquire; and I went back to the cashier and inquired, and he did not know. I then returned to Senator Vest and told him it was not possible to ascertain who it was; and from that sprang the conversation in regard to it. He said he would like to dispose of his stock if he could get a bona fide purchaser for it in a legitimate business way, as he did not value it very highly; and then I proceeded to make my offer to take it off his hands at the price he paid for it.

Q. I think your remark was that you thought you might relieve him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From what?—A. From the embarrassment and the stock, both at the same time.

Q. What embarrassment?—A. If he was embarrassed at all by the newspaper clamor which had been raised about a Senator of the United States owning stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. That was the embarrassment you wanted to relieve him from?—A. Yes, sir; a sort of technical embarrassment. I do not know that it was a real embarrassment.

Q. What was the price you were going to pay?—A. I told him I would pay him whatever it cost him; that I would take it off his hands at the price it cost him, which I think was $1,000.

Q. Did you know what it cost him?—A. He told me he had paid $1,000, I think, for 100 shares, $10 a share.

Q. You did not think it was worth that, did you?—A. Oh, no; I did not; and do not now.

Q. It was a pure act of kindness?—A. Yes, sir; as I said, a sort of spasm of generosity.

Q. You were willing to suffer a loss of $1,000 to relieve him from embarrassment?—A. Well, I might.

Q. That was the motive, was it?—A. I could not say it was the motive.

Q. Did you offer to relieve Senator Harris in that way, too?—A. No, sir; I did not. I was not bound to Senator Harris by so many ties of long acquaintance.

Q. You wanted to relieve Senator Vest because of your personal relations. Did you inquire then to ascertain whether Pan-Electric stock was worth anything?—A. I did not. I was quite confident it was not.

Q. Had the Pan-Electric Company advertised much in your newspaper?—A. I am not aware that they ever had; possibly to the extent of $10 or $15 in the society or corporation notices; no more than that. Perhaps it may not be out of place to say that I was offered a considerable amount of the Pan-Electric stock for publishing some of Dr. Rogers's poetry, but that I declined. I regret that I did not write a letter, as Mr. Cox did, and tell him he was too fluent with it. I let that opportunity pass.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you decline the poetry or the stock?—A. I thought they were both very bad.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see by one letter of Senator Harris's that I am going to put in, that some poetry had been sent to him, and he wrote back that he did not need any bribe to read the poetry; that it was good.—A. I suppose he meant it was so bad it was good; I don't see any other way.

Q. Did you ever the poetry at all?—A. I never did; I have got that yet before me.

Q. You do not know whether it is good or not, then, do you?—A. I think I once read an invocation of Dr. Rogers's to Jeff. Davis, or something of that kind, and I resolved mentally never to read anything more that had his name attached to it.

Q. Do I understand you to say that the stock was sent to you as an inducement to read his poetry?—A. No, sir; a promise of stock, I think it was; I don't know which Rogers it was, but it was the poet Rogers; I do not want to do him any injustice, but I think his letter stated that the stock was coming up in the market, and that he had written this poetry and would like to have it published, and if I would publish it he would give me $10,000 worth of Pan-Electric stock.

Q. Have you got that letter?—A. No, I don't think I have. We receive so many letters from cranks that I don't keep them all.

Q. Can you give us about the date of it?—A. I should say it was about a year ago. It was contemporaneous with Jeff. Davis's birthday; I don't remember when it was.

Q. Was there any allusion to his birthday in it?—A. Oh, I think it was an invocation to Davis on the approach of the anniversary of his birth. That was what made him boil over into poetry.

Q. And grow liberal toward you in stock?—A. Yes, sir; all his emotions seemed to be aroused by that event.

Q. Just before this Government suit, somewhere in April or May, 1885, was there not an article published in your paper on the power of the Attorney-General to order a suit in the name of the United States?—A. Very likely. We give the Attorney-General a great deal of advice. We are in the habit of giving the Attorney-General advice from time to time, and it is quite likely there may have been such an article.

Q. There was a pretty elaborate article upon his legal power, was there not?—A. I do not remember; I haven't the slightest knowledge of it.

Q. Were you, as early as that, advising him as to his power of bringing suit in the name of the Government?—A. I was not, personally, but I should not wonder if our editorial staff were.

Q. Do you know how it happened it was done just about the time the Pan-Electric Company wanted a suit of that kind brought?—A. I do not, sir. It is, probably, one of those coincidences that sometimes appear. I cannot account for it.

Q. Perhaps you can bring us that article and tell us who wrote it.—A. If you will give me the date, I will bring the paper.

Mr. RANNEY. It was during the month of April or May, 1885. I would like to see the article, and I would like to know, if you can tell us, who wrote it.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the 24th of May.

Mr. RANNEY. It was prior to the 24th of May, because Dr. Rogers said he had seen it then.

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection is that he went out at once and bought copies and sent them off the same day.

Mr. RANNEY. It must have been prior to that.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Possibly it may have been on that same day.

Mr. RANNEY. I think he said the Post and some other paper, the Capital, or the Chronicle, perhaps.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated it was about the time the Pan-Electric Company was desirous to have the suit brought. That cannot be entirely correct, because, as I recollect it, the article itself suggested to Dr. Rogers the bringing of a suit in the name of the Government. That was the first suggestion.

Mr. RANNEY. That is true so far as Dr. Rogers's evidence is concerned; but there is some other evidence that will come out in time that it had been contemplated by others.

The CHAIRMAN. No evidence of that sort has been received yet.

Mr. RANNEY. I know it is not in, but something I have seen indicates that. I want to know what is the fact as to that article, and where it emanated from.

The WITNESS. I will try to ascertain. Did Dr. Rogers allude to the article in his testimony?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; I think the Washington Post was one of the papers. There were two. They were said to be very able articles. I presume you have an able corps of men there?—A. Oh, very able; yes, sir.

Q. Any lawyers?—A. Well, sort of decayed lawyers occasionally get on the paper; no lawyers in active practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Competent to advise the Attorney-General, however?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. You don't know whether the Attorney-General acted on the newspaper article or not?

The WITNESS. I haven't the slightest idea that he did; but of course I don't know.

Q. You are not aware that the article appeared simultaneously in two papers in Washington?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether General Butler wrote it?

The WITNESS. Ben. Butler?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I think I am safe in saying he did not. He writes very little for us.

Mr. HALL. You wouldn't have taken it if he had?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; I would have taken it; but he writes very little for the Post.

Q. Can you ascertain whether the article originated with any person connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I can, I think. My son, who is managing the paper, is not here at this time.

Q. You do not know whether the article came from the Department of Justice itself. They are said to be very able there, and may aid the committee in coming to a conclusion on the law.—A. I should not have much hope of that, but still I will try and find out.

Mr. RANNEY. We get a good deal of advice and a good deal of useful information from the papers.

The WITNESS. No doubt; but do you act on it?

Mr. RANNEY. Sometimes we investigate it.

The WITNESS. I will say further about Dr. Rogers that he was in the habit of writing me a good many letters about this Pan-Electric matter and I never read one of them.

Q. Have you kept them?—A. No; of course not.

Mr. RANNEY. His letters might be of use.

The WITNESS. I think too many of them have been kept.

Q. You have rather slurred his poetry. Did you ever read any of it?—A. Nothing but the invocation to Jeff. Davis. I graduated on that.

Q. Was that published in your paper?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. That was what he sent you on the birthday of Jeff. Davis?—A. I think so.

Q. And that was the only poetry of his you ever heard?—A. The only piece.

Q. You would not consider yourself competent to judge of a man's poetry, would you, without reading more of it than that?—A. I think the less I read of it the more impartial I would be.

Q. It would be like criticising a book you never read?—A. Certainly.

Q. Which you often do?—A. Frequently.

Mr. MILLARD. I want to ask Mr. Hutchins a question on another branch, which I think it is my duty to put.

The CHAIRMAN. Not on poetry, I suppose?

Mr. MILLARD. No.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You being a newspaper man, I want to know if you know of any official or member of Congress who has been improperly influenced through the press?

The WITNESS. On any subject?

Mr. MILLARD. By the Pan-Electric Company.

A. No, sir; I do not. I do not know anything about it at all. I haven't paid a particle of attention to it.

Mr. MILLARD. I supposed so; but we are required to investigate, and I thought it was very proper to put the question to you, as you are the first newspaper man who has been on the stand.

Mr. EDEN. You omitted to ask about the influence of the Bell Company.

Mr. MILLARD. I will ask about that, as I want to cover the whole ground.

Q. Do you know of any influence, proper or improper, that the Bell Telephone Company has exercised on members of Congress, or any officials?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about them at all, either the Pan-Electric or the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. OATES. You ought to refer to the resolution, perhaps.

Mr. MILLARD. I think I had better read the resolution.

Mr. OATES. It refers to the newspaper press.

Mr. MILLARD. That is the question I put. [To the witness:] Let me read you this, so that we shall not neglect our duty in this respect:

"And the said committee is further authorized and directed to ascertain and report whether either of the telephone companies herein mentioned, or their officers, agents, or employes, have in any manner improperly influenced or attempted to influence officials or official action by or through the public press, and, if so, when, by whom, and in what manner such influence was exercised or attempted to be exercised, and what newspaper or newspapers."

Q. You know nothing of that kind?—A. Nothing of that kind. There has been no approach to me in any way by either of the companies, except, as I say, these letters of Dr. Rogers's, in which he seemed to be quite copious with his stock, a long while ago. I paid no attention to them. I don't think I ever answered them. I just tore them up and let them pass out of my mind until this investigation.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I suppose you would not consider it being improperly influenced to receive money for inserting articles in the paper?

The WITNESS. What do you mean? In the shape of advertisements or news?

Mr. RANNEY. Either, if they are articles you do not object to of themselves.

A. That opens up a subject on which a good deal might be said, and ought to be said very carefully. We never consider it good form to receive money for the publication of any article which purports to be the editorial expression of opinion of the paper. We very frequently allow persons to insert communications for which, if they are not of sufficient interest to the public, compensation is taken at so much a line, as advertising matter. I suppose all the newspapers do that. Of course we are paid for advertising. But we never allow anybody to write an editorial or to procure an editorial opinion of the paper and pay money for it. That is considered a sale of the influence of the paper.

Q. Had not Dr. Rogers been in the habit for some time past of advertising considerably in your paper?—A. Very little. I remember once receiving a letter from him inclosing an advertisement, and also inclosing a check for $20, but that was long before these gentlemen who are now associated with him had anything to do with the enterprise; Mr. Young and others.

Q. Had not the Washington Telephone Company been in the habit of advertising?—A. I will say that I never heard of that company until this investigation came up, and I don't know what it is; I remember that check of Dr. Rogers for $20, because it was quite a surprise to me to have anything from him that didn't have feet to it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you recall the fact of Dr. Rogers offering something to you for publication in your paper?—A. I don't know Dr. Rogers; I would not know him if he was in the room.

Q. He has stated the fact somewhere, either in his testimony or otherwise.—A. I saw that he had, and that he said I rebuffed him very haughtily, or something of that sort. I am not in the habit of doing it.

Mr. RANNEY. In order to aid you in looking for the article in the Post I will read you what Dr. Rogers said about it in his testimony. I read from page 52:

"The Washington Post did not refer to the Reis or Bell patents, or anything of that kind. It was just simply an item of news to the effect that pursuant to an order of Attorney-General Brewster suit had been brought in New York by the United States authorities to vacate a patent for some sort of painting on glass, which patent had been made so broad, or had been obtained through fraud, that Brewster's agents in the Department of Justice had cancelled it absolutely. Seeing that, I thought ours was a much stronger case than that presented in the article."

I wish you would find that article and let us have it.

The WITNESS. I will obtain it.

Mr. HENRY H. SMITH then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) to examine Mr. Smith, as he has been subpoenaed at his request.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. What is your relation to the House?—Answer. I am the journal clerk of the House.

Q. How long have you been such?—A. Twelve years.

Q. As journal clerk, you have charge of what?—A. Of the journal of the House. I keep the minutes of its proceedings.

Q. And you have an office as such in the House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Casey Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember of his coming to your office last year to see about a bill relating to the bringing of suits in the name of the United States to cancel patents?—A. Yes, sir; I remember it.

Q. What do you remember about it?—A. I remember that Mr. Young came into the office one day to inquire for a copy of a bill that had passed in the previous Congress. He said he had not been able to put his hands on it, and asked me if I could get it for him. I looked it up and said that the bill had not become a law according to our index. He insisted rather strenuously that it had become a law; that he was pretty well satisfied about it; in fact, I think he said he knew it was so. He said he would return, and went out. In the meantime I traced it, looked up the Senate Journal, and found the bill had never been reported from the Senate Committee on Patents, to which it was referred early in January. The bill passed the House in January at the first session of the last Congress.

Q. Was that all that was said about it?—A. Yes, sir; that was about all.

Q. Was anybody else with him, or had anybody been there about that time or before?—A. I think a reporter of the Star had been there to look it up. There was a story a short time before that that the bill had been stolen from the Senate files, and I looked it up for a reporter and showed him the impossibility of that, because it was nothing but the engrossed bill, which could easily be replaced. It was different from an original paper. We retain the originals on the files of the House always. There is no trouble about duplicating anything of that sort.

Q. What is the bill that goes to the Senate after it passes the House?—A. It is an engrossed bill.

Q. It is not a printed bill?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you learn that the bill had been stolen?—A. No, sir; the bill is still on our files.

Q. You know Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. When was it that Mr. Young came to you?—A. My impression was it was a very short time before I left Washington for California. It was the latter part of June, to the best of my recollection, or the early part of July. I left Washington on the 10th of July.

Q. That would fix it. You left Washington on the 10th of July. Where did you go?—A. To California.

Q. The 10th of July, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you fix that date so that there will be no mistake about it?—A. Yes, sir; I referred to a diary of my trip that I kept.

Q. How long were you gone?—A. I returned to Washington on the 23d of September.

Q. Could it have been after the 10th of July?—A. I don't remember distinctly as to that, but that is my impression. I don't remember anything about it after I returned, except that somebody came in there, I don't know who he was, a stranger to me, and I think it is quite likely some newspaper reporter, or somebody else, came in with him and pointed me out as the gentleman who could give him the information, and he asked me for some information about this bill.

Q. That was after your return?—A. After my return; yes, sir.

Q. You returned the 23d of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think you would know the man who came in after your return, if you should see him?—A. No, sir; he was a stranger. I had never seen him before or since, to my knowledge.

Q. Of course you could not have told Mr. Young about it in July, or August, or September before the 23d, if you were away?—A. I might have told him early in July or late in September; I don't know exactly when. I know I was asked in San Francisco by a reporter on the Alta-Californian, I think, about the bill having been stolen from the files of Congress, as has been charged.

Q. When was that?—A. That was in the latter part of August. He asked me specifically as to this patent bill, and I said there was nothing in it at all, because I had looked it up for a Washington newspaper man; I think it was Mr. Miller, of the Star, though I am not sure.

Q. You are confident Casey Young came in also?—A. Yes, sir; that is my remembrance.

Q. Can there be any mistake about it?—A. I remember distinctly his coming in, but I don't remember distinctly about the date. That is my impression, and I feel reasonably sure about it.

Q. You don't know whether it was before you went away or after you came back?—A. I would not say positively that it was before or after. It was not a thing that made any impression upon me at all, but it may have been the latter part of September or early in October. I recollect the fact of his coming in and the conversation. He was very positive; in fact he rather questioned the accuracy of the books when he first came in. He said he was confident the bill was a law; he was very sure of it. I was equally sure it was not, because I had looked it up a short time before.

Q. That was the first visit of Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your best recollection is it was before you left?—A. That is my impression. I thought it over, and in connection with the circumstances about looking up the matter for the Star reporter, I fix it early in July or very late in June.

Q. Did you ever know of anybody having any Pan-Electric stock in the House?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never got any?—A. No, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. The journal does not show it.

The WITNESS. The Journal does not show it; nor anything else.

By Mr. YOUNG:

Q. Do you remember distinctly whether it was in September, or in July or June, that I asked you about this bill?—A. No, sir; I do not. I cannot remember the date distinctly. It is only a vague impression.

Q. Do you remember having a conversation with me about it a short time ago?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what occurred?—A. You asked me if I could fix the date and I said I could not; my impression was it was in the latter part of June or early in July. You thought it must have been late in September, and I said it possibly might have been; that I could not remember; I couldn't be positive about it; that it was a mere impression on my mind at the time.

Q. Have you any recollection of seeing me in June at all?—A. Nothing beyond that visit to the room. I have no special remembrance upon the point beyond the inquiry you made when you came in, at whatever time it was, to make the inquiry. There was nothing about it particularly that would impress the matter upon my memory. I just remembered it in a vague way, and then I remembered it in connection with the fact that I was asked about it in San Francisco, and that I had this knowledge about it. That fixed it upon my mind that the interview occurred early in July.

Q. That was in reference to the stealing of the bill, was it not?—A. Yes, sir, and it brought up the fact that I had been inquired of about it.

Q. Did I say anything about it being stolen?—A. No, sir; the other gentleman who made the inquiry was the one who asked about its being stolen.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was a stranger. I don't know who he was.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. This conversation could not have been on the 31st of July or the 1st of August?—A. Not the conversation with me, because I was in the Yellowstone Park on the 3d of August.

Mr. MOFFATT. That was Colonel Young's testimony, as I understood it.

The WITNESS. There were other gentlemen in the room. Some one is there on duty all summer.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Who was there?—A. I think my assistant, Mr. Cochran, was there, engaged in some work, and Mr. Wiggins, who is an assistant to the printing clerk, was also there.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. How did you happen to look at your diary?—A. I was asked to refer to it.

Q. By whom?—A. Mr. Young first came to me and asked me about it. He asked me if I was sure about it, and I stated my impression, as I said. I said that was my impression, but I would look it up. As to the dates, I remembered generally that I left Washington shortly after the 4th. I did not know just what date, but I have examined my diary.

Q. Has any other person besides Mr. Young called your attention to it?—A. I think Mr. Moffatt came to me on the floor and asked me where I was, or about my movements.

Q. And then you examined your diary, to be precise about the dates?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know how early in the year the laws of the last Congress were published?—A. They are published in pamphlet form within a few days after the adjournment of Congress, but they are not indexed and furnished to members for some months. I think it takes some weeks or months to print them as indexed.

Q. Would it take from the 4th of March until August?—A. It frequently happens that delays in the printing follow from the failure to furnish indexes. They are sometimes not printed until late in the summer or fall.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say there are some copies printed shortly after the adjournment?—A. Yes, sir; those are furnished to the document rooms in slip or pamphlet form.

Q. Not sent out to members?—A. No, sir; not sent out to the members until along in the fall, or sometimes the winter following.

Q. Do you recall at what time the laws of the Forty-eighth Congress were sent out?—A. No, sir; that would not come under my notice at all.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is no other witness present I would like to recall Mr. Young.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no other witness present.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG was then recalled and further examined.

Mr. RANNEY. There are certain matters that Mr. Millard desires to examine you upon. I find in these letters reported as irrelevant by the subcommittee some I consider important, several of them from Colonel Young, and I want to put them into the record. But I will first examine them and see what they are, while Mr. Millard is putting his questions.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. When was your appearance before the Secretary of the Interior?

The WITNESS. Do you mean when I appeared before him the first time?

Mr. MILLARD. I mean upon the reference of the second application.

A. I don't remember the date; the record there will show. I have no memorandum at hand by which I can fix the date, but I think it was some time in November; I do not remember distinctly.

Q. Do you recollect the number of days that you and Colonel Gantt were before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Oh, we were there a good many days. I think the hearing lasted for two weeks, perhaps, or more; I don't remember exactly, but for a considerable length of time. I could, by looking at the hotel register, tell you about the time I came here and about the time the hearing was concluded.

Q. It was some time in November?—A. Yes, sir; and it possibly may have lasted into December; I don't remember what time in November it commenced; I have no memorandum.

Q. Did Colonel Gantt make an oral argument upon that occasion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you also?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to inquire if there is any new matter to be developed by pursuing this inquiry. I cannot see the use of going over ground which has been gone over before.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose Mr. Millard is approaching the matter he desires to inquire about.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not going to ask about anything I have inquired about before.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed with your questions.

Q. Did you also submit written briefs?—A. Yes, sir; they were submitted some days after. We were given ten days, I believe, within which to prepare briefs, and they were submitted at some time within that period; I do not remember the exact date.

Q. Under date of December 7 I find this entry in the cash book of your company: "Expressage on records and briefs sent to Colonel Gantt;" what briefs were those?—

A. That was his own brief.

Q. The brief that he used before the Department of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir; it was printed after he left. He prepared the brief after the argument was made, and I expressed it to him.

Q. That was the brief that he used before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I do not know that he used the brief in his argument; he probably may have had the manuscript of it, but I think he prepared it after the argument was made, and I had it printed after he went home.

Q. But it contained the same matter?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, was it?—A. I handed it in print to the Secretary after he had gone home; I handed it to him with my brief.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. This charge for expressage, $1.20, was paid by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I don't remember the fact, but the charge is there, and I take it for granted that is correct. I sent him some of the records also.

Q. Under date of November 20, 1885, there is this entry: "Paid for copying record of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, $60.60."—A. Well, the various papers that had been filed, the applications and petitions and various original papers, had got scattered about everywhere, and we could not get them together and so I had them collected and had them copied and put together.

Q. The Pan-Electric Company paid this item of $60.60, did it?—A. Yes, whatever the sum is there—that is, we paid one-third of it. I charged it all there, but the other companies paid me afterwards a portion of it.

Q. Do I understand that your company paid but one-half of it?—A. No, sir; we paid one-third of it, the Globe Telephone Company paid one-third, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen paid one-third.

Q. You charged the full amount, and they compensated you in proportion?—A. Yes, sir; I charged the full amount, because I paid the whole of it myself.

Q. I will pass that for the present. Under date of December 16, I find, "Paid J. J. Linney for stenographic report of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, $100."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that these same proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir; and he did some other work for me besides that.

Q. Some other work for the company?—A. Well, yes; for the company. He helped to write my brief. I had been disabled in my arm, and employed him.

Q. Here is another item: "Paid R. O. Polkinhorn, for printing record of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, $524.10."—A. Yes, sir; we had the record printed.

Q. That is these same proceedings?—A. Yes, sir; the big book you have got there before you. I paid the whole of it, and I was paid back a portion afterwards.

Q. Here is another: "December 16, printing Colonel Gantt's brief, $78.95."—A. That was an amended brief, and a reprint. When I sent Colonel Gantt the first lot of briefs they were so badly printed, had so many mistakes in them, that Colonel Gantt wrote back a letter asking me to have it reprinted, and refusing to send after these briefs at all. He said there were so many mistakes in it he would not send it out, and I had it reprinted.

Q. That was for printing the brief that was submitted?—A. Yes, sir; and that accounts for its being printed twice; because the first print was so badly done that he complained about it and I had it reprinted.

Q. Then here is some charge for work done, assistance in preparing the brief, on the same date, $23.—A. That is some writing, I think, done for myself, perhaps.

Q. Under date of December 16, "Paid C. M. Boswell, for stenographic work, $10."—A. That was for writing letters or me or the company. That is a young man in the house here, a reporter. I got him to write some letters for me.

Q. Under date of October 21, "J. E. Johnston, for expenses, $25." Do you recollect what that was for?—A. It was for office-rent—at least, I think that is what it was for; I do not remember anything else that he could have paid. He paid the office-rent in my absence at some time, and I think I paid it back to him. That was the rent of the office—the amount he paid. He frequently paid the rent when I was away.

Q. What office was that?—A. The office of the company—No. 604 13th street.

Q. That item I find is $25.80?—A. Well, we paid $25 a month rent, and I take it that is one month's rent that he paid. I don't recollect the item, but I could tell by looking at my vouchers.

Q. What office do you say it was?—A. The office of the Pan-Electric Company, at No. 604 13th street.

Q. Under date of November 3, I find, "Isham G. Harris, $51.34." Do you know what that was for?—A. I do not. I could tell by looking at my papers. It may have been for some patents or something of that sort that he frequently paid for when I was away.

Q. Under date of November 7, "George Gantt for expenses, $30"?—A. Yes; I paid his expenses here. I gave him some amount of money; I don't know what it was.

Q. That was for coming and going, and his expenses here?—A. That was a part of it; that could not be the whole amount.

Q. Under date of November 21, "Bill of Colonel Gantt at Ebbitt House, $74"?—A. I paid that. I paid his bill, and I paid all his expenses.

Q. That was while he was here in attendance on these proceedings?—A. Yes, sir; I paid his expenses here and while he was here. I did not come with him I think, but I asked him for an account of his expenses, and paid it after I got here.

Q. Here is another item: "December 31, boxes shipped of records and briefs to Memphis and New Orleans, $0.25."—A. I think that was the second lot of briefs I sent to him, and probably some of my own. I shipped Mr. Van Benthuyzen some of the briefs—some of mine and some of Colonel Gantt's.

Q. Briefs that were used in these proceedings here?—A. Yes, sir; and his own. He prepared a brief, I believe.

Q. These boxes were shipped containing these records and briefs to Memphis and New Orleans?—A. I shipped some to him at the same time, and probably some of my briefs too, both the briefs that I printed and shipped to him.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Right there. Did you ship the original copies of the record of the hearing before the Interior Department to New Orleans when you were shipping them?—A. Oh, no, sir; not the original; I shipped the printed one.

Q. I mean the printed original record.—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Let me inquire right there, what do you mean by the original record?—A. I take it that this is the same record here that I shipped to him, the printed record. I do not remember very distinctly about it.

Q. Was there more than one?—A. Oh, yes, sir; we had a hundred or two printed.

Q. I mean was there more than one edition of this print?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Is this a record that was printed by your authority for which that item of four hundred and odd dollars was paid for printing?—A. Yes, sir; that is one of the copies of it. I believe I had one hundred copies printed, or something like that.

By Mr. MILLARD.

Q. There is another entry: "December 31, board at Ebbitt House, $195.78." I presume that was for Colonel Gantt's board while he was here?—A. Well, that seems a little large. Isn't there another charge behind that?

Q. I have called your attention to one charge.—A. What was the former charge—$7.

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I presume that is correct, then. It is on the book, and I have the vouchers for it in my room. I cannot remember; the account I expect is as called out there. I did pay whatever his expenses were, but I don't remember the amount.

Q. Here is another item under the same date: "For printing briefs, $100."—A. That was for printing my briefs.

Q. Your own briefs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they used?—A. They were used here.

Q. Before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir. I prepared it some days after the argument, like the others. They were a little longer printing mine; they had a good deal of work on hand, and it was delayed. They had to be corrected, as the work was rather badly done at first.

Q. Under date of August 28 is this entry: "Hattie W. Miller, for copying bill, 55 pages, at 8 cents per page, and Grace J. Lonergan, copying 27 pages, at 8 cents," one for $4.40 and the other $4.18.—A. I don't remember about that, but I think it was the first copy, perhaps, of the bill that was afterwards filed. As I said the other day, I wrote a bill myself, which these gentlemen rejected. I think it is probable that that is the bill. Those ladies were in the habit of writing for me, and I presume that is what it was. I was not in Memphis on the 28th of August. I reckon the date is wrong; or it may have been written when I was gone, and I paid it when I went back.

Q. It was the bill to be used in the suit by Colonel Gantt?—A. I don't know about it. I had a bill which I wrote according to my own idea, and handed to these gentlemen and they rejected it.

Q. Handed it to whom?—A. To Colonel Gantt and Mr. Beckwith.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you hand it to them in Memphis or send it to New Orleans?—A. In Memphis; I did not send it to New Orleans.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. It was the one used in that proceeding?—A. It was not the bill used. I wrote one myself, as I explained the other day. I had some ideas about the character of the bill that ought to be filed, and I wrote out such a bill as I thought we ought to file, and that may be the one they copied. These ladies were in the habit of doing writing for me; I could not write very well myself.

Q. Have you any doubt whether that was the one?—A. I think it is, but I cannot say positively.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was there any other bill that you had copied?—A. Well, after I left, that being on the 28th of August, it is possible that those gentlemen may have gone to my office and had it copied, and I paid it when I returned. I could tell by looking at their receipt.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. There were fifty-five pages copied by one clerk and twenty-seven pages by another; wouldn't that indicate it was the bill?—A. It must have been divided up, then.

Q. It could not have been any other bill?—A. I don't know of any other except that they might have written one after I left which I did not know anything about. I take it for granted it was the bill I wrote myself.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You have vouchers that would explain that, have you?—A. I think I can find their receipts giving the date.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. It was here in Washington?—A. No, sir; it was at home. I left home on the 27th of August. It is possible that in transcribing it the clerk put it on the book and got the date wrong. It may have been the 28th instead of the 27th, or it may have been the 27th that I paid it. I could not have paid it on the 28th in Memphis, because I was on my way to Washington then.

Q. Here is another item: "My bill at Mrs. Bryan's, four days, $10."—A. Yes, sir; that is at 1337 G street, I think, where I staid sometimes when I was in Washington. What is the date of that?

Q. August 4.—A. Well, I think I went there from the Ebbitt House. I came to the Ebbitt House, as I remember, on the 30th, and staid there a day or two, and then went over to the rooms I had been in the habit of accupying at Mrs. Bryan's, close by.

Q. You had occupied rooms there?—A. Yes, sir; I had been in the habit of having rooms there occasionally when I was here. I may have gone there about the 3d or 4th, and staid until the 7th, which was about the time I left here. I was in the habit of having rooms there when I came to Washington.

Q. Do you recall any particular business that you transacted there at Mrs. Bryan's?—A. O no, sir; I did not transact any business there; I simply had lodgings there, and took my meals, I believe, at the Ebbitt House. I have been in the habit of staying there for some years when I would come to Washington. I may have written some letters there for the company; probably I did.

Q. Here is an item under date of August 24: "Hufty & Dyer, rent, $25."—A. That is the rent of the office.

Mr. MILLARD. I think that is all I wanted to call your attention to, but still there may be some other questions.

Senator HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, if it would not interrupt the proceedings, I would be very glad to indicate to the committee the corrections I desire to make in my testimony—my last day's testimony—so that I can go back to my rooms, as I am too ill to remain here.

Mr. RANNEY. I would allow that if it were not that I want to examine the witness a little further upon some letters that I have found.

Senator HARRIS. Then I will come before the committee at the first moment whenever I feel able, and if I am not able I will be glad to have them come to me. I have not been well for two or three days.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose there is no objection to Senator Harris's making the corrections now?

Mr. RANNEY. If he has written them out I am willing to take them as though he had made them before the committee.

Senator HARRIS. I have made a number of verbal corrections, which I have indicated on this paper.

Mr. RANNEY. I supposed you had made all the necessary corrections yesterday.

Senator HARRIS. No; those related to the first day. I have refreshed my memory in regard to certain dates after consultation with the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the clerk of the Committee on Inter-State Commerce, and that has enabled me to be a little more specific as to those matters, some matters about which I did not remember.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us see if we cannot shorten this. So far as there are alterations, either a change of a word, or matters of taste without changing the sense, if you will indicate them, we will let that be done as a matter of course. Then we can see what alterations of substance there are.

Senator HARRIS. All that this paper contains is additional answers explanatory of my previous answers, based on information that I have obtained. For instance, I have indicated that on page 354 I desire something to be added to my answer; it is a continuation of my answer. I would like to have the addition come in right there in connection with what I stated. It is done in most instances upon an examination of letters made since I gave my testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. It may be upon a matter that we want to determine about.

Senator HARRIS. In that case I am always accessible and always ready to be examined whenever any member of this committee may desire it.

Mr. RANNEY. We do not doubt that.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps you had better indicate how you want the changes to appear.

Senator HARRIS. For instance, on this memorandum I want to refer to page 354; it is No. 1 on this list. To show you how I have proceeded, I will turn to page 354. Now, there it is simply an addition. By looking at this paper you will see where No. 1 is to be inserted. I say here: "And for further answer I say that J. W. Rogers was never vice-president, director, or other officer of the Pan-Electric Telephone or Telegraph Company. I heard him say here on the witness stand that he was vice-president of the American Postal Telegraph Company, of which Mr. Shryock was president." Now, that is the additional answer that I want to give, because I want to get my answer definite, and it would appear from your examination that he was vice-president of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. That fact was never true. The next addition I desire to make is on page 358, and is marked No. 2. I don't remember what subject that is upon, but the record reads: "Were you here in Washington between the 31st of July and the 7th of August, 1885?—A. That I could not answer without getting the data from the records of the committee to which I referred yesterday." Then I proceed to show: "Since this question was propounded and answered, I have procured a statement from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, showing that he telegraphed me on the 24th of July, 1885, that I had been appointed by the Vice-President as a member of the Senate committee to attend the funeral of General Grant." Then I go on and explain: "That telegram was sent to Memphis, but as I was on the ranch in Texas at the time"—

Mr. RANNEY. That would unnecessarily incumber the record. If you will say that you were not here at that time, that would be sufficient.

Senator HARRIS. I would be satisfied with that, but I do not know how many questions such a statement would prompt you or some other member of the committee to ask.

Mr. RANNEY. If you would simply say that you find upon reference that you were not here, that would answer it.

Senator HARRIS. It will not amount to much. You will find everything else here of the same character, and I would be glad to see these things come in at their proper place. I have numbered them on these pages. The others you will find are merely verbal, except, perhaps, one single one. Now, I find this: "Do you remember that letter?—A. Oh, yes sir; I remember it very well. Q. That was while the hearing was going on before the Secretary of the Interior, was it not?" I answered that, "I expect it was after the Secretary's opinion, but I am not sure." I say here that "on reflection I am sure that it was some months before the opinion of Secretary Lamar was delivered, but I do not remember whether it was before or after the application was referred to him, but the record will show as to that;" and the record does show it. I hope the clerk will understand how these additions go in.

Mr. RANNEY. Couldn't you spend ten minutes here, and let me call your attention to several letters, so that I can put them in in their order?

Senator HARRIS. I would prefer to appear before the committee at some other time, at any hour it is desired.

Mr. RANNEY. I thought, however, we might put the letters in that bear your signature. They will be shown to you, and if you want to make any explanation about them you can have that opportunity.

Senator HARRIS. I will be glad to be notified if any letters are put in as to what they are. I will then determine whether I desire to make any explanation or not.

Mr. HALL. Let me understand how this matter is left.

Mr. RANNEY. I have said to Senator Harris that if there is no dispute about the handwriting, they will be put in the record, and if he does not wish—

Senator HARRIS. If you will show me the originals, I will determine in half a minute the genuineness of the letters.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, we will leave that matter to be determined.

The examination of the witness, Colonel YOUNG, was then resumed as follows:

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Under date of November 25 I find this item, "Paid Duncan S. Walker for legal services, in the matter of the barbed wire and torpedo cases in the Department of Justice, $100." Explain just what there is about that.—A. That came about in this way. I had heard of the torpedo and barbed-wire cases, and was unable to find the papers in the Department of Justice. I went up there and looked for them, but was unable to find but very few of them. There was a voluminous record. I learned there that Mr. Walker had been employed or appointed by Attorney-General Brewster to conduct those suits and to hear the arguments of Mr. Conkling, Mr. Harding, and Mr. Crowley in opposition to bringing them; I got that information at the Department. I went to see Mr. Walker. I found there was a pile of papers that big [indicating], and I did not have time to go through with them myself, and I consulted Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the other gentleman who was conducting the matter for the Globe Company, and we agreed to give Mr. Walker $100 to go through those papers and give us a report on them.

Q. Did you get his report?—A. Yes, sir; it is in that book (referring to the printed record of the Department of the Interior.)

Q. Was that report part of the papers presented to Secretary Lamar?—A. Oh, yes, sir; Mr. Walker was there himself. He made an oral argument also.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say Mr. Walker was employed by Attorney-General Brewster in those cases?—A. Yes, sir; in the torpedo and barbed wire cases. He was employed by him to look into the matter and assist the district attorney.

Q. What was the relation between Mr. Walker and Mr. Brewster?—A. I understand they are brothers-in-law; I do not know; I have heard so.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. The Pan-Electric Company employed him to look up that case and paid him $100 for his services?—A. Yes, sir; as we paid those other expenses.

Q. And his report was made part of the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Here is another item: "James O. Clephané, copying record in the barbed wire cases, Department of Justice, $15."—A. Yes, sir; we had some copies made. We did not copy the whole of them. It was a very voluminous record; it would have been a volume of itself. I had the original papers, however.

Q. All the items of money expended that I called your attention to are read from the cash-book of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.—A. I take it they are correct. I have not heard all the items called off, but I see they are correct on the book there.

Q. They are from one of your books which you kept as treasurer of the company?—A. Yes, sir. (After examining the book.) I have no doubt this is the book. Yes, this is my clerk's handwriting. He made these entries under my direction from entries I gave him. I had a memorandum-book and took them off, and he put them on that book.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I refer to page 24 E of the record of the Interior Department, at the bottom of the page, where it speaks of Professor Adams's compilation. We have not been able to get that from the Solicitor-General. He does not find it in the Department. Have you that compilation?—A. I have not got it here. There are some copies in town. I haven't got one of them here.

Q. Do you know who has one of them?—A. I think General Bradley T. Johnson has one of them.

Q. Do you know of anybody else who has?—A. I do not recall anybody now. I thought I gave one to Colonel Parke, but he tells me he has not got it. We had two or three hundred printed. I had letters from different parts of the country asking for them, and distributed them around among people. I have a few of them at home in Memphis.

Q. I see in one of the items read by Mr. Millard from your treasurer's book there is a reference to a box containing the records of the Interior Department, and you have identified one of them. How many copies of that did you send to New Orleans?—A. I do not remember now how many.

Q. There were several?—A. I think I sent about one-third of them.

Q. One-third of how many?—A. We had something over one hundred printed; probably I sent about thirty-five.

Q. You sent them to Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To be used in the suit pending there between the Bell and the National Improved Companies?—A. I don't know what he wanted with them.

Q. You knew there was a suit pending?—A. Yes, sir; he paid for one-third of them, and he asked me to send them to him when printed, and I did so.

Q. That case has recently been heard before Judge Billings?—A. Yes; I think so; I saw it in the papers—the argument of counsel.

Q. Were the copies that you sent him of the record of the Interior Department used in the hearing there, or did you get any new ones printed?—A. I did not get any new ones printed; Mr. Van Benthuyzen ordered some ten or fifteen copies printed with some of those affidavits left out.

Q. Was that done here or at New Orleans?—A. He ordered them to be printed at Polkinhorn's. I think Mr. Seixas probably attended to that. I heard of it at the time. They may have been issued at the same time these were; I don't remember.

Q. Did you send them in the box that you speak of?—A. I don't remember. Mr. Seixas looked after it, and he may have put them in the same box; very likely they were.

Q. Did you see one of those reprinted copies? You say that he got them printed here, leaving out certain affidavits.—A. I suppose I did, but I don't remember now.

Q. Were you aware of the fact that he got the record of the Interior Department printed, leaving out some of the affidavits?—A. No, sir; there was nothing left out before the Interior Department.

Q. I say when this case was argued before the Secretary of the Interior, this was printed and used as the record?—A. That was printed afterwards, I think.

Q. You had the record when you made your argument?—A. I think we had nothing but the original papers. Perhaps that was printed before the argument, but I understood—

Q. This record before the Interior Department I understand was printed, and you had arguments upon it, and it was the record of the papers actually put in before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir; that is what it is intended to be.

Q. Now, I want to know this: You seem to be aware of the fact that that book was, before you sent it down there, reprinted here.—A. None were reprinted at New Orleans that I know of.

Q. Were they reprinted here?—A. It was not reprinted. Mr. Van Benthuyzen had twelve or fifteen copies printed, leaving out one or two affidavits, I don't remember how many; one I do remember—the affidavit of Neipher. I learned that from a letter which Mr. Seixas had from him.

Q. I don't care about what you learned from a letter.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is scarcely proper for the witness to state what Mr. Van Benthuyzen did, unless he knows it personally.

The WITNESS. I do not know it of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know of your personal knowledge that Mr. Van Benthuyssen got a copy of that book printed here with a portion of it left out?—A. I will tell you what I do know about it.

Q. Personally, I mean.—A. I know personally that I saw twelve or fifteen of the records that I was told had a portion left out; I did not examine them.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. When was that?—A. At the time they were printed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What day was that?—A. I don't remember the date; I think it was some time in December.

Q. Was it before you sent the books?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I think it was just about the time those were delivered to him.

Q. And you yourself personally sent to New Orleans some of those reprints?—A. I am not certain about it, but I think I did send the whole box.

Q. How many reprinted ones were there?—A. Twelve or fifteen.

Q. How many of the first ones were there?—A. We had printed about 120—something over a hundred; I am not certain as to the number.

Q. Have you a copy of that?—A. I do not think I have; I have not looked.

Q. Did you examine it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you see what had been left out?—A. I don't know that I examined to see; but I understood that the affidavit of Neipher had been left out, and perhaps some others; I do not remember.

Q. You did understand that at the time, did you?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it at the time.

Q. The report was reprinted just as though it was a copy of the papers put in before the Interior Department?—A. I think so. I do not think there is any difference in it.

Q. You simply left out Neipher's affidavit?—A. No, sir; I did not leave it out; it was left out by him, I understand.

Q. And it was printed just as though it was a copy of the records?—A. Yes, sir. It is on just the same paper as the other.

Q. It was made to look just like the original?—A. I think so.

Q. It looked just like the original in all respects?—A. I think it had the same print and cover and everything.

Q. And you preserved the paging, too, in that copy, didn't you?—A. Oh, I do not know anything about it. The printer did all that. I didn't give any direction about the paging.

Q. Why did you have printed—you and Van Benthuyssen—what purported to be a copy of the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department, with part of it left out?—A. I will tell you what he said; that is all I know about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that is competent.

The WITNESS. I do not know myself that he did do it.

Mr. RANNEY. What he said is enough. You were not at New Orleans during the trial?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. You have seen the journal clerk, Mr. Smith, here to-day. Was he the man you made your inquiries of when you went up to the House of Representatives?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, that what you did here at the House, whenever you did come here, was at a time when he was there?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I talked to Mr. Smith about it.

Q. Then, if he was not here between the 10th of July and the 23d of September, you could not have seen him and made your inquiries of him on the 30th of July, 1885, when you said you did come?—A. If you will look at my testimony you will see I do not say that. I said at some time afterwards. I was not sure of the time; it was my impression it was at that very time, and I should have adhered to that belief, but he told me he was not here at the time, and it must have been afterwards, of course, as I was not here in June at all.

Q. Hadn't you talked with Mr. Smith before you gave your testimony?—A. No, sir; I never said a word to him.

Q. Your talk with Mr. Smith is since you have testified?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, we will leave it there. I don't wish to say anything more about it unless you do.

The WITNESS. I only want to say this: that Mr. Smith must be mistaken about my talking with him in June or July. I could not have done it at that time, I am sure, for in June I was not here; I left here on the 7th of July, and on the 10th of July, or about that time, I had a conversation in reference to this bill, in which I stated that it had become a law, and I know I did not know before that time that it had not.

Q. At the time of the talk with Mr. Smith?—A. No. I had a conversation with Mr. Van Benthuyzen on the 10th of July, in which I informed him that that was the law. Up to that time I thought it was.

Q. But when now do you say that you first learned it was not the law?—A. My impression still is that I learned it about the first of August or the 30th of July, when I was here.

Q. Of Mr. Smith?—A. That was my impression until he stated that he was not here; that was my best recollection about it, and I was satisfied it was so until I asked him the other day. So that it must have been at a later period than that. If you look at my testimony you will see I am not certain about the time.

Q. I want to call your attention to, and put in, a letter of yours. There are a good many of these letters reported as immaterial, which I deem very material. This letter is dated the 26th of July, 1884 (reading):

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1884.

DEAR DOCTOR: I inclose you, under direction your uncle, Dr. J. W. Rogers, two certificates of stock for fifty shares each, one in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and one in the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company, which shares of stock have been put to your credit on the books of the respective companies.

I think the stock valuable, and will within a reasonable period be worth in the neighborhood of par. I know all about the business affairs and financial condition of your uncle, and while the enterprises which he has been promoting will, I think, develop most valuable results, he has saved but little money, nearly all which he has realized having been used in making his instruments still more valuable and in bringing his various enterprises before the public.

The Pan-Electric Association proper, embraces all of Harry Rogers' inventions, but no stock books have yet been prepared for that. When they are you will have fifty shares issued to you.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Dr. W. B. ROGERS, Memphis, Tenn.

The WITNESS. That letter has been published in the papers as addressed to Dr. J. W. Rogers, but that is a mistake; it was addressed to Dr. W. B. Rogers, his nephew. I will give the circumstances under which that letter was written: Some time before this letter was written I was in Memphis and saw Dr. Rogers' brother, the father of this young man that it is directed to, Dr. William B. Rogers, a very intimate friend of mine, and I had a conversation with him. He came to see me to talk about his brother's affairs here in Washington City, telling me that his brother owed him some money, and he thought, perhaps, he was not able to pay it; and, also, they were consulting me generally (I was quite intimate with him) about his brother's business affairs.

After I came on to Washington, Dr. J. W. Rogers came to my room one day, and told me that he was in debt to his brother several thousand dollars, and that his brother had got the impression that he had made a great deal of money, and was rich enough to pay it, while the fact was that he was not, and there was some unpleasant feeling between them in respect to that, and he told me that he wanted to settle that by sending the doctor some of the stock of this company, and asked me to write him a letter giving him my views about it. I was anxious to settle any differences between them (they had always been my friends, especially the one in Memphis), and at his request, and under those circumstances, I wrote this letter, believing what I stated, that the stock would become valuable. It should have been directed to Dr. W. B. Rogers. I made a mistake in his name. That is how I came to write that letter at his request. He never delivered it, I know, because Dr. Rogers would not have given it out for publication if he had received it.

Q. I see in that letter that you sent a reference to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company—that you inclosed a certificate of each company.—A. Yes, sir; he asked me to do that—to send both.

Q. I thought you said no certificates had ever been issued by the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company.—A. I don't remember that there was ever but one issued. Let me look at the book now. [After an examination.] I did not send him one of these certificates. I sent him one of those little papers that my clerk wrote; that was the sort I sent him. The doctor asked me to make it out for the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company as well as the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and I directed my clerk to write one of those papers, that he would be entitled to stock when authorized to be issued by the board of directors, just the same as has been put in evidence already. But it appears that that letter was never sent, or it would not have been published. I know that he would not have allowed it to be published. [After an examination of the certificate book.] I see that no certificate of stock in the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company has been taken out of this book; they are all here now.

Q. You had your clerk write the paper?—A. Yes, sir; like those already put in evidence, saying that he would be entitled to so much stock in one of those companies when issued. Perhaps it would be proper for me to state further in connection with the writing of that letter that Dr. Rogers told me that his brother in Memphis had got the impression that he had made a great deal of money out of the instrument that he had sold to the National Secret Telephone Company, and he said that while he did get a good deal of money for that, he had spent the most of it in perfecting and making other inventions, paying his old debts, and other things, and did not have so much money as his brother thought he had.

Mr. RANNEY. I now call your attention to a letter written by you dated April 14, 1883, which I will put into the record:

Casey Young to Dr. Rogers.

LAW OFFICE OF YOUNG & MARTIN, 254 SECOND STREET,
Memphis, Tenn., April 14, 1883.

DEAR DOCTOR: I look at the matter as you do—that to fully develop and present to the best advantage the various inventions, will require, perhaps, more money than we could ourselves advance, and that to raise it we had possibly better sell some one or more of the invention, or a sufficient amount of stock for the purpose. I am still of opinion that we can sell the telephone appliance, as I wrote you before, for enough money to carry our other things along until we can put them upon a firm basis, and I recommend the experiment. I think I could sell the right to use them in Memphis for $5,000. I had a talk with Henry Montgomery yesterday, who is a practical telegrapher, and more, a man of very large wealth, and he said if the "cylinder" improvement would do what I told him it would, it was worth millions. But he asked me a great many questions about it which I was unable to answer. I have thought it would be a good idea for us to get him to go in with us if we can.

I will see Senator Harris to-day and confer with him about the charter. We can get one under the Tennessee law as broad as we desire it, but I am afraid that chartering here would not give us very high standing in the financial world.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

The WITNESS. I think you asked me about that letter before. I think that the word "telephone" as printed in that letter must be a mistake, that it should be "telegraph," because the cylinder is a telegraphic instrument, and Mr. Montgomery is a gentleman who has made a fortune in telegraphic enterprises. Dr. Rogers had represented it to him in a very favorable light, and if it was as represented, I thought it was very valuable, and so did Mr. Montgomery. I spoke to him about it, and I suppose I wrote this letter after having a talk with Mr. Montgomery at that time. I had not thought so much about selling stock and the hurt that it would do to any business enterprise, until I found out some time afterwards that Dr. Rogers's idea was simply to sell stock, and no part of the proceeds of it ever went into the treasury, and for that reason I thought it improper, that it would ruin any business enterprise. Mr. Montgomery would have been a very proper man to have had in an enterprise of that sort, because he is a man of large wealth and fine business capacity.

Mr. RANNEY. I now call your attention to, and put in, if it is not in already, a letter dated Washington, D. C., February 13, 1884, which is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1884.

My DEAR DOCTOR: General Johnston and myself both thought it proper to call a meeting of our company at once to consider Harry's letter, and he called it for this evening at 7 o'clock at my room, and requested me to notify you.

I still think there is some strange mistake about this matter, and that it ought to be corrected, if possible, before it goes any further. Harry's letter very clearly implies that there has been a demand for the stock alluded to and a refusal to deliver it, but I do not know of any reason whatever for this conclusion. I have in many instances, when you have sent me an order for stock, promptly delivered to the party presenting it exactly the kind of instrument agreed upon by every member of the company as I understand it. If you are in the slightest dissatisfied with existing agreements, I have no doubt but all the gentlemen connected with the matter will readily acquiesce in any new arrangement you may desire to make, or surrender the entire matter back into your hands. For myself, I would not incur the imputation of bad faith towards our friend for all the telephones in the world.

I would like for you to come a little while before the hour of meeting, so we may talk the matter over.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

That is addressed, "My dear doctor," but it does not say at the bottom to whom.

Mr. EDEN. Why do you wish to introduce that letter again?

Mr. RANNEY. If it is in already, I do not.

Mr. EDEN. It was inquired about; I don't know whether the letter was put in or not.

Mr. RANNEY. If it is in already, there need only be a reference to it.

The WITNESS. If it is to go in, I should like to make an explanation about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put it in informally now, if it was not put in before.

The WITNESS. I will state about it. Dr. Rogers never made any complaint at the meetings of our board about anything. He would come there when he was in good humor, and whatever was done met his approval; he made no complaint about it; he agreed with us perfectly in all of our suggestions, I understood. But sometimes he would go off, and being a somewhat erratic man, he would write me a note complaining that something was not going on to suit him, and two or three times he wrote me about this $170,000 that he had provided for in the original articles of agreement, and occasionally would complain that we were not issuing the stock, and that the stock ought to be issued, and I had compromised with him on these little papers I speak of, declining to issue the stock. At the meetings he would not complain about it, but he would go off and write me letters. I was anxious to oblige Dr. Rogers as far as I could with my sense of propriety in the matter, and I wrote him this letter under this feeling, that I had done all that I had agreed to do by giving to all these parties he had sent orders to me by, the paper we had agreed upon, and if I had failed to do it, I did not remember, and if he was not satisfied I would be glad to surrender them and I would have been very glad at any time after the beginning of 1884 to have gotten out of the whole thing (and so the balance of us would), but we had incurred obligations to other people that we felt obliged to fulfill and could not get rid of excepting to carry this thing out in good faith, as we had promised. That is what I meant when I wrote that letter.

Mr. EDEN. What is the date of that letter?

The WITNESS. February 13, 1884. I should be glad to do the same thing yet if I was rid of the obligations I am under.

Mr. RANNEY. You went through all that before; I don't see any occasion to repeat it. Didn't you speak to General Atkins about this thing before the Congress expired when he went out; didn't you have a conversation with General Atkins before the Congress expired?—A. I never had any conversation with General Atkins at all; I do not remember ever to have talked with him about it. Possibly I may have seen him at Dr. Rogers's once or twice, but the first time I have any distinct recollection about is when we started for New York.

Q. I asked you before as to your appearance before the Secretary of the Interior. I find in the record here your letter to Mr. Storrow stating for whom you appeared. You have seen that published in the record?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put that in if there is no objection.

Letter of Casey Young to J. J. Storrow.

EBBITT HOUSE, Washington, D. C., November 5, 1885.

JAMES J. STORROW, Esq.,

Counsel for American Bell Telephone Company, Boston, Mass.:

DEAR SIR: In the proceedings now pending before the honorable the Secretary of the Interior and other officers of that Department, growing out of various applications to the Department of Justice for the bringing of proper suit in the name of the United States to annul patents numbered 174465 and 186787, granted to Alexander Graham Bell, I represent certain citizens of Tennessee, Louisiana, and Mississippi, who have asked that such suit may be instituted.

In presenting my views of the matter, I desire to have submitted to the Hon. Secretary and his associates for their inspection authentic copies of the originals of certain contracts and agreements in respect to the telephone, which I am informed have heretofore been made by and between different parties, and which are now in the possession and under control of your client, the American Bell Telephone Company. Among them are the following: An agreement between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Harmonic Telegraph Company, the American Speaking Telephone Company, the Gold and Stock Telegraph Company, T. A. Edison, Elisha Gray, and A. E. Dolbear, and which contract was subsequently transferred to the American Bell Telephone Company, in the settlement of what is known as the Dowd case. In addition to this, I am advised that at subsequent times other contracts or agreements of somewhat similar character were made between the American Bell Telephone Company and the following individuals: E. Berlinger, F. M. Blake, James W. McDonough, Dr. Cushman, and J. H. Irwin. These contracts will, as I am informed, tend to establish the truth of the following propositions:

First. That the alleged discovery or invention claimed by A. G. Bell, in the patents alluded to, was not original with him, but was known to and had been published by others long prior to the granting of said patents, for which reason the same are invalid.

Second. That the Dowd suit and others of similar character, subsequently brought, were feigned and collusive ones, instituted and conducted by agreement of parties in order to obtain judgments and decrees sustaining the patents in question, while the said Bell and his associates knew them to be invalid.

Third. That in pursuance of their terms and under their operation, the American Bell Telephone Company have been able to suppress all evidence of prior discovery or invention of the art process or method claimed in the patents referred to.

Fourth. That A. G. Bell and his associates knew that the fifth claim set out in his patent numbered 174465 was invalid and ought not to have been allowed by the Commissioner of Patents.

Fifth. That A. G. Bell and his associates have formed and entered into a combination that is unlawful and contrary to public policy, with the intent and for the purpose of controlling the Patent Office of the United States in the granting of patents on the telephone, and for practically closing the whole field of telegraphic research and discovery, against all future inventors and students of science.

The questions involved in the controversy are so important that a controlling public interest requires their definite and satisfactory settlement, and in order that such may be intelligently reached, it is desirable, I think, that the fullest information touching the whole matter should be furnished those charged with its investigation, and to this I have no doubt you will assent.

If the information which I have received concerning the scope and terms of these contracts is correct, I deem it most important that they should be exhibited to the tribunal that is to pass upon the matters to which they relate. Of course there is no method to which I could resort to compel their production in this proceeding, and I therefore rely for obtaining them upon a simple request to you to exhibit them at the hearing on Monday next.

I have the honor to be, yours, very respectfully,

CASEY YOUNG.

Mr. RANNEY. Now, I want to know if, while you occupied that room at Mrs. Bryan's, during the four days you occupied that room—the payment for which appears in your cash-book—these men who met in Washington in relation to this matter did not meet in your room?—A. No, sir; I think we met at the Ebbitt House. I do not think one of them was in my room. I know we did not have any meeting there.

Q. I want to know if during that time Attorney-General Garland did not come there to see you?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You are confident of that?—A. Yes, sir; I never saw him outside of the Department of Justice in relation to any such matter.

Q. Where are those three copies of the Van Benthuyzen agreement that Mr. Gardner swore that he made for you?—A. He did not make three copies for me. He made two. I suppose Mr. Van Benthuyzen has them. He is here now and will produce them. I saw him this morning.

Q. He made two copies of that contract, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are they?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen has one of them.

Q. Has he got all three?—A. There were only two made. He has got one copy in Mr. Gardner's handwriting.

Q. Did you keep any of them?—A. He says he gave it to me, but I have not got it. I cannot find it. I have looked among my papers.

Q. You have seen Mr. Van Benthuyzen's copy?—A. Yes, sir; this morning.

Q. While this hearing has been going on have you sent Mr. Van Benthuyzen copies of the testimony?—A. I have not sent any; not a word of it. I saw him in bed this morning; he is sick. I heard that he got here last night and I went down to see him.

Q. He has got the original agreement?—A. Yes, sir; he has got that.

Q. And the supplemental one too?—A. No, sir; he has not got the supplemental one; he has got the original one.

Q. You saw the original one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the two copies?—A. No, sir; he has got but one copy. I will say now that I was mistaken in one feature of that copy. There is one feature in it that I had overlooked altogether. There is a reference in it to this Government suit that we brought at Memphis.

Q. We will not go into the contents of it until we get it. I heard you say yesterday, when Mr. Gardner was speaking, that you had forgotten about his making any copies.—A. No, sir; I said he might have done it; I did not remember it. He was in the habit of doing writing for me sometimes. I was not able to write in consequence of this trouble with my arm. I did not remember that he did it until he told me himself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If Mr. Gardner had made two copies you would have one retained?—A. I supposed I had one of them at home.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Since it was a mutual agreement, I suppose you would have had one?—A. Yes, sir; I should suppose so.

Q. What was the third copy for?—A. He is mistaken about that. At least, if he made three I didn't know it. I had forgotten that I had asked him to do it until he said so.

Q. Who were the other two made for?—A. I do not think there were but two made—one for me, perhaps.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who had the original; who took that?—A. I guess that was burned up. It may have been in my handwriting, and nobody could read it if it was.

Q. Do I understand you that Mr. Van Benthuyzen has two copies?—A. No, sir; he has one of those copies, and it looks to be in Mr. Gardner's handwriting, and is signed. I saw it this morning. He will produce it when he comes.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You spoke of the matter of these expenses of the hearing before the Interior Department, that you were reimbursed two-thirds of these expenses.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not notice on the book any credit charged to yourself.—A. That was paid to me some time afterwards. You will find it in some of the vouchers. Possibly I have not entered it on the book at all.

Q. I do not find it.—A. I did not get the payment from the Globe Company until a short time ago, and there is a settlement between Mr. Van Benthuyzen and myself which has not been closed yet. I have all the papers and all the bills and a record of what has been paid me, but they have not been written on the book yet. I have all the papers at my room.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. But if a portion of it was repaid, why doesn't it appear among the receipts?—A. Well, it has not been entered on the book.

Q. You paid out the company's money and they have paid back two-thirds?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the other man who paid one-third?—A. Dr. Beckwith, the president of the Globe Telephone Company.

Q. The Globe Telephone Company paid one-third, Mr. Van Benthuyzen one-third, and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company one-third?—A. Yes, sir; that was our agreement.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was that by reason of a prior agreement?—A. No, sir; it was made at the time these things were printed. When I first went to have the copying done, the papers were scattered about, and nobody could make head or tail of them, and they suggested we should have them copied; Dr. Beckwith suggested that. I did not have any agreement with the Globe Company originally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desired that we should go further to-day?

Mr. HALL. I move that we adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee then adjourned until Monday, April 12, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, April 12, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.25 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe it is understood that we shall proceed this morning with the examination of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. Is that the pleasure of the committee?

Mr. HALE. I understand that General Bradley T. Johnson is present and would like to be examined as early as may be.

Mr. BRADLEY T. JOHNSON. I would like to be called, but I am subject to the wishes of the committee, of course. If Mr. Van Benthuyzen is to be examined to-day I can return to Baltimore and return here to-morrow.

Mr. WATSON VAN BENTHUYSEN then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE):

Question. What is your place of residence?—Answer. New Orleans.

Q. What is your profession or occupation?—A. I am president of the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company and of the National Improved Telephone Company.

Q. What instrument does the National Improved Telephone Company use; what patents?—A. We have some fifty or sixty different patents.

Q. Then I will be more explicit; do you use any of the inventions of J. Harris Rogers?—A. No, sir.

Q. You understood my question; I asked whether you used any of the inventions of J. Harris Rogers.—A. No; we do not. You ask me if we use them?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir; we do not.

Q. Does the company own any of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you name the inventions of his that your company owns?—A. We own, I think, seven, but I believe we have never had them made up; we have never used them; I cannot give you the numbers of those patents just now, but I can get them for you.

Q. When was the National Improved Company organized?—A. In 1884.

Q. At what time in 1884?—A. I have forgotten the exact date. I think it was in the spring of 1884.

Q. Was it incorporated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what State?—A. Louisiana.

Q. Does it hold its privileges or its rights under any other company?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. How long have you been connected with it?—A. Since its organization, sir; I organized it.

Q. Had it any connection at the outset, or previous to the suits that have been spoken of, with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Was suit brought against your company in Pittsburgh?—A. Against one of our licensed companies. The National Improved Company is a parent company, owning a large number of patents and granting licenses to other companies.

Q. What was the name of the company in Pittsburgh that was sued?—A. The Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Q. Do you know the officers of that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you name them?—A. Mr. Keating was president; Mr. McGonnigle was secretary and treasurer. I think Mr. Converse was vice-president. I think Mr. Keating was president of the iron works at Pittsburgh, and Mr. Converse was president of the National Tube Works at Pittsburgh.

Q. Is not Mr. Converse connected with the tube works at McKeesport?—A. I thought it was in Pittsburgh. I don't know. I think I have heard him talk about going "out to the works," so they may have been some distance from Pittsburgh.

Q. Is the Mr. Keating you are speaking of Mr. A. F. Keating?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. A. F. Keating; and the Oliver Brothers were also, I think, connected with the company, and Mr. Scott McGee.

Q. Scott McGee or Chris. McGee?—A. Chris. McGee and his brother; Scott McGee is a gentleman in New Orleans.

Q. When did you license that company?—A. I think it was in the fall of 1884.

Q. Do you know whether it is incorporated?—A. Yes, sir; that is, I have seen it named as a corporation in the bill of complaint of the Bell Company.

Q. Do you know under the laws of what State it was incorporated?—A. Pennsylvania, I think; they had a license from us for the twenty western counties of Pennsylvania.

Q. You say that suit was brought against the Western Pennsylvania Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. By the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Was your company made a party to that suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in any way interested in it?—A. Yes, sir; that is, under the license granted by our company to this company the defense of that suit was entirely in our hands; and also, under a subsequent private contract, the defense of that suit was entirely under our control and management.

Q. Did you undertake the defense of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did it come on for hearing?—A. On the 6th of July last.

Q. Were you present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the counsel for the defendant in that case?—A. Bakewell & Kerr, of Pittsburgh, were the principal counsel, and Mr. Von Briesen, of New York; there were two or three other gentlemen retained, who, however, never put in any appearance in the case.

Q. Will you name them?—A. Mr. Keasby, of Newark, N. J., and Mr. Christie, of Pittsburgh.

Q. You say it came on for hearing on the 6th of July?—A. Yes.

Q. For what purpose?—A. On the application for a preliminary injunction.

Q. To what extent did the hearing proceed?—A. The court heard Mr. Storrow for two whole days, with the exception of about fifteen minutes in the afternoon; he stopped about fifteen minutes, I think, before the usual hour of adjournment. Mr. Von Briesen, on our side, then undertook to reply, and spoke about fifteen minutes in opening the case; I think he scarcely touched upon the defense at all, except in some preliminary remarks that he made in the first fifteen minutes of the next day, when he was suddenly stopped by the court with the intimation from the court that the injunction would be granted regardless of anything he might say.

Q. And does the case so rest? There was a preliminary injunction?—A. Yes, sir. We immediately withdrew from the contest, and withdrew all our exhibits, all our models, and apparatus. The court made an order allowing the withdrawal of everything. The court-room contained a great many instruments in circuit ready to be operated in the presence of the court, but the court gave its consent to the withdrawal without prejudice.

Q. Is the case now pending?—A. No, sir. To my utter astonishment, in the hearing before Secretary Lamar here, the Bell Company, with its characteristic ingenuity, introduced a certificate from the clerk of that court that the case had been carried to final hearing, without our knowledge, without our answer, without anybody being employed or appearing on our side.

Q. And a final injunction was granted?—A. Yes, sir; on final hearing. There was no one authorized to appear for us; all our attorneys had been discharged, and the license of that company had been revoked on the 15th of August following the grant of the preliminary injunction. I have faithfully endeavored to find out who it was that acted on behalf of the National Improved Telephone Company, but have never been able to ascertain. Mr. Keasby denies that he did so, though Mr. Storrow says that he did.

Q. That he appeared on behalf of the National Improved Company?—A. Mr. Storrow says that Mr. Keasby represented the National Improved Company, though Mr. Keasby denies that he ever did anything of the kind.

Q. At that time what day did you reach Pittsburgh?—A. Oh, I had been there for some time previous to the hearing, I think—some time previous to the case coming up.

Q. Can you state the number of days before the hearing?—A. I could not tell you the exact date without being at home.

Q. Can you approximate the time?—A. I think I was there fully a week or may be two weeks before the case came up.

Q. Had you previous to that time had any conversation with any persons interested in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Not with the Pan-Electric Company here; no, sir. I had had conversations with some members of a branch company in New Orleans; I had warned them against using certain instruments that they claimed to own in New Orleans. I knew the president of that company there, and I not only warned him individually, but I published a warning against their using the instrument that they proposed to use.

Q. Had you had any conversations looking to a combination with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company for any purpose prior to the Pittsburgh suit?—A. No, sir; I had no acquaintance with any member of that company.

Q. Was the Pan-Electric Company represented at the time of the Pittsburgh trial? The WITNESS. Were they represented?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; was there any person present there at that trial looking after the interests of the Pan-Electric Company so far as you know?

The WITNESS. No, sir. Mr. Boyle—I believe your name is Mr. Boyle?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. I have a statement that I have made up which, if you will allow me to read, will probably give you fuller and better information than I can give by answering your questions, because I have put it all down. It is much more concise, and if I should read it, you would probably get a better idea of the whole thing.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as I am concerned I have no objection.

The WITNESS. If it contains any matter that you do not want to go in the record you can strike it out afterwards.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that. He is testifying under oath, and I do not want anything brought in from the outside. I think he should be subjected to the usual course of proceeding, and give his testimony here under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. If he reads the statement it will be under oath, of course.

The WITNESS. To get at it you will have to know exactly what actuated me on some of these occasions, and what I did afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the gentlemen from Massachusetts to object to your making a written statement, so we will have to proceed the best we can without it.

Mr. HALE. The committee might think otherwise; it might not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is desired, I will submit it to the committee.

Mr. HALE. It might facilitate the examination very much for the witness to read his written statement first.

The WITNESS. It is simply a statement of facts reduced to writing by me, all in proper order.

Mr. RANNEY. I think his statement should be under oath.

Mr. HALE. It would be under oath. [To the witness.] That would be under oath, would it not?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have it here with me.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the wish of the committee?

The WITNESS. I put it in writing, and it contains the whole matter in very concise form.

Mr. HALE. I ask that he be allowed to read his statement under oath.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to it.

Mr. MILLARD. The reading of the statement would be entirely foreign; some of it may be very immaterial.

Mr. HALE. It has been done in the case of Senator Harris.

Mr. RANNEY. Senator Harris made his statement under oath, and he is a Senator, and his statement was accepted.

Mr. HALE. And Mr. Van Benthuyzen is a citizen, and has the same right. Of course, I expect the statement to be under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course.

Mr. RANNEY. Much of it may be immaterial, and it may be in the shape of an argument, such as would not be permitted if the witness was making his oral statement under oath.

Mr. HALE. We can stop him if he gets into immaterial matter. I think we can save time by allowing him to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hale] moves that the witness be allowed to read his written statement under his oath, as a witness.

Mr. MILLARD. (After the chairman had put the question.) I vote no, on the ground that it is a very unusual proceeding to permit a witness to read such a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the rules of evidence observed henceforward, and I shall object to anything which goes outside of that.

Q. Did you meet any of the parties concerned in the Pan-Electric Company, or any of their counsel, at the time of the hearing referred to in Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir. I ought to go back and explain to you about the organization of that company, in order to give you the proper facts. When this company was organized, the National Improved Telephone Company—

Mr. HALE. I insist that he be confined to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. I may suggest to you that the organization of your company in Pittsburgh is not deemed material. It was mentioned simply as introductory to the questions that I am now about to ask. You may answer my question, whether, at the time of your Pittsburgh hearing you met any of the parties interested in the Pan-Electric Company or their counsel.

The WITNESS. After that case was over I met Colonel Young there, yes.

Q. Do you remember on what day you met him?—A. It was either the 9th or the 10th of July.

Q. Under what circumstances did you meet him?—A. After we had retired from the court and I had gone around to the office of Bakewell & Kerr, the local attorneys there, I had become satisfied that it was no use to try to get an impartial hearing or to get a hearing at all in that circuit, and I went around there to discuss the situation with Mr. Bakewell. During the conversation he incidentally mentioned that a gentleman by the name of Young had been present during the proceedings in court, and said that he had come there as a spectator and for the purpose of trying to get some of our evidence and exhibits for a case that they had in Memphis.

Mr. MILLARD. What is the date of this?

The CHAIRMAN. The 10th of July, 1885. [To the witness:] Proceed.

The WITNESS. You know I am quite deaf, Mr. Boyle. Mr. Bakewell told me that the gentleman was staying at Seventh Avenue Hotel there, and I went around there to see him. I had never seen Colonel Young before, and was totally unacquainted with him or any of the members of the Pan-Electric Company. We had a conversation, lasting, I presume, an hour or two, with reference to the subject generally. During that conversation I told Colonel Young that I thought it was almost useless to attempt, in any of the Pennsylvania courts, to get a hearing. We discussed the matter for some time. Incidentally he mentioned to me that a law had been passed at the last session of Congress requiring the Attorney-General to institute suit in the name of the Government, on presentation of sufficient proof, against the owner of any patent, by any citizen. That was very gratifying intelligence to me, and I determined in my own mind to undertake to get a suit of that character, and I think I mentioned to Colonel Young during the conversation that I would do so. I left the next day, and went to New York on my way to Connecticut to look at a farm. At the time I left Colonel Young in Pittsburgh I had never said a word to him as to whether I would do so or not. I merely told him that that suited me exactly, and I thought I would undertake it. He told me, however, that it would be perfectly useless to do so; that Mr. Garland, the Attorney-General, was interested in his telephone company. That was news to me; I don't think I knew anything of that kind at that time, and I became a little excited at that and told Colonel Young that I could not stand anything of that kind; that Mr. Garland's private relations to a telephone company ought not to stand in the way of my rights. But at the time I left him he did not know whether I was going to undertake to have a suit brought or not, or when and where I would attempt to carry out my idea. Indeed, it was not until after I got to New York that I determined to make application. I did make application at the New York hotel on the 12th of July. It was then and there that I wrote the letter which is a matter of public record here in the book of proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. I show you the letter dated 12th July; state whether that is the letter you refer to.—A. Yes, sir; it is.

Q. Where was that letter written?—A. It was written from the New York Hotel, in the city of New York.

Q. Had there been any understanding between yourself and Colonel Young that you would write such a letter to the Attorney-General?—A. Not a word.

Q. Had there been any understanding that you would in any way make application to the Attorney-General?—A. No, sir. I merely stated that that suited me exactly, and that I was going to undertake to get a suit.

Q. When you left Pittsburgh did Colonel Young know, from what you said, where you were going?—A. I don't think I ever said a word to him as to where I was going; I think he was under the impression that I was going back to Waukesha, where my family was.

Q. Was there anything said at that time with reference to your coming to Washington?

The WITNESS. Right then?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. I had made an arrangement with Mr. Young with reference to the suit in Memphis and the suit in New Orleans, to join forces and consolidate for our common interests in those two suits. That was in Memphis, but there was nothing said about a Government suit, because I did not know at that time whether I would ever undertake anything of the kind or not.

Q. Was the suit in Memphis the private suit of the Pan-Electric Company against the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes, that was a private suit instituted by the Pan-Electric Company in Memphis against the Bell Company.

Q. You say you did make an arrangement with him in regard to that suit?—A. Yes, sir; with reference to that suit and the suit we had instituted ourselves in New Orleans against the Bell Company.

Q. Was that arrangement reduced to writing?—A. There were simply notes made about it; it was not reduced to a regular form and signed by us at all, but we merely made notes and agreed to co-operate and consolidate with reference to those two suits.

Q. Have you those notes?—A. No, sir; I have not, now.

Q. What became of them?—A. I don't recollect; they were just memoranda I made at the time.

Q. Do you know whether they are in existence?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect whether I have them at home or not.

Q. You may state the agreement made between you.

Mr. RANNEY. If it was reduced to writing, it ought to be produced.

The CHAIRMAN. He says that he does not know that the notes are in existence, and that it was not reduced to writing.

Mr. RANNEY. But he says there were notes, and it seems to me they ought to be produced.

The CHAIRMAN. They would not make the negotiation incompetent. I think it is competent to prove the agreement and to prove what occurred between the parties.

Mr. RANNEY. I will not insist upon it.

Q. You may state the agreement that was made between yourself and Colonel Young at Pittsburgh.—A. I was very much gratified to hear Colonel Young say that they had instituted suit at Memphis, because it was the first instance I had ever heard of where there was any ground for suit being brought against the Bell Company, which would place the matter before the courts on an entirely different footing from that which the cases usually sustained. In previous cases the Bell Company were the plaintiffs, and in that way always had the advantage. He said their suit was instituted for damages, and would try the question of title, &c., and it struck me that it would be a magnificent opportunity to bring the matter before the court in an entirely different shape from what it ever had been before. We had brought a somewhat similar case in New Orleans against the Bell Company, based on the idea that the Blake transmitter was an infringement of one of our patents. The Blake transmitter had been patented in 1881, and was being used by the Bell Company. It is no doubt an infringement, in my opinion, of instruments that we had that were of a previous date. But when I came to investigate the matter I found that the Blake transmitter had been in common use in this country since 1878, three years before it was patented; and therefore the courts would be very likely to say that it was not a patent, and hence, that anybody could use it, and there was no claim against the Bell Company under that suit.

The suit mentioned by Mr. Young was such an entirely different thing, that I thought it afforded a magnificent opportunity to join in with him and prosecute that suit. So the notes of that agreement were to the effect that we would each furnish all the information, exhibits, and models that we had; that we would divide the expenses, and that each party would put their lawyers into each case. That was all. It was not at all likely that we were going to enter into a written agreement at Pittsburgh about any matter, for I had never before seen Colonel Young in my life, and he had never seen me; I just met him in the way I have described, at the Seventh Avenue Hotel, in Pittsburgh, and spent an hour or two with him there. I did not see him after that until we met here in Washington under that agreement to consolidate for the purpose of protecting our interests against these attacks made upon us.

Q. What did you do with that letter you wrote at the New York Hotel?—A. I mailed it to the Attorney-General.

Q. How long did you remain in New York?—A. I think I left New York the next day.

Q. Where did you go?—A. To Waukesha, Wis.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. I remained there, I think, until about the 26th of July.

Q. Then where did you go?—A. In the mean time I had gotten General Garland's reply, sent to me from New York.

Q. Have you that here?—A. No, sir; I left it at home. I have a copy of it here, embodied in the written statement I had prepared, and I will read that if desired.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we ought to have the original.

The WITNESS. In the corner of the letter there is "C. C. 6921."

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., July 14, 1885.

Mr. W. VAN BENTHUYSEN,
New York Hotel, New York:

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th instant on the subject of instituting suit against the Bell Telephone patents, I say that the matter has been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, to whom it should have been presented originally, and before reference to this Department, the reference to be from the Department of the Interior.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

I have the original of that at home; I forgot all about bringing it with me.

Q. That bears date the 14th?—A. It is dated the 14th of July, 1885. Now, when I got that letter I supposed that all the officials in the Patent Office were the same as when Bell's patent was issued, and I became dissatisfied; I became alarmed at that, believing that if that letter was referred to that Department it would fall into the very hands of the people who had issued that patent, and of course they would make an adverse report on my application. Of course they never would admit that any patent had ever been issued improperly from that Department. I therefore determined to come to Washington and prevent that if I could. When Colonel Young and I were at Pittsburgh I had requested him to meet me here so as to form this consolidation, his company being all here, though at that time I did not know it, and never knew where the company was located until he told me. I thought it was located at Memphis or some place there; but he told me that all the records of the office would be here, and it would be necessary to make my arrangement with him here, and so he had agreed to come here when I came.

Q. Had you fixed a date for coming?—A. Not at that time. Oh, no; we never said a word about that. Nor did I know when I would come here, according to my recollection. I only took up the idea of coming here after I got that letter.

Q. But you say you had an understanding with him that you would come?—A. Yes, some time or other.

Q. Was there any limit? Were you to come within any certain time?—A. I always left Waukesha about September and came East, and I supposed I might meet him here at the same time.

Q. Did you say so to him?—A. No; I always told him that I would come East and would meet him here in Washington, but he was not to come until I called him, that is, until I knew when I could be in Washington.

Q. You say you left Waukesha at what time?—A. I think I left there about the 26th of July.

Q. And where did you go?—A. I came straight to Washington.

Q. Did you inform Colonel Young that you were coming?—A. Yes, I notified him and asked him to meet me here.

Q. Did you do that by letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what point was your letter addressed?—A. To Memphis.

Q. What day did you reach Washington?—A. My recollection is that I got here the 28th of July.

Q. Was there any person with you?—A. No, I came by myself; there was nobody here when I came here; but I asked Mr. Huntington to meet me here, and he did so.

Q. Who is Mr. Huntington?—A. A gentleman who lives in Greenville, Miss.

Q. Is he connected with your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you reached here the 28th?—A. I think it was the 28th, the Ebbitt House book will show; I did not even think of looking at the book to see, but I think it was on the 28th.

Q. Did you meet Colonel Young?—A. He was not here; he arrived here one or two days after that.

Q. State what occurred between yourself and Colonel Young upon his arrival here?—A. Before Colonel Young arrived I had gone to see Mr. Garland about this matter.

Q. What day was that?—A. I think that was on the 29th or the 28th.

Q. Did any person go with you?—A. Mr. Huntington.

Q. What day did Mr. Huntington reach here?—A. That I don't recollect. I think he was here when I came; yes, I know he was, for I recollect he had arranged for my room in the hotel.

Q. Will you state what occurred when you called upon Mr. Garland? State fully.—A. I called upon Mr. Garland and started to talk about this matter. I told him that I found my letter had been referred to the Department of the Interior; and the very moment I commenced talking about it Mr. Garland said he could not have anything to do with it, would not enter into any conversation about it; that he was connected with the telephone company and was in such a position that he could not act. He treated me very politely and courteously, but was firm in saying he could not have anything to do with it. I became excited about it, for I did not think, and I do not think now, that Mr. Garland had any right to refuse to act, even if he was connected with the telephone company, and I so told him. I told everybody here that I was determined that that suit should be brought; that we had a right to it, and I should see that the Attorney-General should exercise the right which the law gave him to institute suit. I said that if he refused to act I would go to the President about it; that if he refused to act I would go to Congress about it; and that if Congress refused to act I would go to the people. I believe it is my right, and my belief has been sustained.

Q. Did you say so to Mr. Garland in your conversation with him?—A. I told him that I did not think he had any right to interpose his private relations to a telephone company against my rights or the rights of the public.

Q. What did he say to that?—A. He said he could not have anything to do with it.

Q. How long did that interview continue?—A. I don't know; it didn't last very long; fifteen or twenty minutes, I suppose.

Q. Was there any person present?—A. There may have been somebody present who was connected with the Department; I don't recollect; I know Mr. Huntington was with me. I know Mr. Garland was very determined, and I know I was very determined about it. On the first day that I went to see Mr. Garland I was still under the impression that that law had been passed. The next day, before Mr. Young got here, I found that the law had not been passed.

Q. We will come to that. That, you say, was on the 29th?—A. The 28th or the 29th.

Q. Was there anything said on that day about the withdrawal of this letter of yours which had been filed in the Interior Department?—A. Not a word. I told Mr. Garland that day that I was going to call upon him the next day. I was waiting for Mr. Von Briesen, my attorney, to get here; he was not here that day.

Q. Did you call the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was with you at that time?—A. Mr. Von Briesen, Mr. Huntington, Colonel Gantt, of Memphis, and we got Colonel Young to go along and introduce us, because I was a perfect stranger, and Mr. Garland and Mr. Gantt were strangers, I understood, and Mr. Von Briesen was a stranger.

Q. As I understand you, you came here on the 28th?—A. I think it was the 28th.

Q. And called on Mr. Garland the following day?—A. I think it was on the same day, the 28th, I am not certain; it was either the 28th or 29th. The next day after that Mr. Von Briesen came here, and then Mr. Von Briesen ascertained that the bill that I supposed had passed when I wrote that letter had not passed and become a law; that it had passed the House but had disappeared in the Senate. So when he called the next day we did not call for the purpose of asking for a suit under that law, for as soon as Mr. Von Briesen got here he advised me that we did not need any statute; that there was law enough on the subject already.

Q. As I understand you, Colonel Young had arrived before this second call?—A. Oh, yes, before the second call he had arrived.

Q. Do you know what day he came?—A. I think he got here on the night of the 30th or 31st. When I say we called the next day, Mr. Boyle, it was not the next day that we called; I think it was the second day; I think we called on the 30th.

Q. You say that at your first interview with the Attorney-General you informed him that you would call again?—A. On the arrival of my attorney, yes, sir.

Q. Did you state to him for what purpose you would call?—A. For the same purpose.

Q. What reply did he make to that suggestion?—A. He replied that he would not have anything to do with the matter. In this mean time I had ascertained, through Mr. Von Briesen, according to my recollection, that the law I supposed had passed had not passed, and Mr. Von Briesen's advice to me then was that there was no necessity for any law on the subject; that proceedings of that kind did not require any special statute, and that my proper proceeding in the matter would be to lay the facts before some district attorney in some district, and have that district attorney, if he was satisfied with the proofs laid before him, make the application to the Department. So the next day when we called Mr. Von Briesen made this statement to the Attorney-General, and told him that we were determined to make an application in that form. Our object that day was to get General Garland to say that he would promptly act upon the application of some district attorney, if we succeeded in getting one to send it in, without referring the matter to the Department of the Interior, because we already knew what the action of the Interior Department had been; it was a matter of record. If there was no law for such a reference, and there was no necessity for such reference, we did not want to be delayed for months from going on when we were entitled to it at once. The result of that interview was that Mr. Garland still very promptly stated that he would not have anything to do with the matter.

Q. Did you ask him whether he would dispose of the matter if application should be made to him without reference to the Department of the Interior?—A. That was what we called there for—to ask him if the Department of Justice would not give prompt assent to our application if we succeeded in getting some district attorney to make the application.

Q. What did he say to that?—A. He positively refused. He said he would not have anything to do with the matter; that he had told us before that the situation was such that he could not and would not have anything to do with the matter.

Q. Did you at any time, in either of these interviews, get more than that from the Attorney-General?—A. Nothing whatever. He spoke in a very peremptory manner. He was very determined about it.

Q. Can you give the date of this second interview?—A. That must have been either the 30th or the 31st of July. I said before that it was the day after my arrival, on the 28th, but I think it was the 30th or 31st.

Q. I note that this letter of yours of the 12th of July was withdrawn from the Interior Department.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. No, sir; Mr. Montgomery has it.

Q. You withdrew it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did it come in the Department again?—A. Mr. Von Briesen and I went to Mr. Montgomery and got it. Now I have a very indistinct recollection that during the conversation with Mr. Garland he was asked whether he had any objection to my having back that letter, but that is a very indistinct recollection. My impression is that we went to Mr. Montgomery and told him we wanted that letter back.

Q. Did you get it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did you do with it?—A. Took it home with me.

Q. Where is it now?—A. In the hands of Mr. Montgomery.

Q. Did you return it?—A. About two months ago he asked me for it, and said he ought never to have given it up, that he did it without thinking at the time. I think during that conversation with Mr. Garland Mr. Von Briesen asked Mr. Garland if he had any objection to me having that letter back. I did not want that letter to lie in the Department of the Interior, because I was afraid it would fall into the hands of people who would be interested in the Bell patent, or who had been interested in its issue, and I was satisfied that they would make some adverse report upon it and stop my proceedings, and so we asked for it explicitly for that reason. I think I stated there that I withdrew it because the law had not been passed, but that was only part of my reason.

Q. Did you go personally to the Commissioner of Patents and withdraw that letter?—A. I went as far as the door; I did not go in with Mr. Von Briesen. Mr. Von Briesen got the letter from Mr. Montgomery.

Q. I note this, among other things, as having been indorsed on your letter: "On request of the writer, and on assurance that it is in accordance with the views of the Attorney-General, this paper is returned to such writer without report." Dated July 31, 1885, and signed by M. V. Montgomery, Commissioner of Patents.—A. That will fix the day when we went to General Garland, because we went from General Garland to the Patent Office and got that letter. So it must have been done that day.

Q. Will you state as fully as you can what was said by the Attorney-General with reference to the withdrawal of that letter?—A. So far as I can recollect Mr. Von Briesen did nearly all the talking, though there was not much talking done; we were not there very long. I think Mr. Von Briesen asked General Garland if he had any objection to our having that letter back, and he said no. That was all that was ever said on the subject, so far as my memory goes. Mr. Garland never ordered the letter withdrawn. I have seen it stated here that he ordered it withdrawn. It was withdrawn by request, but not by order of Mr. Garland; there was no such thing; Mr. Garland did not know anything about it except just what I tell you, nor have anything to do with it except just what I tell you.

Q. You say you went from the Department of Justice to the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Directly?—A. I think we went directly there.

Q. Did you see the Commissioner of Patents personally?—A. Not when he handed that letter. No, sir; Mr. Von Briesen got the letter from him.

Q. Did you see the Commissioner of Patents personally at any time?—A. Mr. Von Briesen then came out and handed it to me, and I put it into my pocket and took it home.

Q. Were you in the same room with the Commissioner of Patents when that was done?—A. No, sir. I was attending to some other matters; I don't recollect now what; I think I was getting some copies of patents.

Q. Did you at any time say to the Commissioner of Patents that you had Mr. Garland's consent to the withdrawal of that letter?—A. I did not, no, sir. Wait now, Mr. Boyle. Long afterwards, at the Department of the Interior, I told Mr. Montgomery. Yes, because he had written to get the letter back; I brought it back with me when I came on here to attend the hearing before Secretary Lamar.

Q. What did you say at that time with reference to the consent of Mr. Garland?—A. Mr. Montgomery said it was part of the papers of the Department, and probably he ought not to have given it to me, and he so stated publicly at the hearing. I said to him that Mr. Garland did not object to my having it, and I wanted it back because I was still anxious about it falling into the hands of somebody who would make an adverse report on it.

Q. Was Colonel Young still present in Mr. Garland's office when this conversation occurred between Mr. Garland and Mr. Von Briesen with respect to the withdrawal of the letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you remember what Mr. Garland said—his language or the substance of it?

The WITNESS. About the letter?

The CHAIRMAN. About the withdrawal.

The WITNESS. So far as I recollect, if he said anything, he simply said the word "no;" that he had no objection to the letter being withdrawn. I was a little excited at that time and may not be absolutely correct, but I am satisfied of this, that all that was said was no more than the mere word "no" in answer to the inquiry whether he had any objection to giving back that letter.

Q. Have you stated as fully as you desire your reason for the withdrawal of the letter?—A. My reasons were twofold; first, there was no such law; secondly, that I was afraid it would fall into the hands of some of the people in the Patent Office who had passed Bell's patent to issue, and necessarily they would make an adverse report on that application of mine for a suit.

Mr. HANBACK. "No such law;" what does he mean by that?

The CHAIRMAN. A law supposed to have been passed by Congress.

Q. In your view what harm could follow if this letter did fall into the hands of some of those people?—A. I did not suppose, if they had passed that patent to issue, that they would admit that there was any impropriety in issuing it. I alleged in that letter that that patent was improvidently issued; that it ought never to have been issued; that Mr. Bell never invented the telephone.

Q. Did you at the time of the withdrawal of the letter intend to pursue your application for a suit?—A. I had informed everybody that I was going to make my presentation to some district attorney and get him to apply. That was in accordance with the very advice I had received.

Q. What harm would follow from leaving the original application in the Department, then, if you intended to make another?—A. I think a great deal of harm would have followed. It would have forestalled me entirely if somebody in the Patent Office had issued an opinion that there was no ground for any such suit. I was necessarily very suspicious, you understand. I had been told, and I am informed, that there are people in the Patent Office who are in the interest of the Bell Company. I do not hesitate to say so. I do not know whether they are improperly in the interest of the Bell Company or not, but they are certainly in the interest of the Bell Company.

Q. Did you withdraw it with a view of making another application through a district attorney?—A. That was part of my proceeding, yes, sir.

Q. Had there been any conversation at that time between you and Colonel Young with reference to the making of another application?—A. Not a word more than I tell you occurred just at that time—the advice given me by Mr. Von Briesen and the conversation that took place in the Attorney-General's office. You must understand that still at that time I knew nobody connected with the Pan-Electric Company except Colonel Young.

Q. Yes; I will come to that; I note another indorsement on that letter, as printed here:

“NEW ORLEANS, October 23, 1885.

“Finding that the law referred to in the writer's letter to General Garland had not been adopted, and being informed that the bill had been stolen from the Senate after being adopted in the House of Representatives, and being advised by my attorney to pursue another course, consent to the withdrawal of the letter was obtained and the letter was withdrawn by A. Von Briesen, esq., my attorney.”

On what occasion did you make that indorsement?—A. The date you see, October 23. At the time I made that indorsement I intended to send it by mail, but as I was coming on here I brought it myself and handed it to Mr. Montgomery in person.

Q. Had you, at that time, received a request for its return?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make the indorsement before or after receiving that request?—A. After.

Q. You say you had been informed that the bill had been stolen from the Senate?—A. That is what I was informed here, that it had disappeared from the Senate, and some said it was stolen from the Senate.

Q. Do you know anybody who told you that?—A. No, sir; my first recollection about that is connected with Mr. Von Briesen; I think he was the first one who told me. I never saw the bill, and did not know anything whatever about it, except what Colonel Young had told me in Pittsburgh.

Q. Did you yourself make any investigation to ascertain whether the bill had become a law?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you call on Mr. Smith, the journal clerk of the House, in relation to the matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Colonel Young know that you were withdrawing this letter from the Department?—A. I don't think he ever did.

Q. Did he go with you from the Attorney-General's office to the Interior Department?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who did go with you?—A. Mr. Von Briesen.

Q. Any other person?—A. No, sir; I don't think Mr. Young ever did know anything about it except what you see there, and that I brought it back.

Q. Where did you separate from Mr. Young after you left the Department of Justice?—A. I think we separated at the door.

Q. Did he know you were going to the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; I don't think he did.

Q. You say it is your belief that that was on the 31st of July?—A. Yes, sir; my belief is that it was withdrawn on the 31st of July.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Colonel Young about that?—A. Oh, yes, some conversation.

Q. I mean during that visit here.

The WITNESS. About my visit to the Interior Department? No.

The CHAIRMAN. No; in regard to the bringing of a Government suit.

The WITNESS. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Colonel Young in the latter part of July or early in August in relation to combining your companies for the purpose of bringing suit?—A. Up to the time that you are speaking of now, only in respect to the two suits, one in Memphis and one in New Orleans.

Q. Did you make known to Colonel Young at any time during your stay in Washington, the last of July and early in August, your intention to bring a Government suit or have one brought through a district attorney?—A. I left here, according to my recollection, about 9 o'clock on the morning of the 4th; I took the limited express and went back to Waukesha, and on the last day that I was here, my recollection is, that I drew a lead-pencil memorandum embodying the verbal agreement that we had made with reference to the suit in Memphis and the one in New Orleans, and I also stipulated in that memorandum about what my ideas were with reference to instituting a Government suit.

Q. Have you that memorandum?—A. I have.

Q. Will you produce it?—A. Yes, sir. Now, my recollection is that I sent this agreement that I speak of to Colonel Young by a colored boy that he had in his employ; that I drew it up in lead-pencil and sent it to him. I never received it back—that is, I never received a copy of it—until, I think it was, the middle of September; it may have been the middle of August. But up to the time that I handed him that agreement not a word had been said with reference to a combination between us in regard to a Government suit. My lead-pencil copy was dated on the 4th day of August, because the morning of that day was the last I was here in Washington. This is the agreement drawn up by me and sent, as I have stated, to Colonel Young. It is dated on the 4th of August, and it was returned to me about the middle of September, I think. That was after the Government suit was instituted.

(The witness handed the paper to the chairman.)

The WITNESS. Had you not better let me read that?

Mr. RANNEY. Let me look at it first, please.

(The witness, apparently not hearing Mr. Ranney's request, reads as follows:)

"This agreement, made and entered into this day, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, by and between the National Improved Telephone Company, a body corporate, incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana, party of the first part, and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, a body corporate, incorporated under the laws of the State of Tennessee, party of the second part, witnesseth:

"That whereas each of said parties is the owner, respectively, of certain valuable telephone inventions and improvements, in respect to which there are now pending certain suits between the said parties and the American Bell Telephone Company in the United States court at New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and at Memphis, in the State of Tennessee;

"And whereas the parties hereto, the said National Improved Telephone Company and the said Pan-Electric Telephone Company, propose to commence proceedings in the name of the United States against the American Bell Telephone Company, provided they can obtain the assent of the Attorney-General of the United States to do so:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby stipulated and agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that in the further conduct of the suits, now pending as aforesaid, they will render such mutual aid and assistance as may be convenient and necessary to protect and secure their common interest;

"And it is further stipulated and agreed that, should they succeed in having a suit brought by or in the name of the Government, the lawyers of each party shall be entered as counsel of record in said suit, and every possible assistance shall be given by the contracting parties to carry it to a successful conclusion;

"With this further express agreement and understanding, that there shall be no settlement or compromise of the same by either party in interest without a full discussion thereof by the members of both companies, and an agreement upon such terms of settlement or compromise as may seem just and fair to both.

"In witness whereof the proper officers of said companies hereto attach their hands and seals this 4th day of August, A. D. 1885.

"ISHAM G. HARRIS,

"Vice-President Pan. E. T. Co., the President being absent.

"The NATIONAL IMPROVED TELEPHONE COMPANY OF LA.,

"By W. VAN BENTHUYSEN, President."

Q. You have stated that you wrote this agreement in pencil?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sent that to Colonel Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had there been any previous conversation or any previous understanding between yourself and Colonel Young, with reference to the making of such an agreement?—A. I don't think there ever had been; I have no recollection of ever having said a word to him on the subject, except so far as related to the suit at Memphis and the suit at New Orleans.

Q. Did you send him any letter or make any explanation to him at the time of sending him this pencil draft?—A. No, sir; I think I just sent it by the young colored man—that is my recollection, though I may have handed it to him; I don't know; but my recollection is that I sent it by the mulatto boy and told him that I wanted him to tell Colonel Young to communicate with me, to fix it up and send it to me.

Q. Did you see Colonel Young after sending it to him?—A. No, sir; I left Washington that morning at 9 o'clock, I think.

Q. Were there any instructions as to where he should send it?—A. He knew where I was going when I left Washington.

Q. Where were you going?—A. To Waukesha. For a number of years I have spent my summers at the Fountain Hotel, in Waukesha, and he knew that at that time; he knew I came from there.

Q. Have you any recollection whether you had any written communication with Colonel Young about it?—A. I am confident I had not.

Q. Did you ever receive the pencil memorandum from Colonel Young?—A. I think when this paper came back that was sent to me, but I never kept that, because this was an exact copy of it.

Q. You say your impression is that you did not receive this agreement until the middle of September?—A. My impression is that I received it in Chicago in September.

Q. Had you seen Colonel Young in the mean time?—A. Well, no, I had not. I saw him later than that; he came to New Orleans after that, and I saw him there; I think that was late in September or early in October.

Q. Was there not another agreement made between yourself and Colonel Young?—A. There was an agreement drawn up in Memphis, but that was never completed. I saw Colonel Young in Pittsburgh, but that was about the 10th of July. I then saw Colonel Young here from the 30th of July to the 4th of August, and then I saw Colonel Young in Memphis. Yes, I did see him before September; I saw him in Memphis from the 19th until about the 28th of August; then I saw him late in September.

Q. When you saw him in Memphis from the 19th to the 28th of August was there anything said between you respecting this agreement that you had left with him?—

A. My recollection is that it had not been signed at that time; I don't recollect positively; he did not sign it, and he had to find Mr. Harris, I suppose, from seeing Mr. Harris's signature to it; I had supposed that General Joe Johnston was going to sign it, but when it was returned to me it had Harris's signature.

Q. Did you and Colonel Young have any conversation in Memphis at the time about the agreement?—A. No, sir; I don't think we did; our time was taken up there in getting up this application to the district attorney, Judge McCorry.

Q. You think you did not mention this agreement at all?—A. I don't recollect doing so; no, sir. I got the impression on my mind that it was sent and had not been signed, but where I got it, I don't recollect; I don't recollect of any conversation I had with Colonel Young on that subject at that time.

Q. I understand you to say that there was a supplemental agreement drawn up?—A. Yes, sir; that was drawn up the latter part of August. I believe you have that here.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we have a copy of it.

The WITNESS. That was never finished; never completed.

Q. (Handing paper to witness.) I show you the supplemental agreement, dated the 27th of August, 1885, already in evidence. State whether that is the supplemental agreement referred to, and whether it is not executed.—A. Yes, sir; I presume that is it.

Q. Is that your signature, and did you sign it?—A. Yes, sir; that is my signature. I sign very badly sometimes. I have got a great deal of trouble in my right arm, and sometimes I wouldn't recognize my own signature, scarcely.

Q. Do you note that the paper bears date the 27th of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In view of that fact, what do you say about your previous statement that you did not receive the original agreement until the middle of September?—A. I don't think I did. I may have received it the middle of August, but I don't think I received it until September. I think I received it while I was at the Grand Pacific in Chicago.

Q. And that, you say, was in September?—A. That was in September.

Q. You think, then, you made this supplemental agreement, referring to the original agreement, the latter bearing date on the 4th of August and this bearing date on the 7th of August—you think you made the supplemental agreement referring to the original agreement, before the original had been delivered to you?—A. That is my impression; yes, sir. This was drawn up by me and handed to Colonel Young.

Q. Where?—A. In Memphis. You understand it is not in my handwriting, but I mean the draft of that was drawn up by me and given to Colonel Young.

Q. You are referring to the last agreement I showed you; the supplemental agreement?—A. Yes, sir. My recollection is I told Colonel Young at the time that I did not know anybody in the Pan-Electric Company except himself—(then I had become acquainted with Senator Harris in the mean time; that is, I was introduced to him here early in August. I was just introduced to him, and that was all)—but that I didn't know anybody connected with the company, either by reputation or otherwise, and that the probability was the expense in this suit would be pretty large, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, and I looked to him to see that the money was provided for his share of expense. That agreement was never completed. He took that agreement—

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Which one do you speak of; the supplemental or the original agreement?—A. The supplemental. That was never completed. I have not considered that either agreement, except the original, was of any value—except the first part of the original—because all our plans under those agreements went for naught, because we did not get the suit as we supposed we would. It was taken entirely out of our hands, and therefore the thing ended there.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You stated, when first asked as to the supplemental agreement, that it had never been signed, if I recollect.—A. It was never carried out. It never was signed and never filled up.

Q. It was signed by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it ever signed by the other party?—A. I have an indistinct recollection; there were three or four copies, and perhaps Colonel Young signed one of them, but I don't know.

Q. Have you one copy in your possession?—A. No, sir; I have none. I never kept a copy, because I did not consider it of any value.

Q. Why not?—A. The Government suit was entirely taken out of our hands.

Q. It had not been done at the time this agreement was made in Memphis?—A. Well, but I never got it back.

Q. Where did you sign this supplemental agreement?—A. I signed it in Memphis.

Q. You say you wrote the draft in Memphis. Is this paper in your handwriting?—A. No, sir; I gave the draft of that to Mr. Young, and he had them written off and brought one to me, and I think I signed it. I don't know what became of the others.

Q. And that was all done in Memphis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you never have a copy of it?—A. I was under the impression I had a copy signed by Mr. Young, but I never kept the copy, because, as I told you, everything had fallen through except so far as related to the Memphis suit. Our suit in New Orleans had fallen through; our arrangement about the Government suit had fallen through, and there was nothing left under it except the arrangement with reference to the Memphis suit.

Q. What is your recollection as to what became of the copy you had or you thought you had?—A. I think I destroyed it. I don't think I kept it.

Q. Where were you when you signed the original agreement?—A. I was in—well, wherever it was sent to me.

Q. Was there more than one copy sent to you?—A. I think there were two copies sent to me, and I signed one and returned it.

Q. Do you know where you sent it?—A. I think I sent it to Mr. Young, in Memphis.

Q. That, then, if your recollection is correct, was after the writing of the supplemental agreement in Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; I never paid much attention to those agreements. I never even put them before the board. They were never made a matter of record in the office. You see, circumstances had occurred—my own suit in New Orleans had become a failure.

Q. At what date?—A. Oh, about that time. We realized that there was no use carrying on that suit, from the fact that the instrument had been in use three years before it was ever patented.

Q. Did you discontinue your suits?—A. I am now talking about the matter in Memphis, you understand. The Memphis suit, as I understood, was still going on, and I attached a great deal of importance to that; but I did not attach any importance to our suit in New Orleans. Then, after the first suit was instituted in Memphis, which, you recollect, was instituted about the 9th of September—

Q. That was the first Government suit?—A. That was the first Government suit; yes, sir. I attached very little importance to these agreements, because I saw that the whole thing had passed out of our hands and that we would not have the conduct of those suits, and therefore the agreements amounted to nothing.

Q. What disposition was made of your New Orleans suit?—A. Nothing was ever done with it.

Q. Is it standing open yet?—A. Yes, sir. I think they made a reply, and that is all. It never went any further.

Q. You have stated you were in Memphis from the 19th of August until the latter part of August. Do you remember the date?—A. I think I got there about the 19th, and I staid there until about the 26th or 29th; somewhere along there. I was there about ten days.

Q. Did you go to Memphis in pursuance of any agreement with Colonel Young, or with any other person connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I went there with this object: After we left the Attorney-General's Office here we consulted for a day or two as to what we should do, and under Mr. Briesen's advice I determined to institute proceedings before some district attorney in some district. I knew I could not do so in New Orleans because Mr. Leonard, the district attorney—his time had expired and there had been no new appointment; and our judges in New Orleans do not sit in the summer; they were not there; they both go away, and don't come back until fall, usually. We discussed other points, I think Saint Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, and finally hit on Memphis. I had made my first application to Mr. Garland that the suit should be brought in Memphis, for that same reason. My presence in Memphis was in pursuance of getting up the petition to Judge McCorry. I went there for that purpose.

Q. Did you go there in pursuance of any arrangement with Colonel Young?—A. Not in pursuance of any arrangement made when we separated here. It was in pursuance of an arrangement afterwards. I think I wrote him I would go to Memphis and I would make my appeal from there.

Q. Was it determined before you separated here that the suit should be brought in Memphis?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was, any more than was intimated in my first letter to General Garland. I had always been in favor of Memphis. It was nearer my home than any place I could get, and I couldn't do it in New Orleans.

Q. You have stated that after your visit to the Attorney-General you consulted for a day or two?—A. Yes, sir; but we were only consulting as to the plan. Our idea—my idea—at first was to try and send in a petition from two or three different points.

Q. With whom did you consult?—A. Mr. Briesen.

Q. Any other person?—A. Not Mr. Briesen altogether. I consulted with Mr. Gantt who was the attorney of the Memphis case.

Q. Did you consult with Colonel Young?—A. No, sir; I don't think I did. Mr. Young was always of the impression that it was labor thrown away to attempt to get a suit in that way.

Q. You say you consulted with Mr. Gantt among others?—A. Mr. Gantt and Mr. Briesen.

Q. You may state whether it was concluded between yourself, Mr. Gantt, and Mr. Briesen, or understood before you separated here in Washington, that you should go to Memphis and make the application there?—A. I don't think it was determined upon at that time; no, sir.

Q. When was it determined upon that Memphis should be the point for attack?—A. It was some time later than that.

Q. Where were you?—A. I think I was in Waukesha.

Q. Did you have any of these parties there to consult with you at Waukesha?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you select Memphis?—A. I selected Memphis, yes, sir; after this consultation here. I made up my mind, and I think I have some letters—it strikes me I had some correspondence with Mr. Seixas on the subject before we finally determined on Memphis.

Q. You say several points were named while you were here?—A. Yes, sir; we were just discussing certain points.

Q. What other points were named?—A. I think Kansas City was mentioned, Baltimore was mentioned, and Chicago and Saint Louis, I think.

Q. Had you come to any conclusion at the time of separating as to what point you would select?—A. No, sir; I don't think there was anything concluded until after I corresponded with Mr. Seixas down in New Orleans about it. He was then in charge of the company at New Orleans. I was always desirous of having it at home, if I could get it there, and I was still under the impression that there might something turn up there by which we could get it there. My impression is I wrote to ask whether we could not find Judge Billings; whether we couldn't institute—that is, if we could get a district attorney, get Mr. Leonard to act, although his time of service was out and there was nobody appointed in his place, we could probably find one of the judges, if any proceedings in court became necessary; but it was finally determined that we should bring the suit—make the attempt—from Memphis.

Q. As the Attorney-General had absolutely refused to take any part in the matter, how did you expect to have the suit directed from the Department of Justice?—A. Well, I determined to put the matter at issue. I determined to force it in some way or other. I determined to come on here if it was necessary, and if General Garland had refused when it was presented to him—at that time I did not know that anybody acted in his place—I intended to go to Mr. Cleveland about it; and if I could not get any satisfaction from Mr. Cleveland, I was going to Congress, and I thought I would succeed somewhere. I know that pretty determined efforts sometimes succeed. I knew that we had right on our side and I knew that we had sufficient evidence to warrant a suit of that kind, and I was determined to press it by every means in my power. I am determined now to press it, if I can, by every means in my power, and if there is anything on top of the earth that I can do, that suit shall be brought to an honorable, honest determination.

Q. When you went to Memphis about the 19th of August what was done towards the making of this application?—A. There the facts were all laid before Judge McCorry. I had ordered a large number of models and instruments down there from Pittsburgh, and had put them up in circuit and worked them for Judge McCorry. All the documents and all the evidence was gotten up there and placed before Judge McCorry.

Q. Who was connected with you in making these charges?—A. Mr. Beckwith, our New Orleans attorney, and Mr. Gantt got it up. Mr. Beckwith, I think, drew up part of the papers, and Mr. Gantt drew up part. We drew up all the papers in regular form, and put them together in regular form, so that Mr. McCorry could go over them and see everything. We had a very large record. I think in this document here (the Interior Department record) is a list of what we sent to Judge McCorry. I think there is a list in that book. We made an exhibit of the Van der Weyde and Reis instruments, and put them in operation for him. Judge McCorry took one end of the line and I took the other, and we operated them.

Q. Did Colonel Young aid you in preparing the application?—A. Colonel Young was in and out there at different times. I don't think Colonel Young took any active part in it; I think he refused to do so. He declined to sign the application.

Q. Did you request him to sign the application?—A. I think I did.

Q. You speak of the application to McCorry?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see McCorry at Memphis or Jackson?—A. I saw him at Memphis, sir.

Q. Does he reside there?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you sign the application?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The application to the Attorney-General?—A. The application to Judge McCorry.

Q. Do you remember what day you left Memphis?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect; but I presume it was about the 28th or 29th of August.

Q. Had you any knowledge at that time of the Attorney-General's intention to be absent from Washington?—A. Not the slightest; I never dreamed of such a thing.

Q. Will you state what arrangement was made, if any, for sending the application to Washington?—A. It took two or three days, according to my recollection, to draw up—it took several days, I don't remember how many, to get all the facts together, to get all this evidence together, and to draw up this application which is a part of that printed record; and it was determined that the application should not be signed by any companies at all; that it should be signed by citizens; and I understood from Colonel Gantt that we could get a large number of signatures there in Memphis to it. But we had been delayed so long and there was so much worry and trouble over the thing, and when we got ready it was late in the day, according to my recollection, and there were just four of us signed it, and then it was sent right off to Judge McCorry, who at that time was at Jackson, Tenn.

Q. Was there any arrangement with reference to the sending of the application to Washington?—A. Then I got Mr. Huntington to take this application and go to Jackson, Tenn., and present it to Judge McCorry.

Q. You had seen Judge McCorry before that?—A. Yes, sir; I had operated the instruments for him. He came to Memphis, as I understood. Of course I did not know where he lived at that time, but he came to where we were, and I operated the instruments for him.

Q. Had he agreed that he would make the application to the Attorney-General?

The WITNESS. Then?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I never heard of it.

Q. Had he made such an agreement before you sent the written application to him by Mr. Huntington?—A. I never had a moment's conversation with Judge McCorry, except about the instruments. I never heard of any such agreement.

Q. Did I understand you that at the time of sending the written application to Judge McCorry you had no assurance from him that it would be granted?—A. Not the slightest; no, sir.

Q. How long did you remain in Memphis after making the application to him?—A. I don't think I remained there more than a day or two.

Q. Did you know before leaving Memphis that Judge McCorry would make application to the Department of Justice?

The WITNESS. That he would make the application?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I felt satisfied he would be obliged to do so; but I never had any assurance of that.

Q. Did you have any knowledge before leaving Memphis that the application would be made to the Department of Justice?

The WITNESS. By Judge McCorry?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. Was there any arrangement made between you and Colonel Young or Colonel Gantt in relation to coming to Washington in connection with the application?—A. Mr. Huntington came on here to Washington.

Q. Did you know he was coming?—A. Yes, sir; he was coming on here North. He was staying at that time at the New York Hotel, for two or three months, and he was coming back to the hotel, although his residence is in Greenville, Miss.

Q. For what purpose was he coming to Washington?—A. I understood he was going to stop here in Washington, and see what became of the application, if it came on. We felt perfectly satisfied—I felt perfectly satisfied from the evidence that we collated there that Judge McCorry certainly could not or would not refuse to make this application, because there was a prima facie case made out; and as I understood from the advice given to me, there could not be a refusal on such papers as those. But so far as an understanding is concerned, I never heard of such a thing.

Q. Was there any arrangement or understanding that Colonel Young should come to Washington?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect anything of the sort. It is only here lately that I recollected Colonel Young did come on at that time. He made no arrangement with me to come on.

Q. Had you any assurance of any kind that he would come?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect that we ever said anything about it. I afterwards learned he came on to Washington, but I don't think I knew at that time he was coming. I knew Huntington was coming on.

Q. Where did you go from Memphis?—A. Back to Waukesha.

Q. And remained there how long?—A. I think I remained there until the 9th or 10th of September. It was the 10th or 11th, may be.

Q. Had you learned before leaving Waukesha that the suit had been ordered by the Department of Justice?—A. I had.

Q. By what means?—A. I received a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. Beckwith.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was at Memphis.

Q. Had you information from any other quarter that the suit had been brought?—A. Mr. Huntington, I think, telegraphed me from Washington that Mr. Somebody here in the Department of Justice had ordered the suit.

Q. Had you any word from Colonel Young?—A. I don't think I had; no, sir. My recollection about that is rather definite, for this reason: When I got the information that a bill had been ordered filed or the suit had been instituted, the editor of the Inter-Ocean was at the hotel, and a gentleman, representing the Chicago Tribune. When I got that dispatch I told them about it; that the suit had been ordered or the bill had been filed; I believe that was it. That was about the 10th of September. I received a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. Beckwith that the bill had been filed by him. The next morning I looked in the papers and I found no reference to it whatever. I thought that was very strange, and I thought they would think, probably, I had led them astray about the matter. It seems they did become a little alarmed about it. Mr. Busby, the editor of the Inter-Ocean, had, I suppose, telegraphed down to his paper, and he had a notice of it in there, which notice came from me; but there were no press dispatches; no Associated Press dispatches. I was very much annoyed, and I telegraphed down to find out what was the matter, and I received a message back that all the messages with reference to that had been suppressed by the Associated Press at Memphis. The next morning, the 11th, I bought the Chicago Tribune, and I found a very elaborate description of the bill in a special dispatch from Memphis, and then, of course, I felt much better, as I knew that they realized what I had told them was the truth about the matter. That I think was the morning of the 11th. I mailed the first paper I bought down home to New Orleans. I left Waukesha, and when I got to Milwaukee I bought another copy of the Tribune, and I could not find that long account of the Memphis suit—about the suit being instituted in Memphis. When I got to Chicago I went to the Tribune office to ascertain how such a thing could occur—how I could get one copy of that morning's paper with this notice of it and the other copy had no notice; it had disappeared. Well, the only explanation that I ever received about the matter was, that the first edition went off on the early train, and that sometimes other matter came in that was important, and they would take out one thing and put in the other; and for that reason the matter was rather definitely fixed upon my mind.

Q. You say that was on the 11th of September?—A. I think that was on the morning of the 11th of September.

Q. And this article gave an account of the filing of the bill?—A. Yes, sir; it gave a very detailed account of the different features of the bill, and an account of the bill having been filed down there.

Q. Do you know who prepared that bill?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Beckwith.

Q. Where?—A. In New Orleans.

Q. When?—A. Of course I don't know when he did it, but my recollection is that the suit was ordered about the 2d, and it was filed about the 9th or the 10th or somewhere along there.

Q. Was any part of the bill prepared while you were in Memphis?—A. That I do not recollect; no, sir; I do not think so.

Q. You state that Mr. Beckwith prepared the bill. How do you know that fact?—
A. I heard that from home, and I understood from him that he prepared the bill; I was not there; I had left and gone home. He was acting for us and was instructed to do so.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the preparation of the bill, then, except from what you heard as to Mr. Beckwith's preparing it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you heard anything in regard to the preparation of the bill before you knew that the suit had been ordered?—A. Not the bill that was filed; no, sir. There was this that I knew before: I will tell you what I know about this. Mr. Von Briesen's views about this suit were different from those of anybody else that I had conversed with. Mr. Von Briesen maintained that there was no special statute required; he believed that service could be found anywhere wherever you could find the instruments in use. I think the other gentlemen, in talking the matter over casually, were of the opinion that whenever a suit was filed against the Bell Company it would have to be done in Boston. So I had asked Mr. Von Briesen to send out his views about what a bill would be if filed under those circumstances. But there was no bill drawn up by Mr. Von Briesen or anybody else, except Mr. Beckwith, that was filed in that suit.

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen send the draft of a bill to you?—A. He did not send it to me; he sent it to our people in New Orleans. It was not the draft of a bill, I understand. I never saw what he did send, but I understood that he sent them his views on the subject.

Q. Were you in Washington at the time of the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I was.

Q. It has been stated here that a second edition of this record which I hold in my hand, the record of the proofs, &c., before the Secretary of the Interior, was printed, and that certain papers appearing in the first edition were omitted from the second edition.—A. Well, that is another one of the lies circulated by the Bell Company.

Q. Will you explain fully in regard to that?—A. Yes, sir; I will. There was an affidavit in that book by Professor Neipher, of Washington College, Saint Louis. It was a very peculiar affidavit. It stated, I think, now, without referring to it, that he was cognizant of the fact that the Reis instrument worked and would transmit speech, and therefore anticipated Bell's so-called invention; and he also stated that Fig. 7 of Bell's instrument would work. Then he made some very severe comments on the courts, according to my recollection now—you have the affidavit there before you, I presume. I objected to that affidavit going into this record, for the reason that Bell himself has sworn that speech was never produced by any instrument that he ever made until long after his patent was issued, and then only by making a great many alterations in that instrument, which, in my opinion, took it entirely out from under his patent. Now, it did not seem to me at all probable that Professor Neipher could take a Chinese copy of that instrument and make it work, when Bell could not do it himself, and when Bell had sworn that he did not do it and could not do it. Therefore, I did not think it proper that the affidavit should go into any record before any court unless accompanied with the instruments. So when the record was made up here I requested Colonel Young to have a certain number of copies of it made up, leaving out that Neipher affidavit, for my use in our suit in New Orleans, and one week—over a week, probably ten days—before the suit came up in New Orleans the Bell Company attorneys were notified that that affidavit would not be in the record; and they have circulated the report—the lying report—that it was a trick on the court. It was a lie from beginning to end, and those who have circulated it are liars and know that they are liars. The affidavit was made in the court at the time. I believe this, though; I believe that the attorneys of this company in New Orleans, whom I had notified, did not tell Mr. Storrow of it, and Mr. Storrow got up in court and called the attention of the court to the fact that this affidavit had disappeared out of this record. I believed then that Mr. Storrow was playing a trick on the court himself, but I believe now that probably he was not informed by the local attorneys whom I had informed that this would be taken out of the record and would not be in there. I could take out anything and put in anything I supposed. I was not bound to take that record and put it in just as it was. I had a right to put in anything or leave out anything. The court called Mr. Storrow's attention to the fact that it was an improper affidavit to go in, anyhow, and Judge Billings spoke of it as very disrespectful to the court. Judge Pardee, on the bench, said that "Mr. Van Benthuyzen's affidavit does not include everything in that record." And they have made use of that; some of these newspaper reporters and some of these newspaper editors have lied about it, and lied about it knowingly.

Q. I will come to that. You say that you informed the attorneys of the Bell Company at New Orleans that this affidavit had been omitted?—A. Yes; that it would not be in that record—not that it had been omitted, but that it would not go into that record, and that was done in the presence of witnesses; it was done in the presence of the Brazilian consul and the clerk of the supreme court of the State, who were in my office at the time.

Q. What use could you make of the printed record in that New Orleans suit; how could you use this record?—A. This became part of our record in the suit in New Orleans.

Q. In what way; how could you accomplish that?—A. It became part of our record of defense. We filed a certified copy of this record, leaving out the Neipher affidavit.

Q. Did you file it as a copy of the proceedings before the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; we filed it merely as a part of the papers before that Department.

Q. Have you the affidavit that you made?—A. No, sir; I have not, but I have sent for it. I never thought until I got here that it might be wanted, and I have telegraphed for it to-day.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you a copy of the record that you made here; that you reprinted here?—A. A copy of the record that was made up and handed in there?

Q. I mean the one that was reprinted here and sent down there and used.—A. No, sir; but it was exactly like the one you have here, without that Neipher affidavit.

Q. I would like that identical record that you had printed here and sent down there to use, as well as your affidavit.—A. I suppose there are some copies of it here. I think that Mr. Chandler has a copy (I am not sure) of our record. We took these papers, and then we took a large number of additional papers and bound them all together, and right in the front of those is an affidavit of mine about those papers.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What use was made of it in the New Orleans suit; what use could be made of it in that suit?—A. In our suit?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, I think that a great many of those papers are valuable as a matter of defense in the attack of the Bell Company in their application for a preliminary injunction.

Q. They were put in as affidavits, were they?—A. They were put in as certified copies of what was presented to the Department of the Interior.

Q. They were certified?—A. They are all certified in there.

Q. There is no certificate here that I see; what I am trying to get at is how you would use this as an instrument of evidence in any judicial proceeding.—A. It was used as I have said; these papers were used as a part of the papers in defense in our reply.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Are you a lawyer?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were they certified from the Interior Department?—A. Every paper in there is certified by the Department.

Q. In this book [referring to the record of the Department of the Interior]?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Before the Interior Department there were certain papers certified by the officers and put in here in the record. The papers put in evidence were certified to and then the printed record made up.

The CHAIRMAN. They were authenticated there?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; authenticated before they were put in.

The CHAIRMAN. How a printed copy of these papers could be made evidence in a judicial proceeding in New Orleans is what I asked.

Mr. MILLARD. It was done probably by stipulation between counsel.

The WITNESS. The Bell Company, in putting in their bill of complaint, put in a large number of papers and affidavits taken years ago, not taken specially for the case in which they are put in, and there was never any objection to them; we made none.

Q. They put in copies?—A. Yes, sir; affidavits that were taken years ago in previous cases. We never made any objection to that, and they never made any objection to these going in there. I do not think Mr. Storrow would ever have gotten afloat if Bayne & Denaigre, of New Orleans, the local attorneys in New Orleans, had told him the facts. I do not believe that they ever told him that that affidavit would not be used. In the hearing before the Department of the Interior here it was the only proof that was made, and the only proof they brought that the Bell instrument would work, and I was satisfied it was not the original instrument; that they were not instruments made in accordance with that patent. How was it possible for Professor Neipher to take the Bell instrument and make it work when Bell has sworn that he was unable to do it himself?

Q. Did you put this record, whatever it may be, into your Louisiana suit as a complete record of proceedings before the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; not as a complete record.

Q. Or did you put it in as a lot of affidavits in support of your resistance there to the preliminary injunction?—A. My affidavit was that the following papers were the papers that had been submitted in the case in the hearing before the Department of the Interior.

Q. Did you state they were all the papers?—A. No, sir; I did not state they were all the papers; of course not. Judge Pardee himself called Mr. Storrow's attention to that fact.

Mr. HALE. They are all certified to by the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Montgomery, on page "24 L."

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand you introduced these papers and affidavits the same as you might have introduced one affidavit. You made an affidavit that the papers and affidavits set forth in this record, as you had it, had been introduced, just as if you had made an affidavit that only one of them had been.—A. I did not say they were all the papers before the Department of the Interior, because we submitted a large number of papers that were not before the Department of the Interior at all. I put an affidavit into the court at the time to that effect, as to why I had left that out, and to that affidavit it became necessary for me to add another thing with reference to our record in New Orleans. I had gotten Professor Sloan, of New York, to repeat his affidavit that he had given us in the Pittsburgh case, and I had forgotten to mention to him the fact that we were not using the same instrument in New Orleans that we were using in Pittsburgh. He sent me the identical affidavit that we had used in the Pittsburgh case, and I never noticed that it referred to this instrument until after we had got into court. Then, when attention was called to it, I had to explain it to the court (and it was perfectly satisfactory) that his affidavit referred to a different set of instruments from those we were using in New Orleans.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The view which I took of this book, and it is what prompted my question, was that that book, containing the printed papers, would not be competent for use in that suit or in any other suit simply because they had been produced before the Interior Department. But you say they were used?—A. Yes, sir; they were used and were received and no objection made to them by the opposite side, and no objection by the court. I have always understood that that was a usual thing. The Bell Company put in all sorts of things of that kind; they put in some of the papers that were before the Department of the Interior, and there was no objection made on either side to it. Now, I will say, that after Mr. Storrow became aware of the fact that the local counsel in New Orleans had been notified that this affidavit would not be in that record, I think he called these people in New Orleans to account for not having notified him of it, because it would have saved him from appearing ridiculous in court, when we had a perfect right to put in whatever we pleased. It made him appear as though he was trying to create a sensation when there was no foundation for it.

Q. You say you did not represent it, then, as the entire record of what had been put in before the Interior Department?—A. I think we included everything except that Neipher affidavit; everything that was printed in that record. I understand that there were a good many things presented to the Department of the Interior by the other side that do not appear in that book at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I supposed so.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Will you please state—

The WITNESS. Now, first, Mr. Ranney, before I answer you, I want to say something, as I notice that certain things have been permitted to be said on the part of other witnesses. I want to make some statement in connection with this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

The WITNESS. I notice in this record (I have read a part of this record here) that it has been stated by one J. W. Rogers that I was moved to this course by him or his agents in some way, and that I represented a small licensed company at New Orleans. Now there is not one word of truth in that nor a shadow of foundation for the remark. I never saw Mr. Rogers in my life to know him, except his back, and that occurred in a hotel one night when I was here, at the time of the hearing before Secretary Lamar. When I went to New York I bought a large number of patents of the National Secret Telephone Company, and I not only bought what they had but I bought all there were, many of them from other people, and included in that list were seven patents from Mr. J. Harris Rogers, and I was informed at that time that Mr. Rogers had given them a great deal of trouble and that he had offered this very telephone patent to these people in New York, and they had refused to buy it because they considered it an infringement of the ones they already owned; that he became very indignant with them, that he published some scurrilous attacks upon them, but they, however, deeming that he was out of his senses—

Mr. RANNEY, I protest against going into that collateral matter.

The WITNESS. But that man has sat here and made these reflections on me, and I am going to answer them.

Mr. RANNEY. The witness is stating what other people said to him; not what he knows himself.

The CHAIRMAN. You cannot go into anything which does not come within the scope of this inquiry.

The WITNESS. But you have allowed that man to sit here and call me an adventurer; I have read that in this record. You have allowed him to sit here and tell you that Senator Harris, in New Orleans, denounced me as a scoundrel. I am sure that Senator Harris never said such a word in his life. He never came to me. I say let me answer it there. I know that Senator Harris is too much of a gentleman ever to have made such a remark. He has been allowed to do that, and I am going to answer it. Senator Harris never sent me such a message, and there was never anything of the kind to indicate that he ever uttered any such thing. You have it in the record there, and you cannot shut my mouth up on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you show us where it is in the record?

The WITNESS. Yes; it is where he said that Senator Harris got up in New Orleans somewhere and denounced me as a liar, or something of that kind, and had notified me that he was waiting for me at his hotel. Senator Harris never did anything of that kind, and the first time I ever heard of it—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until we find that.

The WITNESS. I do not believe Senator Harris ever dreamed of doing any such thing. There was no foundation for his doing it. Why should he have done such a thing? I read it in that book, and you cannot allow any man to get up here and speak about me and not give me a chance to reply to him or any other dead beat ejected from the hotels here.

Mr. MILLARD. I call the gentleman to order.

The WITNESS. These gentlemen who testify here have had some knowledge of him heretofore, but I have not, and there is no reason why I should shut my mouth about it and not tell his true character.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment.

The WITNESS. You have it in the record there, Mr. Boyle.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we are coming to; allow us to go on in our own way. If it is in the record we want to find it.

Mr. MOFFATT. My recollection is that he was speaking about his not being invited to the Ebbitt House to attend the conference, and he said he did not know any reason why he should not go if Senator Harris went, as he had called this gentleman a scoundrel.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, it was something of that kind.

Mr. RANNEY. But it was only putting in a conversation.

The WITNESS. That man roamed all over creation in his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us confine ourselves to the matters under investigation.

Mr. MILLARD. I suggest that we should go on with the examination.

Mr. HALL. All the witnesses have been allowed to make explanations.

Mr. MILLARD. Not this kind of explanation. We cannot sit here and allow a controversy between the witness and the examiner.

The CHAIRMAN. As we have allowed one side to make allusions of that kind, we should the other.

Mr. RANNEY. Dr. Rogers simply expressed in that conversation his surprise that they would not let him go along. He did not mention anything else.

Mr. HALE. It can be drawn out in cross-examination on this side if necessary.

Mr. RANNEY. You can contradict Dr. Rogers by showing that nothing of that kind was said, if Mr. Moffatt's recollection about it is correct. I do not remember that Dr. Rogers said it; I did not know that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. I think there is no objection to the witness making a statement confining it to any matter that has been brought out before the committee, and to those matters which are relevant to this inquiry.

The WITNESS. You are going to trust to me to say whether it was before the committee or not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I will take your recollection as to that.

The WITNESS. I make a special denial of that part of it, which has gone out before the country, first, that the National Improved Telephone Company was a small licensed company in New Orleans, licensed as the owners of the Bell patent license companies. There is not a shadow of foundation for any such statement. We have never used their patent; it is a parent and not a licensed company. We have bought a large number of patents from different people, and there happened to be seven patents of J. Harris Rogers among the patents we purchased, and, as I said before, when we purchased them I was told in New York we would have a great deal of trouble with Mr. Rogers.

The CHAIRMAN. That, I think, is not material.

The WITNESS. The next statement I see in here is that when Senator Harris came to New Orleans he said that because I had warned people against using a certain instrument that the Pan-Electric Company were using that I was a liar; that it was not an infringement; that I lied when I said it was an infringement, and that he notified me that I was a liar, and that he was waiting at his hotel for me. There was not a word of truth in any such statement as that. I do not believe Senator Harris ever uttered such a thing. Certainly he never notified me, and I never received such an invitation from him, and was dumbfounded when I read it in this record. I never became acquainted with Senator Harris until I met him here about the 2d or 3d of August, and then I was simply introduced to him, and did not have five minutes' conversation with him, and since then we have been the best of friends. We have met several times, and I am sure that he never would have made such a remark as that. He is not a person to do such a thing. If he had anything to say against me, I am satisfied he would have come to me and said it. The Rogers' instruments have never been used by the National Improved Telephone Company. There is no connection of any character between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company in any manner, shape, or form, except so far as you have seen there.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all you care to say now?

The WITNESS. That is all for to-day; yes, sir. I will go over this record, and I may find some other remarks I desire to notice.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; we will hear you then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Van Benthuysen, there was a time when there was a controversy between your company and the Pan-Electric Company in regard to an alleged infringement, was there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was made the subject of circulars; circulars were issued regarding it, mutually, were there not?—A. I do not think there were any circulars issued about it; there were some newspaper articles written, and I have those newspaper articles with me, and in connection with that, if you think it is necessary, I will produce those newspaper articles.

Q. Did you charge them with infringing your patents, or did they charge you with infringing theirs?—A. We charged them with infringing our patents.

Q. And did not the Pan-Electric Company publish in the New Orleans Picayune a letter of Mr. Garland, a letter of Senator Harris, and a letter of Dr. Rogers in relation to it?—A. Now I am coming back at you, as you generally come back at others. I say we will produce the articles.

Q. But first I want to know whether there were any articles.—A. I do not want you to go down on the record as to what they were; I will produce them.

Q. Will you please answer the question first as to whether there were any?—A. Well, I will produce them. I do not mean any reflection, Mr. Ranney. I only mean to say that we had better not have your construction of what they are; we had better put the articles themselves in.

Q. You will please allow me to be my own judge as to that.

The WITNESS. Do you want these articles, Mr. Boyle?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney is looking for them.

Q. Have you got the papers containing the letters published in the New Orleans Picayune, the three or four letters, have you got them there?—A. No, sir; I have not got them.

Mr. RANNEY. The letters published in the controversy between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I had the paper here.

Mr. MOFFATT. They are printed on page 360 of the record.

Q. To begin with, on page 359 of the record you will find the letters printed. Please look at them first and identify them.—A. (After referring to the page as indicated.) I take it for granted that these are correct.

Q. You remember seeing them in the Picayune?—A. Yes, sir; I think these are correct.

Q. Now, if you wish to put into the record your reply to them, what you published, I have no objection. I do not care for them myself, but I will give you the chance.

The WITNESS. I will read these first; there are two.

Mr. RANNEY. It is unnecessary to spend time in reading them. Let me see what you say you put in. I do not think they are material to this issue.

The WITNESS. These are the answers to them [producing some newspaper slips].

Mr. RANNEY. You may hand them to the stenographer and let them go in. I do not deem it material for you to read them. I do not care to pursue that matter.

The WITNESS. I prefer to read them.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not ask for that. I simply give you an opportunity to put them into the record, if you want to.

The CHAIRMAN. They can either go into the record, just as the others did, or you can read them, if you insist upon it.

The WITNESS. I prefer to read them.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it will unnecessarily waste our time. It is not an issue that is here, and is of no sort of consequence as to the fact. I should like to have the committee decide whether we shall waste time by reading these three or four long communications.

The CHAIRMAN. They can go into the record without reading. It is not material anyway.

The WITNESS. Very well, I will let them go into the record without being read.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not going to investigate that controversy.

The WITNESS. Well, it is a part of that very Rogers matter.

The letters produced by the witness are as follows:

[The National Improved Telephone Company of Louisiana vs. The Pan Electric Company of Washington.]

OFFICE NATIONAL IMPROVED TELEPHONE COMPANY,
New Orleans, October 4, 1884.

General GEO. D. JOHNSTON:

DEAR SIR: Our attention has been called to your card, published in the Times-Democrat of September 28.

You had been notified by the National Improved Telephone Company that the Pan-Electric Company, which you claim to represent, were using and offering for use telephone instruments that infringe the patents owned by our company.

Your card is accompanied by three letters, maintaining that your instruments do not infringe ours, written by General Garland, General Joseph E. Johnston, and Mr. I. G. Harris, and one purporting to have been written by your electrician, J. Harris Rogers, in which he enumerates a number of patents owned by us, which he alleges are the patents your company are charged with infringing, and then denies any infringement of these particular patents, and so constructs his letter as to induce the belief that these are patents in dispute, and that they relate entirely to a secret telephone system.

We would not have noticed your publication but for this extraordinary evasion.

We are satisfied that neither General Garland, Mr. Harris, General Joseph E. Johnston, or yourself would knowingly perpetrate or countenance an act of this character, and that your seeming indorsement of this extraordinary letter is due to a want of proper information upon the subject.

Your company was not charged with infringing any secret telephone system or patent of that character.

Your company was charged specifically with infringing the McTighe receiver patent and the fundamental transmitter patents, Nos. 252255 and 252521, of which J. Harris Rogers is the inventor, and he purposely evades any mention of these three patents, for he knows that he could not truthfully say that the Pan-Electric is not infringing these three.

The father of J. Harris Rogers begged General Ewing, of the National Secret Company (all of whose patents we own), to buy the transmitter you are using for a trifling sum, and it was rejected because the company already owned the original, and the so-called improved instrument had no commercial value.

Your vice-president insinuates that the National Improved Telephone Company, being unable to compete with your instrument, had published their caution for the purpose of defeating your efforts to establish a telephone company in this community.

Do you think it honorable for Mr. Harris to make such a statement when he could readily ascertain that the instruments owned by the National Improved Telephone Company have produced far greater results than any instrument used by the Pan-Electric, and that the National Improved Telephone Company own among many the only transmitter and receiver that produced practical results of any commercial value between Chicago and New York?

Is it right for the Pan-Electric Company to attach a transmitter to a copper wire a few hundred feet in length, entirely free from induction, and then claim extraordinary results over the Bell instruments that are an iron wire and contending with heavy induction and the disturbing elements of nature encountered in actual business, when almost any of the various instruments extant will do all and more than your company claims for the infringement they use, particularly as it is almost impossible to keep your instrument in adjustment, and as it is continually out of order and becomes useless by a slight jar?

Does your company pretend to own a patent for the receiver you are using?

Mr. Harris Rogers never invented any such instrument.

We claim that you are using our McTighe patent, and that there are only four receivers in the world of any commercial value, and that the Pan-Electric do not own any one of the four.

Of what use is a simple transmitter to a telephone company, even if free from infringement, without a receiver?

Three of your letters maintain that your so-called improved instrument by Rogers was compared with others and found free from infringement.

Now, we assert without hesitation that those who made this examination compared the instrument with those of other patentees, and never thought of comparing it with the original patents taken out by Rogers (which belong to this company) or his assignments. If they did, they were so deficient in mechanical knowledge and the law that they were incapable of comparing mechanical devices or giving a proper opinion, as any boy can see at a glance that there is no essential difference between the originals and the so-called improvement, and the assignments read as follows:

The Commissioner will issue patents Nos. 252,255 and 252,521 to L. G. Hine, Frank Hume, and myself. "Neither party shall sell, assign, or transfer any interest in said invention or improvement or any portion thereof, without the written consent of the parties named herein." (See record, Patent Office.)

These three assigned to the National Secret Telephone Company and that company to ourselves.

In conclusion, we respectfully decline the invitation to sue your company in Washington. We are determined, however, to prosecute any and every one using the instruments that infringe our patents here or elsewhere.

NATIONAL IMPROVED TELEPHONE COMPANY OF LOUISIANA.

[The National Improved Telephone Company vs. The Pan-Electric Company.]

OFFICE NATIONAL IMPROVED TELEPHONE COMPANY,
New Orleans, October 8, 1884.

General GEORGE D. JOHNSON,
Agent Pan-Electric Company:

DEAR SIR: When you were notified by the National Improved Telephone Company that the Pan-Electric Company were using and offering for use telephone instruments that infringed the patents owned by our company, you answered, denying the charge, and published three letters, maintaining your denial, written by General Joseph E. Johnston, General A. H. Garland, and Senator Isham G. Harris, and another by your electrician, J. Harris Rogers.

We have already exposed the attempt of J. Harris Rogers to make it appear that we had charged the Pan-Electric Company with infringing our secret telephone system, when no mention had been made by us of those patents, as you were charged specifically with infringing the McTighe receiver patent and fundamental transmitter patents Nos. 252,255 and 252,521, and that he had evaded all mention of these patents purposely.

The duty we owe the public and ourselves requires that we shall expose the extraordinary character of the remaining portions of that remarkable letter, and we therefore quote from it as follows:

"The Pan-Electric has no secret telephone, but only a secret exchange system which controls the National Improved Telephone patents, numbers 251,292 and 252,257.

"The Pan-Electric Company also owns a patent which controls the National Improved Telephone Company's patent No. 257,075; but while owning these controlling patents never uses them, for such is the wealth of patents of the Pan-Electric Company in her general system that she has no occasion to use these controlling patents, and only holds them to restrain rival companies.

* * * * *

"Even the patents excepted above were bought by the Pan-Electric Company, not for use, but simply for their great value to the National Secret Telephone Company.

* * * * *

"And for these very reasons the National Secret Company have been stock-jobbing for three years without establishing a single exchange."

* * * * *

Immediately upon reading this extraordinary statement we sent to Washington for all the telephone patents owned by the Pan-Electric Company; and to make assurance doubly sure we obtained from and we are assured by you that the following list comprises all the telephone patents owned by the Pan-Electric Company, and is the great wealth of telephone patents owned by the Pan-Electric Company claimed by Rogers:

No. 268,294, exchange system, November 28, 1882.

No. 269,326, repeater, December 19, 1882.

No. 281,560, transmitter, July 17, 1883.

No. 297,166, soft iron core for permanent magnets, April 22, 1884.

No. 297,167, simple microphone, April 22, 1884.

No. 297,168, simple microphone, April 22, 1884.

Now, the following three patents, out of over fifty owned by the National Improved Telephone Company, are the three patents referred to by Rogers as being controlled by the patents owned by the Pan-Electric Company

No. 251,292, issued December 20, 1881.

No. 252,257, issued January 10, 1882.

No. 257,075, issued April 25, 1882.

It will be observed immediately that the last-mentioned patents are older than the first, and yet Rogers had the audacity to assert that the youngest patents controlled the oldest, and that statement is indorsed by the Pan-Electric Company.

We now come to that portion of his letter wherein he sneers at the National Secret Telephone Company of New York (which he originated and remained with a long time) as being a stock-jobbing concern; and for the purpose of comparing this "sneer" with the published estimate of the "National Secret Company" by the Pan-Electric Company, we quote from a pamphlet recently issued by the Pan-Electric Company, as follows:

"J. Harris Rogers, late electrician United States Capitol, will be chief electrician of the Pan-Electric Company.

"His 'Secret Telephone,' stocked in New York at $5,000,000, and his 'Electro Gas Telephone,' stocked at $1,000,000, have already enriched himself and others, which past successes promise more to the 'Pan Electric Company,' embracing so vast a field of invention and discovery. * * *

"We therefore propose to public consideration a powerful corporation to possess, a little in the future, vast laboratories, learned electricians, and skilled mechanics standing ready to seize upon and develop whatever may be presented in the light of its influence, capital, and genius. Nor would it seem extravagant to say that such a corporation with its new methods might convert great coal, fields into torrents of electricity; that it might in time harness the very waves, clouds, water-falls, and winds to generate this mysterious agent of nature; and that busy marts and thoroughfares with their bankers, tradesmen, and pompous fashions may soon be seen thousands of miles distant through the "telemorphe" riding in carriages without horses, cars without steam, all lighted up by electric suns in a new and enchanting civilization! In a word, that the Pan-Electric Company will soon take a high place in the markets of the world and enrich all who are wise enough to measure its grand conceptions.

"One-tenth interest will be sold only to moneyed men applying for it, at a mere nominal price to construct machinery, and other interests will be sold at auction on the New York Stock Exchange for what it may bring; but it is confidently predicted that the stock will ultimately go greatly above par. It may require years to effect this result, for we depend in no way upon stock-jobbing operations, but upon a manly and scientific development of real values which stand on their intrinsic merits.

"Parties investing must examine through their own electricians, experts, and lawyers, who will judge whether the inventions are valuable or not, so that if they should, by unseen possibilities, be less valuable than we suppose, or if thieves should creep in and get control and cheat us all, no stockholder can plead the baby act. It is a venture for enormous profits on a trifle. The company has so ventured, and would rather keep its stock and take its own chances of profit and loss than to let babies in."

The italics are ours.—N. I. T. Co.

The above is a true extract from a circular issued by the Pan-Electric Company, of which General Jos. E. Johnston is president, Senator Isham G. Harris vice-president, General A. H. Garland attorney.

Will the world believe they authorized it?

Will not Barnum's mermaid lash into foam with its tail the multitudinous seas from pure envy?

Is it possible that business men and sensible persons can be induced to give such a company and such a circular one moment's consideration?

We believe that you gentlemen never realized the position you were being placed in, for there is not one single patent enumerated in your list of telephone patents that we would give five dollars for.

NATIONAL IMPROVED TELEPHONE COMPANY OF LOUISIANA.

Q. After the 1st of September, 1885, you never had any controversy with the Pan-Electric Company; you buried your differences; didn't you agree to bury your past differences in August, 1885?

The WITNESS. This was a year previous.

Mr. OATES. I think we ought to exclude from the record everything about this New Orleans Company and their suits. There could be but one relevant fact, and that is that they entered into an agreement or alliance with the Pan-Electric Company about the prosecution of a suit against the Bell Company to get the patent set aside. It seems to me that that is all that is relevant in this inquiry, and these letters and everything else pertaining to it I think we ought to strike from the record.

Mr. RANNEY. I said I did not think it was necessary to the record.

The CHAIRMAN. How did the first lot of letters get in?

Mr. OATES. Anything about that agreement to prosecute a Government suit or to get a Government suit filed against the Bell Company I think is relevant and ought to go in.

Mr. RANNEY. It is only to show that they were fighting each other up to that time.

Mr. OATES. That is admitted—that they had an agreement.

Mr. RANNEY. It has been sworn to, and I will not say anything more about it; I will not repeat it. [To the witness.] We will pass from that, then. Who got that record printed in Washington for use in your New Orleans suit. Was this copy of the record of the Interior Department which you used in your suit in New Orleans printed there or printed here?

The WITNESS. That portion of it was printed here.

Q. I understand that you can get me a copy of one of the records that you got printed here.

The WITNESS. Without the Neipher affidavit in it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. I do not think we have any copies of that. I think they have all been distributed.

Q. I thought you said that Mr. Chandler had one of them.—A. I say it is possible that he has a copy. I think that Mr. Seixas knows who has a copy here.

Q. I would like to see one of those copies.—A. If I can find one in town I will bring it here with me.

Q. Who got it done here?—A. That record of what took place before Secretary Lamar was gotten up by Colonel Young and Mr. S. R. Beckwith (another Mr. Beckwith from New York or New Jersey) and myself.

Q. Here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you here at the time?—A. Yes, sir; part of the time. I read part of the proof.

Q. Was Casey Young with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you act jointly in getting it done?—A. Yes, sir; we paid the expense jointly.

Q. Did you have the new copies gotten up on the same paper as the other?—A. Why they were the same books precisely.

Q. Was it the same colored envelope or leaf outside like this?—A. When they were used by us they had no covers on at all.

Q. As they were printed and came to you from Washington, they had the same covers as this [referring to the Interior Department record]?—A. I presume they had.

Q. Were they not made to look as near like it as you could make them?—A. You are trying to make it appear that the matter was put into court in a way to deceive the court. You cannot do anything of that kind with me. Now, you take my answers, and don't you put down your answers. I will put down my answers. I will say that the record used in New Orleans had no covers. Now that is the answer; that is the answer I want to go in there.

Q. As they were printed in Washington, hadn't they the same colors and the same colored or tinted paper?—A. I presume they had; I don't recollect. I did not pay any attention to it.

Q. As you looked at them, in their appearance didn't they look to be the same?—A. Now, I won't answer any such question as that, because you want to inquire if they were used in that way in court, and they were not.

Q. I do not want to make any implication about it, but I want to know the fact if they did not look to be the same.—A. They were never used with any covers on in any way.

Q. As printed, how was it?—A. I don't know how they were printed. My opinion is that some of them had different covers on; I don't recollect; I didn't pay any attention; but when they were used some of them had different covers on.

Q. I will come to that; I am asking you about the printing now. Who sent them from Washington to New Orleans?—A. I do not know. I merely know that I asked Colonel Young while they were being printed to go to the printer and tell him to send me a certain number of copies of that book without the Neipher affidavit in them.

Q. Did you have, in New Orleans, sent to you the original record, the record itself as printed and used in the Interior Department, sent to you at New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The whole of it; how many copies of that did you have?—A. I don't know; ten or fifteen, or something of that kind.

Q. The only difference between the record as it stood here in the Interior Department and the one which you had was, that you had left out the Neipher affidavit, hadn't you?—A. Now you can't put it that way at all.

Q. Isn't that true?—A. You are not going to put any such question to me; it is not proper to do so. I am going to tell you that I took the papers out of what was used in the Department of the Interior, such as I wanted, and added them to our record in New Orleans, and you cannot make it appear in any other way. I have no doubt you would like to do it, but you can't do it.

Q. You must not talk in that way. I am going to put a respectful question, and I want a respectful answer. I ask simply this: Is it not true that the Neipher affidavit was left out? First, that fact.—A. Well, the truth of the matter was that the papers that I used were papers that were included in that hearing, but I did not use the Neipher affidavit. That is the proper way to put it.

Q. You do not understand my question.—A. Yes, I do.

Q. The book that you got printed here in Washington did not have in it the Neipher affidavit, but the Neipher affidavit was left out.—A. I had copies of every paper put before Secretary Lamar printed for me to use in that suit in New Orleans without including the Neipher affidavit.

Q. That answers my question. Did it include the Wellington Adams affidavit or not?—A. I put the Adams affidavit into the record used in New Orleans; yes, sir.

Q. I mean in the record that you got printed. I am not talking about what you put before the court, but about the record you got printed. In that you did retain the Adams affidavit?—A. I did not have any of the record printed here except the records of that Department.

Q. Was there anything left out of that book you had printed except the Neipher affidavit?—A. I did not include the Neipher affidavit in our record used in New Orleans.

Q. Was there anything else left out?—A. We did not include in our case the Meucia matter. It was in the book, I believe, but we specially notified the court that we did not use it.

Q. Was it in the printed record?—A. Yes, sir; it was in the printed record.

Q. Then in the record you got printed here you left out nothing but the Neipher affidavit, did you?—A. I had certain books printed here that included the Neipher affidavit, but such part of the papers that were put before Secretary Lamar that I wanted to use in our New Orleans suit did not include the Neipher affidavit.

Q. Didn't it include everything else in that book except the Neipher affidavit? that is the question.—A. It included all the papers used before the Department of the Interior that I wanted used except the Neipher affidavit.

Q. Did it not include all there was in that book except the Neipher affidavit?—A. I tell you it included all the papers used before the Department of the Interior except the Neipher affidavit, so far as I recollect.

Q. That answers it. Now, is it not true, Mr. Witness, that the affidavit you used of Professor Adams in that book, that in that affidavit—A. Oh, I don't know without looking at it. There are so many I cannot tell without looking at it.

Q. Is it not true that you left in an affidavit of Professor Adams?—A. I will not say that it was true or untrue, for I have told you positively that there were so many papers that I do not recollect what they were without looking at them.

Q. I thought you said you had left out nothing but the Neipher affidavit?—A. I think that was the only thing left out.

Q. Is that your recollection?—A. My recollection is, I told you that I used all the papers in our record in New Orleans except the Neipher affidavit.

Q. That is enough. You were aware, were you not, that in the Adams affidavit that you used he had sworn that Fig. 7, in the specifications of Bell's instrument, made in accordance with Fig. 7, would not talk?—A. No, sir. I give you my word that I never have read Professor Adams's affidavit; I never have read it in my life.

Q. Don't you know that in the Neipher affidavit he had sworn that it would talk, because he and Professor Adams had tried it?—A. I know that I never have read the Adam's affidavit; I don't recollect ever reading it in my life. Life is too short now to read everything connected with this Bell telephone record.

Q. We can read it for ourselves. But you did know that in the Neipher affidavit he had sworn that it would talk, because he and Professor Adams had tried it, didn't you; you knew that?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect that part of it. I recollect that he said it would talk; but I don't recollect that he said that he and Professor Adams had tried it.

Q. You don't remember that fact. Have you got that compilation of Professor Adams?—A. Do you mean the book published by Professor Adams? I think I have.

Q. Will you produce it?—A. Can I produce it?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I have a copy in New Orleans, but I can't spare that.

Q. Will you produce it here and let me look at it?—A. It is away down in New Orleans, and I don't know now whether I have it. Mr. Beckwith may have it; some of the attorneys may have it; I don't know whether I have got it.

Q. Were you present in court when that book that was printed here by you and Colonel Young was presented to the court?—A. Now which book are you talking about?

Q. The new ones that you got printed with the Neipher affidavit left out.—A. There was no such book as you are trying to make it appear presented to the court. Now let me relate to you the way that thing was compiled, and then you will get at it straight.

Q. No; you have told your story and I only want a specific fact; were you present in court when Mr. Beckwith, your counsel, presented this book that you had had printed in Washington with the Neipher affidavit left out?—A. He did not present that book, I tell you, as you put the question, nor anybody else present it in that way. If you will wait a moment and allow me to explain about it, you will get at it right. When all this printed matter came down to New Orleans that was taken from the papers in the Interior Department, leaving out the Neipher affidavit (now you understand about it), there was added all the matter and affidavits that we had gotten up in New Orleans and other places; it was all combined together in one book, and was presented to the court as our defense—one book, and was presented to the Bell attorneys as one book—with the distinct statement to them that the papers that were used before the Department of the Interior did not include the Neipher affidavit.

That was the way it was put in—the book itself, in that shape and in that form—not in a manner that might lead the court to suppose that it was a book that had been used in Washington; that is not true. There is no truth in such a statement, and you ought not to try to make it appear in that way. I don't suppose you want to do a wrong, but you are not making it appear right; you are trying to make it appear wrong. There is no truth in that. If I had presented that book to that court in that shape and form, and with that cover, and represented it as the book that had appeared before the Secretary of the Interior, it would have been a different thing. But it was not done in that way. But this book was all taken apart. There was no index, no cover, or anything. But the matter—all this matter in here which was printed in Washington, with the exception of the Neipher affidavit—was put in our book in this way, the whole of it [indicating], and the book itself in that way was presented to the court, with notice that we did not use the Neipher affidavit among the papers taken from the Department of the Interior. I had a perfect right to leave out any document there, all of them, or half of them, and why should you raise any question about it?

Mr. HALE. I object to the putting of any further questions as to what took place at the New Orleans suit. That is a matter between private parties, and I think it is wholly immaterial to this inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. Such an objection, if introduced, would have been very proper, if at all, when the chairman was interrogating the witness about the matter. As he went into a part of it, you should allow us to pursue it through.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have been more appropriate when you interrogated Colonel Young about it. It has no relation to this inquiry, but I merely gave this gentleman an opportunity to explain his connection with the matter. You brought it out in connection with Colonel Young's testimony. It has no relation to the matter of inquiry at all.

Mr. RANNEY. What I object to is that Mr. Hale should sit by and allow you to examine in regard to the matter and then try to preclude another member of the committee from following up the same line of inquiry.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to you following that up; but I object to this matter now as being immaterial. It was only an incidental inquiry by the chairman.

Mr. RANNEY. I have read the record in the New Orleans case.

The WITNESS. I want to make a statement.

Mr. HALE. I insist that we have not any authority to go into the investigation of that case, as to what the court did at that time. We might as well cut it off here as anywhere.

Mr. RANNEY. You say you are going to cut it off half told, with only one side of it developed?

Mr. HALE. We have had enough on that fact, I think. I think it is all immaterial, and only came out incidentally on the examination of the chairman.

Mr. RANNEY. I claim the right to pursue the inquiry in the same line, and to the same extent, to see what the exact facts are, after the chairman has gone into the matter.

Mr. HALE. I do not see what it has to do with this investigation or what need there is of inquiring into it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think if there is any incorrectness about the statement of the witness as to the New Orleans matter he ought to be subjected to further examination; but in connection with that I will say that he was not asked with reference to it, because it was supposed to be within the scope of our inquiry, but only as giving him an opportunity to explain his conduct in connection with this printing, as it had been already testified to by Colonel Young. It has no relation to the inquiry whatever.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not aware that any one member of the committee has an exclusive right to inquire into a subject-matter while another is to be precluded from doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand the gentleman from Missouri to make that point.

Mr. HALE. I do not.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the chairman takes the correct view of it.

Mr. HALE. Why didn't you make objection to the chairman's inquiry, if you thought it was improper?

Mr. RANNEY. Because I deemed it material.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think we ought to stop the examination.

Mr. HALE. What is the ruling of the chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should be allowed to proceed with the examination of the witness.

Mr. HALE. In regard to the proceedings in that suit in New Orleans?

The CHAIRMAN. I think so, as the witness has already been examined on that subject.

Mr. HALE. My understanding is it was a long-continued suit between private parties, and I would like to have the sense of the committee if it should go into the record.

Mr. HALL. I think there ought to be some limit to the points of inquiry.

Mr. HALE. I am getting tired of the investigation myself. It has gone beyond the original scope of the inquiry, and I do not think this has any relation to it. I would like to have the matter understood as to how far we can go on.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not propose to go any further excepting within the range of the inquiry made by the chairman. (To the witness.) Now I want to put the question simply and squarely to you once more; if it is not true that your counsel, Mr. Beckwith, in your presence, produced a book, and told the court on inquiry by Mr. Storrow, that that was the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department. You understand the question?

The WITNESS. Your question is whether Mr. Beckwith did not produce a book and present it to the court?

Q. Yes; and whether Mr. Storrow asked if that was the book containing the record of the proceeding before the Interior Department?—A. No, sir; no such thing occurred in court. Now I am very glad, and I thank the committee for allowing me to go thus far in answering these questions, for there seems to be an attempt here to go beyond the scope of the authority given to this committee, and inquire into the affairs of private parties. I have read the resolution under which this committee is acting. I think I can read and understand the English language, and in my opinion there is an attempt tried to be made, it seems to me, by Mr. Ranney in behalf of his company—

Mr. RANNEY. What? What do you mean by that, sir?

The WITNESS. To besmirch me in some way.

Mr. RANNEY. What do you mean by "my company?"

The WITNESS. I understand that you are here advocating the case of the Bell Telephone Company; that seems to be the general impression.

Mr. RANNEY. Where did you get that impression?

The WITNESS. I get it all over town here, from everybody. I have understood that you own stock in that company.

Mr. RANNEY. You do? I will tell you, and I desire to put it on the record, that I own no stock in the Bell Telephone Company and never have. I do not know the officers of the company, and I have no more connection with it than any other man on this committee.

The WITNESS. If you were situated as I am, and I was not under oath, you would tell me that you did not believe what I said unless I was under oath. Now, I don't believe your statement, unless you put yourself under oath to make it. I do not intend to be besmirched here. I have done nothing in my life for anybody to besmirch me. I have done what I thought it was my proper duty to do, not only in the interest of my company, but in the interest of the public, and I do not intend that anybody shall besmirch my character.

Mr. RANNEY. I put only a respectful question and I insist on a respectful answer, and if you don't stop your impudence to me—

The WITNESS. But I won't allow you to attempt to make it appear that I tried to play a trick on the court. You can't do that with me, and nobody else on top of the earth can do it with me.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not trying to do anything of the kind. I asked you a proper question relating to an inquiry opened up by the chairman.

The WITNESS. I think they are improper questions. I think that you have no right to ask me about my case in New Orleans; that is a private matter.

Mr. RANNEY. When the chairman asked you about it, why didn't you say then that you thought it was improper?

The WITNESS. Because I wanted to try and answer the slanderous insinuations that have been inserted into this record, and when I got through that answer, there the matter ended, and should not have been carried any further.

Mr. RANNEY. When the chairman asked you about this matter, why didn't you say then that he was trying to besmirch you? Answer that question, if you please.

The WITNESS. Because it was my opportunity to try and answer the insinuations that have been put into this record against me.

Mr. RANNEY. By whom?

The WITNESS. I don't know all the questions that have been asked here in the examination. But it has been asserted here and been published in the papers, in the New York Tribune and the New York Sun, the editors of both of which are lying scoundrels—I say so, and I am responsible for what I say—that there was a trick played upon the court; that there was a book introduced there with leaves extracted without the court knowing it. That is a barefaced, slanderous lie, and the man who uttered it is an infamous liar.

The CHAIRMAN. You have made a statement as to how the book was introduced, and I think we had better leave that.

The WITNESS. There was no record introduced into the court in New Orleans with anything abstracted from it. The record was made up of affidavits and papers placed before the Department of the Interior, such as we chose to use. Such as we did not choose to use we excluded, and we added to them whatever we thought was proper.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we understand it.

The WITNESS. But there was no question on the part of the court, and the court will say so to-day, about the record.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you a stenographic report of what occurred there?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. The question I put to you I put after reading the record of the case in that court.—A. I have no doubt of that, because you have the Bell records in your possession, and that is the reason I think you are advocating the Bell suit.

Mr. HALL. I object to your statement, Mr. Ranney, unless you are sworn yourself.

The WITNESS. You have no right to ask me questions about it; it is my private matter.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to the course that is being pursued.

The CHAIRMAN. Just answer the questions put to you.

The WITNESS. I will do so, but Mr. Ranney has no right to ask me any questions about my private business. This matter does not concern the Pan-Electric Company or any of its sub-companies.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that it does not relate to the Pan-Electric Company, and I will state that I only entered upon that line of inquiry with you this morning in order to give you an opportunity of explaining in regard to the printing of this second edition of the record, and that I did because the matter had already appeared before in the testimony of another witness. I do not think myself that the New Orleans suit has any relation to this inquiry whatever.

The WITNESS. I am thankful to the committee for giving me an opportunity of replying as far as I have in regard to the slanders that have been put forth.

The CHAIRMAN. You will agree with me then in this, that one of the objections to allowing such a discussion between witness and counsel is, that we are apt to drift too far away from the inquiry, and it would be better for us all to limit ourselves to the strict line of inquiry.

The WITNESS. Do you say between "witness and counsel"?

The CHAIRMAN. I meant between a witness and a member of the committee.

The WITNESS. I see that I am not alone in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not mean to state or insinuate anything of the kind. That results from a habit acquired by practice in court.

Mr. RANNEY. Now, after the remarks of the chairman, I will proceed. [To the witness.] I will give you warning now that I want an answer to my question. We are here as investigators and we want the facts.

The WITNESS. If you will stick to the facts you will get them all from me.

Q. Try and not get mad, for I shall not.—A. Well, I am not going to get mad, either, except in this way, if you are going to try and besmirch anybody, I will get mad for certain. There is nobody here to besmirch; there is not a single human being in the world —

The CHAIRMAN. Let us proceed.

Mr. RANNEY. Your answers to my questions are the only things that will besmirch you, so be careful as to what you say. You were in Memphis in 1885. When did you go there and when did you leave?

WITNESS. I was in Memphis, I think, on the 19th of August, and staid there, I think, until the 28th or 29th of August.

Q. Have you any means of telling what day you left?—A. No, sir; I have no means of telling unless I could find my hotel bill.

Q. You say you were informed of the suit by a telegram from Mr. Beckwith?—A. Not while I was there.

Q. I didn't say while you were there. But you were informed of the suit by a telegram sent from Memphis?—A. I am not going to answer a question which would make it appear that I was in Memphis on the 27th of August, and heard of a suit being instituted which took place on the 9th of September. I want you to put the question so that it will go down on the record right; I am going to have it go down right.

Q. You said you were informed by telegraph?—A. Yes, sir; but I was at Waukesha Springs at that time; that was in September, not in August.

Q. I never said it was.—A. But from the way you put the question anybody would have thought that I got that telegraphic dispatch about fifteen or twenty days before the suit was instituted.

Q. It is no such thing. The man who sent you the telegram was Mr. Beckwith, was it not?—A. That the suit was filed? Yes, sir.

Q. Where was Mr. Beckwith then?—A. In Memphis. Oh, that was in September. [To the stenographer.] Now, put it down in September; don't put it down in August.

Q. Mr. Beckwith was in Memphis when you left there?—A. Mr. Beckwith was in Memphis when I left there.

Q. Mr. Beckwith was in Memphis when you left there for the place to which you went?—A. No, sir; I think he left before I did.

Q. Then how did he send you the telegram from Memphis if he had gone?—A. Because he went back there afterwards. When the suit was instituted he went back there and instituted it and filed the bill.

Q. At Memphis?—A. Yes, sir, at Memphis.

Q. Was he at Memphis when you left?—A. No, sir; I think he left before I did.

Q. Are you sure?—A. I am not positive, but I think he went down to New Orleans before I left.

Q. And you left on the 28th or 29th of August, you think?—A. I think I left on the 28th or 29th.

Q. You were there when the memorial was signed on the 26th of August, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when it was presented to the district attorney, Mr. McCorry?—A. No; I did not say so.

Q. Were you not in Memphis?—A. I told you I was in Memphis when that memorial was signed by me, but I did not tell you I was there when it was presented to Judge McCorry.

Q. I am asking you whether you were or not there.—A. I thought you asked me if I was not there when it was presented to Judge McCorry.

Q. Yes; I did.—A. Well, I told you it was never presented to Judge McCorry in Memphis, and I was not there.

Q. You have testified that somebody went to carry it to him from Memphis to Jackson.—A. I got Mr. Huntington to carry that from Memphis to Judge McCorry, who I understood was at Jackson.

Q. Were you there when Mr. Huntington came back from carrying it to Judge McCorry?—A. To where?

Q. Were you at Memphis when he returned from Jackson?—A. So far as I know he never returned from Jackson. I was not there after he left; we both left about the same time.

Q. All that you can say is that you left Memphis on the 28th or 29th of August?—A. I can recall the fact that Mr. Huntington took that memorial and went to Jackson with it to deliver it to Judge McCorry. Whether he ever came back to Memphis after that or not I do not know.

Q. Have you taken back the original agreement which you produced here, the one of the 4th of August and the supplemental agreement?—A. No, sir; you gentlemen have got it somewhere.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall not go on with the examination until those papers are found.

Mr. HALL. I move that the committee adjourn.

Mr. RANNEY. I want this question about these papers settled.

Mr. HALL (to the witness). You did not, by mistake, restore those papers to your pocket, did you?

The WITNESS. No, sir. I have looked among my papers, and I have not got it. I handed them over to the committee. After I read it I handed it right to Mr. Boyle.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, you did.

Mr. RANNEY. It was passed around, and we all read it.

The WITNESS. For Heaven's sake don't lose that agreement; there has been such a fuss kicked up about it. I brought it a thousand miles here, and I don't want you to lose it.

Mr. MILLARD. Well, we have got a report of it here in the record.

Q. Did you look at that supplemental agreement to see who wrote the word "27th" in it, the 27th of August?—A. What?

Q. The word "27th," the date of that supplemental agreement, is in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wrote it, did you not?—A. Yes, I think I did.

Q. The body of the instrument, in whose handwriting is that?—A. I do not know.

Q. You say there were two copies made of it?—A. I think there were two or three copies.

Q. And you say that Casey Young signed one of them?—A. That is my impression.

Q. Where is that paper that he signed?—A. I do not know; I did not keep that agreement.

Q. You do not generally, in the case of a paper relating to two parties, give the other side a copy of it without taking one yourself, do you?—A. I did not give one until it became of no value; it was of no value.

Q. At the time it was signed and delivered? You say Casey Young signed one, and that was delivered to you, was it not?—A. I will not be certain about that; I think so.

Q. Have you looked to see whether you have not got it among your papers?—A. But you recollect that for a long time the circumstances under which that thing was made were changed, and it became entirely worthless.

Q. You mean changed after the action of the Interior Department and the change in the suit?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is about the first thing that occurred. It took away from us all control of any suit that might be instituted.

Q. I am talking of the period up to that date. Have you looked among your papers to see if you can find the one which Casey Young signed?—A. Yes, sir; I have not got it I know.

Q. When did you search for it?—A. Just before I left home I looked through all my papers there.

Q. What probably has become of it?—A. I am satisfied that I tore it up, threw it away, or destroyed it.

Q. When?—A. I do not know; some time ago.

Q. When, do you think?—A. I suppose probably two or three months ago; a month or two ago.

Q. Do you remember doing it?—A. No, sir; I do not remember doing it.

Q. After this hearing began, did you get a telegram from Casey Young asking for that agreement?—A. Did I get a telegram for the agreement?

Q. Yes.—A. I got a telegram that I did not understand—

Q. Did you get a telegram?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is it?—A. I asked Colonel Young to go and get a copy of that telegram here from the office, and I think he got it. Where is Colonel Young?

Q. Well, did you answer it?—A. Yes, sir; I first answered—

Q. Did you answer it by inquiring which agreement he wanted?—A. No, sir; I did not. I answered that I supposed he was referring to the agreement that was made here in Washington. That is my recollection.

Q. Do you remember what your reply was?—A. I think his dispatch was of such a character that I could not tell exactly what he did refer to. I asked Colonel Young to get me a copy of that, and he went and got a certified copy of this dispatch (reading a copy of a telegram).

"Send me copy or original of agreement made in Washington between our companies as to payment of costs in our suits against Bell Company."

"CASEY YOUNG."

Q. Now I am asking for your reply. Have you got a copy of that? You replied to it, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir; this is my reply. [Reading:] "Dispatch received too late to send by to-day's mail. Will send it to-morrow. Do you remember that you were not in Washington early in July, as stated by Dr. Rogers." I had seen that in the paper.

Q. Where did you get a copy of your reply?—A. I never thought of bringing this with me, and I asked Colonel Young—

Q. Where did you get a copy of your reply here?—A. Why, there it is [indicating].

Q. But where did you get it?—A. Why, didn't Colonel Young just hand it to me?

Mr. MILLARD. That is not the dispatch that Colonel Young presented to him.

The WITNESS. He went to the office and got these copies sworn to.

Q. But there was one prior to that in which you asked him which agreement he wanted?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection as to that.

Q. Have you read Colonel Youngs' testimony as given before the committee?—A. Partly; yes, sir. I cannot remember it, but I do not think I sent any message—

Q. He testified here that he got a dispatch about it asking what agreement he wanted.—A. I think he may have gotten that from something I had written to Mr. Seixas.

Q. He testifies that he had such a dispatch.

Mr. HALL. From this witness?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Oh, that is infamous. I did not say that. I made no such statement. That ought not to be submitted to.

Q. What office did you send your dispatch through?—A. Sometimes I send by one and sometimes the other; I don't recollect.

Q. That dispatch appears to be the 28th of March, as I read it. He has given you a copy of it.

Mr. HALL. Now I submit—

Q. Wasn't there a prior one?

Mr. HALL. If you call attention to a dispatch it ought to be explained if it is in the record. The contents show—

Q. You have produced a dispatch there which Colonel Young says is a copy of your dispatch.—A. Yes, sir; dated March 18, not the 28th.

Q. Was there not one prior to that?—A. I don't recollect.

Q. How do you know that is a copy of the one you sent?—A. I understand that this is certified to by the telegraph office here in Washington.

Q. By the office here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir. We do not do things half-way.

Q. You understand that the office here keeps copies of telegrams received?—A. I understand that Colonel Young went to that office purposely to get these dispatches, because I did not have copies of them; and I understand that that is sworn to by the office, and I take it that it is correct. I do not take it for granted that everybody is a rascal by any means, and I suppose if they swear to it it is correct.

Q. You should not suppose that people who interrogate you do?—A. I do not; but I will tell you what I fear. I fear that the interrogator thinks that everybody is.

Q. You should not infer that when my questions do not imply it.—A. If anybody should pick up the record, and read the questions you put, it would appear to them, I tell you frankly right to your face, as if you were not trying to get at the facts, but as if you were trying to besmirch somebody.

Q. It must be because you are very sensitive.—A. You can put it on whatever ground you please; I will not interfere; I am not under any scandal myself.

Q. Do you know what question I put to you?—A. No, I do not.

Mr. RANNEY (to the stenographer). Wont you read it to him?

The stenographer read the last question to the witness, as follows: "Q. You understand that the office here keeps copies of telegrams received?"

Mr. RANNEY. Do you understand that the office here keeps copies of the telegrams received?

The WITNESS. I understand that they do keep copies, and that they have given them. These are exact copies of what were sent and received.

Q. That was the only question I put to you, and you might just as well have answered it.—A. Of course I suppose they are perfectly correct. I do not know that they are not.

Q. State your recollection. Do you think there was a dispatch before that?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Will you swear that there was not?—A. No, sir; I would not swear there was not.

Q. Did you write a letter in reply to Colonel Young?—A. No, sir; I do not think I did.

Q. Did you receive a letter from him?—A. I did receive one letter.

Q. Will you be kind enough to produce it?—A. Yes, sir; I will produce it, provided the chairman thinks it is a letter that is proper to put before the committee.

Q. Will you allow me to see it?

The CHAIRMAN. I think there is a part of this letter of a personal character that should not go in at all events.

Mr. RANNEY. Isn't there a part that relates to this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and if the committee will trust me I will read that part of it.

Mr. RANNEY. Will you let me see it?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean the personal part.

The CHAIRMAN. You can hardly see one without the other. I will read it to you; that is, if Colonel Young consents.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I think the personal part should not be read. It was written under a feeling of some little irritation.

The WITNESS. I would like to state, and have it go into the record, that I would not produce any private correspondence here without the consent of the gentleman who wrote the letters. I had spoken to Colonel Young on the subject, and he had told me that in regard to any letter of that kind he would be perfectly willing for the chairman of the committee to decide whether it should go into the record or not.

The CHAIRMAN. I will read a part of the letter. I guess we can agree as to the parts that ought to appear. (Reading:)

“WASHINGTON, March 31, 1886.

“MY DEAR SIR: When I saw your letter to Mr. Seixas some days ago about the contract, I had to telegraph, for I did not understand it; but I have now found a paper which gives me some light on the subject. I had forgotten that we had ever reduced to writing the verbal agreement which we made at Memphis in respect to the prosecution of the suit in our behalf by the Government, and supposed and so testified that the only agreement which was ever put in writing was the one which we made in Washington, when we were here in August of last year. On Sunday last, however, I found in my trunk what purports be a contract entered into between us in Memphis on the 27th of August, 1884, containing certain stipulations in respect to the cost of the suit to be brought by permission of the Government, a copy of which I inclose. I was under the impression that I had kept a copy of the application or agreement which we made in Washington in respect to the two suits which we then had pending against the Bell Company, but I have been unable to find it anywhere among my papers, and it may be possible I never had it, or may have handed it back to you when the second agreement was written—”

Mr. RANNEY. You can leave it there if you think the other is personal.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing to read):

“I hope, therefore, you will find it if possible and bring it with you when you come on.”

That is all.

Mr. RANNEY. One question. I have alluded to you as sending a telegraph to Colonel Young asking which paper he wanted. I am reminded by my associate, and I want to know, if you did not telegraph to Mr. Seixas inquiring which paper he wanted. Didn't you telegraph him asking which paper Colonel Young wanted?—A. I don't recollect. If I sent any dispatch I do not recollect it. I may have done it, but I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have it noted that the dispatch from Colonel Young to Mr. Van Benthuyzen was filed at 4.45 in the evening of the 18th of March, and the reply was received at 7.53 the same evening in Washington.

Mr. HALE. I move that the committee adjourn until Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee then adjourned to meet on Wednesday, April 14, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, April 14, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.15 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle). Mr. Ranney, you can proceed with your examination.

Mr. WATSON VAN BENTHUYSEN then came before the committee, and his examination was resumed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. I asked you a question the other day about the original and the supplemental contract which had then been mislaid. I wish you now to look at the supplementary agreement, so called, dated on the 27th of August, 1885; look at the date of it, and tell me whether the words “twenty-seventh” are in your handwriting?—Answer. Mr. Chairman, I think that on Monday, when we closed here the last testimony, the question was with reference to the record used in New Orleans, and I promised to bring a copy of it here and show it to the committee.

Before answering the question, I would like to produce that copy, to show that the insinuation that we used in that suit a copy exactly similar to that used before the Interior Department is not true. This copy I have here, is exactly similar to that used before the Department of the Interior [exhibiting a copy of the Interior Department record]. This other one is the record as it was filed in New Orleans, exactly, and about one-half of the matter in this book was printed here in Washington. I had requested Mr. Young to have printed all the documents that were used before Mr. Lamar except one, and the matter as you see it here put together was done by the printer. He had no instructions other than to send me copies of all the documents except this Neipher affidavit. It has been stated that part of it was abstracted. That is not true. I presume from looking at it that he printed just about what he had already set up, and the papers here are printed and put together by the printer himself without any instructions upon the subject except to send me copies of all the papers that were printed, with the exception of one. Now that [exhibiting] is our book. It presents no similarity to the one that was brought here. It is double the size, and is differently bound in every particular. And of course every lawyer knows that we had a right to put the Declaration of Independence in it if we wished, or anything else, and to leave out half of it if we chose, or put in anything that we chose. It was a trick of Mr. Storow's, and the court very decidedly snubbed Mr. Storow for his trick. Both of the judges on the bench snubbed Mr. Storow for his attempt to falsify the facts. I also said that I would bring in a copy of my affidavit. I did not have a chance to get a certified copy from the court, but I have here the affidavit as it was printed in the newspapers in New Orleans.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). You can read, if you want to, what you say was your affidavit.

The WITNESS. This was the affidavit [reading]:

"At the conclusion of Mr. Storow's argument, an affidavit was filed by Mr. W. Van Benthuyzen to the effect that as the figure seven instrument of Bell's 1876 patent will not transmit speech according to the testimony of A. G. Bell and the Bell Company's experts, without great changes, which are not admissible under the patent laws, deponent did not believe the Neipher affidavit a proper one to submit to this court without the instruments, and believing that no affidavit with reference to the capabilities of any instrument should be submitted in this case unless accompanied by the instruments for actual examination and test, deponent refused to permit said affidavit to become part of defendant's record, particularly as said figure seven instrument never did and never will transmit speech if made and operated according to Bell's patent, and Mr. George Denegre, of the Bell Company's attorneys, was notified, in the presence of witnesses, over one week before the commencement of the suit, that said affidavit would not be on the record of defendants, and the reasons therefor were given to Mr. Denegre."

Now, sir, those are the facts about the gross insinuations that have been made here with reference to the record in that case.

Mr. OATES. Very well. Now answer the question Mr. Ranney put to you.

Mr. MILLARD. Let me see the book you have there.

The WITNESS. Of course I do not leave this book here. It is borrowed for the occasion.

The question was then read to the witness by the reporter.

Q. I asked you a question the other day about the original and the supplemental contract which had then been mislaid. I wish you now to look at the supplementary agreement, so called, dated on the 27th of August, 1885; look at the date of it, and tell me whether the words "twenty seventh" are in your handwriting.—A. I think I have already told you that, Mr. Ranney, and I do not see any necessity of going over this thing again and again. I have no time to spend on this matter, unless it is something that is absolutely essential. I have told you, I believe, that the two words "twenty" and "seventh" are in my handwriting.

Q. Another question. State whether you showed to your co-directors in the National Improved Company the original agreement, dated August 4, 1885, and the supplemental agreement, dated August 27, 1885, or the other part of it that Casey Young signed.—A. No, sir; I do not think I ever have. It was filed among the papers in the office, and I do not think I ever showed it to them. I merely called their attention to the fact in general terms that I had entered into such an agreement. I looked before I left home to find if I had in any way, and I found that I never had mentioned it. Matters of that kind were left almost exclusively to me. In fact, I did not consider that the agreement was of any importance, because it was altogether contingent, and subsequently of course all those contingencies fell through, and I did not regard it as a matter of any consequence.

Q. You have produced here this morning a book which I perceive is the "Defendant's printed record on the motion for preliminary injunction in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, in the suit of the American Bell Telephone Company et al. against the National Improved Telephone Company et al., in equity." This, you say, is larger than the book produced before the Secretary of the Interior. But is it not true that this is simply a copy of the whole case as put in in the case in Louisiana, and not the book purporting to be what was before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. That book is the record of our defense in the suit in New Orleans. There never was any other book presented to the court. There was no book ever presented to the court by us such as you have here. There was never any book like that one [referring to the record of the Department of the Interior] presented to the court in New Orleans by us. You understand, Mr. Ranney, of course, that in this matter I am perfectly willing to answer any question you ask me on the subject, although it is totally irrelevant to this investigation. I would like to know how it got lugged in here and who lugged it in.

Q. I find a last part of this book—

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how this matter with regard to our record of defense in the suit in the city of New Orleans ever was introduced into this case, for it is totally irrelevant to the matter of inquiry under the scope of this investigation.

Mr. OATES. (In the chair.) The present occupant of the chair was not present during the afternoon when this question came up, and cannot give you the information.

The WITNESS. I have no objection to it, but I do not propose that any record shall be made up here for the use of the Bell Company, in regard to matters totally irrelevant, by Mr. Ranney.

Mr. OATES (to Mr. Ranney). I do not understand that this book is to go into the record of the committee at all; it is just referred to by you. That is the understanding, I believe, that the book is not to go into the record.

Q. I find a last part of this book contains what is headed in this wise: "Before the Secretary of the Interior. The telephone case. In the matter of sundry petitions to the Attorney-General to bring suit in the name of the United States to annul patents No. 174465 and No. 186787 granted to Alexander Graham Bell." Now will you look at page 30 of that document and see if two leaves of diagrams are not inserted, thereby preserving the exact paging, while the Professor Neipher affidavit is left out?—A. As I said before, I asked to have a copy of every document that was used before the Department of the Interior, a printed copy, with the exception of one, and the printer sent them out in his own shape and form. The two drawings that you see here, or the four cuts that you see here, belong to the succeeding affidavit. They relate to the instrument sworn to by Prof. P. H. Van der Weyde. Now while I am about it, I might as well say, as I presume you will go to the others, that I have heard some of you say that these cuts are introduced also in another place. This instrument is referred to in different affidavits in this book, and they may appear in here again; I do not know whether they do or not; I have not noticed, but I presume they are referred to by the affidavit attached to them or near to them. I do not see them in here but once. Somebody said they were in here twice. But those cuts that you see there, those four pages, those instruments represented there, belong to this affidavit, and by reading the affidavit you will see that Professor Van der Weyde refers to it; they are his own instruments, an instrument that he made in 1868 and 1870. They are both magneto telephones, both transmitters and receivers of speech, as I know by personal experience, for I have tried them, and they were made six or eight years before Bell's patent was issued.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the reporter read the question again which I put to the witness. I desire him to answer the precise question that I put.

The question was read by the reporter as follows:

"Q. I find a last part of this book contains what is headed in this wise: 'Before the Secretary of the Interior. The telephone case. In the matter of sundry petitions to the Attorney-General to bring suit in the name of the United States to annul patents No. 174465 and No. 186787 granted to Alexander Graham Bell.' Now will you look at page 30 of that document and see if two leaves of diagrams are not inserted, thereby preserving the exact paging, while the Professor Neipher affidavit is left out."

The WITNESS. I do not know anything of the kind. I find those cuts there, and they belong to that affidavit. I suppose no matter what is there—it is a matter of no consequence what is there—the printer fixed it up to suit himself.

Mr. EDEN. Do you wish to look at this book any further in making your answer?

The WITNESS. I have answered the question, I think. He asks me to look and see, as I understand it, if at page 30 two pages have not been inserted. I do not find any pages inserted here; I don't know anything about any pages inserted here. I find page 30 here and then I find following four pages not numbered, but page 35 comes in regular order, and these cuts, as I tell you, belong to this affidavit. I do not find anything inserted; I do not know what you mean by being inserted. Here is page 30 and here is page 35. [Indicating]. Those pages containing the wood cuts of course are not printed, and therefore there was no number to them corresponding; but it is perfectly immaterial whether there was or not. It has nothing to do with this case and it is nobody's business. We have a right to make up our record just as we please.

Q. Will you look at that record from the court in Louisiana and tell me whether that, as it there stands, was not all printed in New Orleans—all there is of that record?

The WITNESS. I do not understand the question.

The question was read to the witness by the reporter.

The WITNESS. I still do not understand that question exactly. Whether the whole of the record was printed in Louisiana, is that what you mean?

Mr. EDEN. Whether it was not printed in Louisiana; that is the question.

The WITNESS. I haven't got it yet. Which part—the whole book?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. All of this book?

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Just as it is in the volume bound up there?

The WITNESS. That part was all printed in Washington. [Indicating.] From that on—the part from the page commencing “In the telephone case, before the Secretary of the Interior” to the last page, No. 431—was all printed in Washington. That portion of it commencing with the index and ending with an affidavit of mine, after page CCCI, and an affidavit of Dr. Lawson Tait—that was all printed in New Orleans. It was all bound in New Orleans.

Q. I wish to understand you, and for that purpose I ask you to look at the volume which I now hand you, which is part of the record printed in Washington, and say whether there was carried down from Washington a book like that with the Neipher affidavit left out, and the same identical book put in in making this up, or whether it was reprinted by the same press with the rest of it as reprinted in New Orleans?—

A. In regard to all this printed matter, I have not examined it, but I take it for granted that all this printed matter here, with the exception of what is known as the Neipher affidavit, was all printed here; that these affidavits were printed here and sent down to me in this shape. Yes; they were all printed, I presume, just as they printed that, because they appeared when they got to me to be off the same form. They were sent down to me and all our affidavits made up in New Orleans were then added, and the whole matter—all the printed matter—was put together and bound. You can easily get at the facts in regard to the printing in Washington, because the printer is in town and knows all about it.

Q. How many copies of the printed record which you produced there in New Orleans were printed there and prepared for the use of the court?

The WITNESS. How many copies were printed like this?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.—A. There were, I think, about twenty altogether; fifteen or twenty; I have forgotten the exact number; no, I think there were twelve, just twelve.

Q. How many of the reprinted copies that were gotten in Washington were sent to you by Colonel Young, and how many of the old ones as it was with the Neipher affidavit?—A. That I do not recollect. We had some of the books just as they were presented here to the Secretary of the Interior—that is, just as they were printed after the hearing was over; and then we had, as I told you, all the additional printed matter, all the affidavits printed by the printer here and sent down to us without the Neipher affidavit.

Q. If you had enough of the old ones here, what occasion was there to get some new ones printed in Washington?—A. Well, I told you that I wanted the printed matter without the Neipher affidavit.

Q. What difficulty, then, was there in cutting out the Neipher affidavit in the old one and using that for the record in New Orleans?—A. I won't answer any such question. You shall not insinuate there was any cutting out or any leaving out. In the first place, you have got no business to be asking any such question, and you shan't ask it; I won't answer it. If you are building up a record for anybody here now, you can't build it up by me.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have the reporter read the question to the witness.

The reporter read the question as follows:

“Q. What difficulty, then, was there in cutting out the Neipher affidavit in the old one and using that for the record in New Orleans?”

The WITNESS. I won't answer it. Whenever you ask me a question without an insinuation in it I will answer you, not before.

Mr. HALE. Do you insist on that question, Mr. Ranney?

Mr. RANNEY. I do. There is no insinuation about it. I simply ask for a naked fact. There is no insinuation or implication in it. I am asking for a simple fact, and all the rest is impudence and not drawn from anything I have said.

The WITNESS. The court has already passed on this thing, my friend. You cannot make anything out of it for your company, I can tell you.

Mr. RANNEY. Will you please answer the question which I have put to you?

The WITNESS. With that same remark in there about cutting out? No, sir; I will not. I won't answer any such question, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Let it pass. I don't think it of enough consequence to ask it again.

Mr. EDEN. (To the witness.) It may be you did not understand the question. I do not understand Mr. Ranney to ask you if you did cut out anything from the record that was printed here to use in the suit at New Orleans, but if you might not have done that if you had chosen to; isn't that it, Mr. Ranney?

Mr. RANNEY. I prefer that the witness should answer my own question.

Mr. EDEN. I will withdraw that, then.

The WITNESS. Do I understand this: That you ask me if I cut any out, or whether there was any necessity for cutting any out?

Mr. RANNEY. Read him the question, Mr. Reporter, so that he may be sure to understand it.

The reporter read the question as follows:

"Q. What difficulty, then, was there in cutting out the Neipher affidavit in the old one and using that for the record in New Orleans?"

The WITNESS. I think that the form of your question is objectionable, because there was no cutting out; nobody thought of cutting anything out; and it is not right for a question to go in there carrying with it an insinuation.

Mr. EDEN. The question is whether you might not have done that if you wanted to, I understand.

The WITNESS. Well, he has got no right to ask me.

Mr. RANNEY. I must insist on my right to put my questions myself.

The WITNESS. Well, that is a physical act, and he has got no right to ask me any question about it.

Mr. EDEN. I only made the remark because the witness appealed to me.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't object to your saying what you did; there was no impropriety in your conduct.

Q. I understand you, Mr. Witness—A. I state here now positively and distinctly that I would not take any book and cut anything out of it, and those who have known me from my childhood know that I would not do any such thing as that, and therefore there could not have been anything cut out of any book, and there is no use of putting a question down there to imply that there was any cutting out, or that there could have been any cutting out, or that it was contemplated, or anything of that kind; it is not right for that thing to go into the record. The world does not understand this question as we do, and they immediately take up the idea that there was something wrong, some impropriety, when there was nothing of the kind. Mr. Ranney as a lawyer knows that we had a perfect right to put in anything or leave out anything. We could have put in the Declaration of Independence, as I say, or left out half of it, or put in both ends and left out the center. He knows that as well as I do, and therefore there is no use of piling up questions to make it appear so, and it has no reference to the scope of this investigation, but is entirely beyond it. He has not the right to ask me one word about my suit in New Orleans; not a word about it; and it is for no other purpose in the world than to benefit the Bell Company. He could not have gotten at the facts, at these statements, or any such insinuations except they came from the Bell Company and its numerous emissaries.

Mr. RANNEY. Let the reporter read to him again the interrogatory which I put, and add "will you please answer the same now, or say distinctly that you decline to do it?"

The reporter read the question, as follows:

"Q. What difficulty, then, was there in cutting out the Neipher affidavit in the old one and using that for the record in New Orleans?"

The WITNESS (striking with his fist on the table). I won't answer the question now. I will not answer any insinuating question. It might just as well come to a determination now as at any other time. I won't answer it, either, if the whole Congress should ask me to do it, because I don't think it is a proper question, and I have the highest respect for every member of Congress, with a few exceptions.

Mr. RANNEY. Let the reporter read the answer of the witness.

The reporter read as requested.

Mr. RANNEY. That answers the question. I will pass it not to withdraw it. [To the witness.] When was the suit brought at Pittsburgh as to which you testified at our last meeting?—A. I do not recollect when the bill was filed, but I know when it came up for hearing, and that was on the 6th of July.

Q. Who were the parties defendant to that suit?—A. The Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Q. Your company had licensed them, and as I understand you had agreed to defend patents, had you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you and your counsel not appear at the time assigned for a hearing for the purpose of making a defense?—A. We had no counsel from New Orleans in the case. We simply authorized the counsel that were employed by that company there to act in the matter.

Q. Who were the counsel employed?—A. Messrs. Bakewell and Kerr, of Pittsburgh. Well, I have forgotten; I should have added that Mr. Von Briesen, of New York, who was acting for our company in New Orleans, was there. I had forgotten that.

Q. I want to see if I understand you. As I understand you, you and your counsel went to Pittsburgh at the time assigned and engaged in the defense up to the time when you say the court said he should decide against you and grant the restraining order, or the preliminary injunction. Is that so?

Mr. EDEN. I want to inquire how far we are going into this suit at Pittsburgh, where neither the Pan-Electric Company nor any company organized under or growing out of that company had anything to do with it, and before any contract or agreement was made between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. RANNEY. I will answer that. I am only going into it to the extent and within the range to which the chairman went.

Mr. EDEN. The chairman went beyond the necessity of the case, and I do not see any propriety in incumbering the record with evidence about that matter.

Mr. RANNEY. You will find that I shall not go beyond what is proper, and you will see, before I get through, the point of it. I do not propose to incumber the record, but only question him as to certain facts that he has already testified to.

Mr. OATES. I will say, in reply, that the present incumbent of the chair cannot see the relevancy of it. Mr. Ranney says he expects to show it, however.

Mr. EDEN. Of course I have no question about Mr. Ranney's purpose to do that; but we might get at everything connected with all the suits that that company has ever had without finding out the relevancy.

Mr. RANNEY. I have but a few questions to ask, and it brings it right down to the personality of it. The matter was opened up by the chairman. Let the reporter read the question.

The reporter read as follows:

"Q. I want to see if I understand you. As I understand you, you and your counsel went to Pittsburgh at the time assigned and engaged in the defense up to the time when you say the court said he should decide against you and grant the restraining order, or the preliminary injunction. Is that so?"

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. I went to Pittsburgh with counsel and staid there until the extraordinary action of that court. And now I will add to that, you have got no right to ask me a question about the Pittsburgh suit. It does not come within the scope of this investigation; my company and the Pittsburgh company have nothing to do with this matter. The resolution of Congress confines this investigation strictly to the Pan-Electric Company and the companies springing from the Pan-Electric Company. It has nothing to do with us, and I am not going to make any more record in that direction.

Q. You said in answer to Mr. Boyle, the chairman, the other day, that you withdrew from the suit after the decision was made, and notified your attorneys not to go any further with it. Will you be kind enough to state at what date you notified your attorneys, when and where and how?—A. Well, Mr. Ranney, I don't know that that is any of your business. I have gone along here and have told you everything that there is to know under this resolution that I know anything about. If there has been any impropriety I swear I don't know anything about it. Now, if we are going to travel all over the United States and bring up as you have here private correspondence, I want you to bring that up again. You have already brought it up with some people, and I want you to bring it up with me, private correspondence outside, between individuals. I do not propose to go on here now in that way. There is a suit between us and the Bell Company in New Orleans now. There is a Government suit going on in which we expect to take part, and I do not propose to go on here now and make a record, particularly with reference to matters that are totally irrelevant to this investigation. You know that just as well as I do. You have read the resolution, and you know all about it, and you come here with a satchel full of Bell papers—for I recognized Mr. Storrow's papers in your hands on Monday—and I do not propose now to be making up a record for Mr. Storrow or anybody else, particularly as I have got other cases to attend to.

Mr. HALE. I think the objection made by the witness is well taken myself, and I would like to have the matter settled right here.

Mr. RANNEY (to the reporter). Will you read the last question and ask him to say whether he declines answering it or not?

The reporter read as follows:

Q. You said, in answer to Mr. Boyle, the chairman, the other day, that you withdrew from that suit after the decision was made, and notified your attorneys not to go any further with it. Will you be kind enough to state at what date you notified your attorneys, when, and where and how?

A. I decline to give any correspondence between myself and my attorneys. I think you are attorney enough to know that I have got the right to refuse it, too.

Q. Did you notify your attorneys, as you stated to Mr. Boyle, the chairman, not to go on any further in that suit before or after the time when you were in Washington, between the 28th of July, 1885, and August 4, 1885, when you say you left?—A. I decline to answer that question for the same reason.

Q. You will observe, Mr. Witness, that I am only asking you in relation to that to which you testified the day before yesterday, freely to Mr. Boyle in answer to his question, and I propose to go no further. I want to know if, on my calling your attention to that, you are not now willing to answer that question.—A. I decline, Mr. Ranney, to give any part of the correspondence between myself and any of my attorneys, for the reason, as I stated before, that I have a suit in New Orleans now pending with the Bell Company. There is a Government suit that I am very much gratified to say was instituted by my endeavors, and where I am going to be presently, and I should not be at all surprised if I should have a suit with the Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company our licenses. Therefore, it is not proper for me to answer the question. The Bell Company or somebody else—whether it was that local company or not, I have not been able to find out—have carried that case in Pittsburgh to a final hearing without any authority whatever, without the slightest knowledge on our part, and without our consent in any manner, shape or form, and before I get through I will know who did it and who is responsible for it, and I may have a suit with them. Therefore it is not proper for me to answer any questions with reference to that case, particularly as it is a company outside of the scope of this investigation.

Q. You said, in answer to Mr. Boyle, in substance, as I remember it, that you withdrew from the suit at Pittsburgh, and notified your counsel not to go on with it any further; and my question now is whether you did that thing before or after the interview which you had in Washington, between the 28th of July, 1885, and the 4th of August of that year, whatever the date was when you left?—A. Well, I decline to answer the question. My statements to Mr. Boyle were in answer to a matter that had already been lugged into this investigation, though it had no business here; there was no right on the part of anybody to bring in that matter. Except so far as related to my interview with Colonel Young in Pittsburgh, there was nothing in connection with the Pittsburgh suit that has any connection whatever with this investigation. Now I just decline to answer right here, on the ground that these questions are improper in view of the fact that it does not come within the scope of this investigation, and because there are other suits pending, and I do not propose now to make a record for Mr. Storrow to use when we lock horns in New Orleans and in the Government suit.

Q. You said at the last meeting, in answer to a question by Mr. Boyle, that at the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior they put into the record certain things with regard to that suit. Will you now turn to the record and tell what it was that they put in there that you have reference to in that answer? I refer to the printed record that is here before you —A. The record will show for itself. There is no Bell record here, and nobody to look to for it except you, and now you have got it, and if you know what it is you produce it yourself.

Q. I hand you now what appears to be the second volume of that printed record before the Interior Department. Will you see if it is there? [handing the record to the witness.]—A. [Without examining the record.] I do not know anything about these papers at all. I am not going to testify anything about them.

Q. Will you state then from memory what you had reference to in your answer to Mr. Boyle?—A. I know what I heard before the Secretary of the Interior while I was there, but as to taking anything printed by the Bell Company, I would not do it, for I know they lie about it and distort it and garble it; I can prove it; and I do not intend to take anything in connection with it, nor do I intend to swear to anything issued by that company.

Q. If you look at the book which I have shown you, you will see that it is not a book issued by the Bell Telephone Company, but is a part of the printed record of the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior on which the arguments before him were based.—A. How do you know that it is not a book issued by the Bell Company? Now, I assert from its appearance that it was issued by the Bell Company, and nobody else but the Bell Company, and printed by them.

Q. In the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, each party printed for his use his own record, didn't he; that is the record of his proofs?—A. Well, I will speak for myself; I won't speak for the Bell Company about anything. I know we introduced printed matter and written matter and type-written matter. If that book was issued by the Bell Company, and it should pass out of my sight, and I should pick up another one a month hence, I would not swear it was the same one, for I know they change their books.

Q. And then the record was made up of the proofs put in before the Secretary of the Interior, and on which the arguments were made; isn't this so?—A. Our records were made up from the papers which we put in before the Secretary of the Interior. I do not know what the Bell Company did. I would just as soon believe that they made up a record of a great many things that did not go before the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. As you decline looking at what I claim is a part of that record, for the reasons you have stated, for the purpose of seeing whether it was the one or not, and as you have stated to Mr. Boyle in answer to his question that they put in before the Interior Department certain things relating to the Pittsburgh suit, will you be kind enough to state what it was that they put in there to which you allude in your testimony, in your own way?—A. My testimony and my statement to Mr. Boyle were based upon the statements that I heard uttered before that hearing by Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson, the Bell attorneys. I know that their statements were not true, and the issue of fact arose right there between them, and Mr. Beckwith (who was a spectator and an attorney, a gentleman from New Orleans, now engaged in our suit there, who happened to be a spectator) denied the statement made by Mr. Storow and Mr. Dickerson, and Mr. Bakewell, who was also there, denied the same statements, and that is what I referred to. Do not understand me, Mr. Storow, now—well, I was not far wrong, but I mean Mr. Ranney—that I am trying to be ugly towards you in this matter. I am talking about the Bell Company now, and I am not telling you anything more than I have told Mr. Storow and Mr. Dickerson. I have told them both, and I have published them both, as falsifiers of the facts, and they know it, and I have told the President of the United States that Mr. Dickerson ought not to be permitted to practice at any bar; that he ought to be disbarred. So I am not stating anything here now about Mr. Storow or Mr. Dickerson that I have not told them to their faces.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the reporter repeat the question to the witness, and ask him if he has any further answer to make to it.

The reporter read the question to the witness, as follows:

“Q. As you decline looking at what I claim is a part of that record, for the reasons you have stated, for the purpose of seeing whether it was the one or not, and as you have stated to Mr. Boyle, in answer to his question, that they put in before the Interior Department certain things relating to the Pittsburgh suit, will you be kind enough to state what it was that they put in there to which you allude in your testimony, in your own way; and do you desire to make any further answer than you have done?”

The WITNESS. I have answered that; I think I made a full answer there to that.

Mr. RANNEY. (To the reporter.) Will you now read his answer and ask him to state whether he declines to make any other answer.

The reporter read as requested.

The WITNESS. Now, if you don't think that is full enough, Mr. Ranney, I will tell you something that occurred there. Mr. Storow or the Bell Company have published a book which purports to be an account of what took place in that suit in Pittsburgh. Wherever there was anything important with reference to our side of the case the stenographic report ceased, and a note was inserted in the place of the stenographic report giving what somebody—Mr. Storow, I presume—thought would suit his side of the case to put in. Mr. Storow and Mr. Dickerson also tried to lead the Secretary of the Interior to believe, and have so published, that there was a long defense, and stated that that defense consisted of fifty-three pages of printed matter. Now, that was a deliberate falsehood. Of that fifty-three pages of printed matter (I have not the book here now, but it is their book too, recollect) one-half or probably three-quarters consists of conversations between the court and the various counsel at the termination—I won't say the termination of the suit exactly, but on the court's announcing that it would grant the preliminary injunction regardless of what the defense might say or show. Now, it was all conversations. Yet they have the audacity before a court of law in New Orleans to state that there were fifty-three pages of argument on the part of Mr. Von Briesen, while there was the book to show for itself right before the court. That is one thing. They stated also that we had not withdrawn our affidavits, that we had not withdrawn our exhibits, and that was another deliberate falsehood, for I had a number of them here in Washington, and I have got them all in New Orleans now; and I have got in my room (I thought I had it here) a copy of a book giving a photograph of the court in New Orleans, with all the models, instruments, and exhibits that I had in Pittsburgh. I had them all in New Orleans. And yet they had the audacity to say to a court of law in New Orleans that these things were still in court and had not been withdrawn in Pittsburgh; but what they would not say no mortal man knoweth.

Q. Have you now finished all that you desire to say in answer to that question?—

A. Don't you think that is enough?

Q. I am asking for your desires, not mine.—A. I did not desire to make any question, and now you have got it, and got it for all it is worth, too. I could give you a great deal more of the same sort, but I thought that was enough.

Q. Is it not true, Mr. Witness, that you determined to abandon that suit and leave the defense at Pittsburgh after you got through with the interviews in Washington between the 28th of July and the 4th of August, 1885, whenever the time was when you left Washington?—A. No, sir; that is not true. I will answer beyond that. We never abandoned the suit until the company there refused positively to pay what they owed us. They owed us a large amount of money, and I could not collect it. They promised me faithfully to pay it, gave me every assurance in the world that they would pay it, and were constantly giving me the statement from day to day that the next day or within the next two or three days they would pay it; that they were waiting for some of the stockholders to get together to get the money, and they were going to pay it. They kept telling me that for a long time. Of course I could produce those letters, although they are private correspondence. Finally I saw that I was not going to get the money, and under a clause in our contract stating that a failure to comply with it or to pay what they might owe was a cause for revoking their license, it was revoked; simply for that and nothing else—nothing else in the world. I never dreamed of anything else in connection with it, except the mere fact that they owed us this large amount of money and would not pay it.

Q. When was it then that you did abandon that suit and notify your counsel not to go on any further with it. Fix the date?—A. I will give you the date of revocation, but I won't give you what transpired between our counsel at all. That license was revoked on the 15th of August. They had been promising me to pay all this time. Before the suit I had just sent them three hundred instruments, and those three hundred instruments were added to the amount previously due, previous to the commencement of the suit. All this was a debt contracted before the commencement of the suit. They had been promising me for some time previous to the suit that they would pay it, and they were promising me from day to day while I was there. I went on and gave them thirty days in which to pay it, and having failed to pay it then I revoked the license on the 15th of August.

Q. And when did you notify the counsel not to go on any further with it?—A. Now, I told you before that I was not going to answer that question; that is the same question you asked me before. You have a way of traveling around and bringing in the same thing at an intermediate stage, and then you go back to the question. You think I have forgotten it, but I don't forget so shortly. It is very ingenious; I admire your pertinacity in trying to get an answer.

Q. You seem to be better natured now, and I did not know but what you might be willing to answer the question; are you not willing to tell us when you did notify your counsel?—A. I notice that you have a way of traveling all around and coming back afterwards, and you think you will suddenly get it and pounce down on it. No, I don't feel very amiable this morning, Mr. Ranney; I am very sick.

Q. Are you willing to answer the question now?—A. No; I declined to answer that question before; that is a private correspondence between myself and my attorney.

Q. Did you notify them by letter or verbally?—A. Well, that is the same thing; you can't get it that way.

Q. Do I understand you decline now absolutely to state?—A. Yes, sir; I decline to answer that question; it is totally irrelevant to this matter, entirely.

Q. When you notified them you had concluded you would get the Government to bring a suit in its name, hadn't you?—A. I will answer you in this way; that the Government suit had nothing in the world to do with it; I never thought of a Government suit in connection with it in any manner, shape, or form.

Q. Did you not expect to get the Government to bring a suit on the 1st of August, 1885?—A. Oh, well, what have my expectations got to do with it? I might have very grand expectations about a variety of things. I don't see that that has anything to do with the case.

Q. If you had any, what did you base them on?—A. Did I say I had any? I know I did not say so.

Q. Did you have anything to do with getting the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, a former examiner in the Patent Office?—A. Oh, I am so glad that you brought that up. Wilbur? Did I have anything to do with getting that affidavit? Well, now, I will give the whole history of that, and I won't keep anything from you. I haven't kept anything from you so far; I may say that, for you might misconstrue that remark. When I came to Washington, on the 28th of July (I think that is the time when I got here), and met Mr. von Briesen, I, for the first time, was informed that there was a man by the name of Zenas F. Wilbur in existence. Mr. von Briesen told me that he had met this man on the street; that he was the examiner who had passed Bell's patent to issue; and that in a conversation with him he had gone over the whole matter, and asked him how it was that he could, in violation of law—

Mr. RANNEY. Please stop the witness and ask him to confine himself to stating what he had to do himself personally, not what other people told him.

The WITNESS. I am telling you how I came to meet Mr. Wilbur. Let that go in because you will want it.

Mr. RANNEY. No; confine yourself to a legitimate answer to my question.

The WITNESS. I am only telling you how I happened to meet Mr. Wilbur.

Mr. RANNEY. I simply asked you what you had to do with it. Will the reporter read the question again.

The reporter read the question as follows:

“Q. Did you have anything to do with getting the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, a former examiner in the Patent Office?”

The WITNESS. I did, and that is just what I am coming to.

Q. What did you do personally? you need not state what others told you.—A. You will regret that you did not let me go on in my own way. Mr. von Briesen came to my room and asked me if he could, or told me that he had invited Mr. Wilbur to come to my room to give him an affidavit with regard to his action in the issuing of that Bell patent. I told him I had no objection in the world, of course. I did not know

Mr. Wilbur or anything about what the affidavit was that he wanted to get, except from what he stated. Do you want me to tell what he stated?

Q. No, sir; just state what you did?—A. Now, I am going to tell you what Mr. Wilbur said; of course I can tell you that.

Q. I ask you what you did then; not what anybody said to you.

Mr. HALE. Go ahead and answer the question in your own way, unless you are stopped by the committee?

Mr. RANNEY. One moment. I hope the chairman will rule on that. I put a specific question and asked him what he did, and now Mr. Hale has taken it upon himself to direct what the witness shall do.

Mr. HALE. I have done no such thing; nothing of the sort.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). The Chair thinks that the witness, in answering a question, has a right to explain his testimony in that connection.

Mr. RANNEY. The question is whether, when the witness is asked to state what he did, he can be allowed to state what anybody else told him. I did not ask him what anybody else told him. Read the question again, Mr. Reporter, with this additional remark—that I ask him to confine himself to my question and omit what other people told him.

Mr. OATES. I think you are going outside of the order of proceeding. The Chair will state the question properly when it is reported and will endeavor to direct the witness properly about it. [To the witness.] Answer the question that Mr. Ranney put, and then you have a right to explain your testimony or any other circumstances connected with it.

The reporter read the question as follows:

“Q. I ask you what you did then; not what anybody said to you.”

The WITNESS. Well, I did have this to do with it; Mr. Wilbur gave that affidavit; it was given in my room, in my presence, and I think I made a copy of it; I think Mr. Von Briesen wrote it first and I made a copy of it. Then we sent out the copy—no, I think Mr. Wilbur took the copy; he took the affidavit that was drawn up, he worded it, he sat there and dictated it or worded it, and he took that copy—I should not say “copy” probably, I should say the original which was drawn up—and went out and swore to it before a notary public and brought it back and gave it to Mr. Von Briesen and I had a copy of it, an exact copy of it. Mr. Von Briesen took the original and put it into his pocket and carried it off to New York with him. After this, Mr. Wilbur was in my room and staid in my room. He was very talkative, but perfectly sober at that time. It was the first time I ever saw the man in my life. During that stay in my room he told us, without being asked, without anybody dreaming of asking him such a question, that he had given the contents of that Gray caveat to Bell and his attorneys, and he did it in the presence of Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi, and Colonel Young, here. We conversed there for some time about it, and finally he left my room and went off.

Now, I see in the record here it has been asked how it was that he made the same affidavit on the 30th of July and on the 3d of August also. I will explain that. After Mr. Von Briesen took that original copy to New York—he left the hotel the same day or the next day—I wanted copies to take home with me of that same affidavit. I had a fac simile copy of the original, and I went out and had three more copies printed off on a type-writer. Then I sent to find Mr. Wilbur to get him to come and testify to those three copies which were exact copies, but I could not find him. Somebody at the house where he lived said he had left town. The third day after that, he walked into my room and said that he had heard I wanted him, and wanted to know what I wanted. I gave him those two copies and asked him if he had any objection to going out and swearing to them; that they were fac similes of the original. He read them over carefully and said “certainly not.” I told him I simply wanted them because I wanted a copy in New Orleans and Mr. Huntington wanted a copy. So he went out and swore to those three copies. When he went out with them they were dated the 30th of July, exactly the same as the original; but he came back and stated that the notary public had changed the date, of course, as he was making oath to them, to the 3d of August, I think it was, instead of the 30th of July. Now, that is the explanation of the affidavit being made on a subsequent date. He made no secret about the thing. He stated explicitly that he had showed the contents of that Gray caveat to Bell and his attorneys. I have met him since once—

Q. I am not on that affair now. Have you stated all that you did on those two occasions that you have spoken of in connection with Mr. Wilbur?—A. Yes, sir; all that I recollect.

Q. Did you give him no money?—A. No, sir; I did not—do you mean at the time he signed that affidavit?

Q. At either of the times?—A. The third day that he came in there I gave him $2, I think, to pay for the swearing before the notary public. I never gave him any money besides that.

Q. Did you learn where he had been during those two days?—A. Oh, I will tell you what he has said, and I have a right to repeat what he has said to me; that when he passed that patent—

Mr. RANNEY. I object. What he has said since I have not asked about. I have asked you about those two occasions. Anything he said on those two occasions I asked the witness to tell all about.

Mr. EDEN. I am not able to see what the Pan-Electric Company or any of its associates has to do with this matter.

Mr. RANNEY. I will come to that pretty soon.

Mr. EDEN. You may come to it sometime or other, or you may not.

Mr. RANNEY. Anything else that Mr. Wilbur said on either of the two occasions to which you have alluded, on the 30th of July or the 3d of August, I do not object to your stating. But I do not want now to diverge into anything else. Did he tell you on the 3d of August where he had been meanwhile?—A. No, sir; I do not think he did. I have an impression that somebody told me he had been to Baltimore, but I am not certain about that. I am not certain whether I got that from the messenger who went to his house, or whether I got it from him. But I got the impression on my mind that somebody said he had been to Baltimore.

Q. Were you not told, or did you not learn, that during those days he had been confined here at police headquarters, or in jail for drunkenness?

Mr. OATES. You objected to his stating what he had heard, and now you are asking him what he was told.

Mr. EDEN. I do not see what that has to do with the investigation in any way.

Mr. RANNEY. You may strike out that last question. Perhaps it is pursuing it a little too far. [To the witness.] Was Casey Young present when either of those affidavits was taken?—A. I do not think he was; in fact, I know he was not.

Q. Was he in the room on the 30th of July or the 3d of August?—A. The affidavit was taken before I saw Colonel Young, and I told him about it when he came.

Q. What did you do with the affidavit after you got it—the first one?—A. Mr. Von Briesen kept that.

Q. How long did Mr. Von Briesen remain after that?—A. He left there that same day or the day after. I have it in my mind that he left on the evening train of that same day.

Q. Did you give it to him immediately after you got it?—A. No, it could not have been then. If that affidavit was given on the 30th of July he could not have left that day, because I think it was the 31st that we went up to see Mr. Garland, and he must have left the afternoon of the 31st.

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen go with you to see the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what day?—A. Why the only day that I went there with anybody except Mr. Huntington, and I tell you I don't recollect whether that was the 30th or 31st; it must have been one or the other; it was the 31st, I reckon, because we had that affidavit, my impression is, at the time we went to see Mr. Garland.

Q. What house did you stop at at that time when you were in Washington?—A. Great Scott! It is all there in the record; the Ebbitt House.

Q. You are sure that you got here on the 28th of July, are you?—A. No, sir; I am not sure about it; I think it was about that time. I even forgot to look at the register again; I will do so when I get back to the hotel to-day.

Q. What day was it when you went alone to see the Attorney-General?—A. I did not go alone; I went with Mr. Huntington the first time.

Q. What day was it when you and Mr. Huntington went there?—A. That was the first day we arrived here; it was either the 28th or 29th.

Q. How soon after your arrival did you see Casey Young?—A. I can fix all those dates better after I have looked at the hotel register, because I do not think I have any other means of knowing the exact date.

Q. Was it the day before or the day after when Casey Young went with you with reference to that interview, when several of you were there?—A. The first time I went to see Mr. Garland Colonel Young was not in the city; he had not arrived.

Several members of the committee, desiring to be present in the House to vote upon an important question, the examination of the witness was suspended at this point, and the committee adjourned to meet again to-morrow, Thursday, April 15, 1886, at 12 o'clock.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, April 15, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.30 p. m.

Mr. WATSON VAN BENTHUYSEN came before the committee and his examination was resumed.

Mr. RANNEY (to the stenographer). I wish you would pursue the same course as yesterday, first write down the questions and then read them to the witness. [To the witness.] Will you please state Mr. Witness, whether in both the suits at Pittsburgh and in New Orleans you did not put into the cases all the evidence you desired or had, and whether those cases did not involve the validity of the Bell telephone patents and the question of infringement which was charged against you?

Mr. EDEN. I do not see the relevancy of that question. The Pan-Electric Company had nothing whatever to do with those suits at Pittsburgh and New Orleans, nor was there any connection between that company and the New Orleans Company with reference to those matters at that time.

Mr. RANNEY. The evidence shows that they were acting in combination.

Mr. EDEN. The evidence shows that after the Pittsburgh suit had been heard on the application for a preliminary injunction there was an agreement made between Mr. Young and Mr. Van Benthuyesen.

Mr. RANNEY. The point is this: When this Government suit was brought there were these two pending suits which involved this identical question of infringement, and so the question arises as to whether the Government suit was a proper one to be instituted to settle private interests.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle). Why is it material to prove that they have put in all their evidence in those cases?

Mr. RANNEY. Because he has put in evidence the statement that he abandoned that suit, and I want to show that he abandoned it after he supposed that a Government suit would be brought. There was no occasion for a Government suit, because those suits would have settled the questions at issue.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it is necessary for us to go into the questions between the New Orleans National Improved Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company in order to determine their respective rights.

Mr. RANNEY. That is not my purpose. My purpose is merely to show that there was no occasion for the Government suit, because these suits involved the very issue involved in the Government suit.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not seem to be material, within the scope of this investigation, and I do not even in the light of the question put by Judge Ranney, perceive that it is material whether all the evidence was put in in those suits or not.

Mr. EDEN. If there should be any subsequent litigation between that company and the Bell Company the answer that the witness gives might possibly be used to his prejudice.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no; that is no valid objection.

Mr. EDEN. Whatever was done by the two companies after the agreement was made, in attempting to have this Government suit brought, would be relevant.

Mr. RANNEY. The question we have to determine here is, what authority there was to bring a Government suit. It is claimed on one side that there was none. It is claimed on the other side that it was necessary to have a Government suit brought in order to properly determine those questions. Now, the pertinency of this evidence is to show that at the time this Government suit was brought there was pending not only the suit at Pittsburgh, but the New Orleans case, in which every issue that is presented in this Government suit was pending, and full opportunity given to try and determine them, so that there was no occasion for a Government suit. Yet, notwithstanding that, it is alleged that he conspired with the Pan-Electric people and entered into an agreement to try to have a Government suit instituted, and that is one of the questions we have to investigate; that they succeeded in getting the Department of Justice, the head of which was one of the directors of the Pan-Electric Company, to bring a suit in the name of the Government and at the expense of the Government, to try an issue which issue was pending in these suits as they then stood in court, and the decision of which would have settled every issue that that Government suit would have settled. That is the view from which I ask the question.

Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that we are called upon to investigate whether there ought to have been a Government suit or not; I do not understand that that is within the scope of the inquiry at all. The language of the resolution is:

"Also as to what opinions, decisions, and orders relating to said stock have been made by any officers connected with the Government, and by whom, and all the circumstances connected therewith and arising therefrom, and also as to what suit or suits, if any, have been brought in the name of the United States to test the validity of patents issued or any other right in controversy between the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies, what contracts have been made, what moneys paid or to be paid to any person or persons as assistant counsel to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General of the United States, the reason and authority for constituting the United States as a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith."

I do not understand that we are to inquire whether there ought to have been a Government suit brought, or whether one ought not to have been brought; but we are to ascertain whether one was brought, and if so, upon what authority, and the reason. That authority does not involve the question of the legal right to bring suit, but who ordered it, and the reasons that that person had for ordering it. I do not understand that we have to decide the legal question as to whether the Government has the power to bring this suit. That question had been submitted to the Judiciary Committee before this committee was formed. But I think what we have to deal with here is the question, did the officers of the Government institute suit, what officers did it, and why they did it; and not whether, as a legal proposition or constitutional question, or as a matter of policy, the suit ought to have been brought. The question, it seems to me, simply looks to policy, and is made upon the assumption or for the purpose of establishing a proposition that individual suits were already pending that would have determined all the questions that could be determined in a suit brought by the Government. Now, it does not occur to me that it is within our province to go into that question, which would involve a very wide range, to determine whether suits brought by individuals against the Bell Company, or by rival companies against the Bell Company, or suits brought by the Bell Company against rival companies—whether a suit brought by the Government would settle anything more or anything less than a suit between those companies would settle.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that the argument of the learned gentleman is unsound and untenable, to say nothing more, independently of the lateness of the day of his hearing when the question is raised, after we have spent a fortnight and more upon that very issue. What we have to do is to inquire about bringing the suit, and the reasons and authority for constituting the United States a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith. What I want to ascertain as a member of this committee is, what the reason was for bringing that Government suit, and what the authority was for bringing it; or, if it was brought without reason, then I want to know the fact, and I think the House wants to know it. If it was brought for no reason, with no cause or justification, and the Government is to be put to the expense of prosecuting that suit, then I think the House wants to know it, and the country would like to know it.

It is charged, and that is the issue here, that the reason for bringing that suit was that the Attorney-General was interested in the Pan-Electric Company, as a large stockholder and director, and the charge is—I do not make it—that it was brought because of that and by reason of that. It is charged and claimed that may be the Government brought that suit to settle questions of law as to the validity of the Bell patents, and that it was necessary to do so. The answer to that may be—and that may be the result of this hearing—that it was brought without any reason or justification; that it was brought through the Department of Justice with the concurrence, sanction, and authority of the Attorney-General, as has been sworn, and as the evidence tends to show, not for the public welfare, but in the interest of and to serve the purposes of certain men who are charged with infringing the Bell telephone or other patents; that it is simply a suit in their interest, and not for the public good, brought without any reason, without any authority, and for wrong purposes and wrong objects.

If it be true that at that time these very men, as is alleged—I do not allege it; that is a matter for investigation—in whose interest this suit was brought were in court charged with infringements, then they had the opportunity to litigate those cases at their own expense, in their own way; and if those suits were then pending, and those issues were before the court, and the proofs in, then it is an important fact bearing upon the question in whose interest the suit was brought, whether it was for any reason or no reason, and if for any reason, what that reason was. We have been showing all through, without any objection previous to this time, that there was no occasion for this Government suit, and no justification for putting the Government to the great expense of litigating a case simply and solely in the interest of individual infringers of these patents, as is charged, who were then in court. If those issues could have been tried—and it was apparent that they could have been tried in those suits just as well as in the Government suit—then there was no occasion for a Government suit, and no reason for it, and it was putting the Government to great expense unnecessarily, and lending its name, not for the benefit of the general public, but simply and solely to promote the interests of and aid these few individuals who are, as is alleged, in conspiracy and in combination in their infringements, in their defense against the charge of infringement.

I say this, not as making the charge myself or as expressing any opinion as to what the result will be, but that is the charge, and that is the thing which we are investigating. People say, and it is charged, that there was no reason whatever; that the Government suit was brought as the result of a conspiracy on the part of those individuals who, it is charged, infringed these patents; that they have succeeded by a conspiracy, it is charged in the newspapers, in getting the Attorney-General, an interested party, to lend the name and put the treasury of the Government at the command and for the benefit of persons engaged in private controversies. One of the papers has said that the Government is a mere puppet in the hands of these conspirators, lending its name and opening the public treasury to their drafts to fight their controversy, which could just as well have been fought, and just as well have been determined between themselves without Government aid in any shape.

That is the claim that is made. I am not arguing that it is proved, nor am I expressing any opinion upon it. That is what we have to investigate. The public want to know if the Government of the United States will lend its name and its treasury to fight the individual controversies of two parties who are in conflict on the question of the validity of patents and the question of infringement; and they want to know the reasons and authority and all matters connected therewith, and those are the questions we are required to investigate and report upon. I say again—I have stated it in that form as a charge, not as expressive of an opinion of my own about it at present, nor as to any conclusion to be derived from the evidence—that is the very charge we have been for a fortnight investigating without objection, but now the gentleman wishes it stopped.

Mr. EDEN. If the committee are going to assume, in the absence of any evidence whatever, that the Government instituted this suit in the interest of the National Improved Telephone Company, and for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and not in the public interest, there may be something in the position assumed by the gentlemen from Massachusetts; but, as one member of the committee, I do not assume anything of the sort.

Mr. RANNEY. I have assumed no such thing.

Mr. HANBACK. That is one of the questions being investigated.

Mr. RANNEY. That is one of the questions under investigation.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to make a remark or two.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not desire to be put in the position of assuming the very thing that we are called upon to investigate and ascertain whether it is true or not.

Mr. EDEN. If the public interest is to be subserved by the bringing of a Government suit, it does not make a particle of difference whether in the suit that the National Improved Telephone Company had with the Bell Company they put in all their evidence or not. That is a mere controversy between those two individual companies, with which, as a matter of course, the Government has no concern. If the investigation were to be narrowed to ascertain whether the National Improved Telephone Company or the Bell Telephone Company was in the right, then there might be something in this line of inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not claim that the committee is to investigate the question of infringement; I do not, for one, propose to go into it. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that we are to pursue this investigation as to what the National Improved Telephone Company did, or what the Bell Company did, in the controversy between them, in order to determine their respective rights. That is not what we are here for, to settle the rights between those two companies. As to the remark about the Attorney-General, in view of the testimony which has been taken before this committee I do not think that it ought to go out from this committee that anybody has either charged or sworn that the Attorney-General had anything to do with the ordering of this suit, or that his interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in any way effected the bringing of this suit, because, of course, that is the very matter that we have to investigate.

Mr. RANNEY. I have carefully abstained from making any such remark, or anything that would look like the expression of an opinion. Of course that would not be proper before we have finished the investigation and made our report. But the gentleman seems to be expressing an opinion before we are through.

Mr. EDEN. I have not expressed any opinion. I was only saying that it ought not to go out from the committee that the order of the Department of Justice to bring suit was, according to the evidence here, in any way effected by the interest of the Attorney-General in the Pan-Electric Company. My opinion is that the resolution does not authorize us to investigate the National Improved Telephone Company at all; that is not an offspring of the Pan-Electric Association; and whenever we go beyond where it is shown to be acting in concert with the Pan-Electric Company we are invading private rights, and are not within the purview of the resolution of the House.

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me, Mr. Chairman; the learned gentleman seems to have forgotten that this suit we have been investigating is brought ostensibly at the instance and on the application of this very National Improved Telephone Company, of which Mr. Van Benthuyzen is the president, and on his own application. It is charged here (and there is some evidence to show it) that the real party behind that company and co-operating with it, in conspiracy with it, to get suit brought, is the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. EDEN. I do not object to pursuing that investigation, as to what he did to get this suit brought. That is not what I object to.

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman does not seem now to understand the bearing of it. Here is a suit which, according to the evidence now in, was brought by the Government upon the application of this company.

Mr. EDEN. And five other companies.

Mr. RANNEY. It stands disclosed originally on the part of this company and other companies ultimately. The memorial for the first suit that was brought was signed by this man, by Mr. Gantt, and Mr. Wright, of Memphis, and not by any other companies. The second suit (and the inquiry embraces them both) was subsequently instituted. If the gentleman supposes that I propose to put in question here anything that bears upon the litigation with reference to the question of the validity or infringement of the Bell patents he is mistaken. We are not here to try that issue, and I should object distinctly to any attempt to try it.

But, as bearing upon the reason why either of those suits was brought in the name of the Government, it is important to show this fact: that there was no occasion for any such suit. Why? Supposing it had been found that the principal questions which the Government proposed to litigate in its own name had been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States as the final tribunal which could settle it; you would not say the Government would be justified in paying out several hundred thousand dollars, more or less, to litigate questions for the benefit of the public which had been fairly and fully tried below and conclusively adjudicated by the Supreme Court. Suppose at this time all these questions had been thoroughly tried by these very men at whose instance this suit was brought, and they had been determined; would the Government be justified in lending its name and the use of its Treasury in carrying on another suit? Suppose there were suits at Pittsburgh and in New Orleans, wherein the rights of this witness and of his company, charged with infringement as they were, were in issue fairly and squarely presented, where the issue of the validity of the Bell patents was involved, where they had full and ample opportunity to have it litigated before a proper court at Pittsburgh and in New Orleans, and ultimately by the Supreme Court; suppose they had made up their cases entirely, and could have gone on with those suits if they saw fit, but, seeing that they were to be beaten, had resorted to what is claimed as a conspiracy to use the Government as an instrument to institute a new suit—for what purpose? To prevent a preliminary injunction to stop their work, thinking they could do it when they could not otherwise do it; when otherwise they would be enjoined. Would any gentleman maintain before the House and before the country that there was any good reason for the institution of this suit? Would they not say that there was no reason, or that there was some bad reason, or that there was some gross mistake? Whichever one is true, the House wants us to ascertain, and the country wants to know. I say again that I present it in that view. I do not, as I understand you do, express any opinion.

Mr. EDEN. I did not express any opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not suppose you meant to be so understood. I do not want to express any opinion until the investigation shall have been finished. I am willing to go through and make, as the House intended, a thorough search of everything that bears on that issue, and do it thoroughly and carefully, not one-sided but all-sided, and when we get through with the inquiry, then we can consider the evidence and make a report on it.

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman evidently misunderstood my position.

Mr. RANNEY. I am sorry I did.

Mr. EDEN. I want to make a single remark. I suppose that everybody who has given any attention to the matter of the Government suit knows very well that the decision by a court of any controversy between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company does not settle anything on earth except the issues between those two parties, and that the question as to the validity of the patent of the one company or the other is not in the remotest degree affected so far as the rights of everybody else in the United States are concerned.

Mr. HANBACK. Would not a decision adverse to the Bell telephone destroy the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. EDEN. No, sir; not the decision of a suit between those two parties. But whatever it may be, it is not necessary for us to go into the private controversy between those two companies, for the reason that it does not throw any possible light on this controversy. We do not know what are the rights of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation—I believe that was one of the petitioners for the institution of this Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. That has not been put in evidence yet.

Mr. EDEN. And there was some gentleman in Chicago who was an applicant.

Mr. RANNEY. That has not been put in evidence.

Mr. EDEN. The whole record has been here before us.

Mr. RANNEY. Has it been put in evidence?

Mr. EDEN. I do not know whether it has been, but it has been shown in the evidence, as the record will disclose, who the applicants were and all of them. I do not propose to be governed by any narrow view of this matter.

Mr. RANNEY. They were not applicants for the first suit, and we have not yet gone into the investigation of the second suit in the order of proof; that is a question I propose to raise by and by; my own mind is not made up on it yet.

Mr. EDEN. I propose not to be misunderstood.

Mr. RANNEY. I was going to say to you that these very men who were anticipated, here and in Chicago, the only people before the Interior Department, were alleged infringers of the patents.

Mr. EDEN. I do not propose to be misunderstood as to what I say about proofs and about a thorough search. I do not object to the most thorough examination of this witness with reference to anything and everything that he knows in regard to the bringing of this Government suit, but I do object to going into the private controversy between his company and the Bell Company. I do not think it is proper.

Mr. RANNEY. The gentleman must understand that I do not propose to go into private controversies.

Mr. EDEN. Then I do not see why you want to ask that question.

Mr. HALE. One gentleman of the committee has no right to monopolize all the time.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to correct him.

Mr. HALE. You have had nearly an hour.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to go into the trial of the issues between those parties; but he has testified, in answer to questions by Mr. Boyle, why he withdrew from that suit, and I simply want it to appear that in that suit at Pittsburg and in his suit in New Orleans that issue was raised; that is all.

Mr. EDEN. We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. RANNEY. That is why I wanted to correct Mr. Eden.

Mr. HALE. If this question was addressed to any person connected with the law department of the Government or who could give the reasons or motives for bringing that suit, it would be all right, but this witness is an outsider, connected with another company and having no connection with the Department of Justice. We will admit, I suppose, that he was interested in having this suit, a private suit, brought. But he is not competent to give the reasons why the legal department of the Government brought this suit. He says he is not a lawyer; he does not know anything about their reasons and could not give a correct opinion about it. If the question was addressed to Mr. Goode or Mr. Garland, or somebody who was responsible for bringing suit and who is supposed to know the reasons, it would be all right. But I object to it for the reason that he can know nothing about the reasons which actuated the law department of the Government in instituting a Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. May I ask you a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you understand that this inquiry which we are to make is limited to the reasons which actuated the Department, to wit, Mr. Goode or the Attorney-General, or whether there was in fact good reason for it?

*Mr. HALE. It means the reason and authority, in the legal sense, that the Government had for instituting the suits.

Mr. RANNEY. The question of whether they had or had not—

Mr. HALE. This witness cannot say what reason governed the Attorney-General or Mr. Goode in ordering this suit to be brought; he is not a lawyer and cannot look into their minds, and so I say he could not give a correct answer, in a legal sense, as to the necessity of bringing that suit.

Mr. HANBACK. If it had been made to appear here that the National Improved Telephone Company had nothing whatever to do with the bringing of this suit by the Solicitor-General, I agree with the proposition that is made, but the witness is the representative of that company.

Mr. HALE. The question is, what reason was there for bringing this suit by the Government? That is simply a legal question put by a man who is not a lawyer.

Mr. RANNEY. I have not asked any such question as that.

Mr. HALE. My understanding of the question is as to what the reason was for bringing this suit.

Mr. HANBACK. I assume, and probably shall assume until the case is closed, that the Department of Justice did make every effort to arrive at all the facts, so as to base its judgment clearly and distinctly, with reference to the right of the Government to institute this suit, upon proper reasons. It appears in the testimony that those suits were pending, suits which clearly to my mind involved the question of the legitimacy of the patents of the Bell Company, and if the decision of the court should destroy those patents the result would be to the benefit, not alone of Mr. Van Benthuyzen or the National Improved Telephone Company, but to the benefit of all.

Then the question would follow, who had the prior right, the Bell patents having been destroyed? The investigation has proceeded in this way so far without objection.

Mr. EDEN. Let me correct you. I have continually objected to going into these outside matters connected with the National Improved Telephone Company, but not in any way connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. HANBACK. Still, we have continued the investigation, and the objection has been withdrawn as a rule.

Mr. HALE. Is not this purely a legal question? The witness is not a lawyer, and his opinion upon the propriety and impropriety of the Government bringing suit cannot be competent.

Mr. HANBACK. No; that is not the question. The question is whether he filed all the papers there.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the question read.

Mr. EDEN. Let me ask you a question, Mr. Hanback.

Mr. HANBACK. Certainly.

Mr. EDEN. Do you understand the law to be that in a suit between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Bell Telephone Company the question can be raised as to whether a patent was fraudulently or improvidently issued?

Mr. HANBACK. Unquestionably. Such questions can be raised in every suit.

Mr. HALE. I would like to have the question read.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will turn to the question and read it.

Mr. RANNEY. The Judiciary Committee has held that in certain cases where the patent is obtained by fraud or surreptitiously an action on the part of the Government will lie, and that is my opinion.

Mr. EDEN. It is very well settled that there are cases where that question does arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will read the question.

The reporter read as follows:

"Q. Will you please state, Mr. Witness, whether in both suits at Pittsburgh and in New Orleans you did not put into the cases all the evidence you desired or had, and whether those cases did not involve the validity of the Bell telephone patents and the question of infringement, which was charged against you?"

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not consider that we are limited, as a strictly legal proposition, to the question whether the Department had the legal authority to institute the suit or not, but we are permitted to go into all the evidence necessary to shed light upon the question not only whether it had the legal authority, but whether it was proper to bring suit and whether any improper motive actuated the officers of that Department. As I understand Judge Ranney's question, what he wishes to draw out is the fact that this same question was pending and could have been determined in suits that were already before the courts, and therefore that the Government ought not—not that it did not have the right, but that it ought not—as a matter of public policy to have interfered. It seems to me that is proper.

Mr. RANNEY. Further than that, to show that this man himself, knowing that, proceeded in this combination to get the Government to do this, to fight his own suit.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that the question put by the gentleman from Massachusetts involves two points: One is as to what was really involved in the Pittsburgh and New Orleans suits; how can that be proved? That certainly can only be proved by the pleadings in those cases. The opinion of this gentleman or any other as to what was alleged by the plaintiff there or denied by the defendant, and what may have been decided, can only be proved by the record; at least, that is my view, that such matters cannot be proved orally, even by a lawyer; that is the point made by the gentleman from Missouri. The other is as to the manner in which those cases were tried, that is to say, the gentleman from Massachusetts asked the witness whether his company put in in those cases all the evidence they desired or all the evidence they had; that involves the manner of trying those cases.

The whole question is put for the purpose of showing that there was no necessity for bringing the Government suits; that there were suits already pending in which the very questions raised in the Government suit could have been determined. The Pittsburgh suit was pending, the bill having been filed by the American Bell Telephone Company against the Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company, and there had been a hearing on motion for a preliminary injunction before any movement was made here by these parties to have a Government suit brought. That preliminary injunction had been granted in Pittsburgh, and the suit was abandoned, so far as the defendant was concerned. That was a bill in equity filed by the American Bell Telephone Company against the Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company, and, in my judgment, did not involve the question whether the Bell patent was fraudulently issued or not; it did involve the question whether there was an infringement by the Western Pennsylvania Telegraph and Telephone Company of the patent of the American Bell Telephone Company, and its decision would have been binding only upon those parties. My recollection is that the New Orleans suit was not pending at the time the first Government suit was brought, but was brought afterwards. I will ask the witness if he knows when suit was brought in New Orleans against his company.

The WITNESS. November 5 the bill was filed.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the New Orleans suit could not have been abandoned for the purpose of having the Government undertake this proceeding against the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. RANNEY. That was before this last suit.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not remember when the last suit was ordered.

Mr. RANNEY. The bill has been filed by the Government since this hearing was begun.

Mr. EDEN. The proceedings in the Interior Department were begun anterior to that.

The CHAIRMAN. As affecting the conduct of the Attorney-General, and of the other parties connected with the bringing of the first suit, it certainly could have had no such purpose, because it was brought after the first suit was brought, and was not abandoned, and I do not know but it is pending yet. It therefore has no connection with it, and I do not know what it is claimed to prove.

But, aside from all this, it seems to me immaterial in this investigation to prove the manner in which the cases at Pittsburgh and New Orleans were tried; and I say, further, that I think one of the parties to those cases ought not to be compelled to disclose whether he put in all the evidence he had. I therefore think that the question is irrelevant.

Mr. RANNEY. Take the yeas and nays on it. Before doing that I would like simply to remark that, technically as to the mode of proof, the decision is undoubtedly correct, but we have not thought it necessary in this investigation to encumber the record by reprinting all the records in those cases, but we have taken secondary proof in those cases right through. Technically the rule of law stated by the chairman is correct, but we have not complied with it, and I do not think it essential that we should. I would like to have the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been some question heretofore as to the manner of submitting to the committee a question like this. I will submit it in this form: Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. OATES. I consulted the Speaker about it, and he says that is the correct form. I think that is the correct form.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the committee on this question? The yeas and nays are asked, and the clerk will call the roll.

The yeas were: Messrs. Oates, Eden, Hall, and Hale. The noes were: Messrs. Ranney, Hanback, and Moffatt.

The CHAIRMAN. The yeas are four and the nays three. The decision of the chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Now, one more question: On what day did you get the consent of the Attorney-General to the withdrawal of your application which had been made to the Attorney-General in July and referred to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I think it was on the 31st of July.

Q. Who was present when you got it?

The WITNESS. Got the letter, or the consent?

Mr. RANNEY. The consent of the Attorney-General. Who was present when you got the consent of the Attorney-General?—A. It was the day, I think, that we all went there; and I think that after the conversation was over Mr. Von Briesen stepped up to the Attorney-General and asked him if he had any objection to my having the letter back, and my recollection is that he simply said no, and upon that Mr. Von Briesen and I went to the Patent Office, and Mr. Von Briesen went in to see the commissioner and obtained the letter.

Q. What reason was given to him why you wanted it?—A. Well, I didn't hear the whole conversation on the part of Mr. Von Briesen. I don't know that he gave any reasons at all; I don't think he did give any. I think he simply asked if there was any objection to my having back the letter which had been founded upon an error; and, as I told you the other day, I was apprehensive that it would fall into the hands of some of the men in the Patent Office who had had some connection with the issue of the Bell patent, and they might make some adverse report upon it.

Q. Was that stated to the Attorney-General as the reason, or any part of it?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was; in fact, I know it was not; I never heard anything of the kind, and if there had been, of course I would have heard of it.

Q. In that interview was anything said to the Attorney-General about your having concluded to adopt a different course of proceeding; if so, what?—A. Oh, yes. You have it down fully, for I gave it to you the other day.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state again, what different course you stated to the Attorney-General you were going to pursue?—A. I gave that same answer yesterday or the day before. It was stated to the Attorney-General that we intended to apply to some district attorney to examine into the facts that we would present to him, and get him to apply to the Attorney-General for permission to institute a suit; and the visit to the Attorney-General was simply for the purpose of asking him to act upon that application, if we succeeded in getting one, without referring it to the Interior Department.

Q. Who said that to him?—A. I think it was said by Mr. Von Briesen. Mr. Von Briesen and Colonel Gantt conducted nearly the whole conversation; nearly every word that was said was said by them.

Q. Was Casey Young present at the same time?—A. I think Mr. Young was sitting off at some distance; I think he was sitting on the sofa, and Mr. Von Briesen and Colonel Gantt were sitting near Mr. Garland's desk, talking.

Q. When that was said to him, the Attorney-General, what reply did he make to it?—A. He had only one reply every time that we were there, that he could not have anything to do with it, and would not have anything to do with it; that was the substance of it; I don't recollect the exact words, but he would not listen to it.

Q. Was it said to him at that time that he was desired to bring a suit in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company, or the company in which he was a stockholder?—A. Why, no, sir; the Pan-Electric was not mentioned or thought of. The Pan-Electric Company was not present. I stated I was going to make the petition to some district attorney, and I was applying through my attorney, Mr. Von Briesen, to the Attorney-General for him to act promptly upon it, if I succeeded in getting the petition sent in by some district attorney. As I told you before, I did not know anybody connected with the Pan-Electric Company at that time except Colonel Young. I had been introduced to Senator Harris, but I knew nothing about them, nothing about the company. We never had a conversation about a Government suit until after all this transpired—that is, about joining together in reference to a joint action in a Government suit. All our conversation on the subject of suits previous to that was in connection with the suit in Memphis and the one in New Orleans.

Q. Then, if I understand you, you told the Attorney-General at that time that you proposed to make another application yourself through the district attorney?—A. Through some district attorney.

Q. You told him so in that interview?—A. Yes, sir. It was not determined at that time through what district attorney, or where we were to make the application from.

Q. Didn't you, or some one there in your presence, tell him that you wanted to have him bring a suit in the name of the United States at the instance of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, the company in which the Attorney-General was a stockholder or director?—A. Now, Mr. Ranney, why put that same question over again in a different guise? I tell you there was nothing said about the Pan-Electric Company there at all; nobody uttered "Pan-Electric"; nobody dreamed of talking about Pan-Electric.

Q. And you say that the Attorney-General did not decline on the ground that he could not do it for that company because he was a stockholder or director in it?—A. Now that question again implies that I have already said that there was an application on the part of the Pan-Electric Company, when I have told you that there was no such thing.

Q. I only want to understand you, Mr. Witness. You meant to have the Attorney-General understand that this suit which you desired to have brought was to be brought at the instance of your company, the National Improved Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; there was no such thing said about how the suit should be brought other than I have told you; that we expected to lay all the facts in our possession before some district attorney, and if he thought we made out a prima facie case before him, we expected to get him to make an application to the Attorney-General for permission to institute a suit. At the interview with Mr. Garland there was not one word said about how the suit should be brought, whether in the name of the Government or at the relation of any company or anybody else. We were just talking in simple plain terms at that time. Colonel Young had said (after or about that time, conversing with me about my application to Mr. Garland, in which I asked him to bring a suit in the name of the Government) that the suit ought to be brought on the relation of some individual or some company, that was his idea, but there was not a word said about that to the Attorney-General; nobody uttered anything about Pan-Electric in the presence of Mr. Garland. Mr. Garland has written a letter in which he said he was called upon by somebody connected with the Pan-Electric Company. I have repeatedly stated, before I came here, in interviews in the public prints, that I was very much astonished that Mr. Garland made that mistake, because there was no one connected with the Pan-Electric Company there except Colonel Young; nobody had said anything about the Pan-Electric Company; and how he could have taken up an idea that there was an application in the name of the Pan-Electric Company I have always wondered at. I do not know how he could have done it. It was a mistake and a very positive mistake.

Q. I would like to have you distinguish, Mr. Witness, and tell me again, to see if I understand you, what the interview was with the Attorney-General the day before, when you and Mr. Huntington alone were present with him.—A. My interview on the day before was a very short one. I called on him with Mr. Huntington. I have stated it to you now two or three times, and I will state it again, and I wish you would carry my testimony with you and look at it occasionally, and then you would not lumber up this record with the same questions a dozen times. I went there because I found my letter had been referred to the Department of the Interior, and I was dissatisfied with that action, because I thought it would fall into the hands of somebody who had issued that very remarkable so-called patent; and I stated to Mr. Garland that fact, I believe, at that time, and that I was going to call upon him next day again, as soon as my attorney got there, to make another application, because I found out that that law which I had supposed had passed had not passed. Let me write that down for you, Mr. Ranney, and keep it before you, and then you will not ask that question again. You have asked that question about a dozen times already.

Q. What did the Attorney-General say to that?—A. He said he could not take any action upon anything of the kind; that he would not have anything to do with it.

Q. Was he very decided about it?—A. Yes, sir; he was.

Q. What did you go again the next day for with the others?—A. Because I thought it was his duty to act, and I know it was his duty to act now. I thought so then, and I know it now, and I determined that he should act, if there was any way of making him do so.

Q. On the first day, what reason did the Attorney-General give you why he would not act?—A. He gave me as a reason that he was the attorney of a telephone company and had a direct interest in it.

Q. Did you not tell him that you were there acting for another telephone company in which he did not have any interest?—A. I told him that he had no right to make his private relations to another telephone company an impediment to my rights or the rights of the public. That is down in the record several times.

Q. What did he say to that?—A. He very firmly and positively repeated, every time I spoke to him on the subject, that he would not have anything to do with it.

Q. Did you tell him the first day that you had concluded to go to a district attorney, and come to him in some other form?—A. No, sir; not the first day, because I did not get that advice until Mr. Von Briesen arrived, and he had not arrived that day.

Q. Did you find out before the next day that the bill to which you referred had not passed the Senate and become a law?—A. I found out before I went to him the second time; yes, sir.

Q. Did you know it when you went to him the first time?—A. No, sir; I do not think I did. I think I found it out that same day or the next morning before we went there.

Q. Who told you, or from whom did you find it out?—A. My impression is that Mr. Von Briesen and somebody else here told me, I do not recollect who. I know Mr. Von Briesen was one of those who told me.

Q. Was not Casey Young one?—A. Mr. Young I think told me that some time afterwards; he went and ascertained the fact for himself, but not at that time. I had been to see Mr. Garland the first time before Colonel Young arrived.

Q. Who told you that the bill had been stolen?—A. I don't recollect, but I think it was Mr. Von Briesen who told me that; I don't recollect whether it was Mr. Von Briesen or not. Mr. Von Briesen told me there was no such law, but who told me it was stolen from the Senate I don't recollect.

Q. In the memorandum which you put upon the application, before referred to, to the Secretary of the Interior, you have stated there something about its having been stolen. Will you think a moment and tell me whether, according to your best recollection, you had not been so told about that time?—A. No; I was merely told at that time that there was no such law. I think afterwards I heard it half a dozen times here in Washington. That indorsement that you speak of where I make use of that language was made in October on that letter, and before I made it I had heard that the bill was stolen from the Senate; but who told me, I don't recollect; I think I saw it in the public prints.

Q. I intended to ask you, Mr. Witness, in my question whether you had not been told it—that is, that the bill had been stolen about the time you made that memorandum, in October?—A. Oh, in October? Of course I had been told by somebody, and I think I saw it in the public prints that the bill had passed the House, and had been stolen from the Senate.

Q. I do not want to press it if you understand it, but I want to be sure about it, whether you had been told it before October or about the time when you made that memorandum, and put the fact into it.—A. As I told you before, I learned on the day that I got here, or the day after, that there was no such law. Now, when I learned and was told the fact of its being stolen from the Senate (I am dealing with the word "stolen"), I think that was some time subsequent. But I had heard at that time that the bill had not passed, had not become a law; that there had been such a law proposed but that it had not become a law, and Mr. Von Briesen told me there was no such law and no necessity for any such law.

Q. Did not Mr. Von Briesen at the same time that he told you there was no such law, and that there was no necessity for such a law, say that it would not make any difference with your application whether the suit was brought under such a statute or under the laws as already existing, and therefore that the application already in would answer the purpose?—A. Mr. Von Briesen on the contrary told me that the application would not suit my purpose as it was then put in.

Q. Did he not say that you had better not go on with that application, but had better start proceedings before some district attorney, and proceed in another way?—A. No, sir; he did not tell me that. He told me that what I had done so far was wrong; that my proper course would be to go to some district attorney, as I have already told you.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Casey Young that?—A. I think Mr. Von Briesen told him that during our conversations in the hotel.

Q. Was that conference here which you had with Casey Young and Mr. Von Briesen the last of July or the first of August, a thing requested by you, or requested by some one else, and if so, who else?—A. It was requested by me.

Q. Did you notify Mr. Casey Young to be there, or did he notify you, and of the time when you were to meet?—A. I notified him. Now, I will give you a letter to show about that; here is a letter of Colonel Young's that I have authority to introduce and to show to the chairman [producing a letter].

Mr. RANNEY. Will you be kind enough to let me see it.

The WITNESS. No; I beg your pardon; I will show it to the chairman first.

Mr. RANNEY. Have your choice; that is the rule we have formed.

The WITNESS. I will read this part and then give it to the chairman. This letter is dated July 25, 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me see it.

(The witness handed the letter to the chairman as requested.)

The CHAIRMAN. This letter is dated July 25; it is not material at all, any part of it.

Mr. RANNEY. Give the date of the letter, and then read that part of it.

(The chairman handed the letter to the witness and indicated the portion he should read.)

The WITNESS. This letter is dated Memphis, July 25, 1885. It says:

"I think the proposed conference of the utmost importance, and if you still desire it when this letter reaches you, wire me, and we will start at once. If I hear from you in time, will start Tuesday morning. If we are to meet, the sooner we do so the better.

"In haste, yours truly,

"CASEY YOUNG."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When you got that letter did you reply to it by letter or by telegram?—A. I could not recollect that now. I should suppose that I wired him, because it was so late, the 25th of the month, that I would have been compelled to have done so to have had him reach Washington on the 29th, the day I think he arrived.

Q. He speaks there of a conference that had been proposed or arranged—I do not remember the exact language. When had that conference been proposed or agreed upon?—A. That is the conference I have been telling you about in Pittsburg all the time.

Q. How did Mr. Von Briesen happen to be there? Did you telegraph him to meet you two?—A. I called him; yes, sir.

Q. How did Colonel Gantt happen to be there? Did you get him?—A. No, sir; I did not call him.

Q. In the conferences that you had when here at that time, did you meet Senator Harris?—A. No, sir; I never had any conference with Senator Harris. Colonel Gantt occupied rooms on the same floor of the Ebbitt House that I did, and about the third room from mine. Some one told me that Senator Harris had called there on a visit, called on Colonel Gantt, and he wanted to introduce me, and I went in and was introduced to Senator Harris. I was not there five minutes, and I do not think he remained a minute after I left. I think he went out of the door at the same time I did. I understood that he had just come in as I went there, and he went out about the same time I did. We just spoke a few words and separated. I would like to add to that a further explanation. It has been remarked here, I believe, that it was somewhat singular that as I had no acquaintance with Senator Harris and no conference with him, yet on the fourth of August he had signed an agreement with my company. Now, that was not true. I have repeatedly stated here that that agreement on the 4th of August was drawn up in pencil by me at that time, and left here, and I have every reason to believe that Senator Harris did not see it for a long time afterwards, not until September or some time late in August, because it did not come to me signed until then. I did not sign it at that time, and I am satisfied that he did not sign it, for I did not get it for a long time afterwards, and the reason of the delay was, as I have understood—I do not know this of my own personal knowledge—

Q. Do not state anything that you do not personally know.—A. I have understood that Colonel Young kept it in his pocket and did not find Senator Harris until he caught him in Memphis.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the witness stating that last fact.

The WITNESS. My impression is that it was not signed until after the Government suit was ordered.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask that the last part of the witness's answer be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is improper, where he is stating it as explanatory.

Mr. EDEN. It certainly is competent for him to state that he did not receive it until October.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I probably should have given you this copy of a letter to which that was sent in reply, so that you would have understood it. I wrote a letter to Mr. Casey Young, and this is the copy I kept of it (producing a letter).

The CHAIRMAN. In my view it is not material. Only one sentence of that letter of Mr. Young's has gone in, showing simply that it was an arrangement for a conference.

The WITNESS. It was a letter in which I notified them that there were certain patents of Mr. Rogers. You wanted the numbers of them the other day, and now I can give you the numbers from this letter if you want them.

Mr. RANNEY. That is of no consequence. (To the witness.) Your recollection is that the agreement of the 4th of August was sent to you when signed?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; it was sent to me.

Q. How was it sent or how received?—A. By mail.

Q. Inclosed in a letter?—A. I do not think any letter came at all. I think there were just two copies of the agreement received by me in an envelope, and then I think I signed one and returned it by mail. That is my recollection of it.

Q. Haven't you that letter?—A. What letter?

Q. You said you sent it by mail. I assume that when you send by mail you send it inclosed in a letter. Have you that?—A. I did not say I received a letter inclosing them. I say they were inclosed in an envelope.

Q. And whether you sent back any answer to that inquiry, which was sent back in a letter?—A. It was not necessary for any letter to accompany them.

Q. Then you have no letter of Colonel Young's which you received at the time the agreement came, and no copy of your reply, if you made one, when you sent it back, by which you can fix the date, have you?—A. No, sir; I do not think I received any letter. I am positive I did not receive any letter, and I am confident I did not send any.

Q. Then have you anything by which you can determine the exact date when you received that agreement, if it was sent to you and not delivered here?—A. The only way I can determine the date is by recollecting that I received it either in Chicago or at Waukesha. If it was the middle of August that I received it, then I received it at Waukesha. If it was in the middle of September I received it, I received it in Chicago. I have tried to find something since I have been here that would enable me to fix the date, whether it was in September or August, but I have not been able to do so.

Q. I understood you to say the other day in reply to one or the other of us that it might have been in the middle of August when you received it. Might it not have been?—A. I will not say positively that it was or was not. My impression is that it was received in September. My impression is that I received it in Chicago, and if I did, then it was in September, because I reached Chicago on the 11th of September, and staid there until about the end of September.

Q. Was the memorandum or the agreement which you wrote in pencil and gave to Colonel Young in Washington signed when you gave it to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it dated?—A. I think it was dated, but I know it was not signed. I never sign anything in lead pencil.

Q. Are you sure it was dated?—A. I am confident it was dated.

Q. When this supplementary agreement was drawn and executed on the 27th day of August, at Memphis, was not that original agreement there?—A. I have testified that it was not executed. What became of that original agreement? Where is the original agreement? It disappeared the other day; where is it now?

Mr. RANNEY. We had it the day after; the clerk has it. We found it that night after we got through.

The WITNESS. Where was it?

Mr. RANNEY. It was shown you the next day you remember.

The WITNESS. Where has it been all this time?

Mr. RANNEY. (To the clerk.) Will you show him the agreement? It is my privilege to examine the witness, not have him examine me.

The WITNESS. I would like to see that agreement. [The agreement was handed to the witness, who examined it critically.] Mr. Ranney, what did you take that paper the other day and hold it up to the light for; what was the matter with it?

Mr. RANNEY (To the reporter.) Will you read him my question?

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, has this agreement been out of the office since I filed it here?

The CHAIRMAN. I am not able to say; it has not been in my possession.

The WITNESS. If it has, I will not swear to it any longer. I am getting suspicious, too. It is somewhat infectious; somewhat contagious.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the reporter read my question to the witness?

The reporter read as follows:

Q. "When this supplementary agreement was drawn and executed on the 27th day August, of at Memphis, was not that original agreement there?"

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. How do you know it was not?—A. I know I did not have it. Whether anybody else had it or not I do not know, of course.

Q. When you signed the supplemental agreement, you referred to the original agreement and the exact date of it. How did you ascertain the exact date of the original agreement when the supplementary agreement was drawn and signed if you did not have it there?—A. Why, I recollected the date of the agreement, of course; I had written it, and a man can scarcely write anything without recollecting all about it. I wrote it on the 4th of August, and that one was written on the 27th of August, and if my memory is not that long it is a mighty poor one.

Q. If you had not got your original pencil agreement which you had drawn, back at that time, and did not know whether one had been executed or not, so as to become an agreement, and you had not signed it yourself, why in the supplemental agreement was it referred to as an agreement signed and dated?—A. Oh, I understood that it was all right, but they were just waiting to get it signed, that was all.

Q. Then the terms of the original agreement had been settled between you verbally, and you understood that whatever agreement you had made had been or would be reduced to writing, did you?—A. No; it had not been agreed to, because I had not seen Colonel Young until I got to Memphis, about the 19th or 20th. When I left here on the 4th I did not see him afterwards until I got to Memphis. It had not been positively agreed to, but I understood (although without any conversation on the subject) after I met Colonel Young, as he did not make any objection to it, that it was all right, would be acceptable, and would be signed.

Q. The agreement had been substantially made, verbally, at Pittsburgh, hadn't it, and was only left to be reduced to writing subsequently?—A. There had been no agreement made at Pittsburgh at all of that character. I have testified over and over and over again that I made no such agreement in Pittsburgh. All the agreement I made in Pittsburgh was, as I have repeatedly stated here, with reference to consolidating our forces with respect to the suit in Memphis and the suit in New Orleans. Now, Mr. Ranney, that is the last time I am going to testify about that matter. You have got it down there, in my opinion, at least half a dozen times, those same questions and those same answers, and I do not see any necessity of repeating it. I would like to get away from here some time or other. I cannot spend the balance of my life on this thing. It looks to me as though I was going to be kept here a month, when there is no necessity for it.

Q. You said yesterday that you would look at the Ebbitt House register and ascertain the exact date when you arrived and when you left, I think. State whether you have done so, and if you have, give the exact day when you arrived in Washington, and the exact day when you left.—A. I said I would, but I didn't; I sent my little son down to ask the clerk, and I think he brought me back the answer that I arrived in Washington on the 29th in the morning, or about the middle of the day; I think that is what he brought me back; but I remember, without referring to the register of the hotel, that I left here on the morning of the 4th.

Mr. RANNEY. I will relieve you, Mr. Witness, from further questions, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to call the attention of the witness to the subject of the affidavit made by him.

Mr. RANNEY. There is one question I do wish to put to the witness; I had forgotten one question. [To the witness.] I want to know if you made yourself, or knew of any arrangement being made, for a combination with the Globe Telephone Company?—A. In the first place you have no right to ask that question, but I will very frankly tell you no. That is a matter between two companies outside of this investigation, but I do not know anything about the Globe Company.

Q. One more question. Did you or your company pay Casey Young a portion of the expenses of the proceedings before the Department of the Interior upon this matter?—A. We paid out a pretty large amount of money here, but I did not pay it to Casey Young. I think I owe Mr. Young something towards expenses that were made for our mutual interest, but I have not paid it yet, for I have not got the final account, and do not know exactly what it is. This record, so I understand—I am not giving you my personal knowledge about it now—was printed, one hundred copies of it were printed and one-third of the expense was paid by the Globe Company, one-third by ourselves, and one-third by Colonel Young. I know that we are responsible for one-third. I do not know of my own personal knowledge whether Mr. Beckwith, representing the Globe Company, paid his third or not.

Q. The Pan-Electric Company paid one-third. Who paid the other one-third besides that which you were to pay?—A. I think the Bell Company paid for a certain part of the expense.

Q. You do not understand. Of these certain expenses of which you were to pay one-third and the Pan-Electric Company one-third, who paid the other third?—A. What expenses? Don't you put my answers down there; wait until I put them down. One-third of the cost of that book?

Mr. RANNEY. Let the question be read.

The reporter read the question, as follows:

“Q. You do not understand. Of these certain expenses, of which you were to pay one-third and the Pan-Electric Company one-third, who paid the other third?”

A. The expenses for what?

The CHAIRMAN. I presume the expenses referred to are those paid for the printing of the book.

The WITNESS. I am speaking simply with regard to the cost of that book. There were 100 copies of that book printed. We agreed to pay one-third of the cost, and I understood that Mr. Beckwith, from New York, representing the Globe Company, agreed to pay one-third, and Colonel Young paid one-third. I don't know anything about the Pan-Electric Company. I only know Colonel Young in the matter. Then there was a certain additional number printed that the Bell Company paid for.

Mr. HALL. I desire to introduce in evidence the petition of the Globe Telephone Company.

Mr. EDEN. Put in all the petitions from the other companies.

Mr. HALL. Also the petition of the Washington Telephone Company, the petition of S. D. Cushman, and the resolutions of the Board of Trade of New York. I offer them in evidence in connection with the testimony which has heretofore been taken referring to them.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to have a full understanding about that. I shall claim that the whole of that record of the Interior Department can be referred to, and we can put in such parts as we see fit.

Mr. HALL. I understood the other day that those petitions were introduced.

Mr. RANNEY. I say that when we put that whole record in, as I think it has to be, they will all be treated as in, and then we will agree as to what shall be reprinted. I shall not object to the whole going in.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. At the time you had this record printed the suit which was pending at New Orleans was in the attitude of an application for a temporary injunction against your company, was it not?—A. The bill against our company in New Orleans was not filed until November 5, but, according to my recollection, this hearing commenced in October.

Q. I understand. When you had this record printed, at the time you ordered the one hundred copies, an application was pending in the suit at New Orleans for a preliminary injunction against your company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I understand you to say that you had a dozen or more copies of this record printed, omitting the Neipher affidavit; that is, that was not put in?—A. Let me put that in a little different language.

Q. Put it in your own language.—A. I had some of those copies printed just like this [indicating]. Then I asked Colonel Young to see the printer and have me a dozen copies of each one of these papers in here printed separately and distinct, without including the Neipher affidavit; I did not want that at all. Then I took that printed matter that was sent me, a dozen copies of that printed matter, and added it to my book.

Q. The purpose that you contemplated with that bundle of affidavits contained in the second record was to file them as affidavits in that suit in resistance to the application for an injunction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where you had the right to file such affidavits as supported your defense, and were under no obligation to file any that did not?—A. None whatever.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You have been asked as to the attitude of that suit in New Orleans, and the object of getting the copy of the record from the Interior Department. Now, I want to know if you were not in that suit setting up as a reason why the preliminary injunction should not be granted, the fact that the Government had determined, or the Secretary of the Interior had recommended, a suit in behalf of the Government, and that because of that no preliminary injunction could be granted. I ask this question in view of, and in connection with, the questions just put by Mr. Hall, a member of the committee, and your answers thereto.

Mr. HALE. I object to that.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose that the matter is set out in the usual way; that the pleadings are in writing, and that is the best evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. Let the question be read.

The reporter read the question as follows:

"Q. You have been asked as to the attitude of that suit in New Orleans, and the object of getting the copy of the record from the Interior Department. Now I want to know if you were not, in that suit, setting up as a reason why the preliminary injunction should not be granted, the fact that the Government had determined or the Secretary of the Interior had recommended a suit in behalf of the Government, and that because of that no preliminary injunction could be granted. I ask this question in view of and in connection with the questions just put by Mr. Hall, a member of the committee, and your answers thereto."

The WITNESS. At the filing of our defense there, there were no papers or documents of any character that I recollect put into our defense making any such plea or claim. I think that the attorneys in their argument in court maintained that the court could not or should not grant an injunction while the Government suit was pending. In other words, that valid patents should not be assailed by others that the Government itself had branded as being fraudulent.

Q. And was not that the purpose for which the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department was obtained and put in?

Mr. HALE. I insist upon my objection. The witness has said he is not a lawyer, and his statement of what the lawyers did would not be admissible evidence.

The WITNESS. I will answer the question. As to making any particular defense——

Mr. RANNEY. Will the reporter add to that question that I put it in view of the questions put and allowed to be answered by Mr. Hall.

Mr. HALL. The total immateriality of this question is in the fact that this committee would presume that a Federal court could be influenced by the fact of the pendency of a suit of that kind, and on a mere order of the Secretary of the Interior would not go into the merits to see how it could be competent.

Mr. RANNEY. I insist upon the question.

Mr. HALE. It is wholly incompetent as to what his purpose was.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that the question was asked in connection with the use that was intended to be made of this printed record which is alleged to have been mutilated. In that view it would be competent, following the examination of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HALL. The question of Mr. Ranney is predicated upon the idea that the book put in in that form, as it was used, would have been a fraud upon the court. I say it is impossible that it could have been a fraud upon the court.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not put any question in regard to a fraud upon the court.

The CHAIRMAN. My opinion is that the question is competent in view of the previous examination. I do not think there is any objection to it. Let the question be read.

The question was read by the reporter as follows:

"Q. And was not that the purpose for which the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department was obtained and put in?"

The WITNESS. My answer is, positively, no, because Mr. Lamar, at that time, when that record was gotten up, had not given any decision.

Q. When you produced the record and put it into the case, as you have stated, and as you have shown by the record you did produce in New Orleans, Mr. Lamar had given his decision, had he not?—A. When we filed our record of defense he had, but we had nothing in that defense relating at all to the making of any such plea. That was made, as I stated before, by the attorneys in their arguments.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to call your attention to a matter——

The WITNESS. Wait one moment, Mr. Chairman. It is necessary to make an explanation about this. Mr. Ranney is trying to confuse all you gentlemen, I think, in regard to this fact. He is talking about two separate, distinct records. This one here [indicating] was published in Washington, and then there was an equal amount of matter printed in New Orleans. That portion printed in New Orleans was not published until after Mr. Lamar had given his decision, but all of this matter [indicating] was printed long before Mr. Lamar had given any decision. You understand in our record there the matter is all bound together. If it went down into this record without explanation, it would be very confusing to anybody not understanding the circumstances.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I want to call your attention to a matter in that connection. I show you from what appears to be the record of the papers upon the part of the defendant, I take it, in the New Orleans case, what purports to be an affidavit made by you on the 9th of January, 1886. State whether you did make this affidavit [handing the New Orleans record to the witness].—A. Yes, sir; that is my affidavit.

Q. Is that the affidavit which accompanied this Interior Department record?—A. That is the affidavit covering this Interior Department record, or so much of the Interior Department record as it related to.

Q. I will read it and let it speak for itself. Was it with this affidavit, or by means of this affidavit, that you got before the court there the affidavits which had been made and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I will read the affidavit, if there is no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not want to put the whole record in, do you?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course not.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to call the attention of the committee to one fact connected with that when you get through.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection. But putting in this affidavit does not necessarily carry with it all the other papers in the book. This affidavit is very material.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall not object if the whole record is printed; but I want to call attention to a fact connected with it when you are through.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an affidavit made in the suit of the American Bell Telephone Company and others against the National Improved Telephone Company and others, and reads as follows:

Affidavit of W. Van Benthuyzen.

[Circuit court of the United States eastern district of Louisiana. American Bell Telephone Company et al. vs. the National Improved Telephone Company et al. In equity, 11,150.]

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Orleans, ss:

W. Van Benthuyzen, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the printed matter contained in the following 431 pages are printed from certified copies and are exact copies of affidavits, exhibits, and documents presented and used before the honorable the Secretary of the Interior in the matter of sundry petitions to the Attorney-General to bring suit in the name of the United States to annul Letters Patent No. 174,465 and No. 186,787 granted to Alexander Graham Bell.

That all and singular the matters set forth and contained in said printed pages, in so far as the same reports (purports) to be verified by the oath of the respective affiants named in the said affidavits; that the same are, as he verily believes, true and exact copies of the said several affidavits and statements under oath made, exhibited, and filed in said proceeding before the Secretary of the Interior, and that the matters therein contained are true, as he verily believes; that all and singular the documents and copies of records therein contained are the same that were exhibited and presented to the said Secretary of the Interior or properly attested or admitted copies of the original thereof.

That as to all copies of contracts therein contained the same are, as he verily believes, true copies of said contracts; that as to all copies of prior publications about and concerning telephony, prior knowledge and discovery of the art by other persons, contained and set forth in said printed pages, that he verily believes the same to be true and exact copies or true and exact translations from the original books, pamphlets, and publications in which the same appeared in the different publications and printing, as therein stated and set forth, are true and exact dates of such publication in the printed works.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, at New Orleans, this 9th day of January, 1886.
[SEAL.]

GEORGE W. CHRISTY,
Notary Public.

Mr. RANNEY. Connected with that book, if you do not want to use the whole of it, notice this fact—

Mr. HALL. Is this in the form of an interrogation?

Mr. RANNEY. I call attention to the fact if you do not want to print the whole of it—

Mr. HALL. It seems to me that it is scarcely the thing at this time to make remarks and observations—

Mr. RANNEY. You need not put what I say in the record.

Mr. HALL. I do not want your remarks to go into the record, because I think that is an improper way of presenting the case.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to put such remarks in the record as I think material. The chairman has put in a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The members of the committee will proceed in order.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to make this offer, and to have it now go onto the record. I desire to put in the affidavit of Mr. Adams as used in the Interior Department, and the book called the compilation (he put in a part of it); then to put in the affidavit of Mr. Neipher used in the Interior Department on the part of the applicants there, and then to show that in the record, of which a due copy was made in print and put into the case in New Orleans, Mr. Adams's affidavit, with the book or compilation with it, was put in, and the affidavit of Neipher (which says what I have stated, that he and Adams had made an instrument corresponding to the figure 7 instrument, and that it would talk) was left out.

Mr. HALL. I would like to have that statement of Mr. Ranney's read over again so as to see what it amounts to.

Mr. EDEN. It amounts to this: that a point is to be made in this investigation by attempting to show improper conduct in the suit at New Orleans—something that we have nothing to do with.

Mr. HALL. My recollection is that Mr. Ranney introduced both of those affidavits the other day. Of course if that has been done, it is perfectly proper to introduce them whenever he wants to. Will the reporter please read that offer?

The reporter read as requested.

Mr. HALL. I object to it in that form. I do not make any objection to the affidavits. I am willing to have the affidavits introduced one by one, and presented in regular order in the record; I have no objection to that. But this method of introducing evidence with a stump speech I do object to, and I object to this commenting on the evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. With no disrespect to the gentleman, as his remarks have gone onto the record, I want to say a word in reply. I believe that there is no stump speech in my proposition. If any gentleman has made a stump speech, it is the one who is in the habit of making them. As far as I am concerned, the remarks on both sides may be stricken out.

The WITNESS. I think as a representative of that company there at the time, I have a perfect right to say and to have it go down there on the record that it is none of their business what we did in those cases.

The CHAIRMAN. These affidavits, if there is no objection, will be considered as put in evidence.

The WITNESS. The court was the proper party to pass upon the question. They knew what was right, and they snubbed Mr. Storow about that.

Mr. EDEN. The Adams book is not going in, is it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, that part of it.

Mr. EDEN. I shall object until I see it.

Mr. RANNEY. Then let the chairman rule on it.

Mr. HALL. There is only one way of proceeding in this matter, and that is the papers ought to be introduced separately.

Mr. RANNEY. What is there to rule on?

Mr. HALL. There is nothing to rule on.

Mr. RANNEY. I put the books in under a formal offer.

Mr. HALL. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts offers the Neipher affidavit and the Adams affidavit. There is no objection to those.

Mr. HALE. All the matters relating to the New Orleans suit ought to be kept out.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with you.

Mr. RANNEY. I understood that the chairman had ruled on the question I made and shut it out. My friend, Mr. Hall, voted with the majority to keep it out, and yet he proceeded, when he came to inquire, to put the same matter in, and I did not want it to go in without objection.

Mr. HALL. That is unjust to the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The New Orleans matter was introduced on the examination of Colonel Young.

Mr. RANNEY. I know it was.

The CHAIRMAN. If objection had been made then my view would have been to exclude it, but as there was not, I yielded.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. I want to ask you one question. In the two interviews that you had with Mr. Garland in regard to the bringing of this suit, in which he declined, as you say, to have anything to do with it, did he say anything to you on those occasions, or either of them, about going to any other officer of that Department and talking with him about it?—A. Not a solitary word.

Q. He did not refer you to Mr. Goode or to any one else on the subject?—A. No, sir. I never knew that such a thing could be done.

Q. Did he intimate that there was anybody else about the Department who might bring the suit for you or have charge of it?—A. He never mentioned a word about that. I never thought it was possible for the Attorney-General to do such a thing—that he could refer such a question to anybody else until it was done.

Q. You remember that Solicitor-General Goode finally brought the suit. Did he refer you in any way to Mr. Goode or to anybody else about the Department for information?—A. He never said a word about such a thing, and I did not know that Mr. Goode could do it until I heard that he had done so.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all.

The WITNESS. Are you through with me?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, you are discharged. Mr. Robinson, of New York, who was referred to in the testimony of one of the Rogerses, perhaps both, is present and desires to be heard by the committee.

Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. I understand that you have prepared and desire to submit a written statement to the committee?—Answer. I do. It contains all I know about the matter, and it will be briefer than an examination. I am ready to submit to cross-examination afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. As the witness has difficulty in hearing, if there is no objection, he will be allowed to read the statement he has prepared.

The WITNESS. Some three weeks ago I saw my name mentioned in the papers in connection with this investigation, and shortly after I wrote this letter and addressed it to the chairman of the committee. I will read it:

BROOKLYN, March 23, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have been absent from the city for a few days, and only on my return have I seen the testimony taken before your committee, in which it is stated that I had accepted some stock of some kind from Mr. J. W. Rogers, and had offered a resolution in the House of Representatives looking to the appointment of his son, J. H. Rogers, as electrician of the House.

As to the stock, near the close of the Forty-seventh Congress, in the early part of 1883, Mr. J. W. Rogers called at my rooms in Washington with some papers which he wanted to leave with me, including some poetry on Ireland, which he had written. I think he said the poetry was interesting and that the other papers were of no value except as a contribution to the waste-basket. I was too busy at the time to examine them. He did not say what they were and we had no further conversation about them. He soon left and has never spoken to me on the matter since. What came of them I do not know. I have not seen them since nor did I ever think of them afterward. I supposed they were of no value. I never had then or before or since any talk with him about accepting stock or becoming a director in any company. I have never received any notice to attend any meeting of stockholders, or indicating that I was a stockholder. I never accepted nor agreed to accept either orally or in writing any stock of any kind from him or from any one else, and during my entire service of six years in Congress, I never accepted nor agreed to accept anything of any value, real or nominal, beyond my legal salary, for anything I ever did or tried to do as a member of Congress.

As to offering the resolution, I will say that I made it a rule that any American citizen has a right to have his petition or wishes, if respectfully worded, presented for consideration in Congress. Some time during the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress it was represented to me, by whom I do not now remember, that young Mr. Rogers, who had been appointed electrician of the House on the recommendation of Professor Henry, and other eminent men, had been removed on party grounds, and a paper was handed to me to present to the House, but only for reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that they might consider the propriety of restoring him to the position from which he had been unjustly removed. This was more than twelve months after the visit of J. W. Rogers to my room, which I had then long since forgotten. Without any thought of praise or reward or even of thanks from any one for this very slight and proper service, and as a mere act of right and justice, which I had frequently done in similar cases, I offered it without hesitation, and it was referred to the committee for such action as they might deem proper. I took no thought of it afterward, and did not even speak about it to any member of the committee. I can't see that my action in this matter is open to any unfriendly criticism.

I am willing, if your committee so desire, to appear before you and to be examined.

Very respectfully,

W. E. ROBINSON.

Hon. CHARLES E. BOYLE.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire to interrogate the witness?

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Who requested you to offer the resolution you speak of?—A. I have stated in the letter what is true, that I cannot now recall who it was. I took no thought of it; it was of no importance; I had nothing to do with it, only to move that it be sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I took no thought or responsibility for it.

Q. I have seen it stated somewhere that you did so at the request of General Johnston. Does that refresh your memory in regard to the matter?—A. No, sir; I would have remembered it if General Johnston had spoken to me. Although slightly acquainted with him, if I had heard his name in connection with it I should have remembered it. If the committee will allow me I will say that it was probably Dr. Rogers who requested it, though I am not sure. It was a year after the other transaction, or more. I looked at the date of it in the record before I came in here.

Q. Do you recollect saying to Mr. Talcott, the present electrician of the House, that General Johnston suggested this matter to you?—A. I do not remember that anything was said to him. If the committee chooses to get all I know upon it, I will state this: A friend of mine in the House stated that I was interfering against some clever person, and that I ought not to take any part in the matter. I replied to him, "I know nothing about it; it goes before the committee; I have no responsibility for it, and no interest in it whatever." I do not remember the name of the person in question; I think the gentleman who is reporting in the House is in some way connected with it, but whether he was present or not I do not know.

Q. Do you know Mr. Talcott, the present electrician of the House?—A. The only thing I know concerning the electrician of the House is, there is a reporter (whose name I do not remember and never knew distinctly, although I am intimate enough with him to speak with him) who sits on the right-hand side of the Speaker, at the opposite end of the desk from where the Associated Press reporter sits, and he was present when I spoke on this occasion. What his name is I am not sure; whether he was present or not I do not know. I know him as a reporter in the House.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Did the poetry and the papers come to you in the same envelope, or how were they delivered to you by Mr. Rogers?—A. The only thing I remember about it is that I was getting ready to go out, when he came into my room and said he had some papers that he wanted I should look through. He said, "There is a paper there that will please you; it is about Ireland." I said, "I am too busy now;" and he laid it down on my desk, I think, or he was opposite my desk, and there were a great many papers there, and whether he left it there or took it again or what became of it I do not know. They were not in an envelope; they were in his hands. I saw something about poetry, and, I think, "Ireland" on the title page of the poem. That was all the notice I took of it as he held it before me.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Are we to accept this statement you have read as being given under oath; is it a true statement?—A. I swear that that is true, according to the best of my recollection and belief.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned until Friday, April 16, 1886, at 12 o'clock.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, April 16, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.35 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I have requested some of the members of the Baltimore Company to be present this morning, and I see they are here.

Mr. BRADLEY T. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an application which, with the permission of the committee, I would like to make as counsel for the Washington Telephone Company before I am sworn as a witness. On my attendance here under the subpoena of the committee, on Monday, I was shown the report of the examination of Mr. Thomas H. Gardner, who is the secretary of the Washington Telephone Company. Mr. Gardner is not a lawyer, and could not be expected to protect the rights of the company in the way I should have done had I been present; and that examination took a scope and a breadth that I am satisfied was permitted on the part of the committee through inadvertence. Therefore, with the permission of the committee, I make this application to the committee:

As counsel for the Washington Telephone Company, I respectfully ask that this committee expunge from the examination of Thomas H. Gardner, heretofore had before the committee, all the questions and answers that relate to the business, records, transactions, or stockholders of the Washington Telephone Company, except where such questions and answers refer to any relations, whether as counsel, stockholder, or otherwise, which now exist or may have existed between that company and any person who is now connected with the executive, legislative, or judicial departments of the Federal Government.

I make that application on the law that is quite familiar to the gentlemen of the committee, that it is not competent for this committee, or the House which the committee represents, to make any examination into the private affairs of any citizen who is in no way connected with the matter under inquiry. This Washington Telephone Company, of which I am counsel and also president, is now defending a suit in the city of Baltimore against the American Bell Telephone Company. That suit has been going on since the 16th of last July. It has involved labor and expense, and while there is nothing in the proceedings or the records of the Washington Telephone Company that might not be exposed to the public in any manner, yet I do respectfully protest to the committee that I do not desire to have any examination of its papers and records that will involve the placing of those papers and records in the proceedings of this committee so that they will become a part of a permanent record.

I had determined in case I was examined in this cause to make the suggestion to you and to say that while I would decline to give any testimony with regard to the private business affairs of the Washington Telephone Company, I would submit all the papers, all the records, the list of stockholders, and everything referring thereto, to you individually, as an evidence of my good faith and as evidence that there is nothing in them that comes within the purview of this investigation. That has been rendered unnecessary by the examination of Mr. Gardner that took place on Monday. Therefore, I ask the committee to pass that order and to expunge from the records of this committee everything relating to the business, the stockholders, the proceedings, the transactions, and the relations of counsel to the Washington Telephone Company, except so far as the testimony relates to officers now connected with the Government. I want to draw the line exactly where the law draws it, as I understand it.

Mr. OATES. I suggest to you the preparation of notes of the objectionable parts of testimony which you propose to cover by your motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state that that is just what I have done. I now present to the chairman a copy of the record containing the testimony of Mr. Gardner, on which I have indicated those parts of his testimony that ought to be stricken out, according to my view.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that probably this matter ought to be considered in executive session.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you make a motion to that effect?

Mr. EDEN. I will make a motion to that effect. [After consultation in an undertone with associates on the committee.] I am not particular about it. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to make the remark that if there is to be an argument had on the subject I desire to be heard on the law question. I do not think it is necessary to have any argument, however, as the gentlemen of the committee are lawyers and are perfectly familiar with the line drawn by the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to these examinations. My application is made under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson; under the law as there laid down, according to my understanding of it.

Mr. HALE. You do not propose to press the matter to a conclusion now?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no; I submit the matter to the committee; but if there is to be any argument on the subject I would like to be heard on the law part of it; that is all.

Mr. RANNEY. We can hear that some other time.

The CHAIRMAN. You have indicated the parts you desire stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; I have marked out the parts I do not think are germane to this inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Millard is not here. He was here when the examination was had, and he should be present when any action is taken on this application.

BRADLEY T. JOHNSON was then sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Are you in any way connected with the Washington Telephone Company?—Answer. I am the president and counsel of the Washington Telephone Company, and I am a director in the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, which is a licensee of the Washington Telephone Company; and counsel for the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, also.

Q. What are the territorial limits of the license of the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland?—A. Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't want to make any hypercritical objections, but the business of the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, as far as I can observe, has nothing to do with this inquiry, or very little of what is in the record about it.

Q. I supposed you would raise the question and I only wanted to bring it up. You have examined the resolution, have you?—A. I have examined the resolution. I would like to have a copy of it, though, if you please.

Q. You will find it in the first part of the record. You will observe by the terms of the resolution that after providing for the appointment of a committee the resolution proceeds to state that the committee is directed to make inquiry into any expenditures on the part of the Government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies to priority of patents.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Said inquiry to include all organizations and companies which have sprung from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or for any other purpose?"—A. Yes, sir; "And also to make full inquiry into the issuance of stock known as the Pan-Electric Telephone stock, or any stock of any other company, companies, or organizations springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, to any person or persons connected at the time of such issuance with either the legislative, judicial, or executive, departments of the Government of the United States."

Q. My question, so far as it relates to the territorial extent of your company, I presume, would not of itself be objectionable; although if you are of that opinion we will consider the question.—A. Well, I haven't the slightest objection in the world to answering it, but I don't want to start it, because then it will be difficult to draw the line. That company's license covers Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and Delaware.

Q. Is there any person who is in any way connected with the Federal Government who is a stockholder in your company, to your knowledge?

Mr. RANNEY. That should appear by the record, should it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. RANNEY. How can you prove who are the stockholders unless you do so by the record which shows the action of the company in the issuance of stock?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no rule of law requiring such evidence to be confined to the record.

Mr. OATES. Perhaps the fact that there was no Federal officer connected with the company would be a reason for objection to the introduction of the record.

A. I state that there is no person, to the best of my knowledge—

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me one moment, Mr. Witness. I respectfully submit that I cannot consent to the witness being allowed to swear on that subject, because I do not think it is proper, if he is to take the position that he will refuse to produce the books. The question is one that should not be asked unless the books are to be produced. If it is merely preliminary to his being asked to show the stock book, the stock certificates, and all the records of the company, I will not object to it. My objection does not apply, if the question is to be followed by the books themselves. But it seems that the witness proposes to decline to produce them; and, in that view, I cannot consent to his testifying to what must certainly be shown by the books themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not affect the question of the competency of this evidence. The question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ranney] is as to the kind of evidence required to prove the fact whether any present stockholder in the corporation is connected with the Federal Government. If it were a question arising between the corporation and the stockholder with a view to fixing liability upon the stockholder or upon the corporation, that kind of proof to which Mr. Ranney refers might be required; but for the purposes of this investigation, to ascertain simply the conduct of a Federal officer, it certainly cannot be required that the books of the corporation shall be produced to prove that that officer is a stockholder; at least that is my view of the question as a legal question.

Mr. RANNEY. You may ask this gentleman whether he knows of his personal knowledge any one who holds a certificate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I have asked.

Mr. RANNEY. Your question is broader than that. You asked his opinion whether they are stockholders.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask him for no opinion. I ask him, as the president of the company, the simplest question of fact that could be put to a witness, whether any such men are stockholders.

Mr. EDEN. Of course there will be a more particular examination afterwards as to any person who may be named, to ascertain whether that person is a stockholder.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course. The question as to the production of papers, with a view to affecting the testimony of the witness, will arise afterwards, provided this question is competent.

Mr. RANNEY. I will say that if I may be allowed to test his testimony by reference to the books, I am not particular about my objection; but if the witness is to answer in that way after what he has said, and if he declines to let us see whether the books do not show otherwise, then I insist upon my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It might become a question as to our power to compel the production of the books of the company.

Mr. RANNEY. That may be; and if we have not the power to compel a witness who declines to do so to produce the best evidence he should not be allowed to state what that evidence would show without producing it.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be true if there was a rule excluding oral testimony to prove a fact of this kind; but there is no such rule.

Mr. RANNEY. I make the objection that the record is the best evidence of the ownership of stock; what the books themselves show. If it were left to oral testimony there might be subsidiary facts to which the witness would testify. For instance, he might be asked if he has ever seen a certificate in the hands of any one, or if he has ever delivered any certificate. Under your general question a man might swear to what he saw fit in regard to a matter of this kind, and if he was implicated might say he did not propose to give us the best evidence.

Mr. OATES. It occurs to me that if the books of the company are not relevant, if the witness says there is no Federal officer interested, then to produce those books in evidence to ascertain that fact would be to introduce evidence illegally for the purpose of fishing after legal evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not claim that the books are illegal evidence, do you?

Mr. OATES. If there is no Federal officer connected with the company, I do.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose I should claim, in the first place, that you cannot prove the existence of a corporation by parole in that way. We would stop right there. That is illegal evidence. If you want to prove the existence of this corporation you must put in the proper proof of it.

Mr. OATES. There is already proof of the existence of this corporation; it has been proved several times.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember very well that in trying an important case recently I made that same objection, without very much success.

Mr. RANNEY. You have remained of the same opinion still, haven't you?

The CHAIRMAN. I was never very strongly of that opinion, but I did the best I could.

Mr. RANNEY. I am sorry you urged a thing you did not believe.

The CHAIRMAN. I think for the purposes of this examination it is competent for the witness to state his own knowledge on the subject, if he has any knowledge.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want to say, as I have already said, that I do not object to the inquiry; but I claim that the books should be here that I may see who owns stock in that company.

The CHAIRMAN. That will arise afterwards. I will complete my statement. I was not through.

Mr. RANNEY. If he declines to produce the books I shall move to have his oral evidence on the subject stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for the purposes of this examination to allow the witness to state, from his own knowledge, whether any officer of the Federal Government is or is not a stockholder in the Washington Telephone Company.

The WITNESS. As president of the Washington Telephone Company I sign every certificate of stock that is issued; and no certificate has ever been issued to anybody connected with the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the Government.

Q. Was not Mr. Holton —

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that, because he is now testifying as to what is in those books.

Mr. EDEN. He is testifying as to what he did.

The WITNESS. I testify as to what certificates I signed.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose he certainly has the right to do that.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to discuss it; I have heard what he said, and I have made my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair thinks the objection is not well taken.

Q. Was not Mr. Hart B. Holton, who was a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, a stockholder in the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he not a director?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he not one of the defendants in the suit of the Bell Telephone Company against your company?—A. He was put in the suborganization in the city of Baltimore as a director in that organization, but he never qualified or connected himself with that organization.

Mr. RANNEY. You will admit the value of the record in that connection, will you not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. And yet yesterday the record was ruled out, on an inquiry of mine, by your own ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. I think not.

Mr. RANNEY. You ruled that I could not prove what was in the record at Pittsburgh, because that was not competent evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. I adhere to that ruling. The effect of my opinion this morning, as stated, is that the books of a corporation are not the only evidence, and are not essential evidence to prove who are the stockholders of a corporation.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to testify that Holton was a defendant or is a defendant in the suit in Baltimore, because I have no recollection about that. I do testify that he was originally put in as a director in the Baltimore company, but never qualified himself by the purchase of stock, or connected himself with that company in any way. I am not prepared to testify what was on the record there which the gentleman (Mr. Ranney) refers to.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to say that I do not propose to object to this series of questions, because the chairman puts his questions and then rules on them; and of course he will sustain his own question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I expect to do that; but the committee, you know, might overrule the chairman.

Mr. RANNEY. We won't calculate the probabilities on that, although there is strength in numbers. I don't want to keep suggesting objections.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; it is not worth while to object to the same point. This matter has been ruled on and acquiesced in, and that ought to be the end of it. It is not worth while to remark upon it, if there is no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to say here on the record that I do not waive my objection to questions of that kind. I wish it to appear in the record, as I have already stated, that I do not waive the point. I think it is worth while to have that statement in, with all respect to the chairman.

Mr. OATES. There is a rule that no man waives anything by his silence here.

Mr. RANNEY. The rules of the House will govern us when we get there, and not the rules of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (to the witness). I had a copy of the docket entries in your Baltimore case, but I do not find it among my papers.

The WITNESS. I thought I had a paper here that would assist you, but I have not.

Q. Mr. Holton does appear as one of the defendants. [Referring to paper.]—A. I have no doubt that paper shows it. I do not know Mr. Holton by sight, I think. I certainly never have met him in a business connection, and therefore it is very natural that he may have escaped me if he was there. He was not connected with the company at all. He had nothing to do with it.

Q. I see Mr. Holton is one of the defendants named with a number of others. Have you any knowledge of his connection with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, the Washington Telephone Company, or the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland?—A. I know he has no connection with the Washington Telephone Company. I do not know of any connection with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I know that he was originally selected as one of the directors of the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, and I know that for certainly a year he did not comply with the conditions of membership, and never came in. I never saw him at a meeting, and my impression is he has gone out entirely.

Q. Was Mr. Holton a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, to your knowledge?—A. He was; yes, sir. This is the Forty-ninth. He was a member.

Q. Do you know by what means he was brought into the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland?—A. I do not.

Q. You say he was selected as one of the parties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?—A. I probably had better make a little explanation to you about that. The Washington Telephone Company was organized under the law of Tennessee in 1884, and it struggled along in its attempts to put its enterprise before the public until some time in 1885. Then it was concluded it was better to get a number of people of property and capital in the city of Baltimore and turn over the Baltimore business to a local company. If you will give me that memorandum and allow me to refresh my memory about the names of the persons, I will tell you who they were. [Examines paper.] The Washington Telephone Company created the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland by a license, and it was organized under the law of the State of Maryland. William T. Biedler, Levi Witz, Hart B. Holton, Samuel Henry, E. J. Henkle, and Bradley T. Johnson were selected, I think, as the original incorporators. Anyhow, it was intended that they should go in as the original directors and organizers of that company. Mr. Biedler was made president, Mr. Witz was made treasurer, Dr. Henkle was made secretary and manager, and Bradley T. Johnson was made the counsel. Mr. Holton never was at one of the meetings, and never had any connection with the company that I know of. Answering your question directly, I will say that he was brought in by these gentlemen who were attempting to organize the subcompany, because he was a man of property and wealth, and a liberal and enterprising man, and it was supposed he would contribute the necessary funds to promote the interests of the company there.

Q. Had his position as a member of Congress anything to do with his selection?—

A. None in the world, sir; a Republican member of Congress from Maryland don't amount to a row of pins in the way of influence in the promotion of a company. He is a very good man in every respect. He stands exceedingly well. He is a good business man with good credit and I would like very much to be associated in business with him, but being a member of Congress did not help him at all.

Mr. HALE. Dr. Henkle says he was not then a member of Congress.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you qualified your remark by saying a Republican member of Congress had no influence.

The WITNESS. I don't care to be drawing distinctions just now.

Mr. RANNEY. I understood you to say so.

The WITNESS. I did say so and I still say so, if you want it that way.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want it any way.

The WITNESS. I meant to rectify or correct my statement just now. I forgot that this Congress commenced on the 4th of March, 1885. Mr. Holton became connected with this company after his term as a member of Congress had expired. When he was brought into this enterprise he was no longer a member of Congress. That fact escaped me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ranney] may examine the witness.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, will you allow me to make a statement about my connection with this Government suit before the member from Massachusetts begins to cross-examine; or do you want to confine the examination just where it is?

Mr. RANNEY. Do not call it cross-examination, if you please, because it is all direct.

The CHAIRMAN. It is all direct and all cross.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. I did not know that.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you, your position is that your company is not in any way involved in this inquiry, because no officer or member of Congress is in any way connected with it.

The WITNESS. But my company was involved in promoting this Government suit.

Mr. EDEN. We are directed to inquire about anybody taking part in the bringing of that Government suit.

The WITNESS. I was one of the actors in getting up the Government suit, and therefore I do not want to go off the stand without stating it.

Q. I will ask you the question, then, although I do not know enough about it to pursue the examination in detail. Did you have anything to do with the institution by the Government of the suit against the Bell Company?—A. Yes, sir. I will make a chronological statement, with the permission of the committee, and I think I can confine it directly to the points you want to know about. I will do so as far as I am able, and if I go beyond the point I shall be very happy to be corrected. In June, 1884, I was applied to to act as counsel for the Washington Telephone Company and as one of the directors; and I agreed to do so. Shortly after that I was asked to become the president of the company. That would put me in a position of responsibility that I did not choose to assume without further examination, and I came here and examined the telephone and found it was a good instrument; a better instrument than the Bell telephone. At that time I could not hear with the Bell telephone, and I could hear through the Rogers instrument perfectly well.

I then examined the law for myself and I came to the conclusion that the Bell claim was a claim that could not be supported in law, and that the Rogers claim was a claim that could be supported by a proper investigation and adjudication. Then I agreed to become the president of the company. The company promoted its business to the best of its ability, but always on the theory that it had no perfect title until that title was passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. Therefore I conducted the business so as to keep the stock off the market. No stock was ever sold. No member of the company ever sold any stock or got any profit out of the stock, with two exceptions. Mr. Gardner was allowed to sell a hundred and fifty shares of stock, being a poor man and obliged to have something for his support; and another man was allowed to sell some stock also, and he got something for that. I tried to get a suit with the Bell Company, and in December, 1884, our directors appointed Mr. Browning as a committee to see the agent of the Bell Company here to have some understanding by which a litigation might be had and the rights of the two companies might be brought to a legal determination. Mr. Browning reported that they said they would not disturb us until we got to work pretty thoroughly, and that then they would go forward. That was in December, 1884.

I was at that time in consultation with Colonel Young, all the way through this period of time, and we concluded that if the Bell Company would not attack us, we would attack the Bell Company. As early as February, 1886, I advised the bringing of a suit. They said they had a good case where the Bell Company was molesting them in Tennessee. They had never interfered with me in Maryland at all. However, on the 3d of July, 1885, they published a notice in the two Baltimore daily papers, the Sun and the American, notifying the people that we were infringing the Bell patents and that people who used our patents would be sued. I published the next day, in the papers of the 4th of July, a reply to their notification, telling the public that we would go on transacting our business, and if the Bell Company did not immediately bring suit against us, we would bring suit against the Bell Company. I also addressed them a letter by the registered mail, of which this is a copy:

BALTIMORE, July 10, 1885.

THE AMERICAN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY
(By Thomas N. Vail, General Manager):

The inclosed notice, which was published in the Baltimore Sun and American of July 3, is a libel of the rights of the Washington Telephone Company, for which it proposes to hold the American Bell Telephone Company responsible.

We therefore require you to begin appropriate legal proceedings without delay against this company in order to make good your claim of right, or we shall take such steps against you as are necessary for the protection of ourselves and our customers.

This company has over one hundred instruments in use, and has been using telephones under the Rogers patent for more than a year. It has advertised its business extensively and has been openly transacting it over three States, as has been well known to your agents and managers. If you will bring a suit, or decline to do so, be pleased to refer us to your counsel in this city.

The WASHINGTON TELEPHONE COMPANY,
By BRADLEY T. JOHNSON,
President and General Counsel.

The reply of the Bell Company to that letter was to bring a suit in Baltimore on the 16th of July. On that suit being brought in Baltimore on the 16th of July, they procured an order nisi for a hearing on the matter of a preliminary injunction on the 15th of September. I wish to make this explanation, because some other gentlemen have confused you with reference to the dates, which are somewhat material here. On the 15th of September the action was to be set down for a hearing on motion for an interlocutory injunction. At the same time the Pan-Electric Company, acting in concert with me, had brought the suit in Tennessee against the Bell Company to enjoin them for a slander of title out there. Just about that time occurred this Pennsylvania suit, and Young went to Pittsburgh to get some explanation as to what was going on there. He came back and told me these people had a lot of models and a lot of information about it, and it was of vital importance for us to get possession of those, in order to use them at the hearing in Baltimore on the 15th of September.

Q. To whom do you refer when you say "these people?"—A. Van Benthuyzen and the New Orleans people. I had never known any of them then and had never heard about their company then. I want to speak respectfully of the gentlemen, of course. In consequence of that I came on here to Washington about the 1st of August to meet Young, who was to meet Van Benthuyzen, and we were to see if we couldn't make arrangements to get possession of the models of the New Orleans company or the Pittsburgh company for use in our hearing on the 15th of September. When I got down here I found that they were discussing the question about a suit being brought by the Government. They reported that they had seen the Attorney-General, who had refused to do anything about it; because he was connected with the Pan-Electric Company he would have nothing to do with such a suit.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When was that?—A. That was about the 1st of August, sir. I have to rely on my memory a little, as you can understand. I found a statement that Wilbur made his affidavit on the 30th of July. I got here after his affidavit was made, and saw his affidavit; and that is the way I fix it as about the 1st of August. I am satisfied I am correct about that. I had never heard of any Government suit before. It was new law to me. They said that they could start it under the theory that an act of Congress had been passed which gave such permission. It turned out that the act of Congress had not passed, and that we had to fall back upon the general proposition. I discussed it with Mr. Briesen, of New York, who was an exceedingly bright patent lawyer, well informed on the general subject of patent laws. That was the subject under consideration. I was perfectly satisfied as to the competency of the Government to bring such a suit, and relied on that. The discussion lasted two days, or possibly three days.

After I got here they had another interview with the Attorney-General, I think, and they came back to me and reported that Garland refused to have anything to do with the matter at all. I supposed the matter was reasonably plain that if there was a public right involved the Attorney-General had no right to interpose his private interest to prevent the prosecution of a public right, and we had a right to have the suit brought; not to have the suit brought by our own counsel and at our own expense. I made it very clear from the very beginning of my conversations and consultations with the gentlemen, that if the suit was brought at all it must be brought by the public, at the public expense, and controlled by the counsel for the Government alone; and that private counsel and private interests were not to be parties to it. I left them then with the understanding that I was to prepare an application—

Q. When?—A. About the 3d of August. I live only about an hour from here, and would come over and stay an hour or so. I was here, backwards and forwards; but I think I am perfectly accurate in stating it was the 3d of August when my interview with them terminated with the understanding that there was to be a common basis of action. Briesen was to draw up an application to the Attorney-General to have a suit brought by the Government to vacate the Bell patent, and to forward it from New York. I was to draw up an application in Baltimore. The people in Tennessee, Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt (whose acquaintance I made then for the first time), the counsel for the Pan-Electric Company, who had brought the suit in Tennessee, were to forward an application from Tennessee, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen and his counsel were to forward an application from New Orleans. With these four or five applications coming to the Department of Justice I had no doubt that in some way the matter would be worked out to have a suit brought.

That terminated so much of the matter. I did not prepare my application for Maryland, because it was the month of August, and it was the only vacation I had, and I had to prepare for our defense in the hearing on the 15th of September. I would like to say that as soon as the suit was brought against us in Maryland, which was on the 16th of July, I employed Stirling, who was then the district attorney, and John P. Poe, my former law partner, in the case with me; and I subsequently employed two gentlemen, Morrison and Bond, who had special knowledge on the subject of telephone contentions. I employed Stirling because he had been in that court for eighteen years and had special knowledge of Federal practice in patent cases, and he has been my friend since we were at college together. Whenever I have anything of particular importance in the Federal court I am more apt to employ Stirling than anybody there. I have had some practice in the Federal courts myself. Poe I employed as a matter of course, because we have been connected intimately, in business and otherwise, for twenty-five years.

The case came on for hearing on the 15th of September. I could get nothing at all about the Government suit. I was forced to the defense of this Baltimore hearing; and the Government suit, as a matter of course, would be a prodigious relief to us, and therefore I was naturally very anxious to have it brought. I was writing to Gantt & Patterson, who were the counsel of the promoters of the suit in Memphis, and I got the assurance from them that the bill was being prepared. My time got down so close that I had to communicate by telegraph. I believe I got assurances in the early part of September that the bill was about being filed. I did not know then whether it would be filed in New Orleans or in Memphis. I came over here on the 10th of September, and on the 10th of September I got a telegram from Gantt & Patterson stating that the bill had been filed. My pressure was for the bill to be filed as soon as possible, so that I could get a certified copy of it to use in Baltimore. I got a certified copy of that bill on the morning of the 15th of September as I went into court, so I just barely had time to read it before I went into court. I believe that explains to you all I know about it.

Oh, I was afterwards applied to when the case came back to the Interior Department, and filed a formal application on behalf of my company before the Interior Department to have suit brought. That you will find in this record, which I see you have got here. You will find the application of my company there. I did not attend that hearing. It was a very laborious one, and I had something better to do. I did put myself on record as to my views about the law and the proper relations of myself and my company to this application. I would like to give it to the committee as what I think—

Q. As a contribution to the law?—A. No, sir; it is utterly impossible for any man to make any contribution to this law. There is so much of it that nobody can add anything original about the telephone law and the telephone suit; but I want to show precisely the view I had about the Government suit. That was the record I made in my argument to the Department in order to have the Government suit brought. That, I think, is all I know about the Government suit, the relation of my company to the Government suit, and my own relation to the Government suit.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did you say Stirling was employed?—A. Immediately on the suit being brought, which was the 16th of July. There was some little delay about the service of the writ. It was not served very promptly, and I may have employed him as late as the 20th: but I employed Stirling before I came here to Washington and had any conference on the subject of getting the models from the New Orleans company to use in my case in Baltimore, and I employed him before I heard of any Government suit, or had the faintest suspicion of any Government suit being brought. That is what I want to make clear.

Q. Was he employed because of his position as district attorney?—A. No, sir; not at all. I thought it was reasonable to think, in July, 1885, that a man who had been appointed district attorney by Grant in 1868 would not remain district attorney very long. That was the inference I had in my mind about it.

Q. Is he still district attorney?—A. Yes, sir; he is still district attorney sub modo; his successor is appointed, but has not been confirmed. Mr. Stirling is a very good lawyer, a man of honor and good reputation, and I have known him for many years.

Q. Did Mr. Stirling present this certified copy of the Memphis bill to the court, or did you?—A. I presented it to the court, but after I had made my statement to the court Mr. Stirling got up, with the bill in his hand, to supplement my statement, and his remarks probably made more impression on the court than did mine. I remember that I complained afterwards to Mr. Dickerson that in the stenographic report of the proceedings it appeared that Mr. Stirling, United States district attorney, did this and did that, whereas, in fact, he had nothing more to do as district attorney than you had; he appeared there as an attorney employed by my company.

Q. Where is it stated that Mr. Stirling was district attorney?—A. I will tell you in a moment. Very properly, the Bell Company have a full stenographic report made of all their proceedings and printed. They had printed a very accurate stenographic report of what occurred at that allocution on the 15th of September, and I have several copies of that report. On that occasion we applied for time; we insisted that we could not prepare ourselves, and the court gave us until the 25th of November to prepare. On the 25th of November we went into court again, and the matter was continued over. Now, this report of the proceedings of that meeting on the 15th of September states, as you will see, that Mr. Stirling, the United States district attorney, exhibited the bill. That is exactly the fact. Mr. Stirling did exhibit the bill, and he was United States district attorney, but as district attorney he had nothing whatever to do with it.

Q. In other words, I understand you to say that he did not appear for the United States?—A. Oh, not at all.

Q. Was the United States a party to that proceeding or brought into it in any way?—A. Not at all. The United States had nothing whatever to do with it. Some years ago I had a great suit over there in which the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was interested, and some of these gentlemen who are reporting these proceedings reported that case, and in that case I employed Mr. Stirling, I think, in 1880. That case struggled along for two years, involving an immense amount of property and very delicate and troublesome legal questions.

Q. Did you have any intercourse with any officer of the Government with regard to bringing a Government suit?—A. I certainly never saw Mr. Garland about it one way or the other. I have a recollection that I went to Mr. Goode's office one day and said to him, "Has Senator Harris been here?" He said he had. I asked him, "How long has it been since he left?" He said it had been five minutes, or ten minutes, or what not. "Well," said I, "will you allow me to ask you this question—I don't know whether I ought to ask the question—has a suit been ordered in the telephone case?" He said it had been, and I walked out, and that is all I ever heard about it at that time.

Q. Do you recall what day that was?—A. That must have been, I would say, in the early part of September. I think I was away from here during the month of August; I think I was in Pennsylvania during the greater part of that month, probably nearly all except three or four days that were cut off by those conferences.

Q. Can you fix the date more accurately?—A. No, sir; I could not do any more than that. I am satisfied that it certainly was in the very first part of September. I have seen a paper, introduced formerly in the testimony, that said I had information on the 3d of September; it may have been, therefore, that very day. I knew that the suit had been ordered directly it had been ordered.

Q. Can you state what led you to make inquiry of Mr. Goode?—A. Oh, yes; I knew that, after our interview and our pressure to have the suit brought, the application was subsequently to be renewed to the Solicitor-General, but I couldn't tell you when I knew that. I suppose I knew that when I came here; I do not suppose I knew it until I came here. I was in conference pretty much all the time with Colonel Young about the cases, but I do not think I talked to anybody else about them.

Q. Was there anything said in that interview about applying to the Solicitor-General?—A. Not a word.

Q. When was it suggested that application should be made to the Solicitor-General?—A. I never heard of it at all until application had been made.

Q. Had you any information early in September, about the time you applied to the Department, that led you to believe that the application would be made at or about that time?—A. I rather think I had information from Colonel Young about the time that application would be made; I would not be willing to commit myself positively, but I rather incline to think that was the occasion of my visit here to find out, so as to govern myself in regard to the Baltimore suit. I rather think that that was the cause of my visit, to see Colonel Young and get information on that subject.

Q. Did you expect to meet him here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you meet him here?—A. I have no doubt I did.

Q. Did you receive your information from him while he was here or while he was in Memphis?—A. I got the information from him while he was here. I did not get the information from him that the suit would be brought. I got the information from him that application was about being pressed to have suit brought. I could not tell you where I got the information that suit was to be brought. I suppose the first information I had on that subject was what the Solicitor-General himself told me, and I suppose that was about the first information that anybody got. That was in the early part of September, and the suit was not really brought until about the 8th or 9th of September, and it was that delay that was giving me such uneasiness about my suit in Baltimore, and I was pressing them in Memphis to hurry up and send me a copy of the bill.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Let me ask you a question right there, so as not to bother you afterwards. What was the occasion of your uneasiness? Did you want to hold your suit in abeyance to this suit?—A. I had no doubt that if the United States intervened it would probably prevent the court from granting a preliminary injunction. You perceive that a preliminary injunction would come down on me with only fifteen days' notice, and shut up my business, and leave us to struggle along for a year or so, preparing our case for final hearing; and my belief was that if I could get a copy of that bill in the Government suit at Memphis I could stop the issuing of the preliminary injunction in my case in Baltimore. It would not stop any final hearing, of course.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I show you what purports to be a report of the proceedings at the time of the hearing of the motion for a preliminary injunction.—A. That is it; that is what I referred to. You see it states there that Mr. Stirling, United States district attorney, appeared as one of the counsel for the defendants. Mr. Storrow furnished me some copies of that report.

Q. That is what you referred to in your previous statement as the statement made by the Bell Company that Mr. Stirling, United States district attorney, appeared?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I care to ask at present.

The WITNESS. I think my memory is pretty accurate. You perceive from this report that I called the attention of the court to the United States bill; Mr. Stirling did not do that at all. People get suspicious and suspect everything around there; that is probably not unnatural, but that is the way it was brought up. I filed the bill and pressed the United States bill on the attention of the court as a reason for a continuance, and Mr. Stirling, by way of fortifying me, said what is there in that report. He did not bring the bill into the case at all.

Q. You say you received a certified copy of the bill that morning as you went into court?—A. This report does not say so. I said so just now, and I think I was mistaken.

Q. I mean that you stated it in your testimony here. It appears that the certified copy of the Memphis bill was filed in the Maryland case on the 15th of September.—

A. That was on the morning of the hearing. Then I was right about it.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Ranney). You can proceed with the examination.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I would like to put a question or two if you will answer them?—A. I will do so with pleasure.

Q. I understand you to fix the date that you came to Washington and had the first interview with Casey Young and the other gentlemen you met here, as being subsequent to the time when the Wilbur affidavit had been taken?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That appears to have been taken on the 31st of July. Was it on the same day or on the next day?—A. I wouldn't say that. I say that when I came here it had just been completed, and I think it had been completed the day before I came here, for it was sworn to, and it was shown to me when I came here.

Q. If it had been completed on the 31st of July, it would have been the 1st of August that you were here?—A. Yes, sir. I suggested the duplication of the affidavit. I said, "Have you got another copy of this paper than that one?" They said they had not. I said it was too important a paper to have only one copy of it, and I said, "Make half a dozen copies and get him to swear to them."

Q. They told you that they had been to see the Attorney-General when you first came here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say while you were here they saw him again?—A. While I was here they saw him again.

Q. How do you know that?—A. They told me so.

Q. Do you recollect who told you?—A. I would get over here on the train from Baltimore at 11 o'clock, and go right straight to the Ebbitt House. When I got there Colonel Young, Major Von Briesen, of New York, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen either came in after I got there or had just come in right straight from the Attorney-General, and said they had been to see him again to press him about the suit, and he would have nothing to do with it.

Q. They went to see him again?—A. Again, yes.

Q. Did they say they had been twice?—A. This was the second time. When I came here first they told me that they had had an interview. This conference lasted two or three days—on the 1st, 2d, and 3d of August; that is my idea of the dates. On the first day of my coming they told me about this fruitless interview. The second day when I came they had just had an interview when they came in. I think they came into the room after I got here from Baltimore, and they told me they had just come from the Attorney-General's office. If you ask me who told me so, I say all of them—Van Benthuyzen, Young, and Von Briesen.

Q. Did you understand that they had been there twice, and once after you got there?—A. They went once after I got there.

Q. Then it must have been once after the 1st of August?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you recollect whether it was the same day you got here that they represented that they had been there, or what day?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the day I first got here?

Mr. RANNEY. When you first got here?

The WITNESS. I couldn't say that.

Q. You cannot say what?—A. I cannot say whether they had paid their second visit on the first day I got here, or whether they paid their second visit on the second day I came over.

Q. But it was paid while you were here?—A. Oh, undoubtedly.

Q. Then that must have been after the 31st of July, if you got here the 1st of August?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you enter your name on the book at the Ebbitt House when you got here?—

A. I couldn't say that; I very rarely do that; I only do that when I want to leave an address.

Q. You did not stay over night?—A. No, sir. I sometimes put my name on the register, as an address, so that I can be communicated with in case my Baltimore office sends me a telegram.

Q. You do not remember whether you did in this instance?—A. I do not remember.

Q. How many different days did you come over?—A. I came over from Baltimore certainly on three different days.

Q. What conferences did you have here, and with whom?—A. The parties to the conferences were Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington, representing the New Orleans company, and Colonel Young and Mr. Gantt, who were the Memphis counsel in the case; and the conferences were about the telephone litigation in all of its forms. My particular part of the conference was pressing on them the absolute necessity of their joining me in the defense of my suit on the coming 15th of September.

Q. In that interview did you express to them your views or advise that the suit should be brought in the name of the Government, at its own expense and entirely under its own control, and that no counsel connected with the association should have anything to do with it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they agree with you or dissent?—A. They did not take that view. They had the opposite view exactly.

Q. Were you cognizant of that written agreement being made between Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Young during those days?—A. No, I never heard of it until I heard of it here in the testimony.

Q. They never communicated to you the original agreement they entered into?—A. No, sir; I knew that Colonel Young and Mr. Van Benthuyzen were making some agreement about the co-operation of their companies in the defense of what they considered their common rights, but what the agreement was I did not know; I knew nothing about the details of that.

Q. They did not communicate it to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. During those days did you meet Senator Harris?—A. I did not see Senator Harris until—no, sir; he wasn't at any one of those meetings at all. I saw him in the Ebbitt House. I am trying to identify time and place, but I did not have any conference with him, and I did not see him in any conference.

Q. Identify the time and place, if you can.—A. The place was the Ebbitt House; the time was in those three days of August.

Q. You cannot tell which one?—A. It was toward the latter part of them; whether the second or third, I could not say; certainly it was not the first.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him about the suit?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. About the Government suit?—A. Well, I couldn't say that. Senator Harris was the active man of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; Mr. Young was the lawyer, and had been attending to the law part of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I had been pressing both Young and Harris to give me assistance in the Baltimore suit, and my conversation with Harris was to force him to intervene in the Baltimore suit, and take the burden of the fight from my shoulders.

Q. Did they consent to it?—A. No, sir; they did not.

Q. Did they at all before the hearing?—A. Yes, sir; Gantt agreed to come there, and Young agreed to come.

Q. At what time did they agree to join in the defense?—A. They agreed at that time; when I left them in the early part of August, 1885. It was with the understanding that Gantt and Young would both come to the hearing on the 15th of September, and were to bring with them these New Orleans auxiliaries; but to be perfectly frank about it it was not such an agreement as if you were to tell me positively you would do so; it was only an agreement that they would do so if it was possible.

Q. That was while you were in Washington?—A. That was while I was in Washington. The understanding was that if it was possible to make arrangements, they would come; but it was not such an agreement that I could rely on it, and I did not rely on it because I made my own dispositions in regard to the case.

Q. When did you get information that they would defend it at all?—A. In the early part of August both Young and Gantt said that if it was possible they would come and assist me at the hearing on the 15th of September, but that hearing was adjourned to the 25th of November. I personally pressed Young to come on, and Gantt also, but with reference to Colonel Gantt, I had from him an answer that circumstances, domestic, probably, prevented him from leaving home. But Young positively agreed to come on. That would be prior to the November hearing.

Q. Did they appear at all?—A. No; they did not. You want to be perfectly fair with me, no doubt; I take it for granted you do.

Q. Certainly.—A. On the 25th of November there was no hearing at all.

Q. You mean November, do you?—A. Yes, I mean November.

Q. I mean prior to that, at the hearing on the 15th of September, had you come to any definite arrangement or conclusion as to whether they would appear with you or not?—A. No. They promised me they would come if they could, but there was no such understanding that I could rely on it, and therefore I made my own disposition for the case.

Q. In the record of the Washington Telephone Company put in here by Mr. Gardner was a report from you, if I recollect rightly. It is already in the record.—A. That is exactly what I want to be permitted to strike out.

Q. Your report was to the effect that an arrangement had been made whereby there was no necessity for selling that stock which had been reserved for the purpose of sale to enable you to get money to conduct the suit.—A. In the first place, I object to the question; in the second place, the hypothesis is incorrect; there is no such statement in the record of Gardner's testimony.

Q. Let us turn to it. My recollection is general about it, and I may be in error. My associate will look it up. As I recollect it you made a report, after the vote had been passed on that subject, whereby their stock was to be held or confiscated—if I may use that word—for the purpose of sale to procure money to carry on the suit, and then the record says in substance that it becomes unnecessary, because another arrangement had been made. If I recollect aright, that was the last of August or the 1st of September.—A. Yes, sir; I object to stating anything about my report.

Q. You said that an arrangement had been made. What was the arrangement?—A. Mr. Ranney, I object to testifying about any arrangement with my counsel. I haven't any idea of you getting out of me anything which will be useful to the Bell Company. I have a suit pending with the Bell Company, and I don't propose to tell you anything about my arrangements with my counsel or any one else.

Q. I do not propose to go into your relations as counsel and client. We know perfectly well what the rule of law is on that subject. But I am now inquiring as to the record of the official action of the company.

Mr. EDEN. What date?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not find that indorsement.

Mr. RANNEY. You will find it at the bottom of page 518 of our record.

The WITNESS. I have it:

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I find an indorsement on this paper as follows: 'Report of General B. T. Johnson, made to the board of directors, September 10, 1885; not acted upon because of satisfactory provision otherwise made.”

Q. Now, where is the copy of the record put in on that point?

Mr. EDEN. That was the agreement of counsel.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. On what page is the report?

The WITNESS. The report is not in here at all.

The CHAIRMAN. You will find a paper there signed by you.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; that is September 10.

Q. That was an indorsement on the report?—A. That was the indorsement on the report itself.

Q. That indorsement was made by Mr. Gardner, if I recollect rightly.—A. Yes, sir. That is exactly what I ask you to strike out. That record has no business in this testimony, and it is not right that the committee should be informed in that way about my affairs and my company.

Mr. RANNEY. In the last item at the bottom of that record there was a statement about which Mr. Gardner was examined, that another arrangement had been made and the vote about the stock was not to be carried out.

The WITNESS. What is that, Mr. Ranney? It is on page 518 at the bottom; that was read by the chairman at that time, and I just now read it from that place in your record.

Mr. HANBACK. The indorsement is as follows:

“Report of General B. T. Johnson, made to the board of directors, September 10, 1885; not acted upon because of satisfactory provision otherwise made.”

The WITNESS. What record do you mean—the report?

Mr. RANNEY. No, sir; the official report, the book. He was asked what the arrangement was and why he did not record the whole of it.

The WITNESS. Now if you will direct my attention to the page I will understand it.

Q. I will ask you this question: He was examined by Mr. Millard or myself, I forgot which; but independently of that, I will ask you this: Before that meeting of September 10, 1885, had there been an arrangement made with the Pan-Electric Company or their counsel or officers in regard to that matter?—A. None. I decline to answer that question.

Q. Why?—A. Because it is not within the scope of your inquiry. It is beyond the power of the House to compel me to answer any such questions.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have the letter of Casey Young of about the 25th of August, 1885, which was put in here by Mr. Gardner. Mr. Gardner produced a letter from Mr. Casey Young of about that date. While they are finding that—referring now to the record which is before the committee where the vote of the directors was recorded in relation to its not being necessary to sell the stock because other arrangements had been made—I understand you to decline to answer whether you had made such other arrangements. I decline to give you any information about it at all, because I have not put any record into this case and its production here was utterly unjustifiable and contrary to law. That is the position I take.

Q. Leaving that for the present, for the committee to pass upon the question hereafter whether they will try to compel you to answer, I suppose you have reference to a decision that leaves us somewhat impotent in that regard.—A. I refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; that decision is not new law at all; it was decided in Massachusetts before the Supreme Court rendered its decision. I know exactly the power of this House now, I think.

Q. You decline to answer?—A. I do; that is right.

Q. I will leave it for the action of the committee hereafter.—A. That is right.

Q. It is true, then, as I understand you—this is the basis of another inquiry—that you were very desirous of getting the action of the Government to bring suit?—A. I was.

Q. For use in your suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company, in their arrangements with you, as a subordinate company springing out of it, were under obligations, as it appears, to protect you and defend your suit, were they not?—A. I decline to answer that. You have got nothing to do with my private arrangements with any person or company in the world.

Q. We already have it in proof.—A. Then don't ask me, because, certainly, if I had been here you never would have gotten it, I think.

Q. You do not deny that you had been endeavoring here in a personal interview with these parties to get them to do that? You have already sworn to that.

The WITNESS. Sworn to what?

Mr. RANNEY. That you were trying to get them to do that.

The WITNESS. To do what?

Mr. RANNEY. To come in and assume that defense, or help to make it. You have sworn to that.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes.

Q. Why are you willing to swear that you were endeavoring to get them to do a thing, and then deny what agreement you did make in regard to it?—A. For the simple reason that it is utterly impossible, in the course of your examination, to draw the line on you all the time. You are all the time getting a little more than you are entitled to. I ought not to have answered the first question at all, and I shall not answer the second.

Q. Probably if I had asked the first question you would not have answered that, but the chairman asked that.—A. There may be something in that.

Mr. RANNEY. The letter to which I referred seems to be printed on page 532. The original was dated at Memphis, July 21, 1885:

MY DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your favor of 18th of July, in reference to the suit brought against us by the Bell Telephone Company in Baltimore. I would come or send our leading counsel, Colonel Gantt, to Washington at once, but I must wait until I can arrange for other persons with whom we have recently become associated to meet me there. I will write to these parties to-day, and ask them to let me know, by telegraph, when they can meet me in Washington, when Colonel Gantt, or myself, will come and make arrangements for defending the suit. I think we have such combination now made as will assure our success. I will write to General Bradley Johnson this evening.

Yours, very truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Q. Did he write to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough to produce the letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you receive it?—A. I must have received it very shortly after that date, July 21; I can't tell you the date.

Q. You had received it before that action was taken by your board of directors which is already in evidence.—A. There is no action of my board of directors in evidence, Mr. Ranney.

Q. Put in by Mr. Gardner?—A. The committee will take it out again, I think.

Q. I have read it from the record here; I quote this extract from it.—A. So I perceive.

Q. I do not want to press matters in detail if you say that generally and in detail you will not answer.—A. I say in general, in detail, and specifically that I will not give you any information about the private affairs of my company or my private arrangements with them.

Q. Or the corporate affairs?—A. Either corporate or personal.

Q. Your declination is to giving any information?—A. Any information at all except it relates to members of the Government.

Q. If you make your declination comprehensive, I will not go further into details until the committee act upon it.—A. That is right. That saves time.

Q. It is true that on the 15th day of September, 1885, the Baltimore suit, which was one where the Bell Telephone Company sought to restrain your company in a preliminary injunction, or interlocutory, or whatever you call it, was set down for hearing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were anxious to get that Government action before that time, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had various correspondents, as you stated in answer to Brother Boyle—you will pardon me if I refer to that—whom you were trying to hurry up to send on the papers?—A. I beg your pardon; I lost that.

Q. You had correspondence in relation to that suit; you were anxious to get a Government suit and have the proceedings in the Government suit?—A. I wanted the Government suit brought so that I could get a certified copy of the bill on the 15th of September.

Q. You were hurrying the matter up so that you could get it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By correspondence?—A. By correspondence.

Q. When the court assembled on September 15, the proceedings of the Government were presented there to the court and urged as a reason why the court should not grant the preliminary injunction. You have been shown by the chairman the printed report of the proceedings, with the remarks made by all of you before that court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taken down by a stenographer and printed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You see by that that the proceedings were had at Baltimore, Md., September 15, 1885, on a motion for preliminary injunction; that the appearances were, for the complainants, Charles J. M. Gwinn, E. N. Dickerson, and J. J. Storrow; for the defendants, Bradley T. Johnson and Mr. Archibald Stirling, United States district attorney. It appears that you made the first speech, and undoubtedly made a good one, general; I do not care to read it.—A. Thank you. It is a very good speech, if you will read it, and the committee would abide by it.

Q. We are glad to get you in print in that shape, for it seems you refuse to answer otherwise. On page 13 of those proceedings I find that Mr. Stirling, United States district attorney, makes some remarks, and that I will ask to be put in evidence.

The following are the remarks of Mr. Stirling referred to:

"Mr. STIRLING, United States district attorney. If your honors please, I have only a few words to say in regard to one branch of the points that General Johnson makes. This proceeding in Tennessee, so far as the bill of the United States is concerned, is of course a proceeding, as far as I know of, which is rare.

"Mr. DICKERSON. I should think so.

"Mr. STIRLING. It must be treated, however, as entitled to absolute bona fide consideration. My brother thinks it strange that the Attorney-General of the United States, who, he admits, has authorized it should spend the money of the United States on a bill which he says contains so many allegations which were disposed of in other cases; but such is the fact, and it is also the law that nobody but the United States can set afloat a proceeding the object of which is practically to attack the validity and existence of a patent. A dozen judges may decide it good. It may be void in a particular case, as to a particular defendant, and those privy to him; but when the United States files a bill, and a patent is decided void, it is void against all the world. Now, the very strangeness of the proceeding strengthens that legal bona fides that a court must give to a bill of the United States. Now, as to the averment of jurisdiction. The bill alleges that it is a Massachusetts corporation and is conducting, as it undoubtedly is, holding the monopoly of the Bell patent—conducting business all over the United States; that it is present in the State of Tennessee by its officers and agents conducting its business. Now, I cannot see why, if, by the provisions of its charter, as the bill alleges it has authority to do business in other States, and as matter of fact is doing business in the State of Tennessee, has an agent in that State, sells its telephones in Tennessee, collects its royalty, and the agent reports to the headquarters—I do not see why it cannot be sued there.

"Now, the United States bill contains the same allegations, and while it does contain a great many allegations that have been raised in the other cases in regard to the fact whether Bell was the inventor or not, it charges a specific fraud against the people, that a fraudulent proceeding was carried on in the United States Patent Office in the obtaining of that patent; and the United States has alleged boldly that one of its own officers committed a fraud in the issue of the Bell patent. Now, it does strike me that, so far as a preliminary injunction is concerned, it is a valid objection to a preliminary injunction if, since these other decisions, the United States has filed a bill alleging the patent to be void, alleging it to have been fraudulently obtained, and asking the circuit court of the United States to declare it void; that it is an absolute bar to an injunction preliminary, unless there were circumstances to show that the infringement was bald and fraudulent and plain, and the injury irreparable. Now, that it is not bald; that is bona fide conduct on the part of the defendants; that it is a bona fide defense; that it has a large business; that there is no proof of irreparable damage, is manifestly good ground why a preliminary injunction should not issue, because that is in the sound legal discretion of the court.

"The filing of the bill by the United States to set the patent aside as void would not prevent the complainants conducting the cause and bringing it to an issue undoubtedly, unless the other matter was first decided. It does strike me that when this proceeding is filed to set aside the patents, that unless something is shown to the court, it must be treated as the act of the United States; and as long as that is pending in that way to declare the patent void, the court ought not to exercise its discretion against a bona fide business and grant a preliminary injunction. As I say, there is no evidence of irreparable damage. Now, suppose before your honors arrive at a decision upon this cause, the circuit court of Tennessee should set this patent aside. That would absolutely bind this court and every court in the United States, unless it was subsequently upset by the Supreme Court. Now this did not exist in any action tried in New York, Massachusetts, or Pennsylvania, and it does seem to me to attack the validity of this patent in a form and in a mode of action which is an absolute bar to the proper exercise of legal discretion in granting a preliminary injunction."

I suppose you have no objection to putting in the remarks of the court?—A. Well, I don't care very much about the court on a preliminary motion in that way. It is the order that does the work.

Q. The result of that was, I see, that the court granted a restraining order?—A. No, sir; it did not.

Q. It continued the one already granted?—A. No sir.

Q. It has been stated here that you were under injunction?—A. The report of the Bell Company makes that statement, and I find it continually reiterated. It is not true. The court, on that hearing on the 15th of September, granted a restraining order, restraining my company from enlarging its business, but allowing it to continue in the then existing business.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not go into the scope of the order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not that appear in this report?

The WITNESS. I do not know.

Mr. RANNEY. It is in the record.

The WITNESS. It has been very frequently stated. It was stated in the annual report of the Bell Company, published in the Scientific American, that we were put under a restraining order.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read it:

[In the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland. In equity. The American Bell Telephone Company et al. v. Pan-Electric Telephone Company et al.]

The motion for a preliminary injunction came on to be heard on this 15th day of September, 1885, and the defendants stating that their proofs were not ready and asking for further time: thereupon, it is by the court ordered that the defendants serve copies of their proofs on the complainants' solicitor on or before the 15th day of October, and the complainants shall thereafter file their affidavits in reply, if they desire so to do, and that the said motion for a preliminary injunction be heard on the 2d day of November, 1885, and that meantime an order issue restraining the defendants until the said hearing, and the further order of the court, from extending or increasing their business by taking new subscribers or customers, or using any telephone instruments except those now in actual use, or that may be necessary to replace those now in use.

HUGH L. BOND,
Circuit Judge.

THOS. J. MORRIS,
District Judge.

Mr. EDEN. It did not restrain you, but refused to enlarge you?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever had a final hearing in that case?—A. No.

Q. That suit is still pending?—A. That suit is still pending on a motion for a preliminary injunction.

Q. Did you have it heard in November?—A. We did not have it heard in November. In November I went into court and offered to let them take an injunction, reserving to myself leave to move to dissolve. The gentlemen on the other side did not want it in that form, preferring to let it stand. So then it was passed for the 25th of January for a hearing. Before that time I was notified by the gentlemen on the other side that they were not prepared to go on.

Q. So that the suit stands in that position with this order still in force?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the court declined to heed your request as to the effect or what you claimed to be the effect of the Government suit?—A. I don't think they did. On the contrary I think that is exactly what is the matter now. I haven't got the faintest idea of an injunction issuing with that suit pending.

Mr. RANNEY. On page 21 of this report of the proceedings in Baltimore on September 15, 1885, I see the following:

"The COURT (Morris, J.). We think you had better allow an unrestricted restraining order to issue, and take as much time as you want.

"Mr. JOHNSON. An unrestricted restraining order don't amount to much, but it closes up the business. We prefer to have a limited time.

"The COURT (Morris, J.). If it don't amount to very much, we think it had better issue.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Well, it amounts to a good deal to the people who use the telephones.

"Mr. DICKERSON. We can supply them.

"Mr. JOHNSON. You can supply them at $100 a year. That is what we are objecting to. We propose to supply them at a less price."

The WITNESS. That is our business.

"Mr. DICKERSON. And take our property."

The CHAIRMAN. Is this to go into the record?

Mr. RANNEY. It may go into the record, but I am simply calling his attention to it to refresh his recollection about it.

The WITNESS. Will you be kind enough to refresh my recollection sufficiently to enable me to know what this has to do with the officers of the Government owning telephone stock?

Mr. RANNEY. I have to read it all together to get at the final result of it, simply to refresh your recollection, not to go into the record.

"The COURT (Morris, J.). We will issue a restraining order, and you take as long as you please."

Q. That was the result of it, and as it is there, is that your recollection?—A. There is no doubt about it. It is not my recollection, but there is the copy of the record.

Q. I observe it does not appear from the certified copy of the clerk here (I looked at it hastily) at what time the appearance of Mr. Stirling, the United States district attorney, was entered on the docket of the court.—A. I could not tell you that. As likely as not that record that you hold in your hand is defective. It is in this respect: Among the counsel present were Messrs. John P. Poe, and Morrison and Bond; they were also present at that hearing, but their names are not in the report.

Q. Do you mean the judges?—A. No, sir. In that report you have there, it shows that Mr. Gwinn, Mr. Dickerson, and Mr. Storrow were representing the Bell Telephone Company, and that Messrs. Johnston and Sterling represented the Washington Telephone Company. The fact is that Messrs. Johnston, Sterling, Poe, Morrison, and Bond, represented the Washington Telephone Company.

Q. Is that Mr. Bond you speak of a son of Judge Bond?—A. I decline to answer that question; it has an offensive imputation in it.

Q. I do not mean it, but simply for identification. I did not mean any implication in my question. Was the Mr. Bond you refer to a son of Judge Bond; I ask that simply for identification.—A. He is a member of the firm of Morrison & Bond, of Baltimore.

Q. On my statement that there was no implication or wrong intended, are you not willing to state whether he was a son of the judge?—A. No, sir; I am not. I have to stop you somewhere, and I might as well stop it right here.

Q. Do you decline answering me after my statement that I did not intend anything wrong by it?—A. Yes, I decline to answer the question. There must be an end to this thing some time or other.

Q. You say you had nothing to do with the application before the Government in respect to a Government suit at this hearing?—A. Yes, sir; I did have a good deal to do with it. I said that I did not attend personally at the hearing and did not argue the case orally. But I filed an application in behalf of my company, requesting that the suit be brought by the Attorney-General, and that went in due course to the Department of the Interior. I attended during the hearing several days and filed a printed brief, of which I have given a copy to the chairman of the committee.

Q. With whom did you confer during the hearing?—A. I will give you two answers to that. In the first place I did not confer; in the second place, I object to answering the question.

Q. And still answer it?—A. Yes, sir. I do not want to make points when there is nothing in them.

Q. I only desire facts material in this case.—A. You have no right to know what consultation I had with my counsel in my case.

Q. I have not asked you what you said to them.—A. But you wanted to get at the question of a conference.

Q. I wanted to know if you participated in that hearing before the Commissioner?—A. I participated to the extent of having filed an application in behalf of my company to have the suit brought. When the case was before the Secretary of the Interior I attended there a number of days. Instead of arguing the case orally I furnished a printed argument. That is my answer.

Q. Did you share any of the expenses of the hearing?—A. I will answer that question in this way: I decline to answer the question, and tell you no.

Q. What is that?—A. I decline to answer your question, and tell you no. That has nothing to do with this case. I do not choose to have the imputation made upon me by answering the question in that way.

Q. I did not mean anything of that kind. The imputation will be in your answer and not with the inquiry.—A. I had nothing to do with the expenses; I had my own business to attend to and left that to others.

Q. Were you present, and did you hear Colonel Young state to the Commissioner whether the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were there appearing?—A. Please state that over again.

Q. Were you present when Casey Young said to the court, or to any one, whether the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were there appearing in that hearing?—A. I cannot remember that. I have heard Colonel Young frequently say that the Pan-Electric Company had nothing to do with the promotion of the Government suit. Whether he said it to the Secretary of the Interior or not I could not tell you; I do not remember.

Q. You have heard him say so, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I simply want to know whether he did not state when you were there, to the Commissioner, that he appeared for some individual, and that he was not there—that the Pan-Electric Company was not there at all.—A. I cannot remember. There is a full report of the proceedings before the Commissioner, and if you will furnish that to me I will tell you whether I heard it or not.

Q. I haven't it, but I thought you might remember.—A. No, sir; I do not. All these proceedings were reported verbatim, and there are printed copies in existence.

Q. You handed us a brief of yours in relation to the right of the Government to bring a suit. Have you another copy of that brief, and can you favor me with one?

(The witness handed the document in question to Mr. Ranney.)

Q. Was this the one you presented before the Interior Department, or did you present any?—A. Yes; I did. I just told you that I presented one.

Q. Did you make your argument orally or simply present a printed brief?—A. I don't know whether you forget what you ask or not, but I have certainly told you that I made no oral statement but presented a printed one.

Q. I was thinking of something else and did not hear you. You appeared for your company?—A. I did.

Q. Pardon me for putting one question: I want to know if you are acquainted with Attorney-General Garland?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. I will swear to twenty-five years, and I do not know how much longer.

Q. Had you called upon him since he had been in office in relation to this matter?—A. Never.

Q. How long had you been acquainted with Mr. Goode, the Solicitor-General?—A. I think I have known Mr. Goode intimately twenty-two or twenty-three years. I have an idea that I can locate him as far back as that.

Q. Do you know whether he was aware of your being interested in any wise in these companies?—A. You ask me do I know; no, I do not know.

Q. Did you ever talk with him about it?—A. Not that I remember.

Q. Your name had been published in the newspapers, and it was a fact well known, was it not?—A. Yes, it was notorious. It was well advertised in the papers here in Washington and in Baltimore.

Q. And you have been acquainted with Mr. Goode how long?—A. I voted for Mr. Goode for Senator once, about two or three hundred times; I have forgotten when. I think I can locate him back about as far as 1863. I have known him a long time, and known him exceedingly well. I have known Mr. Goode for a long time, if that is what you mean, and very well.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with Secretary Lamar?—A. I have been acquainted with Secretary Lamar more than fifteen years.

Q. Intimately?—A. Very well, indeed.

Q. It has been stated somewhere—A. I am very glad that you are giving me such a very delightful set of associates, but what that has got to do with the telephone case I do not know.

Q. I do not mean to make any implication about it or to cast any reflections.—A. It is no implication on me. I am happy to know those gentlemen. They have been friends of mine for a long time.

Q. I am sure it is no implication on them.—A. I think not.

Q. I do not know but what you and Mr. Lamar are related by marriage in some way. It has been so stated in the newspapers somewhere.—A. Don't you believe anything that you see in the newspapers about this case. They will mislead you for dead certain.

Q. That is the reason I am asking you.—A. Don't you believe a word of that. Mr. Lamar is a Georgia man and I am a Maryland man. I have no connection with him, either direct or remote, and have no affinity or otherwise.

Q. And are not connected by marriage?—A. No, sir; I am not connected by marriage.

Q. I saw something of that kind in the papers. Pardon me for asking it. Do you know that he knew that you were connected with this stock in any way? I make no implication about it.—A. I think if he has been bribed by stock he ought to be impeached; and I think that is a legitimate inquiry. If you want to impeach the members of the Cabinet, I want to assist you in every proper way.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that General Johnson appeared with a written brief before Secretary Lamar is shown in the record.

Q. I did not know that that disclosed your interest as a stockholder. It discloses your relation as counsel, but I am not aware that it discloses the fact that you were active in the Pan-Electric Company.—A. I was never connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Or one of the children of that company?—A. No, sir; nor one of the children of that company. This is an independent offshoot of its own.

Q. You purchased your right under the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, I know; and if you will look at the record you have there of what we call the telephone case before the Secretary of the Interior, on page 22, you will find the petition of the Washington Telephone Company, dated Baltimore, October 12, 1885, to the Attorney-General of the United States, and signed by myself as president and counsel of the company.

Q. Of that telephone company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the Commissioner was aware of that fact?—A. I do not think it is quite fair for me to state that. I should be very loth to state that he knew a great many things that are printed in these books. No; I will not state that.

Q. We have imposed on us a disagreeable duty of inquiring into certain actions of officials.—A. Well, I do not know about that. Mr. Lamar knows me perfectly well, and has known me for a long time; I know Mr. Lamar exceedingly well. Whether Mr. Lamar knew I had any interest in telephone stock or in a telephone company, I could not tell you to save my life. I never exchanged a word with him on the subject. He knew I was counsel for the Washington Telephone Company because I appeared before him as counsel.

Q. And he knew that you were president of that company?—A. I do not know that.

Q. Didn't you represent that company?—A. I say it is not fair to hold Mr. Lamar to a knowledge of all the facts printed in that book. They are voluminous, and I do not know that he read all of them.

Q. I want to get at the facts first, and then it is a matter of judgment as to what we suppose he might do.—A. Well, I appeared before Mr. Lamar as counsel of the Washington Telephone Company, and he knew that.

Q. Am I in error? I understood you to read there just now that you presented a petition which was signed by you as president of the company?—A. Yes; that was in the paper. I do not know Mr. Cleveland very well; I have had a little acquaintance with him and a very agreeable one.

Q. With whom?—A. With Mr. Cleveland, the President. I thought you wanted to inquire about my range of acquaintance, and I wanted to assist you.

Q. I do not think that a proper remark. Have you observed that this matter referred to us does not embrace the President at all?—A. I thought it did.

Q. Did you?—A. I think if you will read the resolution you will find that it embraces the executive department distinctly.

Q. At any rate, you will observe that I did not put any inquiry about the President to you.—A. No, sir; I had not observed it.

Q. But since you have mentioned his name I will venture to make inquiry whether you have ever had any interview with him in relation to this Government suit before it was brought?—A. None in the world, before or since.

Q. You stand in this relation, I suppose, now: that the prosecution of this Government suit you desire to have begun, because of its bearing, in one respect, upon your company, do you not?—A. I have two relations to the Government suit; one of them is, as a citizen of the country, desiring to see a fair trial and a proper adjudication of the rights of the Bell Company to its patents. In my opinion, as a lawyer, the Bell Company claims more than it is entitled to, and that claim should be set aside after proper investigation, if it is found to be so. That is one relation I bear to it. The other is my relation to this company as counsel. I want to see them succeed, because if they do it lets me out.

Q. And, thirdly, I suppose, because of your relation to it as director and stockholder?—A. Undoubtedly. It is not a matter of patriotism with me at all, this Washington telephone business.

Q. You think the vacating of the Bell patent under the Government suit would relieve your company of that restraining order which now exists, and of the dangers attending the pending suit, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And you understand that a success in that would be a large benefit to your rights, or the rights of your company?—A. That is what I think.

Q. And give you such a monopoly as the patents which you have would secure to you?—A. No, sir; it would not give to me any monopoly at all. It would throw open the whole field of telephonic investigation and invention to the public.

Q. Do you mean it would destroy the Rogers patents under which you are operating?—A. On the contrary, the Rogers patents would secure to him that which he patented, no more or less. It would not give any monopoly, because there are fifty different telephones.

Q. It would not give a monopoly if that patent would secure it to you?—A. It would give him the right to the instrument which he purports to have invented.

Q. And would secure you against any claim of infringement as against the Bell patent?—A. No; that does not follow.

Q. If you should destroy the Bell patent, there would not be any longer a claim that you were infringing it, would there?—A. No; if the Bell patent were invalidated in toto of course there could be no infringement of the Bell patent.

Q. I have interrogated you in regard to all that I deem material. Oh, you have spoken about a Mr. Holton. I would like to know whether he was a member of Congress at the time he was united in that company, and I would like to know the date of your purchase from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company of your interest in the Rogers patent.—A. Now you are speaking of the original Washington company.

Q. I am now speaking of the interest which your subordinate company got. You purchased your interest from the Washington company?—A. No, no; the Washington company was formed upon a license from the Pan-Electric Company, and the Washington company of Maryland was formed upon a license from the Washington company.

Q. What time did you secure your interest; when did you bargain and secure it from this Washington Telephone Company?—A. At what time did we do what?

Q. At what time did the company of which you were president in Maryland get the interest, or bargain for the interest, with the other Washington company? You are one of the grandchildren of the parent company.—A. No, I am the grandfather. You have not got it right yet. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company created the Washington company, and I am president of that Washington company. My Washington company created the Baltimore company.

Q. Are you connected with the Baltimore company?—A. No, sir; only as counsel and director. Now you want to know what kind of an assignment was made by the Washington company to the Baltimore company?

Q. Yes; I was in error. I was treating you as the president of the company in Baltimore and not in Washington. I see I was in error. Can you give us the date when the Washington Telephone Company, of which you are president, bought their interest from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. It was in May, 1885.

Q. Were the articles of association formed?—A. I hold them here; this is a copy; it is printed in the brief of the Bell Company, and I have no doubt it is correct. The articles of association were filed on the 15th of June, 1885.

Q. And Mr. Holton went out of Congress when?—A. On the 4th of March, 1885. The next Congress commenced on the 4th of March. I was in error when I stated to you that Mr. Holton was connected with Congress at that time.

Q. The chairman's allusion to him was the first allusion made to him in the committee; it opened there. I see in the list of stockholders in this telephone company, of which you are the president, the name of Mr. Gorman, who was a stockholder—I don't remember whether it was A. P. or A. J., but it looked more like A. J. Do you know any A. J. Gorman?—A. I object to your question, because it goes beyond the scope of your inquiry; but I will answer it; no. I may state that Senator A. P. Gorman was never a stockholder. I object to the question, and decline to answer.

Q. The book has been produced and exhibited to me, and I saw that his name was on the book as a stockholder.

The WITNESS. A. J. Gorman?

Mr. RANNEY. A. J. or A. P. Gorman.

A. It certainly is not A. P. Gorman, I am satisfied about that, because I sign the certificates of stock, and my attention would have been directed to such a name.

O. Our duty requires us to inquire into these things.—A. Oh, yes; I would examine the last man of them. But A. P. Gorman has none of the stock, and no other member of Congress or Senator or judge has any.

Q. What connection have you with the other company, the grandchild in Baltimore?—A. I am the counsel of that company.

Q. And likewise a director?—A. Likewise a director, but my connection with it is very perfunctory. I never attend the meetings, and have nothing in the world to do with it. I turned that matter over to the gentlemen who manage it, who are business men in Baltimore. I have other things to attend to. I am defending this suit, which is against them also.

Q. Do you know who are the stockholders of that company?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether any member of Congress is a stockholder in it?—A. That is rather a tender sort of question. I will swear to the best of my knowledge and belief that no member of Congress ever has been a stockholder or is a stockholder now.

Q. It may be a tender sort of question, but it is one that we have the disagreeable duty of putting.—A. Oh, well, you ask me about a matter where I never have seen the stock-book or a certificate of stock that has been sold. Nobody has any connection with it who is connected with the Government that I know of. I never heard to the contrary.

Q. You do not have charge of the books?—A. No, sir; I never saw them.

Q. The day you called at the Department of Justice to see whether the Government suit had been brought, you have said was the 3d of September, if I remember rightly?—A. No, I did not say that; your memory is at fault. I said it was in the early part of September.

Q. Can you fix the exact date?—A. I could not.

Q. What occurred; whom did you see?

The WITNESS. At that interview?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Goode.

Q. You mean the Solicitor-General and Acting Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; I mean Solicitor General John Goode.

Q. Was that the first time you had ever seen him on the subject?—A. The first.

Q. When you went there at that time you knew that an application had been made, then?—A. Yes, sir,

Q. When did you first learn that an application had been made?—A. I have an idea that some time during the month of August the application was prepared. When it reached the Attorney-General's Office I do not know, and the only way I had of knowing was by applying to the Solicitor-General.

Q. What time in August did you say that you first learned about it?—A. I did not say any time in August at all. I got an idea some time in August that the application was being prepared to forward to the Attorney-General.

Q. How early in August did you get that idea, if you can tell?—A. I would say the latter part of August.

Q. Can you tell how you learned that?—A. I got it partly by telegraph, partly by letter, and partly by verbal communication with Colonel Young. My correspondence about that time was tolerably voluminous. It was cut into about three weeks during the month of August when I was away from telegraphs and matters of that sort. So if you will take three weeks in August out of it when I had no communication with anybody on the subject at all, it may aid you; but the rest of the time my whole time was occupied with the telephone business. I did nothing else but pursue it.

Q. When you went there, what occurred between you and Mr. Goode?—A. I asked Mr. Goode if Senator Harris had been there. He said he had. "Well, do you know where he has gone?" "No; he has not been gone away from here ten minutes." "Well," said I, "will you allow me to ask a question; I am quite uncertain about the propriety of it, but I will ask you, and you can answer it or not. Have you passed any order about bringing a United States suit in the matter of the telephone?" He said "Yes." I said "Good morning," and walked out.

Q. You say you asked if Senator Harris had been there. Did you expect that he would go there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What led you to ask the question whether he had been there?—A. I expected to meet him there; I think I had an appointment. I came and inquired for him, and somebody told me he had gone there, or else I had an appointment to meet him there, I cannot tell you which now. But I expected to meet him there.

Q. Did you come to Washington for the purpose of seeing him?—A. I think not. My impression is that I came here for the purpose of meeting Mr. Casey Young, and still pressing for their assistance in the hearing on the 15th of September. I would not like to be tied to that. If I thought about it some more I would have a sharper recollection.

Q. I would like to get your recollection on the point as to why you expected to meet Senator Harris at Mr. Goode's or the Attorney-General's Office?—A. I expected to meet him there about this identical question. I knew that the determination had been to press the suit again on the Government. I came down here in the early part of September, the 1st, 2d, or 3d, for the purpose of conferring with the gentlemen on that subject. As I have said, some arrangement had been made to forward these applications to the Government to bring the suit, and I was informed that the Tennessee application, and probably the New Orleans application had gone, or would go forward, and I came down here to see what had been done about it in pressing it to a conclusion. When I came down here, I was either informed that Senator Harris was going up there to see Mr. Goode in the morning on the subject, or else that he had gone there, and I followed him there, one or the other. I went there for the purpose of uniting with him in pressing the matter upon the Solicitor-General to order the suit to be brought.

Mr. RANNEY. That answers it, I believe.

The WITNESS. I think so.

Q. After the 3d of August, 1885, when you left—subsequent to that and before this time when you came to Washington, as you state—had you been in correspondence with Mr. Casey Young?—A. Well, Mr. Ranney, that is a little hard to answer. A correspondence implies the answering of letters. I have written Colonel Young numerous letters, and he did not reply to them. I have an idea that he was at Hot Springs, Ark., on account of his health. I did sometimes get an answer out of him, but infrequently. I would not like to dignify it by the name of correspondence.

Q. Did you get any letters from him during that time?—A. I think so, but it is hard to say; I will say I did not.

Q. Have you looked to see?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Did you get any letters from Colonel Gantt during that time?—A. I got letters from Gantt and Patterson; I cannot say I ever got letters from Colonel Gantt alone; my letters were from Gantt and Patterson. Now you are trying to fix a time during the middle of August—

Q. No, between the 3d of August and 3d of September, if that was the date?—A. Yes, sir; during that time I think I got letters from both Young and Gantt.

Q. How many, do you think?—A. I could not tell you that; not very many; infrequently.

Q. Will you be kind enough to produce what you did receive?—A. I will not.

Q. I mean those relating to this Government suit, not any private correspondence; and let the chairman see what relate to it and what do not. I do not care to look at them. We have had a rule here, to avoid disclosing private matters, to let the chairman first examine the letters.—A. I will do so.

Q. All the letters you received?—A. All the letters I received relating to the Government suit, about my knowledge and connection with the Government suit, and Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young's connection with it.

Q. Have you copies of your replies, of the letters you wrote?—A. I think I have; I don't think there is any doubt about it.

Q. Will you be kind enough to produce them?—A. I will furnish you copies of all the correspondence relating to the Government suits.

Q. Do you know of Casey Young going to Pittsburgh early in July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know of it?—A. He told me so.

Q. When and where?—A. On his way there.

Q. He came first to Baltimore to see you?—A. I think so.

Q. Did he have a conference with you before he went?—A. I think so.

Q. Did he say anything then about a Government suit?—A. No, sir; he did not. I never heard of the Government suit until the 1st of August.

Q. Did he say what he wanted to go to Pittsburgh for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?—A. To see the trial going on there and to get such information as to the progress of the litigation as might be of service to us in our suit in Baltimore and Memphis.

Q. Did you see him after he returned from there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified to seeing him at a subsequent date; how soon was that?—A. You will have to assist me about that. When was the Pittsburgh suit; what date?

Mr. RANNEY. The Pittsburgh suit was ended, so far as the proceedings were concerned, if I remember right, on the 10th of July.

The WITNESS. No, sir; the Pittsburgh suit was before that. Have you the record of it here? Well, anyhow, Colonel Young came to Baltimore, and, if I recollect correctly, he spent a day or two with me in Baltimore, looking up some of the law about this case. From there he went to Pittsburgh to see what could be done with these people in getting their assistance in the general contention against the Bell Company. He reported to me the result of his investigation by letter. I did not see him personally until I met him here in the early part of August. I then met him here by appointment for the purpose of meeting the New Orleans people and seeing if we could not get some common action.

Q. Be kind enough to produce the letter he wrote you reporting his action at Pittsburgh.—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. You will not do it?—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. Had you any knowledge of the application which Mr. J. W. Rogers, or one of the two Rogerses, made to the Department of Justice on the 24th of May, 1885, for a Government suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any?—A. I never heard of it.

Q. Not to this day?—A. I heard of it subsequently. I saw it in the newspaper that he said he had made an application.

Q. Had you any knowledge of the application made by Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Department of Justice on the 12th of July, I think it was?—A. Not until I came to the Ebbitt House, about the 1st of August. That was the first I heard of it.

Q. You heard it there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom did you hear it?—A. I heard it from the party together; Mr. Von Briesen may have said so, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen may have said so.

Q. Do you remember what they said about it?—A. I object to that question and decline to answer it, and then I will go on and answer it. Mr. Van Benthuyzen said he had been very badly treated at Pittsburgh and intended to have that judge impeached, and then he was going to have suit brought by the United States Government to overturn the Bell patents, that he had proved by a man named Wilbur that the patent had been obtained by fraud upon the Government, and was going on that line; that he had an affidavit of Wilbur.

Q. Anything else?—A. He then said that he had made the application to have the Government suit brought; that it was in accordance with an act that had been passed by the last Congress; that after it passed the House it had been stolen from the files of the Senate, and never had been reported; that in consequence of that he had withdrawn his application from the Department of Justice, because an examination of the law by Mr. Von Briesen had shown that the application must be made to the district attorney, and must be forwarded by the district attorney to the Department of Justice. Therefore he had gone back again to take a fresh start through some district attorney.

Q. You remember that, do you? Who was present when that was said?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Did he tell you how he learned that it had been stolen?—A. No, sir; he did not state that.

Q. As I understood Mr. Van Benthuyzen—I will call it to your attention so as to be sure about your recollection—it was not until late in September that he learned about its being stolen?—A. Well, I cannot help that. I never heard of the law before. I never saw a copy of it, and never heard it discussed except at that meeting in the early part of August.

Mr. RANNEY. That, I believe, is all I desire to ask you.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You have stated that you would produce some correspondence between yourself and Colonel Young relative to the bringing of the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You will produce the letter that he wrote you from Pittsburgh relative to the result of the trial there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything in that letter as to the Government suit?—A. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. One moment, if you please. I object to that question.

Mr. EDEN. I am not asking for the contents of the letter.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask the ruling of the Chair on the question. If the witness declines to produce a letter at first, I make the objection that it is not competent for the gentleman to ask him what is in it or what is not in it.

Mr. EDEN. I do not ask him what is in it. The witness states that he will produce the correspondence relating to the Government suit. You called out a reference to a letter from Colonel Young to him relative to his visit to Pittsburgh, and he declined to produce that letter. I do not ask him for the contents of the letter at all but what the letter was about, whether it related to the Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. That is best shown by the paper itself. He said that he had a letter from Colonel Young reporting to him the result of that action, and it is that letter that I wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be competent for the witness to state that the letter did not relate to the Government suit.

The WITNESS. I will examine my correspondence to-morrow, I cannot do it to-night, and I will give you copies of all my letters and of letters received by me relating to the Government suit. If this letter contains anything about this Government suit, you shall have it; if it does not contain it, you can't have it.

Mr. EDEN. That is all I want to know about it.

Mr. RANNEY (to the witness). You have said that letter of Colonel Young's reported to you the result of the interview—

Mr. EDEN. I object to the gentleman putting questions at this time. He would not permit me to ask a question after he had commenced his examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois may proceed.

Mr. RANNEY. I will defer my question. I thought it was the most convenient time to put it now.

Q. You state that the latter part of August or the first part of September you were writing letters and telegrams, hurrying up the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were any of those letters or telegrams directed to any public officers, or were they directed to other individuals?—A. They were between Gantt and Patterson and myself.

Q. Not between you and any public officer?—A. No, sir; none in the world.

Q. You state that you decline to give to the committee a detail of the private business of the company of which you are president?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you if you decline to give any business relation that that company may have or may have had with any public officer?—A. There is no business of my company since its organization to the present time in the way of contracts or purchases or privileges or stock rights that relates to any member of Congress or to any person connected with the legislative, judicial, or executive departments of the Government. There never have been and are none now. Therefore, I decline to give any details about my private business, because it has no connection with this investigation.

Q. Then you do not decline to give any information which relates to Government officers?—A. None whatever.

Mr. EDEN. That is all.

The WITNESS. I want to say about this Government officer business just this: I have a very clear view of the law, and so have you, gentlemen, that you have no right to examine about any antecedent public officers, or what they did. All that you have a right to examine into is the acts of existing officers of the Government. With that explanation I want to say that Mr. Casey Young was a stockholder in the company, but he is no longer a Government officer.

Mr. EDEN. Did he become a stockholder before or after he went out of Congress?

The WITNESS. Before he went out of Congress. I also want to say that in this inquiry Congress has no jurisdiction over Mr. Casey Young or myself, either.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say that you appeared before the Secretary of the Interior at the last hearing?—A. I did—what do you mean by “the last hearing?”

Q. I mean when the ordering of this second suit was concluded upon.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first hear of the determination of the Department to bring a Government suit?—A. I never heard of it until it appeared in the Baltimore morning papers the morning after it was announced.

Q. You had no information about it until it was officially announced?—A. None in the world.

Mr. RANNEY. That letter of Colonel Young's, written to you after the interview that he had had with Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh reporting the result of it as you stated, I will thank you to produce, so that we may see what it contains, or that the chairman may.

The WITNESS. Well, if it contains anything about a Government suit you shall have it. If it does not—and I will be the judge of that—you shall not have it.

Mr. RANNEY. You understand me; that was before any Government suit was brought.

The WITNESS. I know it was.

Mr. RANNEY. And the other correspondence I have spoken about, some of which you have declined to produce, from Tennessee, not connected with the Government suit as brought, but relating to a matter of business.

The WITNESS. I do not propose that this committee shall examine my private correspondence with counsel or others to find out whether I have anything in my personal private correspondence; that is worse than a general warrant.

Mr. RANNEY. You know what the rule is. We have said if there is anything private, any matter not pertaining to this inquiry, we will let the chairman, in whom we have confidence, look at it, and say whether it is or not, so as to protect you.

Mr. HALL. I do not understand that any rule of that kind has been adopted by the committee. Mr. Casey Young in one case said that he would consent to it.

Mr. MOFFATT. It has been an informal rule and understanding.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that General Johnson will produce every letter relating to the Government suit, and that dispenses with that rule. I do not ask him to produce his private letters.

Mr. RANNEY. I will embrace in my request, if you are willing to produce the letters, those which relate to and which preceded the Government suit, in reference to the getting of a Government suit?

The WITNESS. I am in so much doubt about it that I have great doubts as to whether I have any such letters at all; and if I had any such letter I would not produce it. I really cannot tell until I examine my papers what I have got.

Mr. RANNEY. I am making a distinction.

The WITNESS. I understand; you want to read all about it.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Eden's request was only for letters written since the suit was brought. I care more for those which were written prior to the time the suit was brought.

The WITNESS. Well, you will not get them from me.

Mr. RANNEY. If you will decline generally to produce them it will save time.

The WITNESS. I do decline to do so. You cannot issue a general warrant like Lord Halifax, and rake up all my letters for six months.

Mr. RANNEY. I want those letters relating to the proceedings which led up to it. I don't care for those which were written subsequently.

The WITNESS. Exactly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You stated that you were anxious, in the latter part of August or the first part of September, with relation to the bringing of the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that what you intended to say?—A. Yes, sir; I was anxious to have it brought.

Q. In the latter part of August?—A. Yes, sir; I will say the latter part of August or the early part of September.

Q. My recollection of your former answer was to the effect that it was after you knew that the Government suit was ordered that you became anxious to have the bill filed.—

A. There are two distinct matters. First, I was anxious to have the Government suit ordered, and then after it was ordered I was anxious to have it brought. I was anxious to have it ordered between the 1st of August and the 1st of September, and then when it was ordered I was anxious to have it brought so as to get a copy of the proceedings to use in our suit.

Mr. HALL. Let me make an inquiry for information. Mr. Ranney is anxious that you should produce certain papers written and received anterior to this order for the Government suit, which led up to it, as he expresses it, and I understand you decline to produce such letters.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. HALL. Do you decline to produce any letters written anterior to that time which relate and refer to the obtaining of the Government suit, if there be such?

The WITNESS. No. Let us understand each other. Now, Mr. Reporter, we will have this thing plain. I propose to examine my correspondence from the beginning of this litigation with the Bell Company up to the time of the hearing in Baltimore, which was the 15th of September, and all my correspondence with any one relating to the procuring of a Government suit, and submit it to this committee. I do not propose to submit any other correspondence of any kind whatever.

Mr. HALL. The other correspondence that does not relate to that you regard as private and confidential?

The WITNESS. I do not say that it is not within your power to inquire into it; but I have tried to draw that line, and I think it is clear.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Are you willing to bring here all the correspondence you have had with Casey Young or Gantt and Patterson relating to the proceeding which you took about the 1st of August, 1885?—A. No, sir; I will bring you nothing here at all except such letters as I have received from other people relating to the Government suit.

Q. You are not willing to bring them and submit them to the chairman for his inspection?—A. No, sir; I am not. I have not the slightest objection to bringing all my correspondence and show it as one gentleman would show it to another; but I won't show any paper to any member of this committee as a member of the committee. I will show it to Mr. Oates there, whom I know, or to any other gentlemen of the committee, as one gentleman would show it to another; but I will not do it under the process of a committee.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That is, you mean your private correspondence?—A. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the line is drawn.

The WITNESS (handing a copy of his brief to Mr. Ranney). I will contribute something further to the literature of this subject.

Hon. E. J. HENKLE, then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Boyle):

Question. Are you a stockholder in and an officer of the Washington Telephone Company?—Answer. I am a director in the Washington Telephone Company, a stockholder in it, and the general agent of it.

Q. Are you in any way connected with the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland?—A. I am a director in the Washington Telephone Company of Maryland, and its secretary, and am general agent for that also.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know why you are subpoenaed here.

The WITNESS. I am sure I do not.

Mr. EDEN. You are under subpoena, are you?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether you know of any officer of the Government, in any of its branches,* who is in any way connected with either of these companies.—A. No, sir; none to my knowledge, and I know pretty nearly all of them.

The CHAIRMAN. I have nothing more to ask.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You are secretary of that local company in Baltimore?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Probably it was on that account that you were summoned then. I would like to have you produce the record of the directors and stockholders of that company, and the stock book, the stock ledger, and stock certificate book.—A. I was requested in the subpoena to bring books and papers of the company, of the telephone companies I am connected with, relating to any transactions with Government officers, any branch of the Government officers. I did not bring any books or papers, because there is nothing in any of them which relates to any Government officer.

Q. Do not your books show who the stockholders are?—A. Our books show, in regard to the Maryland company, who the stockholders are. I will say this, that there are no stockholders; no stock has ever been sold, and the only stock that is held is held by the corporators and directors of the company.

Q. Who are they?—A. The corporators under our general law are the directors for the first year. We are in the first year of our existence.

Q. Be kind enough to state who they are.—A. Mr. Biedler, Mr. Witz, Mr. Henry, General Johnson, and myself. Mr. Holton was one of the incorporators, but never attended a meeting, and resigned some time ago.

Q. Are you not willing that the committee should see the directors' books, or the list of stockholders on your books, and the certificates issued, if there are any; are you not willing to produce them so that we can see them for ourselves?—A. I am willing to state on oath the fact that there has been no stock issued except to the parties I have named, and that none has been issued to any Government official.

Q. You were organized under the Washington Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your company was joined in that suit in Maryland?—A. Our company was included in the suit; yes, sir.

Q. You are one of the companies embraced in this restraining order then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were your counsel in that suit?—A. General Johnson, Mr. Stirling, Mr. Poe, and Morrison & Bond; the same who represented the Washington company.

Q. Mr. Stirling is one of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make separate defenses?—A. No, sir.

Q. You will pardon my ignorance, but I will ask you whether or not you are a member of the bar?—A. No, sir; I am a member of the medical profession; I am a doctor.

Q. You did not appear then personally in the suit, and had nothing to do with the proceedings in Maryland?—A. No, sir; I had only that general interest that others concerned in the company had.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see that there is anything more I care to inquire about.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday. I desire to say, before the motion is put, that I was informed a little while ago, through a third party, that Attorney-General Garland desires to appear before the committee on Monday.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I would like permission of the committee to take away the stock-book that I brought here, if the committee has no further use for it.

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so, if you will return it when we want it.

The motion of Mr. Oates was then agreed to, and the committee adjourned to meet on Monday, April 19, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, April 19, 1886.

Committee met pursuant to adjournment, and (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) proceeded to examine Attorney-General Garland as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. This committee has been informed, Mr. Attorney-General, that you desire to appear before it to-day.

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir; I understood that there has been occasion to mention my name before this committee, and I thought I should like to say something about myself.

Q. Will you be sworn?—A. Yes, sir. [The oath was administered.]

Q. If you prefer you may make your statement in narrative form, or, if you desire it, I will proceed to examine you.—A. I am entirely subject to the convenience of the committee in that respect.

Mr. EDEN. I suggest that if it suits the convenience of the Attorney-General that he go on and make his statement.

The Chairman put the question whether or not there was objection to hearing the statement of the Attorney-General, and there being no objection, the witness proceeded to make his statement, as follows:

The WITNESS. On the 8th of October last I made a statement to the President and Cabinet in reference to the Pan-Electric Telephone matter, which statement he gave to the newspapers for publication. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to submit that to the committee and reaffirm it, and ask that the clerk or stenographer take it down.

Mr. RANNEY. It is already in the Record. (See page —.)

The WITNESS. In reaffirming that I wish to make two or three explanations of it. Some time in February, 1883, before Mr. Cleveland was ever mentioned by anybody for President, and before I had been mentioned by anybody for Attorney-General of the United States (I had been mentioned once as attorney-general for the Confederate States, but not for the United States), Mr. Atkins, the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, met me and stated that he knew of this invention, the Rogers invention, and he believed it to be an invention of great utility if properly handled, and one in which there could be money made, and signified to me that he had been looking at it with other gentlemen—I believe he mentioned the names of Mr. Harris, Dr. Rogers, and J. Harris Rogers.

When I afterwards spoke to Mr. Harris—and when I say Mr. Harris, I refer to Senator Harris—he said that he desired me, being a poor man like himself, to enter this enterprise. I talked with Mr. Atkins some time about it, and told him I had never undertaken to make any money at anything but law and poker; that I always lost at poker, but sometimes won at law, but I was willing to go into this thing if he thought it offered any good inducements. We then separated. The next day Senator Harris spoke to me about it in the Senate, and I made substantially the same response to him. In a day or two thereafter—not more than two days—Senator Harris, Mr. Young, General Johnston, Mr. Atkins, and myself, met Dr. Rogers and son at their residence, and I was there introduced to Dr. Rogers and his son. That was the beginning of my acquaintance with them. We had one or two meetings there after that, and we talked over these matters, and agreed upon the general idea which the committee has already heard, and a lot of these gentlemen went to New York to promote the organization.

I left here on the 11th of March, for my home. I remained here just one week after Congress adjourned, for the purpose of this organization. Congress adjourned on the 4th of March (Sunday), and on the following Sunday (the 11th), I left. Inasmuch as the organization has been detailed to you in full by Mr. Young and Senator Harris, General Johnston, and others, I suppose it is not worth while for me to go over it. This is all prefatory to the statement that I submitted to the President.

In another part of that statement, in reference to the gentleman who called upon me to bring the suit, either the latter part of July or the first of August, I will not say which, but that it was about that time is impressed upon my memory because of the fact that we were all getting ready, the President and Cabinet, to go to attend the funeral ceremonies of General Grant in New York, which took place on the 8th of August. In this statement, as I was about to say, I alleged that the Pan-Electric Company applied to me. That was an inference; it was not a fact. No name was mentioned to me when these gentlemen came in, namely, Colonel Young, Colonel Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, and Mr. Von Briesen—and I stated in this letter to the President I did not recall the latter gentleman's name, and I did not recall it until recently. As the gentlemen came in they were introduced to me by Mr. Young, except Mr. Gantt, of Memphis, whom I had known a long time before. The other gentlemen Mr. Young introduced.

Mr. Von Briesen started to talk, to the effect that he wanted the use of the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent. That I refused at once, and told him I could not entertain the proposition. He presented the case with a good deal of positiveness and energy, and appeared to get somewhat mad about it. I did not get mad. I do not do that generally, and then I do not think a public officer ought to. I inferred that it was the Pan-Electric Company which was interested for these reasons: Mr. Young came with the company, although he did not do any of the talking, and I knew him to be the treasurer and secretary of the company; and then I had received a letter, about May, 1885, from Dr. Rogers, requesting, as one of the stockholders of that company, suit to be brought. Coupling these facts together I took it for granted that it was the Pan-Electric Company, though that was merely an inference, as no name was mentioned. That is all the explanation I wish to make now in regard to that statement.

When I got the letter of Dr. Rogers, in May, 1885, I did not answer it, nor did I treat it as an official letter. I simply treated it as a personal letter, for the simple reason that I knew Dr. Rogers did not have the authority from the Pan-Electric Company to ask that this suit be brought. I knew that General Johnston was president and Mr. Young was secretary of the company, and if application had been made on the part of the company, if coming from the company, the request would be made in their names; therefore that remained unanswered as a personal letter. I did not put it on file at all. On the 14th of July I received a letter, dated the 12th of July, from Mr. Van Benthuyssen, written from New York, in which he stated that, in pursuance of an act of Congress, passed at the last session, "I request a suit to be brought to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent, and I allege first, second, third," and so on. Then at the bottom he had signed his name as president of the National Improved, or Improved National, Telephone Company; I do not know which.

Mr. Van Benthuyssen asserted in this letter with some degree of positiveness that an act of Congress had been passed empowering the Government to bring such suits. I had heard that before, and had made searches without finding the act, but this letter was peculiarly well written and well worded, and had evidently been written with great care, and I therefore took it for granted that, notwithstanding the search I had previously made for some act of that sort, I referred the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyssen to the Interior Department, and wrote Mr. Van Benthuyssen that it had been so referred, where it should have gone in the first instance. I heard no more of that letter, and never saw it until Mr. Lamar returned it with the other papers last January to the Solicitor-General, and I asked for the search to be made to see if the letter was there, and see if I was mistaken as to its contents, and I found I was correct. My clerk found all the letters there, and with the balance of the letters of inquiry before the Interior Department.

Now, following on the application to bring suit after I referred Mr. Van Benthuyssen's letter, which was on the 14th of July, I set to work to examine with all the care

I could into this question and to discharge my full duty in reference to this matter, because I knew as a matter of course other applications would follow, although I had no intimation of it. In looking through all the authorities that I could muster, I came to the conclusion that I could not only not order that suit, but that I could not properly in my own conscience make a reference of it to any person, although there are precedents where the Attorney-General has made reference to the Solicitor-General when such questions have come before him, and you will find these precedents in this paper here. So that when Mr. Young and these gentlemen came to make this demand I had fully examined the question and determined that I could not and would not touch the matter under any circumstances. I never intended to touch it; and when I referred the Van Benthuyzen letter to the Interior Department, I did it because he spoke with such great particularity and positiveness that this law was in force, and although I could not find it myself, I thought, as you gentlemen know sometimes happens, it might be stuck on some appropriation bill, which would require a good deal of search to find it, and I thought may be this would come along in the same way.

Now, in reference to this question of law which Mr. Van Benthuyzen referred to, I have seen something stated in the papers about it. I do not know whether anything of this kind occurred before the committee or not. There was a law of that sort pending before the Senate—I mean a law giving authority, or making it obligatory on the Attorney-General or somebody else to bring suit in cases of this sort—and the only notice I ever took of it, or had of it, I think was at the instance of Mr. Platt, chairman of the Committee on Patents of the Senate. I was never a member of the Committee on Patents and never attended a meeting of that committee, and Senator Platt came across to my seat with this bill in his hand, and said, "Old fellow, you are my retained lawyer, although I have never paid you anything. I would like you to tell me all about this. Give me your opinion of this bill," and did I know anything of it.

After I looked at this intended law I said to Senator Platt, it has become a matter of practice here and has been sanctioned for some time, and I do not think it is a law which would do any good; I do not think it necessary. That was all the notice I ever took of it, and I never thought of it again until I became Attorney-General, and these people referred to it, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter recited the fact that it had become a law, and then I referred this letter to the Interior Department. Now, I do not recollect the date of this thing, as it sort of dances through my mind, as I paid little attention to this matter. I do not think I have read a hundred and thirty lines of what has been in the papers about this matter. There was another gentleman whose name I did not recall until the other day. I do not know whether he has been before you or not, but I recall the name of Mr. Humphreys. He came to me some time last fall, I think it was, and spoke about bringing a suit against the Bell Telephone Company. He made his statement standing right across the table from me, and I thought he was going to jump over on me every moment, so earnest and emphatic was he in his statement. I do not know whether he has been before you or not.

The CHAIRMAN. He has not.

The WITNESS. I told him I would not bring suit or should not hint it. He insisted that I should bring suit, and said that he thought it was a hardship upon him, that because I was in another company and was interested that his rights had to be surrendered or ignored.

Mr. OATES. What company did he represent?

The WITNESS. I think the Globe. He was here and was very persistent and urgent about bringing the suit, and he got mad because I would not do anything in the matter, and we parted not with mutual respect and admiration.

Mr. RANNEY. What was the date of this interview Mr. Humphreys had with you?

The WITNESS. Early in the fall, I think, but I am not so sure about it. I notice in the debates in the House Mr. Reed put a question, which, upon its face, is not an improper question. He said that if I gave an opinion that there was no conflict between the Bell telephone and the Pan-Electric telephone, why was it I could not act. I gave that opinion, and will refer to it after awhile, and upon the face of that opinion, without going any further that is a very pertinent question. I was counsel of the Pan-Electric Company, besides being a stockholder, and while I gave an opinion that there was no conflict, yet the Bell people claimed a conflict; they sued the company on account of conflict to stop them from putting up their telephones, and having been counsel, under the statute I was disqualified from acting as against a rival company.

I saw in the Post a statement, probably coming from Senator Vest, about a statement that I could have given an opinion about the validity of the Bell telephone. Now, I wish to say I never gave anybody an opinion or never expressed any as to the validity of the Bell telephone patent. I never looked into it and never examined it, and I had no impressions about whether it was illegally or fraudulently issued, or whether it was a good patent or not. The opinion I gave was in substance that—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). I think it is in the record.

A. (Continuing.) Was simply that the Pan-Electric invention of Rogers did not infringe; that it was an improvement upon telephones; that it was patentable, as we say in the law, different patentability which has been a recognized principle from the time of the old Morse telegraph down to the present time.

Q. Do you care to refer to that opinion now?—A. Not unless the committee wish it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. That opinion was given in answer to Mr. Myers, was it not?—A. In answer to Mr. Myers's request, and that was the only opinion I recall as giving. Now, while I was counsel for the Pan-Electric Company and a stockholder in it, I was very derelict in attending its meetings. I do not think I attended exceeding three or four of the meetings, and for the two reasons: First, they were generally fixed at a place inconvenient to my residence and inconvenient for me to attend, and secondly they were held at night, a time that I hardly ever leave my residence. I had taken a cold in 1883, when this company was formed, which settled in my throat, and that operated against my attending these meetings. I have not fully recovered from it yet and I rarely ever go out of my house after night, and very nearly all law business of the company was transacted by Senator Harris and Mr. Young. Very often they drafted papers which they brought to me for examination, and I examined them and approved or made alterations or suggested changes or alterations, as the case might be.

I recollect also that on one occasion Dr. Rogers himself sent me some paper in reference to Governor Brown's or Mr. Looney's interest. I looked over the papers and replied that they were ample, and even more extended than I would have drawn them, but that they covered the whole ground. Very often they came to the Judiciary Committee room to bring me papers to look over. Some statements have been made, I understand, that there had been meetings of the board there. That is a mistake, but a natural mistake, and I will explain it to the committee. When Mr. Garfield came in as President, the committees were reformed, and Mr. Edmunds was made chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. He told me he desired me to have a chair in that committee-room, and to make it my place of business, to make it my office; I told him I would take it with pleasure, but feared I would be in his way. He said not at all, and I accepted his very kind offer, and afterwards I was there more regularly than I now am in my present office. My constituents and clients and my creditors often came there to see me. In fact that was my place of business, and in that way this mistake may very well have been made. Senator Harris and Mr. Young and the Rogerses often came there in reference to this matter, because there was where I was and every one having business with me knew I was to be found there when I was not at my home. I never attended a meeting I am satisfied after the Presidential election of 1884. I know I never attended one after the inauguration of the President in March, 1885. I think that the gentlemen who belong to the committee will corroborate that without any trouble. Senator Harris and Mr. Young used to say hard things to me because I did not attend, and sometimes used very strong language.

Now, in reference to the suit that was brought in Tennessee, I had fixed to leave here on the 27th of August, to take the entire month of September at home. The balance of the cabinet officers had either gone away or fixed a time for going. I told the President when I went on the 7th of August to New York that I would leave on the 27th for my home, unless something happened to keep me here. When that date came I left that night. I have always found that September is the best month to be out of Washington if one is going out at all, and then we have a game law in Arkansas that the deer do not get ripe until September, and I wanted to shoot deer, as I have done out at my place for the last eight or ten years.

I left here the night of the 27th of August. Mr. Goode had gone to catch a man up in Canada and bring him back here. He got back, I think, about the middle of August, but I am not sure as to the exact date. I saw him two or three times and talked generally about matters and things. I never said anything to him about this application having been made to me, because I would not have known exactly what to say if I had talked to him about it. If I had said, "Mr. Goode, if this application comes to you you cannot grant it," that would not do, because I was interested in a rival company, and it would not be just to them. If I said, "Mr. Goode, you must grant this application," that would not do, because I was interested in the company that would be benefited by the suit, and it would be asking the Solicitor-General to grant the application in favor of the company in which I was interested. For these reasons nothing transpired between us about it. I never talked any more about it; I did not tell these gentlemen to go to Mr. Goode or anybody else. I supposed they would hunt their remedy if they thought they had any.

To resume where I left off. I spent the month of September in the woods and came back to Little Rock on the 27th of September on my way back here. When I arrived at Little Rock I got a dispatch from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, saying that some of my friends in the newspaper line wanted to know if I had granted the name of the United States to bring suit against the Bell Telephone Company. In reply I said I had not granted the name, and did not know of the use of any such name. That was the first I heard about it. From there I went to Saint Louis and spent a day with my sister-in-law and got here the morning of the 1st of October. I had not all this time heard a word about it except from this dispatch from the Times-Democrat, and when I went over to pay my respects to the President, he told me they were talking a good deal about this matter. He questioned me in reference to it, and I told him all I knew about it. I then made this explanation I have spoken of to the President and Cabinet and he gave it out for publication, as before stated. I never opened my mouth to Mr. Goode about it, because as Solicitor-General under the statute, which you will find in my statement to the President, he is perfectly independent of me. I have no more control of what he does in my absence or during my disability than I have over you gentlemen in Congress.

In the reorganization of the Department of Justice, in the bill prepared by Mr. Cushing, he put it upon the ground of interest or disability on the part of the Attorney-General that just such a person as the Solicitor-General was needed. Take, for instance, the last thirteen or fourteen days that I have been in bed, Mr. Goode has acted in his capacity as Solicitor-General and also as Acting Attorney-General in my absence, and I do not know what he has done, and I have no control over what he has done. He becomes Assistant Attorney-General in my absence by virtue of his office.

It was not worth while for me to talk with Mr. Goode, because he would have to act upon his own responsibility and upon his own sense of duty. I have thought no more about it than about anything else, and I have never to this day spoken about that suit, or the one now alleged to be pending in Columbus, Ohio. He has talked with me in reference to the manner and way of employing and paying counsel who have been retained by the Government, but that simply came before me in the usual channels of business of the office; that is the modus operandi in the Department. I do not know what is in the bill. I have never read the bill that is said to have been prepared and filed. I never saw the papers transmitted from Mr. Lamar's office, on which the suit is predicated in the Department of Justice. I never talked with Mr. Lamar or either of the gentlemen who sat with him on the trial of this matter, and I have abstained from talking to any person or persons coming to my Department. Whenever they brought the subject up I have declined to talk upon it, and I have even declined to talk with the President about the matter.

One gentleman in Mr. Lamar's Department, Mr. Montgomery, assistant attorney-general for the Interior Department, is an old schoolmate of mine, and he was appointed to his position through my efforts, and I think it is proper to state that because of his friendship and acquaintance with me he declined positively to sit in the case.

Mr. RANNEY. Was he in your Department at the time of this hearing before the Secretary?

The WITNESS. He is in my Department, assigned to the Interior Department. He is assistant attorney-general for the Interior Department. He was requested to sit in this case, as I understood, and declined to do it because of his old acquaintance and friendship for me, for fear that this might be construed as an interest that he had in the matter. Now, I do not know that there is anything else I have to state. I will state, although I suppose the treasurer and secretary have already stated that, all I know in reference to the payment of assessments from the different members, and what has been received from them.

Mr. RANNEY. That is all in I believe. I do not care much about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all you desire to say?

The WITNESS. I do not care to say anything more. I will simply state this, however. I have seen now and then some references to Senator Garland being the recipient of a block of stock by way of a gift. Of course the committee knows there is no gift about this. We paid our assessments and organized the company, when we all expected to make something out of it legitimately. There was no more impropriety in it, or objection to it, than there is to gentlemen sitting in Congress holding railroad stock, wood-pulp stock, stock in the Seal Fur Company, and holding positions as presidents of railroads, and all that. I have, ever since I have been in the Senate, been going to the Supreme Court and arguing there cases and making money out of them. I believe we all do it. I believe I have met you there.

Mr. RANNEY. I have always been ready to do it.

The WITNESS. Of course. It is a legitimate business, and as for looking for legislation upon the subject, nobody ever dreamed of any such thing. There could not be in the nature of things legislation asked for touching this matter. It was simply a party of impecunious gentlemen who took hold of this invention to make something out of it, and it is regretted by all of us that it did not pan out better. If it had ever come before Congress for legislation most assuredly I should not have voted on it.

This brings up another matter which I probably would have forgotten. At the time I wrote the letter of introduction of Dr. Rogers and his son to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt, which I did very sincerely and cheerfully, I regarded them as very competent men in that line, and without stating in that letter what the purpose of it was, my recollection is, though I am not positive as to that, there were these two things spoken of. First, that young Mr. Rogers desired to be put in the electrician's office up here at the Capitol, and that I was very anxious for him to be put there. I think that was one of the purposes of that letter. Another was that we wanted to establish these telephones in the two houses of Congress or some convenient place, and I saw Mr. Clark about both of these matters, both about putting Harry in the electrician's office and also about putting telephones there, and I also had some talk with Mr. Edmunds about it. It was alleged to be a very good thing to have them there, and it struck us so. We debated the thing and talked about it a good deal, and one of the great advantages, as Senator Harris remarked, was that when Mr. Garland got up and made a prosy speech, that he could go down town and hear it through the telephone, and not be compelled to sit in the Senate and listen to the speech. This argument for the placing of the telephones up here struck me as being a very good one, and I was in favor of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did I understand you, Mr. Attorney-General, to state you had no acquaintance with the Rogerses prior to March, 1883?—A. February, 1883. Never until then. I was introduced to them at their house, I think, on Four-and-a-half street.

Q. You say you did not regard the arrangement made by which these patents were to be put into a company and you assigned an interest as a gift?—A. By no means.

Q. Will you please state what was your view of the transaction?—A. In that respect?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Well, five or six of us got together, organized, and formed a company, and we issued our assessments to carry on the organization—assessments for its expenses. I think the first move was that we gave a note for $1,000, but I think Mr. Young could be more specific about that, as he was treasurer. Then we paid from time to time $50 apiece, or something like that, as it was required of us.

Q. Did you regard the Rogers inventions, which were the basis of the formation of your company, as having any market value at that time?—A. None at all.

Q. What did you propose to do in order to give these inventions a market value?—A. To have them supplied and erected in different places, and their use afterwards, which would give them a market value.

Q. Did you contemplate that your official position would enable you to be of advantage to the enterprise?—A. None in the world. If I had been a private citizen I would have done better for it than if in office.

Q. Was that view of the case ever suggested between you and your associates?—A. Oh, not at all.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you had departed for your home prior to the New York meeting?—A. Yes, sir; I think these gentlemen left about the 9th or 10th of February, and I left on Sunday the 11th, if I am not mistaken as to date; I know it was Sunday I left.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Do you refer to February or March?—A. March. I should say after Congress adjourned; only the gentlemen who went to New York left the 9th or 10th of March, and I left on the 11th.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Prior to your departure had any arrangement been made for the capitalization of this company to promote this invention?—A. No, sir; that was done afterwards, according to my recollection; I am pretty sure it was.

Q. Did you know when you parted with these gentlemen whether it was fixed at a million or five millions?—A. No, sir; it was not agreed upon at all, if I recollect distinctly.

Q. Do you regard that matter of capitalization as of any consequence?—A. I do not. We talked of it there, but I do not think we considered it a matter of importance, but rather a matter of our discretion afterwards.

Q. At what time did you return home on that occasion?—A. In the fall.

Q. How soon after leaving here in March?—A. I came back, moving my family here early in September of that year (1883), to put my children at school, as the schools all opened early in that month, and I remained here right along until Congress adjourned next summer (1884). I had never brought my family here before then.

Q. Between these dates, March, 1883, and September, 1883, had you any active connection with this company?—A. No, sir; I got a letter from Senator Harris with what purported to be a copy of the agreement at New York, and that is all I ever heard of it or saw about it from the time I left, in March, until my return in September—

Q. I have gone through the minutes of this company, and I find that you attended only two or three meetings.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That accords with your own recollection, does it?—A. I have already stated in my testimony here to-day that I attended not over three or four meetings; I will not be sure, but I think not more than that.

Q. Prior to your departure in March, 1883, had any arrangement been made with a view to incorporating your association?—A. No, sir; although we talked of it. Everything was in doubt; everything was in uncertainty until these gentlemen, or some person went to New York, and everything remained unchanged in the mean time.

Q. I notice that it has been stated in the papers that the articles of association, I believe—that is what they are called in our State, and I suppose the same term is used elsewhere—were prepared by you?—A. The articles of association that were prepared in the following fall after I came here were prepared by me. But I do not know now; I am not positive—others will tell you as to that—whether they acted upon or changed them. We were in a great deal of trouble here about the laws of the different States.

Q. Have you any recollection what States you had in view when you prepared the original articles?—A. Yes, sir; we had the State of New Jersey and the State of Tennessee in view, as I recall. I have not referred to the articles before coming here, and have no memorandum with reference to the same.

Q. If Tennessee was preferred to New Jersey, do you recall the reason for it?—A. No, sir; I do not. I do not remember, unless as I have it running through my mind that possibly something was said as to the requirement of paying up a certain percentage.

Q. A bonus?—A. Yes, sir; bonus. I think most of the States required 5 or 10 or 15 or 25 per cent. of the capital stock paid up.

Q. Do you know whether there was any requirement of that kind in Tennessee?—A. I do not know now. I do not think there was.

Q. Was there anything said as to the character of the services which you were to render to the company; I mean when you became associated with these gentlemen originally?—A. Only that I was to render services in the capacity of an attorney when they organized and elected their officers. They consulted me as their attorney.

Q. And your fees were to be settled in the future, were they?—A. No fee was ever fixed or mentioned, and none paid, and no fees have ever been demanded.

Q. You say these articles were prepared in November, 1883?—A. I think it was November, or October possibly; I will not be sure as to that; some time in the fall of 1883.

Q. At that time were you not still a Senator?—A. Yes; I was still a Senator.

Q. And had any suggestion been made then of the nomination of Governor Cleveland for the Presidency?—A. If there ever had I never heard of it.

Q. And were you making any effort at that time to secure any cabinet position in the event of the success of any candidate?—A. None at all.

Q. Did you expect, by your connection with this company, to benefit it in any way by reason of any official position which you might have or secure?—A. No, sir; I had no idea at all of it then; I had no more idea of it than I had of attempting to jump into the Potomac River with a mill-stone around my neck; it was simply the association of five or six very inpecunious men who wanted to better their condition.

Q. General, do you recall any discussions in the company in regard to putting stock upon the market?—A. No, sir; I was not present at any meeting in reference to that. All I know about that is what I heard from other members, who can tell you all about it. I heard, of course, that it was agreed that none should be put on the market, and when this conclusion was reported to me I thought it a good idea.

Q. What reason was given for not putting stock on the market?—A. We did not care about putting stock on the market until we were satisfied that we had got the invention permanently established. We did not try to boom the business, or to scatter the stock out around the country. I never heard of the company trying to do it.

Q. I see by your letter to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt, dated January 13, 1884, introducing Messrs. J. W. Rogers and Son to those gentlemen, you state that the object in view was to have young Rogers appointed to the position of electrician?—A. I have not seen the letter since I wrote it, and my recollection of it is that the letter mentions no particular purpose of introducing these gentlemen.

Q. I will read it, but the stenographer need not take it, as it is already in the record. It is on page 217 of the printed record. [The letter was read.]—A. My recollection is back of that, as I stated awhile ago, and I recall that young Mr. Rogers and his father wanted him to be appointed to the office of electrician at the Capitol, and I think we all did, I know I desired it to be done, and then we wanted to get out the telephones, if we could. We wanted to place telephones in the House and Senate.

Q. What was your purpose in having your telephones put in the Capitol?—A. Well, it was, of course to give them publicity, and for use there, to show that they would work.

Q. And was that designed to have any influence with members of Congress?—A. Not at all, because we had nothing before Congress, and there was nothing intended by the company to be brought before Congress.

Q. Did you expect to be benefited by the appointment of young Rogers as electrician?—A. Not at all, sir. If that had been the view of it I should not have recommended him, because it would have taken his time from our own work. I regarded him as being a scientific young man, a young man of good promise, and I was willing and wanted to see him helped, and it is not natural to suppose that I would have recommended him for a position that would have taken him from the line of his work and experiments as an electrician.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Would not you consider it advantageous to your company—did you not consider it any advantage to your company to have him introduce your telephones here? Did not you state as much?—A. I misunderstood the question if I did. The question, as I understood it, was whether or not it was any advantage to the company by his being an electrician here. I stated in reply that I considered it an advantage to have the telephones in the Capitol, but it would be a disadvantage to take so much of his time from us if he were employed in duties outside of his profession; that it would rather be a disadvantage all through. I considered him a deserving young man, and evidently a young man of considerable scientific acquirements, and I wanted to advance him as much as I could.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Would his appointment have advanced the interests of your company?—A. It would not, because his appointment would have placed him in the line of a new duty under Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, and I think he went to Mr. Edmunds about it, and it was concluded not to do it.

Q. Did Mr. Edmunds have any interest in any way in the matter?—A. He was President pro tem. of the Senate then.

Q. And the application was made to Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol?—A. Yes, sir; and he had a conference with Mr. Edmunds who was then President pro tempore of the Senate, and that is why Mr. Edmunds's name is mentioned. All these matters are done either under the direction or somewhat under the supervision or control of the President of the Senate.

Q. In the course of your practice, Mr. Attorney-General, have you had much business connected with litigation respecting patents?—A. I do not think I ever had a patent case in my life, and in investigating that matter, and if you will observe the language I used to Mr. Myers, it was entirely upon the question whether the Rogers invention was an infringement of the Bell patent.

Q. I have the opinion here, and if you care to hear it I will read it. The stenographer need not take it, as it is already in the record. (The opinion was read, to wit: Mr. Garland's letter to, and reply of, Mr. Myers.)—A. They called upon me for an opinion, and I stated at the time I wrote that, as some gentleman of the company was probably pressing this matter, or somebody else was, that they had better employ what we call an expert lawyer in these matters, and to have him examine and report upon it. My recollection is, though, independently, as I was not, of course, at the meetings, as I said before, but my impression is that they did employ Mr. Marble, I think is the name, former Commissioner of Patents, and he gave an opinion. I was unwilling that they should take my opinion in a matter of that sort and act upon it. I never had a patent case before.

Q. You have stated that you have made no examination of the Bell patent, as I recall your testimony.—A. That is upon its legality; its validity as a patent.

Q. Did you ever examine into this question of fraud?—A. Never at all; I never examined into it.

Q. I speak with reference to its having been obtained by fraud; if you ever gave an opinion as to its regularity?—A. If I did I have no impression of it, because I never looked into it at all.

Q. You stated also, in the opinion you gave, that in your judgment the Pan-Electric invention was not an infringement of the Bell patent?—A. The idea attempted to be conveyed was that the Rogers invention was an improvement which was patentable itself.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you recall at the time of writing the opinion that Mr. Bell claimed to have a patent upon what is termed his broad claim of the transmission of articulate speech by electricity?—A. I called that to mind, and my impression was that, so far as that claim was concerned, it could not be upheld. Of course, I do not want to be drawn into a discussion of the Bell matter.

Q. That is not the purpose. I am not going into that, and I merely ask the question—

A. (Interrupting.) Because I never assailed the Bell patent and do not want to do it now.

Q. Upon what grounds do you put it that the Bell patent could not be upheld?—A. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have no design to go into the controversy as to whether the Bell patent could be upheld.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the Attorney-General to say that there was no design in giving that opinion to state whether or not the Bell patent was valid.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see how this committee can decide as to the validity of the Bell patent.

Mr. EDEN. I did not understand that at the time the Myers opinion was given the Attorney-General claims that he knew anything of the merits of the Bell patent.

The WITNESS. The Bell patent claimed to have absorbed or rather to have taken possession of the whole field of electricity, and it is my opinion that that claim could not be upheld; that is about as near as I can state it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you give that opinion, knowing that fact at the time?—A. Yes, sir; that is, supposing that to be true.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you had any previous conversation with Mr. Myers?—A. None in the world. I think Mr. Looney brought Mr. Myers to me. At least I think it was through Mr. Looney's agency he came.

Q. Was there any agreement between you by which the opinion was drawn out?—A. None at all. It was drawn out at his request, as he said he wanted to know. There were a great many people at that time coming to me about it. Senator McDonald, who was not in the Senate at that time, came to see me, and brought a gentleman from Indiana in reference to it. Mr. Vest came to me about it, and I do not know how many others. Mr. Myers said he wanted to have my opinion, and I gave it to him in writing.

Q. Did you know at that time for what reason he asked the opinion?—A. No, sir; I did not. I did not ask him why he asked it.

Q. Did you know that he was arranging or undertaking to buy certain territorial rights under your company?—A. I did not. Mr. Looney being a stockholder in the company, and a gentleman connected with us, and this gentleman coming through him, I made the examination.

Q. I believe that Mr. Myers did make a contract with your company for certain States?—A. He may have. I do not recall it now, however. I did not see or know of a great many of these things which did take place.

Q. The contract fell through, however. You have spoken of the letter from Dr. Rogers to yourself, dated the 24th of May?—A. I think it was about that time, sir.

Q. What disposition did you make of that letter?—A. I simply put it away as a personal letter. I did not put it in the official files at all, for the reason I have stated.

Q. Have you looked at it recently?—A. No, sir; I have not seen it since I got it, I think. It was the latter part of May. I will not be certain of the date of it. I suppose you have it in the record.

Q. Yes, it is in the record on page 220. I think it better to call your attention to it. The stenographer need not take this. (Letter of Dr. Rogers, dated May 24, 1885, read.) Do you recall the articles referred to in that record?—A. No, sir; I do not. I did not read them. I put them away with the letter.

Q. The letter just read is the one you speak of, is it?—A. That is the letter.

Q. Did you notice before the receipt of this letter the publication of the articles?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any agency of any kind whatever in procuring the publication of those articles?—A. No, sir.

Q. From the time of your introduction to Dr. Rogers until the receipt of this letter in May, 1885, had you much intercourse with him?—A. From the time of which?

Q. From the time of your introduction to him in February, 1883, to the receipt of this letter in May, 1885, had you had any intimacy with Dr. Rogers?—A. No, sir; none, except our occasional meetings during the time. I would meet the stockholders and occasionally Dr. Rogers when he came to the committee room to see me. I do not think I had seen Dr. Rogers up to the date of that letter for a long, long time; I do not know how long. I think I met him, probably, some two or three weeks before Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated.

Q. It was stated in the original agreement executed in New York that an executive committee should be appointed, consisting of three persons, and the power was given to that committee to levy assessments to an amount not exceeding $150 upon each member—I am now speaking from recollection of the agreement—and was it your understanding that your liability to an assessment was limited to $150 in all?—A. No, sir; I never asked any question about it. When they came and asked for an assessment, I paid it if I had the money, and if I did not have it, I borrowed it. I paid several little assessments, and did not know that there was any limitation, and never asked anything about it. Mr. Young was treasurer, and he would either come to see me about it or send word that some money was needed—say, when $50 or $60 was required from each of us. I suppose, though, the papers would show; that the accounts of the treasurer would show it all.

Q. Do you recall the fact that Dr. Rogers was an applicant for appointment to a position in your Department?—A. Yes, sir; he was an applicant, I think, for what was called one of the assistant attorney's position. There are assistant attorneys-general and assistant attorneys. There were six of these assistant attorneys, and the doctor wanted one of those places, or the attorneyship for the District of Columbia.

Q. What are the duties of these assistant attorneys, and what are their powers?—A. Their duties differ. They are sometimes called upon to write opinions, to attend the different courts, the Court of Claims and other courts, to defend United States officers when they are sued or brought into court for any purpose. There are six of these assistant attorneys, with salaries ranging from $2,000 to $3,500 per annum.

Q. Do they act independently or under the direction of other officers?—A. They act under the direction of the Attorney-General, or of the Assistant Attorney-General, immediately over them. To answer that question correctly, they act under the direction of the Attorney-General, really.

Q. Did you make the appointment?—A. No, sir; I did not make the appointment. You see there were six of these places, and about six hundred applicants, I think, for them, though I will not be sure there were just that many, but there were not enough places to go around, however. "There were more pegs than holes," to use Mr. Lincoln's language. I did the best I could, however.

Q. Do you recollect the application itself; the written paper which was presented in the doctor's case?—A. I do not. I read it and looked at it, and filed it away. I noticed that he was very highly indorsed, and among the many thousands who had filed applications in the Department, probably none were more highly indorsed. I put it away with these other papers of applicants, and when I came to make my examination of the papers of these gentlemen, and made the appointments, the doctor did not happen to be one of them, and I never saw the papers after that. I think about the middle of October last he sent a letter up to the Department withdrawing his papers with a view, as I understood, to filing them for an appointment in some other Department.

Q. To go abroad, I think he stated here?—A. I think there is a memorandum in the office that shows that on the 19th of October he withdrew his papers.

Q. The papers have been produced here, and are in the record. They seem to have been signed by several of the gentlemen who were associated with you in this enterprise.—A. My recollection is—of course it will show for itself—that they were signed by Senator Harris, General Johnston, Mr. Atkins, and Mr. Looney, but I am not sure as to the latter.

Q. Had you had any previous conversations in regard to the doctor's application with any of these gentlemen?—A. No, sir. Senator Harris called on me on one occasion and said that he wished to present some papers with it. I said, "All right; they would be considered."

Q. In these cases, do you make the appointments yourself?—A. Yes, sir; these six appointments are made by the Attorney-General.

Q. Then you might have appointed him if you had wished?—A. Oh, yes; there was nothing to prohibit me from so doing. The six assistant attorneys in the Department now I appointed myself.

Q. Do you recall the fact of the application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen; I believe it is dated the 12th of July, 1885?—A. Yes, sir; I recall it; I spoke of it in my general statement.

Q. Had any other application been made to you for the use of the name of the United States in a suit of that kind, or prior to that time, by Dr. Rogers?—A. Those of Dr. Rogers and Mr. Van Benthuyzen were all. There were two up to that time. The Van Benthuyzen letter was received in my Department on the 14th; then I think it was either the last of July or the 1st of August that these gentlemen came on to see me. After that, again in the fall, Mr. Humphreys made application.

Q. Had you had an interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen prior to the date of this letter?—A. I do not think I ever saw him in my life before he came in the office that day. Mr. Young introduced him.

Q. What date was that?—A. As I said before it was about the last of July or the 1st of August. If I should have to state positively the time, I should say about the last days of July. It was about a week or nine days before we went to General Grant's funeral, and that took place on the 8th of August.

Q. Had not Mr. Van Benthuyssen called upon you early in July?—A. If he had, I do not recall it.

Q. Had he not called upon you before he addressed this letter to you?—A. I do not recall having seen him until he came with these gentlemen. If you do not know such is the fact, I will state that from the 5th of March until the latter part of July I had a great many callers, and of course I could not recall them all.

Q. I do not know about your particular office, but I have some knowledge of the general rush about that time. You say you do not recall having had an interview with him before the receipt of that letter from New York dated July 12, 1885?—A. I cannot recall it.

Q. Had you had any conversation with Mr. Casey Young? Do you recall a meeting with Mr. Casey Young prior to that date upon this subject?—A. Mr. Young came to see me only once before that, if I recollect rightly, to present a paper for, or to say a good word in behalf of, somebody in Tennessee for some office. I did not see him any more until he came with these gentlemen in the latter part of July.

Q. This is the letter you have spoken of as having been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and seems to have been referred on the 15th of July. Had you made any examination of the law prior to that time as to the right of the Attorney-General to authorize the use of the name of the United States in suits to avoid patents?—A. Do you mean the general law?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; I had. I had made an examination of it. You are not now speaking in reference to my own connection with the Pan-Electric Company?

Q. Were you familiar with the practice prior to that time with reference to the use of the name of the United States for the revocation of patents?—A. I examined into the subject; yes, sir.

Q. And you referred this letter to the Department of the Interior. Did you understand that to be the proper practice?—A. Yes, sir. When I first went into office I had an application very soon thereafter to vacate a patent for lands, and there had been a good deal said about this. I had a pretty stiff time with Mr. Brewster about a proceeding of this kind when I was in the Senate, about a contested patent for lands in Arkansas in which my home was situated, and I went through the subject then. An application was made to me for a similar procedure, and I looked into it and found, as I stated in this paper to the President, that the precedent was to refer to the Department where the matter originated, although in some instances it had not been done. That was, however, the weight of the precedents, as we say in the law, and I thought it a safe one, and a very good plan to follow, or in the case of application made to bring a suit on a postmaster's or collector's bond, I referred it to the Department from which the matter came. I always do that.

Q. Do you make references of that kind to Departments for the purpose of obtaining information as to the facts of the case, or for advice as to the propriety or need of bringing suit?—A. As a rule, for their information upon the subject; what facts they may have in their Department, and for such suggestions as they may see proper to make in the premises; because they are presumed to have fuller information, by reason of their position in the matter, than my Department could have, or anybody outside could have. That is why the papers are referred.

Q. Is it the practice of the other Departments, to refer such matters from one to the other for the purpose of suggestions in regard to matters the head of that Department may have under his control?—A. Now, as I say, and I hope the committee will not misunderstand me, it has been done frequently without taking that course, but I always refer these applications, whether they be for the vacating of a land patent, or a patent for invention, or for anything else, and I think it a safer practice, and a more prudent one for all sides.

Q. You call a fact to my mind which was brought out in the course of this investigation, that is to say, this Arkansas case, in which you seem to have been interested.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said that you had a private interest in it?—A. Yes, sir; my own property at Little Rock was involved.

Q. Were you acting in that case as a party in interest or as attorney?—A. I acted in both capacities. Other people who were interested employed me as attorney. I acted for myself and other people, too.

Q. Did you give an opinion in that case that it was improper to use the name of the United States for the revocation of a patent?—A. I did not give any opinion; I simply appeared before Mr. Brewster, and told him that I thought the facts in the case did not justify the bringing of suit.

Q. That was a patent for land?—A. Yes, sir; and the case is pending now in the Supreme Court, and the inquiry is, What am I to do when it comes up for argument? It is like this. It comes up next term, and the question is whether I am to resign my position and attend to the case in my own behalf and in behalf of the individuals interested, or whether I am, as Attorney-General, to work for the other side—the Government side.

Mr. EDEN. Or surrender your rights?

The WITNESS. Yes; I merely state this to show that these things are occurring constantly, or very often.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. My recollection is that the previous statement made it appear that you had given an opinion at the time you interviewed Mr. Brewster that this power did not exist, or that it was improper to exercise it, and that this was not in accordance with your course in regard to the telephone suits. I will ask you if you did anything in that respect?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you understand that the reference of questions of this kind is made to the other Departments for authority, or simply for information?—A. Simply for information and such suggestions as they may think proper to make in the premises, but the same are not binding or conclusive at all. It is what you would call "advisory."

Q. Then I conceive that if in a certain emergency in which proceedings were to be instituted, that the same could be done without waiting for that information?—A. That might be done. I do not dispute that, but in every instance coming before me, I refer the matter to the Department where the matter originates.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Isn't that practice followed for information only, so that a party litigant may not go into court with the judgment of any Department against him?—A. I say so; but by practice it may be enlarged a good deal.

Q. It seems to me that in this very matter, when it was before the Interior Department, there was given an expression of opinion against the Bell Telephone Company which might have been avoided?

Mr. RANNEY. On the contrary, I understand the Secretary of the Interior took particular pains to say he did not decide it.

The WITNESS. I never read what he decided. I know nothing about his decision.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you explained everything in reference to the interview that followed the presentation of Van Benthuyssen's letter, occurring some time about the 1st of August?—A. First of August or last of July. My better impression is that it was the last of July. It was about that time somewhere.

Q. Can you state your recollection of it in detail?—A. It is stated in that paper you have there, unless you want me to go over it again with my own explanation.

Q. You will favor us if you revert to it with your own explanations.—A. The gentlemen came into my office, headed by Mr. Young, and he introduced all of them. Mr. Gantt, who was in the party, I had known a long time in Memphis, and Mr. Von Briesen said, I think, "We have come to get the use of the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone." He did not mention who he meant by "we." He did not present any paper or application. I simply remarked, in reply, that I could not discuss it; I could not have anything to do with it. Then the question was put, with some little feeling, "Why cannot you?" I answered, "Because I was interested in a rival company, and a stockholder in that same company." Then some question was put as to the mode of procedure, and I declined to talk further. I answered that if I advised them as to the mode of procedure that it would commit me virtually as to the other question, and I said no more. Mr. Gantt or Mr. Young, I do not know which, said that the Attorney-General was right; that if he had made up his mind not to act in this matter he could not answer as to the method of procedure. They left, and I noticed that Mr. Van Benthuyssen was rather "ashy," as the saying is, and so was Mr. Von Briesen.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What do you mean by being "ashy;" generally fired up?—A. Yes, sir; or much excited.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you have more than one interview with Mr. Van Benthuyssen about that time?—A. No, sir; I do not think I ever had an interview with him after that time until he came here. After he was here, before the committee, he called to see me.

Q. I have a recollection of his saying that he called to see you a day previous, before Colonel Young and the others made that call upon you?—A. I do not recollect it if he did; he may have done so; there were a great many callers upon me about that time.

Q. Do you remember of Mr. Van Benthuyssen or Mr. Von Briesen making an application to you for leave to withdraw the letter which you directed to be filed in the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was Mr. Von Briesen. I think he came and asked me if he could withdraw that letter. I remarked that I had no objection, but it was not in my Department or under my control, and I could not furnish it to him.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Subsequently?—A. Yes, sir; afterwards. I think it was Mr. Von Briesen who asked if he could withdraw the letter, and I said I had no objection, but it was not in my Department, but in the Interior Department.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he state any reason for desiring to withdraw it?—A. He said that he found that there was a mistake; that there was no such law. I am not certain whether it was Mr. Von Briesen or Mr. Van Benthuyzen, but my recollection leans to Mr. Von Briesen as the man, and I think he said he found no such law.

Q. And the application was based on the assumption that there was such a law?—A. His letter was prefaced in that way with considerable particularity.

Q. You say, then, he informed you that he learned there was no such law passed?—A. Yes, sir; and he said he wanted to withdraw the letter. I told him I had no objection, but it was out of my possession, as I had sent the original letter to the Interior Department.

Q. Do you recall conversations with any person connected with any of these telephone companies between that date and the date of your departure for Arkansas?—A. No, sir; and I believe that I may say the same with reference to any other date. That was the last telephone talk I had, and the thing went out of my mind after that as completely as if I had never devoted any thought to it until I got this dispatch from the Times-Democrat.

Q. At what time did you determine to make your trip home?—A. I determined about the middle of July, I think it was.

Q. And did not depart until the 27th of August?—A. Not until the 27th of August. I fixed on the 27th of August six weeks before I left.

Q. Did you make that fact known to the parties connected with you in these matters?—A. The officers of my Department and my chief clerk knew it; the President knew it, and my family knew it.

Q. Did you say in your general statement that the Solicitor-General was absent and returned about the middle of August?—A. Yes, sir; I think he returned about the middle of August. He went up to Canada in June and remained there about two months, getting back, I think, about the middle of August.

Q. Did his absence in any way affect your purpose of going to Arkansas, or affect the time of your departure?—A. Early in July I began to think he was not coming back for some time, and I went to Mr. Maury, who was the First Assistant Attorney-General, and told him that he would have to act in my absence if Mr. Goode did not return before I left, and that if he wanted to go off he had better go at once. He went down to White Sulphur Springs, and Mr. Goode got back eight or nine days before I left.

Q. Did you give any intimation to any person, whether connected with the telephone companies or not, that application might be made to Mr. Goode in your absence to bring this suit in the name of the United States?—A. Never in the world, and under the law it was not necessary for me to be present in such an event.

Q. Had you before the return of Mr. Goode, or at any time, had any conversation with him in reference to the application which had been made to you? Did you mention to him that that application had been made to you to bring suit?—A. After I came back.

Q. I mean before you went away?—A. No, sir; I never said a word to him.

Q. Between the date of his return and the date of your departure, did you have any conversation with him with respect to any application that had been made, or any probable application to be made?—A. No, sir; I never alluded to it.

Q. Did you have any talk with him about telephone matters at all?—A. I never mentioned telephone to him until I got back in October, when this suit was pending in Memphis.

Q. I suppose you are aware that it has been stated in the papers that your visit to Arkansas was arranged that you might be absent at the time when application was made?—A. No, sir; I never read anything in the papers about it except what the Post contains with reference to this matter.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. If you got your ideas from the Post, you got an erroneous impression. Whatever they have reported in reference to this matter they have reported wrongly.—A. I did not report that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That has been stated in the newspapers frequently?—A. Very likely; I have not read three hundred and thirty-three lines about the whole matter. I have heard a good deal about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that your trip to Arkansas had no reference to this suit whatever?—A. No, sir, none at all; none in the world, because I had made up my mind to go there, and arranged my business six weeks before I left here. The Cabinet officers had all gone away, I believe, except Mr. Vilas and myself.

Q. Was it customary to give Mr. Goode directions or instructions as to what he should do in your absence?—A. Not at all.

Q. I believe you have stated that he was an independent officer, and acted according to his own discretion during your absence?—A. Yes, sir, just as independent as I am when I am here.

Q. Did I understand you to say that he acts as Attorney-General during your absence from the Department?—A. Yes, sir. In case of any disability upon my part, the statute says that he shall act as Attorney-General.

Q. Does he act in your stead while you are actually in the Department?—A. I may be there and still be disabled from working, and in that event he would act as Attorney-General. He would have to do it under the law.

Q. Notwithstanding your presence in the Department?—A. Of course, if I was laboring under disability, such as having an interest in the matter or physically unable to work.

Q. And if you had remained in the city of Washington, and this application had been made, and while you were in the office, would it have gone to you or to him?—A. Of course I expected these gentlemen, when I had declined to do anything in the matter when they had requested action, to go to Mr. Goode with it. I did not tell them what, in my judgment, they could do, or could not do, as I declined to do anything at all in the matter.

Q. And do you say that this practice is in accordance with the laws?—A. Yes, sir; and you will see that the precedents state, in the paper submitted by me to the President, something in this respect. Some of these papers were referred to the Solicitor-General, and some were not.

Q. And do I understand that your custom has been for some years past, for the past eight or ten years, to spend the month of September in Arkansas?—A. Yes, sir; for the past ten years, except, possibly, September of 1883, and before I came to the Senate it was my custom to be about that time, in the month of September, hunting at my place.

Q. How far is your place from the town? I see in the papers it is known as "Hominy Hill."—A. Yes, sir; Hominy Hill. The papers are right about that.

Q. How far are you from town?—A. I am about 15 miles from Little Rock, and 17 miles from anywhere else.

Q. Had you any communication with anybody while hunting at your place?—A. Only occasionally during the time I was there, and then when a gentleman or two came from Little Rock. I left word that no papers or letters, except from my family, should be forwarded to me. I would not have them on the place because I went there to be out of the way of papers and letters, and company. I instructed the chief clerk to send me no letters from the Department.

Q. Did you not hear through the newspapers, or in any way, of the bringing of this suit until your return to Washington?—A. I never heard a word until the 27th of September, Sunday morning, about an hour after I got to Little Rock. A man had started out with a dispatch to Hominy Hill and gotten lost, but found me afterwards at Little Rock and handed me this dispatch. I answered that dispatch as I stated in the paper, and heard no more about the matter until I came here the 1st of October and saw the President. He told me then that the papers had been complimenting me considerably on the matter.

Q. There seems to have been a suit brought in Saint Louis against the Pan-Electric Company, or a local company organized there under the Pan-Electric organization.—A. I know nothing about that, except this: They wrote to me or tried to get me to go and attend to that suit. I told them I could not go, and did not go. I never knew what became of it. I think Senator Harris and Mr. Young applied to me to attend to it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you write a letter about it?—A. I wrote a letter to Mr. Adreon there, giving a general idea about it, but I told him I could not go to the place, and did not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. On page 319 of this record of testimony it is stated as November 10, 1884. The suit seems to have been brought by the Bell Company against the licensee of the Pan-Electric Company. I will read this to you.

The WITNESS. I have it here.

Q. Read it and see if it suggests anything that you would like to speak about.

Mr. OATES. That suit was not brought, was it?

The CHAIRMAN. It was a threatened suit

The WITNESS. I recall now something more about it. When the suit was brought, Senator Harris and Mr. Young wanted me to go there, and as it was impossible for me to go, I wrote this letter to Mr. Adreon, simply blocking out the character of the contest so far as the Pan-Electric was concerned, in a very indefinite way. I remember of them being anxious for me to go, and that I could not go, and wrote that letter for the purpose of them making out of it what they could.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of the letter?

The WITNESS. November 10, 1884.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The Attorney-General's letter is dated November 10, and the letter of Mr. Adreon is dated the 13th. Was that application made to you by Colonel Young and Senator Harris as counsel for the Pan-Electric?—A. Yes, sir; they thought, I suppose, that it was incumbent upon me, as counsel for the company, to go down there and look after the suit.

Q. I see a letter from you to one H. Gardes, dated September 21, 1884, and written from Little Rock. Do you recall that letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was H. Gardes?—A. He was a gentleman, if I recollect, who lived in New Orleans. He was a merchant there and he had lived in Arkansas. That letter was written from my place in the country and sent to Little Rock to be mailed. He was an old merchant in Arkansas, and I think after the war he went to New Orleans, and if I recollect that letter properly, he wanted to know about the Pan-Electric Company—the invention—and wanted my views and advice about it.

Q. That letter was written from Hominy Hill, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And dated at Little Rock?—A. Yes, sir; because that was the post-office from which it was sent.

Q. I will read it. (The letter was read).—A. That is to Mr. Gardes, is it?

Q. Yes, the Gardes letter. Do you remember how that letter was brought out?—A. Mr. Gardes wrote to me, and I think I answered his letter. He said that he and some of his friends were contemplating investing in this matter, and he desired my opinion. I knew Mr. Gardes many years ago.

Q. In what relation did he stand to any of these telephone companies?—A. None that I know of. I did not keep the letter he sent me. "He and some friends," I think, is his language. I speak from memory. He spoke of he and some friends looking into the invention which had been brought to their attention, and if it looked well he thought of investing in it.

Q. I find that a letter was written to the same gentleman by General Johnston on the 22d of September.—A. Very frequently gentlemen came to me here in this city to know about this matter, and I often referred them to Dr. Rogers and son, and sometimes to Senator Harris, as the men who attended to the minutiae, and they looked more into the details of this matter than I did. I do not know whether there were any records of that sort, but I think it possible there may be for I wrote some of that character.

Q. I will ask you the question whether at the time your name was mentioned in connection with the Attorney-Generalship any suggestion was made of any possible advantage to this Pan-Electric enterprise in case of your appointment?—A. Never in the world; I never heard it hinted; I never heard it suggested, and never dreamed of it myself.

Q. Have you in any case used or attempted to use your office as Senator or your office as Attorney-General to further the interests of the Pan-Electric or any other telephone company?—A. Never at all, sir.

Q. I understand that you say you have always regarded this as a legitimate enterprise?—A. Oh, perfectly, sir; perfectly. I could not see anything wrong in it, and do not yet see anything in it that should prevent a Senator or Member of the House from going into it.

Q. You say that there are other persons holding the same position that you held when you went into this who are interested in enterprises of this kind as stockholders?—A. Yes, sir. There are in the Senate and House railroad presidents, who are constantly called upon to legislate on railroad grants, and they are stockholders in roads that are interested in this legislation. There are others who have stock in seal fur companies, wood pulp, and I don't know what all.

Q. Did you ever undertake to legislate in respect to telephone companies?—A. No, sir, I never did. Never was as a lawyer in any way connected with them, but as a Senator, of course, I have spoken and voted on them and others.

Q. You are familiar with the procedure of courts, and I will ask you what is the practice of judges when questions come before the court in which they are interested. In the first place take cases in which they are interested as parties or as counsel.—A. As the saying is, they sit out; that is, they do not hear the case. The judge may be interested as a party or counsel in the case below; when it came up to the court above, to the Supreme Court, he would not hear the argument, and the other eight judges would have to decide the case. That course is very often taken.

Mr. RANNEY. That is a well-known practice.

The CHAIRMAN. My object in asking the question was to show that there would be some difficulty in filling judicial positions if persons largely engaged in practice, or who were interested in matters which might probably come before the courts for decision, were held thereby disqualified for office, or if they were bound to surrender their interests to qualify them for appointment.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; it would be. Now, most of the States have a law giving authority to the governors to appoint special judges in cases where judges are disqualified from acting on this account; but here, in the Supreme Court, the judge sits out; he retires or steps aside; one case in point, I will remark, is that of Justice Matthews, who retired when, at the present term, a case came before the court in which he had been interested as counsel before his elevation to the Supreme Bench.

Q. A gentleman engaged in a judicial position is very likely to have been engaged at some time in important litigation; is not that so?—A. Oh, yes, sir; until they selected me for Attorney-General they had never selected a man unknown in the courts.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. In questioning you about these matters, I hope you will not consider my questioning you for any other purpose than to get at the facts in this case. I do not wish you to understand it in any other light.—A. Anything in the world that you will ask me, Mr. Ranney, I will be glad to answer.

Q. The chairman called your attention to the original contract here, and if I understand it, you regarded the stock you received in the light of a purchase, and not as a gift?—A. Not as a purchase. It is difficult to define it by any one word. If you state the facts I can tell better what it is. Six or seven of us formed the corporation. The invention had no utility at that time, and we formed and organized and levied assessments, paid them and issued our stock, and to the extent of the assessments being a consideration, you might call it a purchase.

Q. I wish to get your ideas of it. I understand the matter, and as it has been gone over a great deal, I do not wish to spend much time on it. Your associates—five of them—each owned a tenth interest in these patent rights, if I understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was all owned previously by the patentee, Mr. Rogers? Do you understand it so?—A. Yes, sir; that is, I think so, if I recollect well. However, Mr. Young or Mr. Rogers himself can tell you about that.

Q. And he not only conveyed what he had, but what he might have, so that you understood that each of the five associates had a tenth interest in such patents and in such improvements as he made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do I understand that you paid the Rogers for that tenth interest directly to him, or agreed to do so?—A. No, sir; not to him directly.

Q. And all you did agree to do was to agree that all of you should be liable to an assessment. Let me get the exact language. "And it is also agreed," &c. I find this on page 10 of the record—and this part of that clause is the part I want to call your attention to particularly: "And any expense incurred for the doing of the same, may assess pro rata upon the members of the company to the amount of $150 each, and no greater sum shall be assessed without authority from a majority of the members." Now, did you not understand that this assessment was to be made pro rata upon your five associates, and that Dr. Rogers was to retain the other fifth?—A. That may be, but I won't be positive about it. But you know that assessment was made from time to time beyond that. I think the assessment first and last amounted to about $400.

Q. "But no greater sum shall be assessed without authority from a majority of the members." Now, what was made beyond that was to be paid pro rata by the parties in interest, was it not?—A. That is my understanding.

Q. And whatever you paid after that $150, and whatever the others paid beyond that, was conditional, and went to the mutual benefit of all the parties in interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that went to benefit the interest you purchased as well as to benefit the interest of others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that as a matter of fact I would like to know whether in that state of things you would not regard the transfer of one-tenth interest to you as a gift?—A. No, sir, I do not; because I am out about $400, or not quite that, for my assessments.

Q. That was an assessment for the benefit of the company, was it not?—A. Yes, sir, and myself included.

Q. Yes and the selling rights you got back added more. I only want your ideas about it. From your examination you made of this and from the fact that you formed a corporation with a capital stock of $5,000,000, and from these expressed opinions of yours you probably had a pretty good idea of this thing, I should judge?—A. Well, sir, I only examined the question simply as to the infrigibility, so to speak, of the two patents, of the two inventions. Now, as to the details of the work of the company and all that, it has been stated, I think, by Mr. Young and others. I gave very little attention to it.

Q. I see from your letter to Mr. Gardes, of September, 1884, that you say, "I have given much time and attention to it and my deliberate opinion is that it is one of the best inventions of the day. It is a decided improvement on everything in this line," &c.—A. The first part of that is based upon examinations we had made. It was pronounced by gentlemen who had seen and tested the invention that it was by far the best instrument known to communicate sound. The second part is based entirely upon the question of infringement.

Q. If you had not regarded it valuable I suppose you would have hardly paid your money into a corporation with an inflated capital?—A. I do not think I should put it in a corporation at all if I did not regard the enterprise as being of value.

Q. I did not suppose you would.—A. We had several examinations made by gentlemen who claimed to be experts.

Q. I see that General Johnston, on the 22d of September, writes in a similar strain. I will read what he says. [Portion of letter read.] I suppose that you were aware of the fact which he states there?—A. I do not know that I was aware of it in detail. He went himself, I think, down to Richmond to make a test, and I think he and Senator Harris went to New York and possibly Boston to test and exhibit the invention. I think General Johnston went down himself, although I am not sure about that.

Q. I see in your letter to Mr. Myers, which has been read to you, and which I shall not read again, you speak in it of having examined the question of infringement.—A. Entirely. That is really all I did. Its wording may have gone a little beyond that, but that is what it was intended to cover.

Q. But you would hardly write that without determining what claims were embraced in the letters patent of Professor Bell?—A. Of course the examination discarded the third or fourth claim of Bell, I forget which, which claim covered the entire field of electricity, so to speak.

Q. You are aware, I suppose, as a matter of course, that Professor Bell claims to have discovered the art or method of transmitting articulate speech by mean of electricity, and that the appliances are described in his patent.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing.) The appliances that lay at the base of it?—A. That was either classified under the third or fifth claim, which, according to my reading of the decisions of the courts, could not be maintained. I do not want to give the reasons for my thinking so here.

Q. I do not propose to go into the investigation of the patents here. I do not think it within the scope indicated by the chairman; but if I understand the facts as I learned them from these records, Rogers did not invent the method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity. He did not claim to have discovered that.—A. I think not. He claimed to have made an invention by which that principle could be used, and which invention was superior to anything that had up to that time been discovered.

Q. Was not that an infringement of what is called the microphone?—A. No, sir; my recollection is now that it went beyond that, but I should have to look over my papers to tell that exactly.

Q. You did participate in the organizing of the corporation in New York. I have seen the articles of association drawn up in the name of New York, and the same has been altered to New Jersey in your handwriting?—A. I recollect that. I will state further that although I did not attend the meetings Senator Harris often had proxies to act for me.

Q. I see that you signed the agreement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think the name New York has been changed in pencil to New Jersey in your handwriting?—A. That is, the changes are in my handwriting.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. That is so.

Q. I do not know whether you drew the original articles of association?—A. The original was not drawn by me, but I recollect this change in pencil was made by me.

Q. I suppose that the licensees under your company were to use your instruments only, and you did not convey to them any of your electrical patents?—A. That is my impression.

Q. And were you aware they were selling territorial rights to different parties?—A. Yes, sir; they were selling them to different localities; I do not remember now just where, as I did not keep an account of these matters.

Q. You were simply selling what you call a license to use your instruments within certain territories?—A. Territorial rights.

Q. And I believe your company was to furnish the instruments?—A. That is my impression.

Q. And you furnished the instruments.

The CHAIRMAN. I think in some cases the parties undertook to furnish them themselves.

Mr. RANNEY. But as a general rule, Senator, you furnished them to be used within certain territory. Were you aware that these contracts provided for the formation of corporations, and that the parent company was to take their part in the stock of these corporations?—A. To be candid with you, I do not think I ever saw one of the contracts.

Q. You had nothing to do with that?—A. No, sir; further than to advise from time to time as counsel.

Q. How far did you really act as attorney?—A. To the extent of examining papers they brought me occasionally. They brought me a copy of this bill from Baltimore, upon which I wrote a letter to Mr. Colston, I believe. Dr. Rogers sent me the papers in which Mr. Brown and Mr. Looney were interested to examine. Governor Harris brought me papers about other matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean from Baltimore or from Philadelphia?

The WITNESS. Philadelphia, I meant to say.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see that you met them at your committee room. Did they meet you in your committee room?—A. We never had a meeting of the company in the committee room.

Q. I mean individuals with whom you transacted business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not mean to intimate they had an office in your committee room.—A. No, sir; they came there to consult with me and to talk over matters.

Q. Do you think of anything which you have not stated, where you acted as counsel or performed any service?—A. I do not remember any, sir.

Q. I see in your letter to Mr. Myers that you refer to certain cases that had been decided—the Dolbear—some three I believe.—A. Yes, sir; those cases decided in the districts.

Q. Were you aware that in all of these cases the court had maintained the validity of the Bell patent?—A. Yes, as against those competing, as I construed it.

Q. And in all those cases the question came up as to whether Mr. Bell was really the inventor of the method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity?—A. My recollection now is that these decisions simply went no further, as the Supreme Court has frequently said it could not go, than the simple one at issue as to the test between these competing or rival companies with the Bell.

Q. Please state whether in each one of these cases the question was not distinctly and directly raised and expressly decided that Mr. Bell was the inventor of the mode or method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity.—A. I will not be positive about that. I do not recall distinctly, but if such had been the case, with my view of the law, I should not have regarded it, as I believe the Supreme Court would have reversed it.

Q. Are you aware that Judge Lowell in Massachusetts in the Dolbear case, and the judges in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, likewise Judge Wallace, of New York, had sustained that patent?—A. No, sir; I did not so read their opinions to go to that extent. I simply read them as going to the extent of deciding as between these competing companies.

Q. That they were infringers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you aware that all these parties sued were infringers of the Bell telephone?—A. Oh, yes, as construed by the courts in those cases.

Q. Now, were you not aware of the trial in New York in the Drawbaugh case, when arguments were made by Senator Edmunds and others during the year 1884, and decided in 1884?—A. I was aware of it, but never saw the decision. The decision was never brought to my attention that I am aware. Pending the case Mr. Edmunds, in the committee room that I have spoken of, showed me the testimony as far as it had gone. It made four or five printed volumes, and I read a good deal of it, though I do not think I read the decision. But I saw and heard that Drawbaugh lost the case, and I have seen the case on the docket here in the Supreme Court.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was Mr. Edmunds interested in that case?—A. Yes, sir; he was attorney for Mr. Drawbaugh.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The trial occupied two or three years. Are you aware that these cases which I have alluded to were pending on the docket of the Supreme Court here at Washington?—A. I cannot say I am aware of it. I heard it suggested but never looked at the docket to ascertain it as a fact. I saw it stated on the outside, but I did see the Drawbaugh case on the docket.

Q. Is it true that the real thing litigated in these cases was the question whether Mr. Bell invented the art or method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity?—A. I never understood it from the cases I read, according to my recollection, that the issue, as I understood it, was upon his broad claim of transmitting articulate sound in that way, but rather upon the particular inventions in question being infringed by these competing companies.

Q. You are aware that the Bell company was suing and prosecuting alleged infringements, I suppose?—A. I knew that.

Q. And that it had been going on for some years?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Were you aware that the Bell telephone patents had been obtained ten years and over?—A. The first telephone I ever saw was the Bell telephone up here in the committee room. Mr. Gardner Hubbard took me to see it. That was in 1878, I think.

Q. I think the letters patent are dated March, 1876?—A. It was there on exhibition in the committee room.

Q. I am not speaking of what you saw, but of the knowledge of the patent having been obtained that far back.

The CHAIRMAN. That was seven years before the formation of this company.

Mr. RANNEY. It is over ten years now.

Q. Were you aware, Senator, that in July, 1885, the Bell Company claimed that the company in which you had an interest were infringing?—A. Yes, sir; I guess so.

Q. There was a controversy in Saint Louis about it when you wrote the letter to Mr. Adreon, was there not?—A. Yes, sir; and in Philadelphia, too, I believe.

Q. In the western district?—A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. Were you not aware of the controversy that occurred down in Tennessee when circulars were issued and claims made?—A. No, sir; I had no information of that.

Q. Were you not informed of that?—A. I was not informed of that.

Q. If I understand you, Mr. Garland, the only interview that you recall having had with these parties, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Casey Young, and others, was at the time which you have already spoken of.—A. Yes, sir; the latter part of July or August, I think it was.

Q. And you recall only one interview?—A. One interview.

Q. Are you positive as to that?—A. Oh, yes; as I said before, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or his attorney, Mr. Von Briesen, came to me afterwards to withdraw that letter they had filed.

Q. You are positive there were only two interviews, one when Colonel Young came with Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Von Briesen, and—A. (Interposing) And Mr. Gantt.

Q. And subsequently you remember Mr. Von Briesen coming here to ask for the withdrawal of that letter?—A. Either Mr. Van Benthuyzen or Mr. Von Briesen.

Q. Are you quite sure that when this request was made for the withdrawal of the letter only one man came?—A. That is my recollection, that only one came. There may have been more, but of course, as I say, I was visited about that time by so many that I cannot recall very positively all the people who called.

Q. You have narrated the conversations upon this subject, first in your own way in a general statement, and then you repeated the same at the request of the chairman, but I will ask if in any of these interviews these gentlemen did not tell you what they proposed to do?—A. No, sir; because I cut the conversation short. I did not want to hear any more about it. I had explored the field to my satisfaction, and I found that I could not go into it directly or indirectly, and because I would not hear anything more about the matter I recollect that one of the gentlemen manifested a good deal of impatience.

Q. Who, Van Benthuyzen?—A. Well, he spoke of his interest being surrendered.

Q. Did he say anything to you about what the judge had done in Pennsylvania?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't he say that they had all been bought up?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke about his getting ashy. Do you mean that he fired up?—A. He said that his interest had been sunk out of sight because of my interest in a rival company. The conversation was a very short one, and if he said anything of that sort it escaped my mind entirely, because I had previously made up my mind to have nothing to do with the matter in any shape.

Q. Did Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington call on you the day before the time you describe, and have an interview with you?—A. If they did it has escaped my recollection.

Q. And did you not then tell them you had decided to have nothing to do with it?—A. If I told them anything I told them that.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of C. P. Huntington?—A. No, sir; I know C. W. Huntington, of Boston, Mass.

Q. I think this is C. P.; C. W. I know myself.—A. If anything of that kind occurred I do not remember, because I had made up my mind to cut it short, and I did cut the interview extremely short.

Q. Then you have no recollection of Van Benthuyzen coming in twice?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not remember of their coming in and asking you to do what you had refused the day previous to do, when you said you would have nothing to do with the matter? Do you remember their coming the next day and repeating the request?—A. I do not recall it.

Q. Do you think that could be so?—A. It seems to me I would recollect it. But if it did occur I do not remember it.

Q. Did Mr. Von Briesen say, in the interview held with you and Mr. Young and others, what course they would subsequently take?—A. They commenced to talk about the procedure in such cases, and I said "I cannot hear you upon that point any more than the other, and I am not going to make any suggestions." Then Mr. Young or Colonel Gantt, I do not know which, spoke up and said "Mr. Garland is right; he cannot talk of the case in any of its aspects after having refused to have anything to do with the matter."

Q. Do you recollect if they said that they concluded to start the procedure before the district attorney of Tennessee?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure they suggested no such thing?—A. They said nothing to me about it.

Q. In that interview, did either one of them tell you, or intimate to you, that they would change their course of procedure, and that they were going to go before the district attorney of Tennessee with the suit?—A. No, sir; if they did, I did not hear it.

Q. Do you understand that a district attorney has any authority for instituting a suit of this kind in the first instance?—A. Not directly.

Q. Does that come within the province of his duties?—A. Not under the law as I read it.

Q. It should come directly to the Department of Justice here, should it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of a case where a district attorney instituted a proceeding of that kind, before this case?—A. No, sir; not without permission of the Department of Justice first.

Q. And if they had mentioned that to you, as familiar as you are with this case, you think you would remember it, as I understand you?—A. I think I would remember that; but I will say that as soon as I found out what they had come for, I made up my mind to cut the interview as short as possible, which I did.

Q. Was it not in that interview that Mr. Von Briesen or Mr. Van Benthuyssen, I mean when Mr. Young and these other gentlemen were there, spoke to you in reference to withdrawing that application for suit, and did withdraw it?—A. No, sir; I think it was afterwards that they withdrew it. I am pretty sure of that.

Q. I am not questioning you upon this point for the purpose of testing your recollection, as a man can often be mistaken in reference to details. I will ask, do you feel confident that if any man came to ask to withdraw that application, or consent to withdraw it, he came alone?—A. I am pretty clear in that. You probably know that in calling upon the heads of Departments there are sometimes four or five men standing apart in the room who may come together, or there may be that number in the room each one of whom is interested in different business, and I only pay attention to the man who does the talking, and my impression is that there was but one person who came upon this business, though they may have been two, so far as I was concerned. I paid attention only to the one who addressed me.

Q. Was that application made some day before or subsequent to that date of this interview with Mr. Young and these other gentlemen?—A. It was subsequent to this interview with these four gentlemen, is my recollection.

Q. When they insisted upon your acting and fired up when you objected to do so, although you were Attorney-General, did you not say to them that I cannot act, and the proper man for you to apply to is Solicitor-General Goode?—A. I did not say that.

Q. If you felt it your duty to act in this manner, unless you labored under some disability, when these people insisted that you had a right to act as Attorney-General, and your knowing that in such event as the Attorney-General laboring under any such disability, that the duty devolved upon the Solicitor-General, would not the question naturally arise why did you not say so?—A. Yes, sir; but as I did not want to be concerned directly or indirectly in it, but having examined into the question on account of the Van Benthuyssen application and other applications before me, I had to make up my mind in reference to it, and I found from the precedents that it was not safe for me to say or suggest where they should make application.

Q. It seems to me that the proper remark for an officer to use when he is applied to by gentlemen who insist upon their right as citizens to have suit brought, when the officer applied to labored under a disability, would be for him or you at least to say under those circumstances, that there is an officer known as the Solicitor-General who acts while I am disabled from so doing.—A. There are precedents to that effect in the office, but all of these gentlemen who called upon me being lawyers, I supposed they knew their duty in the premises.

Q. And did not they say they would have to go to Mr. Goode?—A. No, sir; but they went out looking very mad.

Q. Did anybody get mad but Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. None of them seemed mad from what they said, but they all looked so.

Q. Was Casey Young mad?—A. Casey did not look pleased; he did no talking, however, but simply introduced these gentlemen to me.

Q. Did not he insist that the parties in interest had a right to such a suit in the name of the Government?—A. Mr. Young did not open his mouth after he introduced these gentlemen.

Q. You and Colonel Young have always been on good terms, have you not?—A. Excellent.

Q. You and he were interested in the same company as codirectors, and he knew that the application had been made by Dr. Rogers in May to bring suit, and did he never speak to you on the subject between May and the time of this interview?—A. Never; as I said awhile ago, he came to see me about a Tennessee appointment; he wanted some young man down there appointed to a position, and I never saw any more of him from that time until meeting these four gentlemen.

Q. I understand these parties remained here some days; did you see them again?—A. No, sir.

Q. And did they not call on you?—A. No, sir.

Q. They did not call on you; did you not call on them or either of them?—A. Neither of them; no sir. Now, I will say here that it is due to all sides in this matter, inasmuch as this thing has taken such a wide range, that after I declined to take any hand in the matter, a number of gentlemen, and some very prominent ones, wrote me letters—legal gentlemen—insisting that notwithstanding my connection with this Pan-Electric Company it was my duty to have brought this suit. Some of the most prominent men in the country wrote me to that effect. I should not think it proper to go into this if it had not been for the wide range this investigation has taken; I only state the fact to show the fires I was between.

Q. I object to the witness putting in other people's opinions. I will ask you if, inasmuch as you are interested in this matter, and therefore laboring under a disability, a man came to you to make application for a suit of this kind, which you believed you had a right to order by law in your discretion—to give the use of the name of the United States to this company to prosecute its suit—if you considered it improper in you to say that you were disabled under the circumstances and could not attend to it, and under the law the Solicitor-General had taken your office?—A. It would not be improper, but there was a question of delicacy in the matter.

Q. Do you not think it was, a little?—A. It might have been. But I was like Lorenzo's man, I would be damned if I did and be damned if I did not.

Q. It seems that on the 12th of July Mr. Van Benthuyzen addressed you a communication making this charge against the Bell Telephone Company, and stating his reasons why the Bell Telephone patent was void, and pressed upon you the propriety of instituting proceedings in the name of the United States. Now, immediately after the receipt of that letter, on the 14th of July, you referred the communication. Now, you had presented to you, on the 12th of July, an application to bring suit, and instead of acting upon it you referred it to the Secretary of the Interior for examination and reply?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was there any difference between that and the renewed application on the 28th or 29th of July for the same thing?—A. The difference was very striking, as I have already explained. Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter was based upon a law which he said had passed Congress. I made a search for that law and could not find it. Other gentlemen had spoken to me about the law, not in connection with this matter particularly, but in connection with patents generally, and for fear that it might be hidden away somewhere in an appropriation bill, I referred this letter to the Interior Department so that it might go to the Commissioner of Patents, and he might find out whether or not there was any such law as that. Another thing, I referred this Van Benthuyzen letter to the Department where it should have gone originally. After this letter was sent there I took up the whole subject, having the Rogers letter before me in addition to this letter, to see what I should do in the case of future applications. I went through the law and satisfied myself that I ought not only not to bring suits, but not to forward or refer any more papers about a suit.

Q. You say in your letter to him that the matter had been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, where it should have been presented originally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you observe that you did not raise any objection in that to acting on the ground you last stated?—A. I did not, for the reason I have stated two or three times heretofore.

Q. And you did not refuse to act upon it to that extent?—A. I sent the letter to the Interior Department. I often send letters to Departments where they belong when they come to me improperly.

Q. Do I understand you that it is the rule or practice in your Department to refer to the Interior Department all letters in respect to matters arising in the latter Department?—A. I think it the better plan to refer them to the Department where the act originates, although the majority of cases are the other way. They are generally referred to the proper Department for suggestion. It is customary for the other Departments in cases of this kind to communicate with the Department of Justice for instructions, &c., in the premises. My idea is, however, that in cases of this kind the communications should be addressed to the Department in the first instance where the act originates.

Q. To the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir; or whatever Department the matter comes out of.

Q. Has not the universal practice been to refer them to the Department of Justice?—A. I state that the practice has been different, though I believe the correct practice is to save all this round-about work, all this circumlocution.

Q. In this letter of Mr. Van Benthynsen he says, "I respectfully request that you institute suit," &c. Now, I would like to ask you, if you have no objection, whether there would have been any difficulty in instituting a suit, or allowing one to be instituted in the name of the United States against these parties, under existing law, independent of this statute referred to, even if it were a law, on that application?—A. That would depend entirely upon the phraseology of the law. For the reason of not having discovered it, and having my attention directed to it two or three times by different parties, I referred the letter for the purpose of ascertaining if the Commissioner of Patents knew of the existence of such a law. He says, "It is made incumbent." If he used this phrase as being in the law, there would have been no discretion on my part, and this application would never have gone to the Interior Department.

Q. If a letter came to you asking for a suit, and alleging ground sufficient to justify a suit in the name of the United States to vacate a patent, do you, or not, think on that application a suit might be granted, although the writer had referred to a statute as authority for it, if the law, independent of the statute, permitted it?—A. Oh, yes; I have no doubt of that. The idea is this, if I must go over the ground again somewhat to explain the motive—

Q. (Interposing). I do not mean to question your motive.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be better to allow the Attorney-General to make the statement.

The WITNESS. I had been asked two or three times respecting this law, and several parties said that such a law had been passed. I made a searching investigation with a view to settling this in my mind, not alone upon the subject of telephones, but generally. As I said before, I could find no such law; but after reading that letter, which was well written and very positive, I thought certainly there must be such a statute, though I had failed to find it. Therefore, I sent the letter to this Department, as I stated before, and as Mr. Van Benthynsen said "incumbent upon you," I was more anxious than ever to learn if there was such a law.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did it occur to you that the statute might prescribe a certain method of procedure in such cases?—A. Yes, sir; and I had been looking to see what it did prescribe.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you not have the statutes in your office?—A. Yes, and I searched them from top to bottom, as the saying is.

Q. And you found no such law?—A. Found no such law.

Q. But you supposed that such a law had been passed and was not embraced in the public volume of statutes?—A. No, sir. The difficulty was that I thought there might have been a statute passed which I had not found, and inasmuch as you have made the suggestion I will illustrate it. I remember that a law had passed Congress punishing Indians for committing crimes on their reservations—of one Indian against another. A case involving that act had been referred to me, and after considerable search we gave an opinion that there was no such law in existence. Finally, about a month and a half afterward, when I happened to be looking at the Indian appropriation bill, this law was down at the bottom of one of the sections. The law was stuck down there, but I did not find it, although I had made several searches for it previously.

Q. Did you suppose the Interior Department would know better what laws had been passed by Congress than the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir; but I supposed the Commissioner of Patents might contribute something to my search.

Q. I see that your reference of the communication is a general one.—A. Precisely. If it had not been for that first part of the letter I would not have made any reference at all.

Q. You were a member of the Senate on December 11, 1883; and I understand that you were aware that such a bill was pending in the Senate.—A. Yes, sir; and as I stated, Mr. Platt came to me in reference to it, and I have referred to the conversation which took place between us.

Q. Look at this bill and see if that is it? [Handing bill to witness.]-A. I have never seen the bill since that interview with Mr. Platt, but from my recollection that is substantially the bill.

Q. I would like to know, general, if you are not aware of that bill coming into the Senate and being referred to the Committee on Patents?-A. I cannot say that it came in and was referred. I can only state that Mr. Platt said that such a bill was before his committee, and he showed it to me as he held it in his hand with other bills, in this way[illustrating]. I am not positive that Senator Platt came to me specially in reference to this bill, because he often came to see me about questions arising in his committee, and he may have called my attention to this bill among other things.

Q. I will ask you this: whether or not from your recollection-you may or may not have forgotten-but after that bill was there, before the committee, you received a letter in relation to it, which you indorsed over and delivered to Senator Platt?-A. I recollect getting several letters about patents which I referred to him. I do not remember any in reference to this bill. If I did receive such a letter, however, I sent it to him.

Q. Have you looked at the files to ascertain whether this was one of the letters which was indorsed over by you?-A. No, sir; I never heard of it before. I frequently got letters about patents, and always referred them to Senator Platt.

Q. And you cannot state from your recollection whether you did or did not receive a letter in relation to this bill?-A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. I want to know what your recollection is about this circumstance; whether Mr. Platt came to you some time and asked you if you had any interest in that bill. You state that when you were approached upon this subject you were anxious that Congress should not take away the right which the Government already had under the statute by passing this bill?-A. Yes, sir; and I think that occurred in the conversation which I have referred to already, when I delivered to Mr. Platt my opinion that this law was not any broader than the practice which had grown up in the Department from the time of Wirt, and had become a recognized principle by the courts. I recollect stating that this law was no broader than that, and although I have no interest in the matter, I would not like to see the practice destroyed.

Q. But you are satisfied that the Government had this right?-A. Yes; the general right.

Q. Do you remember whether he went to you or you went to him when that conversation occurred?-A. If I recollect distinctly he came across to my seat. He said, "Old fellow, you are my retained counsel. I never paid you anything, though, but I want your opinion."

Q. Are you confident he said that? Are you confident that you did not say you had an interest in this bill?-A. I do not recall that at all.

Q. And you do not remember anything more than you have stated here in reference to this matter?-A. No, sir.

Q. You know Mr. Vance, do you not?-A. There are two of them. Vance in the Senate?

Q. No; Mr. Vance over in the House.-A. I know Mr. Vance who was in the House, and Mr. Vance who is in the Senate.

Q. Mr. Vance in the Senate is a brother of the man who was in the Patent Office at the time this hearing was had before the Secretary of the Interior, is he not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Assistant Commissioner of Patents is the same man who was in the House last Congress.

The WITNESS. It is the same man, I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I see by the provisions of this bill that it was made incumbent upon the Attorney-General to institute proceedings to vacate patents if in his discretion suit should be brought. It did not make it obligatory, but you would have to be satisfied. From what you say I understand that you did not pay particular attention to that bill.-A. I never thought of it afterwards, I think.

Q. Is your recollection so clear that you can state Senator Harris did not speak to you about it?-A. I do not think he ever spoke to me about it. We sat close together in the Senate, and spoke of many things in the Senate and out of the Senate, but I do not think he ever alluded to it.

Q. Were you aware at that time that the Committee on Patents, to which the matter had been referred, had decided and reported that no law existed warranting the bringing of such a suit as this bill provided for?-A. I do not know that I was aware of it. I do not say that such was not the fact, but I was not aware of it. I took less notice of the patent legislation than anything else which came before the Senate during the time I was there.

Q. I want to know, general, if you are willing to tell me at what time in the summer of 1885 you determined upon taking a vacation and going away?-A. I determined to go away, I think, six weeks before I went. It was understood that when the President went to General Grant's funeral that he and a number of the Cabinet officers were to take their vacation immediately after the funeral services were over. He and Mr. Manning and Mr. Whitney and Mr. Bayard and Mr. Endicott then went off on their vacation. Mr. Lamar, Mr. Vilas, and myself came back here from New York, and I had fixed my time in July to go away on the 27th of August.

Q. It was not any secret when the respective members of the Cabinet would take their vacation, was it? How did you arrange it?—A. One with the other.

Q. And it was well known, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And publicly stated in the papers?—A. I think the papers stated it frequently from time to time.

Q. And if I recollect rightly it was given out early last summer that the members of Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet were not going to take any vacation?—A. They found out the work was harder than they expected, and they changed their minds.

Q. And you had for some weeks previous to your departure, according to your recollection, made up your mind to take your vacation at the time it was given out by the papers?—A. I do not know that the papers gave it out distinctly, but they had been speaking of it from time to time.

Q. The newspapers are supposed to know everything that is going on?—A. They have got to know it. That is their business. The reporters would be discharged if they did not know that.

Q. And you left —?—A. On the 27th August.

Q. And you went where?—A. I started to Little Rock, and staid there a little while, and then went to the classic spot, known as Hominy Hill.

Q. By what line did you travel?—A. By the Baltimore and Potomac as far as Pittsburgh.

Q. And you took a continuous line home without getting out of the cars?—A. I made no change.

Q. At Saint Louis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you arrived at what date?—A. I arrived Sunday morning at 2 o'clock.

Q. And went through after you left Washington without stopping?—A. I did not stop at all. After I got to Little Rock I went right straight to Hominy Hill, and staid there three weeks—nearly four weeks. I was there four weeks lacking two days.

Q. You are presumed to know the law, and I will ask you, if when you are absent from your office as Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General becomes Acting Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, he is supposed in your absence to be the Attorney-General, but only in so far as the law provides that he shall act as Acting Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of course when you leave, and the Attorney General comes in as acting Attorney-General, he takes up the business where you leave it?—A. Yes, sir; whatever business there is there comes to him.

Q. How can a man step into the shoes of another and take up the business where it has been left without understanding it, without being informed of its status?—A. He takes all that is there and what new business comes in. There is nothing which I left unfinished which I needed to confer with him about, nor was there anything incumbent upon me to confer with him about. There was nothing except some cases coming before the Supreme Court at an early date that required any information on my part.

Q. Suppose you had had an application in an important matter, and you had not finished the consideration of the same, and you had to go away, it occurs to me that you would be likely to inform him in regard to it.—A. It would be likely that in that case I should do so; but the business was up clear and clean before the subordinates and out of my hands when I left to go to Arkansas.

Q. Did you clean up everything?—A. Yes, sir. I had been working on some cases that were to come up at an early day before the Supreme Court, which I called his attention to.

Q. I understood from your statement that after this interview with these gentlemen you decidedly told them that you would have nothing to do with the case, and would say nothing about it. You say that you expected that the application would come in again?—A. Not to me. I supposed that they would either go to the Solicitor-General, or to the President, as the fountain of all executive power in the land. I thought possibly they might come to me and ask me to refer it, but they did not do that.

Q. Just state what you did say. You have the paper there. I do not want to misrepresent you. Just see what you say there in that letter.—A. I supposed they would come to me either to refer the matter to the Solicitor-General or to the proper party.

Q. Is that in your letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did, then, come to the conclusion from what was said that they would come to see you again?—A. No, sir; not from anything that was said.

Q. You inferred or supposed that they would come again?—A. I just inferred it from the precedents of the office, as it had been the course to ask for the reference to the proper person.

Q. From what was said there that day did you suppose or was it suggested that the application was to be made again?—A. No, sir; nothing was said at all about that. I supposed as a legal inference that they would come to me and ask if I would refer it, or that they would appeal to the President as the fountain of all executive power. "After the interview with the gentlemen already spoken of, I supposed that they would come to me with an application, after the statement I had made, to either refer the matter to the Solicitor-General or to present it to you"—that is, the President—"as the legal head of the Executive Departments of the Government." That is the language of my letter.

Q. Why did you so suppose?—A. Because the legal inference, according to the precedents, as I have just now stated, in the Department. They could have very reasonably asked me to have referred the application either to the Solicitor-General or the President.

Q. I understood you to say that you did not suggest it?—A. No, sir; and there is not a man in the crowd that will swear to it either.

Q. And you did not say anything to Solicitor-General Goode about it, but supposed they might, from a legal inference, ask the reference of the application?—A. I supposed that they would follow up their rights, or what they supposed to be their rights, and do that.

Q. Did I understand you to say that your relations to this matter were such, and your previous action such, that that was the reason why you did not say a word to Mr. Goode?—A. I never thought about it, and it did not enter my mind, and I do not think it would have been improper even if I should have said to the Solicitor-General, "Look into the matter, Mr. Goode, and if there is a case in it, you must bring suit."

Q. Did you think that he was posted upon everything in that office in relation to it?—A. No, sir; I did not suppose he knew a thing about it; to begin with, I did not have any supposition on the subject.

Q. Perhaps you can recall what passed between you and Mr. Goode when he returned from his trip to Canada; whether he did not converse with you in reference to matters coming before the Department during his absence. I understand you to say that you had no communication with him about this matter. Was it because you did not want him to know what had occurred in this case during his absence?—A. I was entirely indifferent about the matter. If he asked me, or anybody else asked me about it, probably I told him; I have frequently thought since this investigation began what I could have stated to him about it.

Q. What was the reason for your not saying anything? Did it occur to you that he would possibly be called upon to act in the matter?—A. I never thought about it. It did not occur to me one way or the other after he came home.

Q. Probably you spoke of this matter to a clerk or some man in your Department?—A. No, sir.

Q. You kept strictly silent?—A. I had no communication with any of my subordinates except in the reference of this letter, which went through official hands.

Q. Do you know any reason why you should have kept silent on the subject after what had occurred?—A. After what had occurred, it seemed to me the utmost propriety that I should be entirely silent. I will say that I considered it delicate, if not impolitic, to say anything to anybody about it.

Q. Did it occur to you after you were away that this expected new application would be made while you were absent?—A. I knew that if these parties availed themselves of their legal rights in the premises they would go to somebody else for relief. The matter, however, passed entirely out of my mind, and, really, after I got this dispatch at Little Rock from the Times-Democrat, I had to study some time to recollect the matter—the matter had gone so entirely out of my head.

Q. I suppose, as a matter of fact, you would not have felt bad to have had such a suit brought in the name of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that the gentleman withdraw that question.

The WITNESS. Let it go. I would not have felt bad or felt glad either. I became entirely indifferent about it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I do not mean to press any questions that are offensive. I hope you understand me in that respect?—A. You cannot offend me. I did not come here to be offended.

Q. You dropped out something in your direct examination about giving a thousand-dollar note?—A. On the first assessment we made a note to get money to start the business.

Q. I thought you gave a note to the company?—A. No, sir; we put the note in bank to start the business. I think Mr. Young will tell you more definitely about that.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You have referred to an interview Mr. Goode had with you in regard to this suit.—A. Yes, sir; about the time of my letter to the President. He made the remark that he brought the suit—ordered it, I believe he said. He said that he did not know at that time I was interested in the company. That was all which occurred in reference to it.

Q. Did he state, Mr. Attorney-General, that he had adopted the unusual course of ordering the suit without reference to the Interior Department?—A. He said in his letter to the President, which you have here, that he found there were precedents authorizing it, and that he was satisfied from the showing that was made to him that the bringing of the suit was justified.

Q. What is the general form of the reference to the Interior Department?—A. It varies. There is no special form. Sometimes it is worded in this way: "I respectfully refer you the accompanying letter, or copy of letter, for such information or suggestion as you wish to make." Sometimes the reference asks for such information and advice or such action as the Department thinks proper to take, and requesting that the letter be returned to the Department of Justice. It varies.

Q. And the question is not the bringing or the not bringing of the suit?—A. Sometimes the bringing of suit is advised and sometimes it is not. Now, the case of a gentleman who applied to the President for the purpose of bringing a suit in a patent case I recall distinctly. The President sent him to me and I referred him to the Interior Department. The Interior Department examined into the matter and reported the facts by letter and wound up by saying that it was not a proper case in which to bring suit. That thing occurs frequently.

Q. In regard to the precedents in the Department of Justice, I understood you to say that there are cases in which suit has been ordered without reference, and subsequently your testimony went off on land patents. Now, I will ask you if there are any suits ordered to vacate patents without reference to the Interior Department?—A. I could not say myself positively in all instances of that kind which have come before my Department I have referred to the Interior Department. Without making an examination I could not answer that.

Q. You are still a director of this Pan-Electric Company, are you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And attorney or counsel for that company.—A. Yes, sir; I never severed my connection with it.

Q. And you still hold this stock?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You had an application from New York the 28th of July; do you remember that?—A. That is the one I expect, which I have just been speaking of in answer to the last question.

Q. I will ask that the letters in this case be put in the record. I have them here. If you will look at them and answer it will save your coming here again. [Handing letters to witness.]—A. (After examining papers.) Yes, sir; those papers are correct.

Q. These seem to be about the date you acted when this other thing came up?—A. That was running along from the 1st of July to the 30th.

Q. That was an application to set aside, as I see from the papers themselves, a patent, on the ground of fraud?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. I would like the other members of the committee to see what these papers are.

The WITNESS. It is not in reference to a telephone patent at all.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read one. "If these facts are shown, my understanding of the rule is that such patent would be held illegal and invalid, and that in case such facts are true, such patent is probably voidable. My attention has been called to the case of the United States of America v. Gunning and Adaline N. Ingersoll," is the language of the Commissioner of Patents; and the Attorney-General says in his letter: "After a careful examination of the report of Mr. Montgomery and the accompanying papers, I am of opinion that his conclusion is correct, and, therefore, I decline to grant the use of the name of the United States for that purpose."

Mr. HALL. That does not relate to this Bell telephone case, does it? [Addressing witness.]

The WITNESS. No, sir; it does not relate to telephones at all.

Mr. HALL. Well, that is all I care about knowing.

The WITNESS. This letter of mine was directed to Mr. Townsend, the district attorney of New York.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir; and I will hand them to the stenographer to incorporate in the record, if there is no objection.

There being no objection, the papers referred to are made a part of this record, and are as follows:

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication (by Assistant Secretary Muldrow) with accompanying papers, touching the application of Albert S. Bigelow for the bringing of a suit to vacate a certain patent therein named, issued September 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren.

The communication does not give any wish or expression of opinion as to the request made by Mr. B. As the patent comes from your Department, it is usual, in such cases, before any action is taken here, for your Department to give some expression of opinion or indicate some wish in reference to the propriety of granting the application. And as I consider the cases in which such suits should be brought very rare indeed, I would much prefer the Interior Department would, in this case, indicate its will, or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow.

With high regard &c.,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 3, 1885.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 23d instant respecting the application of Albert S. Bigelow, of Rochester, N. Y., to be permitted to use the name of the United States in a suit to vacate letters patent No. 305,956, for an improvement in safety valves, issued September 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren, alleged joint inventors, upon the ground that it can be conclusively shown that said Warren was the sole inventor of said improvement, and that the patent is therefore void for fraud in its procurement, I have the honor to state that the matter was duly referred by me to the Commissioner of Patents for examination and recommendation.

A copy of his report, dated 25th instant, declining to recommend such action, is herewith inclosed, together with the papers referred.

He is of opinion, as there is no question raised as to the patentability of the invention and the right of one of the parties to have applied for and received it, there is not such fraud upon, or rather not such interest in the Government, as to necessitate the bringing of suit in its name for the purpose of vacating the grant. He distinguishes this case from that of Gunning, instituted in the southern district of New York in 1883, in that as to that case the grant was a monopoly improperly obtained for an alleged invention of an article already in use and belonging to the public, in which case public right, as well as public policy, was violated, and the Government might therefore be properly called upon to recall its improvident grant.

I concur in the recommendation as submitted by the Commissioner.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, August 5, 1885.

SIR: The application of Albert S. Bigelow, for the use of the name of the United States in a suit to vacate Letters Patent 305,956, issued to James Sargent and Marion Warren, has been for some time before the Secretary of the Interior, and to-day I have received from him the papers, with his recommendation that the name of the United States for that purpose be not granted. The Secretary of the Interior concurs in the report made upon this subject by Mr. Montgomery, the present Commissioner of Patents, a copy of which report I herewith send you. I have also mailed to you the other papers in the case.

After a careful examination of the report of Mr. Montgomery, and the accompanying papers, I am of the opinion that his conclusion is correct, and that a proper case for interference by the United States has not been furnished, and therefore I decline to grant the use of the name of the United States for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

Hon. MARTIN I. TOWNSEND,
United States Attorney, Troy, N. Y.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, August 5, 1885

SIR: I have to-day returned to Hon. Martin I. Townsend, United States attorney, a reply to the request heretofore sent up through him for the use of the name of the United States to vacate letters patent to Sargent & Warren, made on behalf of Albert S. Bigelow, and I have sent to him the papers which accompanied that application.

Very truly, yours,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

GEORGE R. SELDEN, Esq.,
Attorney at law, 50 and 51, Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, July 25, 1885.

SIR: In response to the letter of the Attorney-General, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, in regard to the "application of Albert S. Bigelow for the bringing of a suit to vacate a certain patent issued September 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren," in which letter the Attorney-General requests that he would "prefer the Interior Department would in this case indicate its will or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow," and which letter was referred to me "for examination and report as requested by the Attorney-General," I respectfully report:

First. That I have made a somewhat careful examination of the facts exhibited in behalf of applicant Bigelow, and I am of opinion that all the material facts averred in the accompanying bill of complaint, which is proposed to be filed, can be shown at least prima facie, and can probably be established beyond serious controversy.

Second. If these facts are shown, my understanding of the rule is that such patent would be held illegal and invalid, and that in case such facts are true such patent is probably voidable.

My attention has been called to the case of the United States of America v. John Gunning and Adeline M. Ingersoll, which was a suit commenced by bill in equity in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York for the purpose of vacating certain letters patent theretofore granted to said Gunning, upon the ground that "applicant induced the grant by his statements in his application that he believed himself to be the inventor of the patentable subject, and did not know or believe that it had been in public use or on sale in the United States for more than two years prior to his application, whereas both of these statements were false to his knowledge."

In this case Mr. Bigelow asserts that Sargent and Warren obtained letters patent to themselves jointly for an invention which they asserted was their joint invention; whereas, in truth and in fact, the same was the sole invention of Warren. It is not complained that the monopoly created by such a patent should not have been granted; on the contrary, it is agreed that Warren was entitled at that time to precisely the monopoly which Sargent and Warren secured by virtue of their joint application, and in pursuance of a previous contract entered into between themselves.

It will be observed that in the Gunning case the bill was filed and the suit maintained upon the ground that no monopoly in fact should have been granted; that applicant was not the inventor at all, nor in privy with such inventor; and, also, that the invention had been in public use for more than two years, and patent was barred by the statute, and the invention belonged to the public.

I need hardly suggest that there is a palpable distinction between the case presented by Mr. Bigelow and the Gunning case. Neither the Government nor the public can be said to be injured by the issue of the patent to Sargent and Warren simply because it issued to them jointly instead of to Warren alone.

Assuming, therefore, that such proceeding as is contemplated here should be instituted very rarely, and only in exceptional cases, I am compelled to report that in my opinion the emergency does not exist which should call upon the Interior Department to recommend to the Attorney-General the institution of a suit.

The communication of the Attorney-General is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

[Office of J. N. Beckley, city attorney, 19 City Hall Building, Rochester, N. Y.]

JULY 28, 1885.

SIR: I take the liberty of sending you herewith the memorandum on behalf of Mr. Bigelow in the matter which has, or will, come before you from the Interior Department, and with reference to which you kindly gave me a hearing on Saturday last.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN N. BECKLEY.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

In the matter of the application of Albert S. Bigelow for the commencement of an action by the United States to vacate letters patent 390,466.

MEMORANDUM ON BEHALF OF MR. BIGELOW.

The papers presented show :

(1) The letters patent for the joint invention of Sargent and Warren were granted and issued upon their joint application and joint oath to the effect that they were joint inventors of the improvement. (See certified copy oath attached to bill.)

(2) Sargent has made four affidavits, in actions brought by him in the supreme court of the State of New York, in each of which he swears that he is the sole inventor of said improvement. (See Exhibits C, D, E, and F, duly certified, attached to bill.)

(3) Warren has made application for a patent for the same invention, in which he makes oath that he is sole inventor of said improvement. (See Report of Commissioner of Patents.)

(4) Upon the facts above summarized it is claimed on behalf of Mr. Bigelow that the court must, if an action be brought by the United States to annul said letters patent, make a decree declaring them void. (See Mr. Selden's brief already submitted.)

(5) An action to vacate said letters patent can be maintained only by the United States. (See said brief.)

(6) The letters patent aforesaid are being used by Sargent to improperly and unjustly injure persons engaged in a lawful business. Such persons have no remedy for such improper and unjust use, except as the sovereignty shall intervene. (See papers presented and report of Mr. Townsend.)

(7) The letters patent were obtained from the Government by fraud. The Government certainly is interested in having its statutes, framed deliberately for the protection of its citizens, complied with. It does not suffer pecuniary injury by reason of the false statements on which it relied when it issued its letters to Sargent and Warren, but its citizens are injured by its act, which is based on the fraud stated. It is respectfully submitted that the Government should, by means of the action suggested, cause to be undone that which without fraud committed upon it would never have been done, to the end that its laws may be complied with and its citizens protected.

JOHN N. BECKLEY,
For the Petitioner.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 28, 1885.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, July 30, 1885.

DEAR SIR: You will remember that I spoke with you this morning at the Executive Mansion in relation to the reference which Mr. Beckley telegraphed me. You suggested that I should give it to the Secretary of the Interior, to be sent by him with his report in the matter which was referred here. I learn on inquiry, however, that the report had been made on yesterday. I therefore simply send you the reference which he telegraphed, which was chapter 14, Curtis on the Law of Patents, fourth edition.

Very truly, yours,

M. V. MONTGOMERY,
Commissioner.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

Q. I take it these papers were in your office when you left there August 27.—A. Yes, sir; I presume they were.

Q. And if Mr. Goode had looked the matter up he would have found them?—A. They had been there all the time, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. I am glad to find that the Department sustained my view of the law.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Attorney-General, if from the inception of this association between you gentlemen it was known or considered that litigation would spring up between this corporation and the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not know that it was considered that there would be, but of course we expected to meet with opposition. We expected to meet with competition and warfares such as all corporations have to encounter.

Q. But the question of infringement was not raised until after you had consented to become one of these incorporators?—A. No, sir.

Q. What I want to know more particularly, is whether this association or corporation was a scheme devised by a number of gentlemen to break down or attack the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; nor to attack any other company or anybody else.

Q. And it was your belief that your invention would be a success upon its own merits?—A. Yes, upon its own merits. That was our view of it.

Q. The fact has been drawn out in the examination that after this application was made to you to order the suit, that you did not communicate with General Goode or any other subordinate in your office in relation to the matter. Now, I ask you was that silence on your part for any purpose?—A. No, sir; I did not happen to think about it.

Q. Was it with a view to keeping from these subordinates that this application had been made?—A. No, sir; because it came through the chief clerk's office with the Rogers letter.

Q. And if Mr. Goode or any of these subordinates wished to know what action had been taken in the premises, all they had to do was to refer to these papers in the Department?—A. Yes, sir; because they were all there.

Q. So that it would be impossible that there could be any concealment about the matter?—A. Oh, none at all; you see these gentlemen who came there—these four gentlemen—did not file any application; they had their books and papers to refer to, and stated that they wanted to use the name of the United States in bringing this suit. As I said before, I cut them off short, and there was nothing further to it. Nothing went on file at that time for Mr. Goode or anybody else to see. It was simply a verbal statement, which I ended as peremptorily as I could politely do so.

Q. And your presumption was that they would follow the matter up in some other form, in accordance with the practice in such cases?—A. Yes. They seemed to be very much interested. In fact, Mr. Van Benthuyzen or Mr. Von Briesen seemed to be troubled considerably, and I did not suppose that the matter would end there. I thought as lawyers they would follow the matter up.

Q. From any conference or conversation, was there any intimation that they would do that?—A. No, sir.

Q. And I will ask you whether there was any verbal or other communication, directly or indirectly, advising any particular method of procedure?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Since you have been Attorney-General, since March, 1885, what connection, if any, have you had with this Pan-Electric Company?—A. I have not been to a meeting of the company and have not talked about the business of it to a solitary person since I have been Attorney-General, nor for some time before. It was the general complaint always that I did not attend more meetings. It has been stated by somebody that I had attended a meeting at the Ebbitt House about the pendency of this controversy before the Interior Department. I have never been at a meeting held there since several years ago, when I went there to see Mr. Murphy about the Hennepin Canal.

Q. As a practical business man you had no connection with this company since you have been in office?—A. None at all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. One branch of this inquiry is in relation to the reason for bringing the Government suit. Do you care to give your views on that point?—A. That would commit me to the opinion why we have the right to bring suit, and, as matter of fact, I do not know that the suit is pending. I hear it is. I have never given it any thought, and do not know what is in it.

Q. You know that is included in the resolution, and that is my reason for asking the authority for bringing the suit.—A. I would not care to express an opinion on that, as I started to stay out of the thing, and I think I have kept out of it very well.

Q. You do not care to answer that?—A. Not unless the committee presses me.

Q. Something has been said in the papers as to what disposition has been made of your stock in the company.—A. None whatever. I got my certificate from Secretary Johnston. He sent it to me last April a year ago, I believe it was, and I have it yet, and with that exception I have not heard of the Pan-Electric Company one way or the other since.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen swears that he stated at that interview they concluded upon another course, and were going to apply to the district attorney.—A. I do not recall it.

Q. There is a discrepancy here as I recall it.—A. I cut the interview off short. If he stated that, it did not make any impression upon my mind. He and his counsel were very earnest in all their talk, but I cut them off.

Q. I simply thought I would call your attention to a discrepancy which you might correct.—A. If it occurred I have no recollection of it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Since you have been appointed Attorney-General have you done any act, either directly or indirectly, to enhance the interest either of the Pan-Electric Company or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, as counsel for them or as a stockholder interested in the matter?—A. There has been no thought or action of mine that was calculated in the remotest degree, since I have become Attorney-General, to increase the value of that stock, or to enhance the value of that property in any way. If such has been the case I cannot recall it to mind. I have not been at any of the meetings. I have never conferred with the gentlemen connected with it about it at all, and I have never had any conference with anybody concerned in this matter, except with Senator Harris, and only with Senator Harris to ask, since this investigation began, whether he or Mr. Atkins was the first to mention this enterprise to me. He told me that Mr. Atkins was the first, and I have not read three pages of the testimony that has been given here.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have shown some papers from your Department relating to an application for a suit to vacate a patent to James Sargent, issued September 30, 1884. I will read the first paragraph: "In response to the letter of the Attorney-General, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, in regard to the application of Albert Bigelow for the bringing of a suit to vacate a patent issued September 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren, in which letter the Attorney-General requests that he would prefer the Interior Department would in this case indicate its will or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow." I read from the letter of the Commissioner of Patents dated July 25, 1885. This application seems to have been made verbally, as I gather from the papers, on the 23d of July, 1885. The application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen had been made on the 12th of July, and was referred by you to the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it seems that you referred this application to the Interior Department also?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection.

Q. Do you recall what this patent was for?—A. I do not; there may be some paper there which states it, but I do not recall it now. I think is the case where this gentleman I have spoken of went to the President. He did not know exactly what to do, and thought it the proper course to go to the President, and the President or his secretary sent him over to me with a card of introduction, and I referred the matter to the Interior Department, and it went through it that way.

Q. You state in your letter of the 23d to the Secretary of the Interior as follows: "As the patent comes from your Department, it is usual in such cases before any action is taken here for your Department to give some expression of opinion, or indicate some wish in reference to the propriety of granting the application. And as I consider the cases in which such suits should be brought very rare indeed, I would much prefer the Interior Department would in this case indicate its will or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow." That seems to have been an expression of your opinion on the general question to the Interior Department at the same time that this Van Benthuyzen application was pending before that Department?—A. Oh, yes; the papers were there.

Q. And then you suggested to the Interior Department that you thought the case was one in which a proper cause for interference had not been furnished, and therefore suit should not be allowed?—A. That is the language of the law books on the subject, as a rule.

Q. In that case the Commissioner of Patents received the communication, reported the matter to the Secretary of the Interior, and it was returned by the Secretary to you?—A. Indorsed to me.

Q. You found, I infer from reading the papers, that it was not a case of such character as warranted the bringing of suit in the name of the United States?—A. I drew the distinction in that case in the beginning of the case.

Q. What did the case involve?—A. I do not know exactly. I have only seen it cited in the books in these cases.

Q. You seem to have recognized the power of the United States to bring such suits, but that its exercise would depend upon the facts in each particular case?—A. Yes, sir; and the presumption is strongly in favor of the grant as it stands.

Q. You gave a pretty strong opinion against the bringing of suits of that kind, notwithstanding the Van Benthuyzen application was pending?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you not understand that this power of the Government is only exercised where a patent is obtained by surreptitious means, or by fraud upon the Government?—A. Not a mere matter of infringement?

Q. No, whether this power would in such a case be available in an infringement case?—A. Justice Miller in 14 Wallace, in the Moury case, announced the doctrine that I consider sound.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand you to say that it should be confined to cases of fraud?—A. No, sir; not as I understand Mr. Ranney to put the question; that was one of the elements. The opinion of Justice Miller in the Mowry case lays down the doctrine.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Is it unusual or unprecedented for a district attorney to bring a suit?—A. Oh, no, sir; this very case was sent here, as I remember, by District Attorney Townsend; that is, applying to the Department of Justice for leave to bring it. The question which I understood Mr. Ranney to ask a little while ago was, was it not unusual for the district attorney, of his own motion, to bring it? Of course they often petition by letter the Department of Justice for leave to bring it.

Q. Is it unusual for an application to be made through a district attorney?—A. It is not unusual; it is sometimes done.

Q. I understood you to make the statement that the proper course to pursue was to make direct application to the Attorney-General?—A. The district attorney or parties could themselves make it. In this case we have been speaking of, Mr. Townsend, as I remember, applied to the Department for leave to bring suit. If I understood Mr. Ranney's question, it was, if it was not unusual for the district attorney to bring the suit.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. I will ask further, then, before this how had such suits been brought?—A. Oh, there are plenty of cases where they asked the Attorney-General for liberty to do it. There is one right here now. The parties may ask themselves, or the district attorney may ask for it, or any person may make the application who considers himself damaged or injured by a patent improperly held.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Ask through the district attorney?—A. Ask through the district attorney to be heard.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. Is it within the duty or province of the district attorney to bring such suits?—A. They have done it frequently. There is no particular form in which it is done. The parties might jump over the district attorney and come themselves to the Department of Justice, if they want to; but as said before, district attorneys do not bring such suits without leave of the Department of Justice.

By Mr. HALE :

Q. It was stated here by the two Rogerses that Casey Young said to them on one occasion that you had agreed to have this Government suit brought. State whether that is true or false.—A. I never agreed to any such thing.

Q. Mr. Young denies the statement, of course.—A. I had no more idea of bringing the suit than of jumping into the Potomac with a millstone about my neck. If I had promised to bring it, I would have brought it if I were thrown out of that office the next day.

Q. And you neither agreed to bring the suit nor to have it brought?—A. No, sir; I did not know anything about it, except that I agreed I would not bring it.

At this point the committee adjourned to meet April 21, 1886, at the usual hour.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1886.

Committee met pursuant to adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. I requested Mr. Humphreys, of New York, to be present this morning, and I understand he has responded.

D. HUMPHREYS, being duly sworn, was examined as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Where is your place of residence?—Answer. Cincinnati.

Q. Are you connected with any telephone company?—A. I am counsel for the Globe Telephone Company, of New York, and have been, perhaps, for two years.

Q. Who are the officers of that company, if you know?—A. W. W. Goodwin, of New York, president, and Amos Rogers, secretary.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether any member of Congress or any officer of the United States Government is a stockholder or officer in that company?—

A. I think there is neither a member of Congress nor an officer of the United States Government who has stock in that company.

Q. It is one of the companies at whose instance the suit was brought, is it?—A. We filed a petition for the Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. I move to strike out the question and answer. This question and answer are in reference to members of Congress or Government officials holding stock in the Globe Telephone Company, and that has nothing to do with the subject we are investigating.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to remark that this seems to be one of the companies which was instrumental in having suit brought, and in that view I think the question is proper.

(The question and answer were read by the stenographer, the yeas and nays ordered, and the motion to strike out was lost.)

The WITNESS. That is, I meant to say I did not know of any Government officer having any stock. There may be such stockholders, but I do not know it.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not appear that this man is the secretary or treasurer of the company. He is simply counsel, and he says he does not know.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked him whether, of his own knowledge, he knew. That will protect him in the matter. I ask the witness if he knows of his own knowledge as counsel, or secretary, or in any relation to the company, whether any member of Congress or any officer of the Government was a stockholder in this company.

The WITNESS. I think perhaps I would know if there were any; I would not want to say positively whether there is or not—I do not think there is.

Q. Do you know whether your company was a party to the application for the use of the name of the Government to bring the suit to test the validity of the Bell patent?—A. I believe I filed the first application in the Department of Justice to have the Government suit brought, after the case had been withdrawn from Memphis. I think I filed the first petition there for the Globe Company. I drew up or dictated three or four petitions that were filed there at that time.

Q. Look at the paper I hand you and state whether that is the application. (Indicating to witness the application in printed form.)—A. That is the application of the Globe Company. I think my name is to it as counsel. Yes; I see it is here.

Q. The date of the application is October, 1885. I believe it is all in evidence. Was this application in pursuance of arrangement or agreement with any other company or individual?—A. No, sir; it was made on my own suggestion. It came about in this way: when the Government suit was first filed in Memphis, I had, previously to that time, been getting a defense ready for the Globe Company in regard to prior inventions and non-infringements of the Bell patents. I was looking for devices that did not infringe, and also for those in which the discovery was prior to Bell's. The Government suit was filed in Memphis. I concluded at that time that if the Government had taken hold of the matter, there was not much use of fighting an individual case, because all the defenses would be brought out in the Government suit, and the Government suit would be tried for all it was worth, and every particle of testimony in existence brought in, and that there would not be much use for them to try it themselves if the Government suit should go against the opposition. I so represented to the officers of the Globe Company, and I represented to them that we ought to, by all means, get a foothold in the Government suit; that is, to render our assistance both in respect of counsel and testimony, and witnesses and everything we controlled, so that the Government case would be made as complete as possible. We all labored under the impression—that is, all who paid any attention to this fight—that if we got a fair hearing in the case against the Bell Company, we would establish two facts—

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think it proper to state that; it has no relation to this matter.

Q. The WITNESS. As I have said, I reported to the officers of the Globe Company that we ought to render all the assistance in our power to the Government in order that all the facts would be brought out in that case, and on the strength of that, after we talked the matter over, I came here to Washington to see if it would be agreeable to all parties that we file a petition in the case, and render what assistance we could.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that while the suit in Memphis was pending?—A. I came here first when the suit was pending in Memphis, and after I had come here and while the suit was pending in Memphis, I called on the various parties to see if there was any objection to our rendering all the assistance we could. They said this was a Government case, and they thought that the view we had taken of it was the proper one, and that we ought to have a fair, full, and complete trial of all the facts in the case.

Q. Who were the parties you talked with?—A. I think I saw General Joe Johnston first and asked him if he had any objection to our rendering what assistance we could. I think I spoke to General Atkins, may be; I saw General Bradley Johnson; I telegraphed to him to come over here; I saw all of those whose names have been identified with the matter.

Q. At that time did you see the Attorney-General?—A. I think I did not see the Attorney-General at that time.

Q. What time did you do that?—A. That was along about August or September; I think it was as long ago as last summer; I do not think I saw the Attorney-General at that time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you say where the Government suit was brought?—A. At Memphis.

Q. That was not brought until the 10th of September, was it?—A. Well, soon after that time I refer to.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you take any further steps to identify yourself with that suit?—A. When I was here in Washington at that time, while they were taking steps to go into the Memphis case, it was understood that the President had taken the bit, and that he was going to withdraw the Memphis case and refer it, through the Interior Department, and require it to go through that channel, and for that reason I did not file a petition. As soon as I went back to New York, when the Government suit was withdrawn, I immediately prepared a petition to hand in to the Department of Justice, and then I came on to Washington and went in to see General Garland.

Q. After you had been here to consult with General Johnston and others in regard to taking part in the Memphis suit, did you understand that the Memphis suit had been withdrawn?—A. I understood that, after I had talked with them. I had not learned from any of them that it was going to be withdrawn, but it was intimated to me that perhaps that would be the course that would be pursued, and I thought I would wait a few days to see whether it would turn out so or not.

Q. Who intimated that?—A. Mr. Manning, I think.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Not the Secretary of the Treasury?—A. I think he is an ex-member of Congress from Mississippi, and is now a practicing lawyer in New York.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you fix that date?—A. That occurred along in September.

Q. Was there any arrangement made between you and these other gentlemen that you would make an application to the Department of Justice?—A. No, sir; not any arrangement. I came here for the purpose of seeing them about the matter, because, of course, they were in the case and I did not want to go in and incur any hostility, but to assist in the matter, if they had no objection to our company being mixed; and we did not want to do so unless it was agreeable to them. I consulted with them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they thought it would be right and proper for me to file a petition for our company, and whether they had any objection to it. I thought that the proper courtesy to show to counsel and officers. That was my object in seeing them as to whether they had any objection.

Q. Then the information given to you was that the Memphis suit would be withdrawn, and that the application would be referred by the President to the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir; I learned that after I got here, and for that reason I did not file any.

Q. And when you did file your application, was it to join that of any other company coming into the case?—A. After the Memphis suit was withdrawn I immediately took steps to file a petition.

Q. Was that done in pursuance of any arrangement or agreement with the Attorney-General or any other officer?—A. Now, it was about that time, or it may have been the first time that I was down here, that I saw Mr. Garland.

Q. Was it before or after you had heard that the Memphis suit would be withdrawn?—A. I think most likely it was before I understood the Memphis suit was to be withdrawn.

Q. How long?—A. What date was the Memphis suit withdrawn?

Q. I do not recollect the date.—A. It was along in September sometime, I think.

Q. Had Mr. Garland returned here at the time you are speaking of, early in October?—A. He had not returned very long before it was done.

Q. Now state the circumstances of your interview with the Attorney-General.—A. I took the petition—either this one or some other—and went in to see General Garland about the matter. I introduced myself.

Q. Can you state right there whether it was this petition, or another, with a view to fixing the date?—A. I may have made some changes in it; I do not know whether that is the one or not.

Q. It is dated October?—A. I may be wrong. Well, it is practically the same petition.

Q. I understand you to say that you had not determined to present a petition until after you learned the Memphis suit was to be discontinued?—A. If I went in to see Mr. Garland the first time I was down here, I must have presented that before I understood it to be withdrawn. I did not file any, at any rate, when I saw Mr. Garland the first time.

Q. While the Memphis suit was pending how did you know it was to be withdrawn? Why did you call on him in reference to the Memphis suit?—A. Simply to refer our petition to him and ask him to refer our petition to Memphis and give us a standing in the case.

Q. This petition?—A. Either that or one similar to it. I think I made a second draft of it, and left out some words and added some.

Q. I gather from the wording of the petition that it must have been subsequent to the withdrawal of the Memphis suit?—A. Oh, that petition as amended there was certainly filed after the suit was withdrawn.

Q. State what was your purpose in calling on the Attorney-General, and what occurred.—A. After I had seen these various parties to learn if there was no objection to our taking a hand in the Memphis or Government case, why I went in to see General Garland at my own option. I told him that I had prepared a petition for my company, and I wished to have it embodied in the Government case as against the Bell people, and if possible we wanted to be considered; that it was a fight of the people against Bell. They were all for their rights in this matter; but General Garland did not allow me to say that much. I tried to say that much, but he cut me right square off, and said, "You must not speak me about that matter." I told him that I had not come to see General Garland, but to see the Attorney-General, and he must not consider himself the individual in this case, but as the Attorney-General, and he very politely told me, "I have not anything to do with this case; I cannot have anything to do with it, and I won't have anything to do with it." I told him he must have something to do with it; that I had no other recourse; that it was a matter which the courts had passed upon again and again, and he had his course as Attorney-General to pursue; that proceedings to vacate patents had to go through his Department, and it had to appear somewhere in every case of this character; that the matter had been before his Department. I told him he had to see this petition, and he could either reject it, refer it, or pass it over; I did not care a cent what he did, and I made use of another expression; he said he had not had anything to do with it, he could not have anything to do with it, and he would not have anything to do with it under any circumstances; I told him I did not think it was right or fair that because of his having an interest in another company it should operate against our company, as he did not have any interest in that; he said I must not talk to him any more about the matter. I asked him where I should go; if he could refer me to anybody so that I might overcome the trouble; he said he could not refer me to anybody. That he had not referred to anybody, and would not refer to anybody; that he had an interest in the matter, and that he looked upon it as a judicial act to do anything at all; that in a manner he was estopped from saying or doing anything in the matter. I told him he was not acting judicially in the matter; that he was in an Executive Department, and that this was simply an act he was compelled to perform, and it was the same as the act of a sheriff when he has to execute a man; that it was none of my business or his whether he had an interest in the matter. He said that it required an act of judgment, and that was a judicial act, and I must not talk to him about it. But I did talk to him, and managed to get a few words out of him to the effect that he would not touch it. I went there to get an expression of some kind out of him, but I did not manage to do it.

Q. Did you do it at any other time you had an interview with him?—A. I have not talked with him from that day to this, except, perhaps, to pass the time of day with him when I met him in the elevator in the Department of Justice. Once or twice I have met him in the elevator and simply passed the time of day.

Q. To whom did you present your petition?—A. I finally presented or sent it to General Goode, and by him it was referred to the Interior Department. I was pretty considerably worked up about the matter. I thought he ought to have the nerve to act in the matter. I went away from General Garland with very much more respect for him than when I entered his room.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think you should make any such remark.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a remark that would hurt anybody, and I do not think there can be any objection to it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is an improper remark.

The CHAIRMAN. It hurts nobody.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You say you left him with more respect than when you went in his room?—A. Yes, sir; than when I went in, because he convinced me that he was incorruptible.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you try to corrupt him?

Mr. HANBACK. Let that go.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you any other connection, Mr. Humphreys, with the bringing of this suit?—A. Well, I filed a petition and I dictated a number of petitions.

Q. Did you take any part in the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir; we introduced a great deal of testimony in that case, which you will find in the printed record of the case. I think I produced a large proportion of the fraud record, and also the Dolbear, Eaton, Cushing, and Meucci, and some of the Reis papers. We went into the fight pretty lively, and I assisted in the argument as well as furnished testimony. We did what was allotted to us to do in that case.

Q. It appears in the testimony that you shared in the expense?—A. We paid no expenses except our own.

Q. Did you pay any part of the expense of printing?—A. Yes, sir; I think we paid about $30.

Q. What proportion was that?—A. I think the whole record cost $100.

Q. Was any arrangement made between your company and the Pan-Electric and the National Improvement Company to divide any part of the expense?—A. I think that was after the testimony was all in. There was an arrangement made between us by which we would pay pro rata for having the record printed. I think there was some statement of that kind made. I think our share was about $30.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understand that you are counsel for the Globe Company?—A. Yes, sir. I might say here that I did start my own investigation about this. I asked a number of persons about the propriety of bringing this suit, and the prospects of getting a fair deal in the matter. I may have had suspicions in regard to the Democratic administration going in for reform. I never belonged to that party, and as to their pretensions for honesty and reform I may have had my suspicions.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You thought better of that afterwards? But I do not ask you to answer that question.—A. I thought afterwards that there were some Democrats who were fair.

Mr. RANNEY. That is, if they served your purpose?

The WITNESS. I do not think they served my purpose, particularly.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Who do you think are fair? What members of the present administration do you think are honest?—A. I think Mr. Garland is honest, and I think Secretary Lamar is another one beyond any peradventure or question.

By RANNEY:

Q. I do not propose to follow this line of inquiry any further. I understand that you are attorney for the Globe Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are counsel practicing in New York, I understood you to say?—A. Cincinnati is my home. That is where I generally practice.

Q. I thought you were from New York?—A. Cincinnati.

Q. Where is this Globe Company located?—A. New York.

Q. Who is the secretary of it?—A. Amos Rogers.

Q. Who is the treasurer?—A. He is the treasurer.

Q. Who is the president?—A. W. W. Goodwin.

Q. Who has the books?—A. Amos Rogers.

Q. Have you ever looked to see who are the stockholders, or can you give us a list of the stockholders?—A. I do not think I could give you a list of the stockholders; the secretary can.

Q. How many stockholders do you think you could name?—A. I do not know how many.

Q. Do you know how many there are in all?—A. There are, perhaps, one hundred.

Q. Do you know where they are located?—A. They are nearly all in Philadelphia.

Q. What proportion of that number do you think you can name?—A. I do not think I could name one-fourth of them.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the organization of the company?—A. I did not.

Q. Have you had anything to do with the sale or disposition of the stock?—A. I have not.

Q. And never had?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understand that before this Government suit was brought in Memphis you had been acting as counsel in the preparation of a defense against the Bell Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was your company charged as infringers?—A. No suit was brought against them at that time, but the moment the instruments were put out suit would have been brought.

Q. You had not put out any instruments up to that time?—A. We had not then, because I advised against it until they had a complete defense ready.

Q. When did they commence to put out instruments?—A. They have never had any put out.

Q. Have they been sued by the Bell Company?—A. They did, but they have not made out a suit.

Q. We did not go into that, and I have not asked you about it. When were you sued?—A. When we were here before the Interior Department asking to have the Bell patents vacated. They filed a suit against us at that time in New York. We have not done anything except to ask the Department of Justice that we be heard and prove that the Bell Company got their patent by fraud and perjury.

Q. Answer my question. How long were you here looking up matters so as to make a defense against the Bell Company?—A. I came on to take charge of that case in July, I think.

Q. 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What patent rights was your company based on?—A. They have quite a number of different devices and control many different devices.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that this is not material. The witness need not answer that question, in my judgment. It is not material to this inquiry.

The WITNESS. I do not think I could answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. You need not answer it.

Mr. RANNEY. I appeal from that ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not material what instruments the Globe Company uses.

A vote was taken on the appeal of Mr. Ranney, and the decision of the chair was overruled.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Without going into any details, just answer the question, Mr. Humphreys.—A. You are all lawyers, and know that communications made to me as counsel I dare not reveal, and I do not think I could do it without violation of professional duty. Communications that have been made to me as counsel I do not think I dare reveal.

Q. If you cannot, I leave it to your own judgment, and shall not press it. I supposed that you had been investigating the patents to see whether they infringed the Bell patents, and you might possibly know.—A. I do know the Bell patents.

Q. And that perhaps you had investigated the patents in which you were interested to see whether there was any infringement.—A. I investigated the matter? yes, sir. I thought I had a good case.

Q. Did you learn this in the Interior Department from the patents themselves?—A. I do not know about the Globe patents.

Q. You do not understand my question. I ask you simply what patents of the Globe Company in the Patent Office did you examine, and whether your information came from the examination of the patents themselves. Can you tell what patents you examined as belonging to the Globe Company?—A. I could tell perhaps. I did not think they infringed the Bell patent, but I cannot—

Q. (Interposing.) I do not ask your opinion whether or not they infringed the Bell patents, that is not the purpose of my inquiry. It is simply what the patents are which that company has.—A. If you want to know what patents the Globe Company owns I do not think I can answer that question, because I know that professionally.

Q. I ask you what patents purporting to belong to that company you examined in your investigation in the Patent Office?—A. I never investigated all the patents belonging to them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you investigated them in the line of your professional employment, you need not state.

The WITNESS. I have only examined as to that matter professionally, and that is the only way. I cannot answer that question without telling what patents they own, and I cannot do that.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say, as an attorney you cannot do it without violating your oath as attorney?—A. Not without violating my professional communication. I can answer that question in another way.

Q. If you will not answer affirmatively, I will not allow you to answer the question negatively.—A. There has been no combination in any manner, or any combination of interests.

Q. I am not asking you that. Before you came to Washington you had heard of the Government suit, if I understand your testimony correctly?—A. I saw an account of it.

Q. Can you not fix the date?—A. No, sir; but I think in September some time. I am not sure about it.

Q. Can you not fix the date in September with more accuracy?—A. I do not think I can any nearer than I have. I think it was in September.

Q. Where did you stop when here, at what hotel?—A. I think I stopped at the National at that time.

Q. Are you quite sure?—A. Generally I stop at the Ebbitt House; but I think the first time I stopped at the National.

Q. As that was only last September, I thought perhaps you might remember?—A. My impression is that I stopped at the National at that time.

Q. You were here some time in September?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. Was it before or after Mr. Garland returned from his Southern trip?—A. I think after.

Q. What makes you think that?—A. Because he was here when I got here.

Q. When you first came?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you confident of that?—A. I saw him.

Q. Well, when did you come the second time?—A. I do not know as I came more than once, except when I came down to get ready for the trial. I think when I sent the petition to Judge Goode that I mailed it to him. That is my recollection.

Q. You mailed it to him?—A. I think I mailed it to him. I think as soon as the Government suit at Memphis had been withdrawn, as soon as I saw the statement made in the papers, I mailed the petition to Judge Goode. I think I sent it to him by registered letter. I was determined that the Department of Justice should take hold of it in some shape. That is my recollection.

Q. Let me understand you. Was the interview which you had with the Attorney-General of which you have testified the first time you were here?—A. I think it must have been.

Q. You are quite confident of it, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went home after that and mailed the application to Judge Goode?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you mail it to him before you came here the second time?—A. I think so.

Q. And you did not come the second time until proceedings had been commenced before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I was down here; at least I came down here pretty soon after that in order to get at certain testimony.

Q. Before the papers had been referred?—A. I think so. I was here off and on frequently.

Q. Where did you stop the second time you came here?—A. I think I went to the Ebbitt House at that time.

Q. You think you stopped there?—A. I perhaps stopped at the National first all the time. The second time I may have stopped a day or so at the National and then went to the Ebbitt.

Q. And you are sure in your recollection that the first time you came here was after Mr. Garland returned from his vacation?—A. I do not think I came here at all until after he returned from his vacation.

Q. Well, we can fix it then without going to the hotel register. Are you attorney for Mr. Cushman too?—A. His counsel came into the Globe office when I was in New York and wanted to know what we thought he ought to do, and I suggested that everybody ought to be in the Government suit, and he concurred with me, and he said, will you prepare for me a petition? I had a petition dictated there and then for Mr. Cushman.

Q. Whom do you mean by everybody?—A. Every citizen of the United States who had an interest in telephones ought to be interested in having a thorough investigation into the Bell patents, and I think so now.

Q. Mr. Cushman was another man charged with infringement, was he not?—A. Not at that time. Mr. Cushman had had a contract with the Bell people. Mr. Cushman was an inventor of a telephone way back in 1859 or 1860. He used it in constructing a telegraph line from Toledo to Chicago. He never got out a patent, but had a practical speaking telephone. He was from New Lisbon, Ohio. After hearing of the Cushman invention the Bell people brought him to Boston and made a contract with him that he should keep his invention secret.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. How do you know that?—A. From the testimony.

Q. But you do not know anything about it—as a lawyer I ask you. You are now testifying to what you have heard somebody say, are you not?—A. He asked me if I knew about it.

Q. What you knew legally as a witness testifying.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know that Mr. Cushman had any controversy with the Bell people?—A. Not at that time. His contract then ran out. He had a contract to keep still three years, and they paid him a hundred dollars a month for keeping his invention secret.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Did you see that contract?—A. I think I saw it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say you drew this petition?—A. I think I dictated it.

Q. I will read a clause: "That electric speaking telephones were neither new nor novel at the time the first application by Bell was made, the same having been invented by Dr. S. D. Cushman, New Lisbon, Ohio, as early as 1853, and reduced by him to practice long before the dates of Alexander Graham Bell's application for patents, issued to him in 1876-1877." One of the grounds in the very application that you dictated was that he claimed to be an inventor of the telephone.—A. I do not think there is any doubt about it at all.

Q. Then, when I asked you whether he was not a party standing in antagonism to the Bell Telephone Company, why did you go off on giving information about some contract he made?—A. The question asked me was if Mr. Cushman was not an infringer of the Bell patents. I did not understand that he was an infringer of the Bell patent at that time. He was simply a prior inventor, and was in the employ of the Bell Company nearly up to that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And I understand that there was a contract relation between them?—A. Yes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understand that you are undertaking to tell what other people told you?—A. You asked me this question, whether Mr. Cushman was not an infringer of the Bell patent? I proceeded to tell you what Mr. Cushman was; that nearly up to that time he was in the employ of the Bell Company.

Q. We heard that; you need not repeat it.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. How do you know that he was in their employ?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care about that. * You now say [addressing witness] by the application I read you that he claimed he was the first inventor himself. Now, was he?

A. I think he was.

Q. And it was by your first suggestion that he was brought in, was it?—A. I said that I suggested it to his counsel, who was in New York, when he came to see me at my office. He wanted to know what he ought to do, and I told him I thought everybody in interest ought to have a hand in this suit, so that it would be a full and fair trial.

Q. And thereupon you sat down and dictated this petition which I have read?—A. Yes, sir; I think I dictated that.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the Board of Trade in New York about that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know any man connected with the Board of Trade in New York about that time?—A. I do not remember anybody. My recollection is that right after the withdrawal of the Memphis case the Board of Trade took the matter up.

Q. I did not ask you that. I asked you if you knew any member of that Board of Trade?—A. I do not think I did.

Q. You do not feel confident of it. Did you take any action to get anybody else to come in?—A. I did not go out to take any action. The McDonough people came in to see me.

Q. Did they have anything to do with it?—A. I dictated their petition, I think.

Q. Was Mr. McDonough another man in antagonism to the Bell people?—A. He had been fighting with the Bell people in Connecticut and in New Jersey, and in the Patent Office.

Q. What did you do in that case; did you get him in?—A. He asked me what I thought he ought to do and how he should act, and I told him I thought that every good citizen and inventor ought to file their petition in the case.

Q. How came you, living out in Cincinnati, to be so active in New York in getting these people in?—A. I was not active. They came to the office and asked me what they ought to do, and I told them frankly.

Q. You have an office in New York, have you?—A. I was in the Globe office at that time. I was there taking testimony all the time.

Q. Did you read the resolution of the Board of Trade?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew that McDonough had been sued in Connecticut, did you?—A. That was the first time, I think, I ever saw Mr. McDonough, when he called to see me in the Globe office, in Mills building, New York. He and Mr. Eldridge, of the North American Company, came to see me, and I was glad to see him. He certainly goes way back in the invention of the telephone.

Q. And they were glad to see you?—A. I hope so.

Q. Especially if you were to write the application for them?—A. Well, they wanted it dictated as I did so, and I think they had it rewritten.

Q. Did you ever have any correspondence with Casey Young?—A. I do not know whether I had any or not until we met here at Washington. I do not believe I ever did.

Q. Did you ever sign any written agreement about this matter?—A. None whatsoever that I can remember.

Q. Were you present at the hearing before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I was. I presented the first batch of proof, and I opened the argument, I think.

Q. Did you hear Casey Young, or any one, state to the Secretary of the Interior that the Pan-Electric Company was not before him?—A. If I was asked the question whether they were before him or not, I should say that they were not.

Q. Did I ask you that?—A. I think you asked me if I heard Colonel Young say that the Pan-Electric Company—

Q. (Interposing.) If you heard Col. Casey Young or any one state before the Secretary of the Interior that the Pan-Electric Company was not before him in that proceeding?—A. Well, I could not be sure about that. There was very much said there. Colonel Young made an argument there, and made a very fine one.

Q. Did I ask you that?—A. Whether he said that particular company or not I do not remember.

Q. Did I ask you that?—A. No; but I said it.

Q. I did ask you if you heard him, or any one, state in the hearing had before the Secretary of the Interior that the Pan-Electric Company was not there before him in that proceeding.—A. My best impression is that he did make such a statement there, and I think it is true. I always understood that was the fact about it.

Q. How did you understand?—A. Because they had no petition there that I remember.

Q. Did you know of any existing agreement between them and the National Improvement?—A. I understood there was an understanding in some way.

Q. Did you know of any existing written agreement, was my question?—A. I did not know only what I heard outside. I did not see it.

Q. What did you hear about it?—A. I do not know whether it was General Johnston told me that there was such an agreement, or who it was.

Mr. EDEN. So far as the contents of the agreement is concerned the papers themselves would be the best evidence.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was in this combination, wasn't it?—A. Not exactly that.

Q. Who told you there was such an agreement?—A. My best recollection is that General Johnston told me that they would be glad to have us come in and render what assistance we could. It may be that it was General Bradley Johnson. I know he told me that they invited us with great warmth to bring in our ammunition and troops.

Q. You are a lawyer and ought to know that the answer to a question ought to be responsive.—A. I think General Bradley Johnson.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. That the understanding between the Pan-Electric and the National Improved was that they would render what assistance they could, each individual man.

Q. Is that all?—A. That is all.

Q. Was it not General Joseph E. Johnston that said that?—A. It may have been him, but he knew little about it.

Q. Did he not ask you Globe people to join that combination?—A. No; he did not put it in that way.

Q. How did he put it?—A. That we should come in and render what assistance we could, as we would be benefited as much as they.

Q. And he did not ask you to pay one-third of the expenses?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they not produce a written agreement for you to sign?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not have a correspondence on the subject?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you with Senator Harris?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know when you went to Attorney-General Garland that he had already declined to have anything to do with it?—A. Well, I had in a manner understood that, yes, sir.

Q. Have you not seen the letter published by him to the President?—A. I saw him before that letter was written, I think.

Q. Are you sure?—A. I think so.

Q. How long before?—A. Well, pretty soon—about the same time.

Q. And then, notwithstanding that you knew Attorney-General Garland had refused to have anything to do with it, you still went to him and insisted that he should?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you knew that he claimed to be disabled and disqualified from acting, because of his interest in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And still you as a lawyer insisted that he should?—A. Yes, sir. The decisions are very emphatic that the Attorney-General has the power in those cases.

Q. Did you not know that the Attorney-General was disqualified from acting, and that his duties in a case of disability devolved upon the Solicitor-General?—A. I went there to make it a matter of record. I do not think I was aware of that fact at that time. I think I looked it up afterwards.

Q. When did you find it out?—A. About that time. I do not know whether I had looked it up that time or not, but my best impression is I had not.

Q. Do you remember when you did?—A. Right away after that.

Q. Before you went to New York or after?—A. I think it was after I got back to New York, perhaps.

Q. You say perhaps; is that your recollection?—A. I do not remember whether I did look it up before or after I got back to New York.

Q. Did not the Attorney-General tell you that he was disabled from acting, and in such case referred you to the law?—A. No, sir; he would not talk to me about it. He simply said, "I have not had anything to do with this case; I cannot have anything to do with this case, and I will not have anything to do with this case."

Q. And you knew that he had said so before?—A. I heard it.

Q. Did you have any more respect for him after you heard him repeat that language?—A. I proposed to have him refuse to me. I proposed to have my case complete.

Q. And you as a lawyer said to him that you thought it would be proper for him to proceed and have suit brought to vacate the Bell patent when he was directly interested to have it done?—A. I thought then, and think now, that he ought to order a suit, although an executive officer, and I told him so. He was Attorney-General, and he had no interest in the company I represented, directly or indirectly, and I insisted that he had the right to act and ought to act. I told him that I represented large interests, and if it had to go through his office that he should act, which would be simple justice.

Q. And you thought that he ought to put it through, notwithstanding his direct interest?—A. I thought in our case he should do so.

Q. And you insisted, when you knew that he had previously declined on that account, and when he repeated it you still persisted in the way you state?—A. I wanted him to state that he would not do it.

Q. And you insisted that he ought to do so notwithstanding that he had a direct interest in the matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you found he would not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made the remark gratuitously, or I would not ask the question, that when you went away you thought he was incorruptible?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean by that that you tried to corrupt him?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say you went away with more respect for him than you had when you went in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not have respect for him when you went in?—A. Yes, sir; I had considerable respect for him. I took occasion to find out afterwards how well he stood in the estimation of his associates in the Senate.

Q. Then, why were you offended?—A. I was not offended, but angry because he would not listen to me.

Q. Do you not call angry being offended?—A. I do not know about that.

Q. That is what I do not want to ask you—what you do not know. I think I shall not proceed any further.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. What made you go out with this higher respect than you had when you went in?—A. I tried to explain here. I went there, supposing that it was an executive act that I wanted him to do. I did not look upon him as exactly a judge before whom I had brought a case for trial, and he told me "I am interested in this, and I cannot hear it." I went in there as I would to a clerk of the court or a sheriff whom I wanted to take my papers, and see if I made out a prima facie case. I offered to furnish him any proof he required in order to establish my case. I considered it entirely an executive act. He took the other view of it, that it would require an act of judgment on his part, and that it was more the act of a judge than of an executive officer, and he impressed me with this idea: that I have an interest remote in the telephone fight. You know what my interest is. I must avoid the very appearance of evil in this matter.

Q. You say he had an interest remote. You knew he was one of the owners of the Pan-Electric stock, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; I knew it from the start.

Q. Was his interest any more remote than yours?—A. He had no interest in my company.

Q. But I mean did you not know that his interest was no more or less than your own—that it was a direct interest he had?—A. Yes, sir; what I mean by remote is, suppose the telephone interests were thrown open to the world, so that the Globe and Pan-Electric and National Improved could do business, that his interest would depend upon the money put into it, and not from any good that might be derived from the opportunities of suit.

Q. In other words, his interest like yours depends upon future developments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had read his letter to the President?—A. No; I think the President's letter was after that.

Q. You read the newspaper account?—A. I read the account of attacks made on General Garland.

Q. Which fully explained to your mind his interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you went with the respect that you would have for such high officer as the Attorney-General, you left with a higher respect?—A. Yes, sir; because he impressed me that he would not touch anything whether proper or not that would leave him open to any criticism.

Q. You read General Garland's testimony before this committee, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you read where he said that he thought you were going to jump over the table on him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were excited, were you not?—A. Not very much excited. Not more than any other lawyer. Lawyers are in the habit of being demonstrative.

Q. But as a lawyer you never attempted to jump over on a judge?—A. I surveyed him and saw that he weighed about 200 pounds, and as I weigh only about 130 I thought I had better not try it.

Q. But after going with the respect that you would naturally have for the law officer of the Government, you left with a high respect notwithstanding this feeling?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know any more about the interests that Attorney-General Garland had in this Pan-Electric Company when you left than when you went there?—A. Not anything more; nothing more, no.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Had you ever met Mr. Garland before that interview?—A. That was the first time I ever saw him.

Q. The feeling you entertained before that was independent of any personal recognition on his part, was it not?—A. I always understood that General Garland was an honest man.

Q. I understand that you went there as the representative of a company in which General Garland had no earthly interest?—A. None at all.

Q. And the only interest urged by him was an interest in some other company?—A. That is all.

Q. And your idea was that on account of an interest he had in some other company he was necessarily disqualified from acting?—A. I did not see why it should.

Q. In answer to some question put by Mr. Ranney you were about to explain why you desired to have your application recorded as going through the regular form in the Attorney-General's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Explain that.—A. My recollection is that I told the general about it. The decisions were that in all these Government cases brought to vacate patents—for instance, in the Morry, the Whitney, the Rumford, and the Throckmorton land case—the court had decided emphatically that the authority of the Government of the United States must be expressed in some part of the record by the act of the Attorney-General in every case, and in no case I think does it appear that it shall be done by the Solicitor-General.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think this man's opinion about the law ought to be give here. If he states what he is now saying he said to the Attorney-General I do not object.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. HALL. You have been asking just such questions for the last four weeks.

The WITNESS. And I was very anxious in view of these decisions that the Attorney-General should appear in the case in some manner.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the witness's answer to that question.

(The question and answer were read by the stenographer.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the witness may answer the question put by the gentleman from Iowa, and the manner in which the witness answers is for himself to decide, so long as it is a substantial and responsive answer. The Chair is of opinion, in view of these suggestions from the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the opinion of the witness of the law would not be competent evidence in answer to that question; but if what the witness is stating is part of the conversation relative to which we have already had some proof, it certainly is competent. But the Chair does not hold that the witness is confined to the conversation between himself and the Attorney-General. That remark was made merely as to the witness giving an opinion as to the law.

The WITNESS. I want to say that I wanted the record to show somewhere that the Attorney-General had given official action in the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. The Chair has ruled that you must confine yourself to what you stated to the Attorney-General, and not give your opinion as to the law.

Mr. HALL. The witness has not given his opinion of the law, but is simply justifying his action. For instance, he understood the law to require certain steps to be taken, and he was pursuing this course notwithstanding the Attorney-General in another similar case refused to act. I will ask you [referring to witness] this question at this time: did you understand the law and the practice with reference to applications for the vacation of patents issued by the Government to require that they should go through the Attorney-General's office?

A. That was my understanding of it.

Q. Were you of opinion or did you have the idea that in case the Attorney-General should refuse to act in your case, that there might possibly be some other means of accomplishing your purpose?—A. I did, but I wanted to exhaust that first.

Q. I am coming to that. Then your application in that particular to the Attorney-General, and alluded to by you in your testimony, was with a view to having it appear on the record that you had done all you could towards securing the safer action?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in order to lay the foundation for other steps that might be deemed proper?—A. Exactly.

Mr. RANNEY. I move to strike out this answer as far as the witness expresses an opinion, unless he states that he said this in conversation with the Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. Well, to tell you what I stated to the Attorney General, I will say that I think I stated to him, "You are the Attorney-General of the United States. The decisions of the court require that all these applications in all these suits to vacate patents must have the indorsement of the Attorney-General some place in the record, and I have no other course to pursue only this one, and it is not right for you to say to me you must not talk to me about this matter."

Q. The stenographer has read to you what you said about the authorities to the Attorney-General. Do I now understand you to say that you told him about these authorities, as the answer purports to show?—A. I think what I said to him was that the authorities have been that the authority to bring these suits must be expressed some place in the record; that it has been before the Attorney-General of the United States.

Q. Is that all you told him on that subject?—A. I think I went on to explain which the authorities were; how far I got along I do not remember.

Q. Then it may stand. Did Mr. Garland listen to those authorities?—A. He would not listen to me at all.

Q. But you kept firing them at him?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I was not here at the beginning of the examination, and I will ask you if you are a practicing lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever in your practice been cognizant of cases arising before judges who had an interest in the subject-matter?

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that, and ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HALL. What is the ground of objection, that it is immaterial?

Mr. RANNEY. That it is immaterial, and that it is not competent for him to state what in his practice he knew about other men.

Mr. HALL. I waive that question. I will ask you [addressing witness] this question—whether in your applications to the Attorney-General after you had heard that he had refused to act in this other matter, you had reason to suppose that he ought to refer a case or take any other action notwithstanding his interest in the other matter.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that question. I want the ruling of the Chair on that.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not catch it?

Mr. HALL. I asked if in his applications to the Attorney-General after he had refused to act in the other matter, he had any reason to suppose that the Attorney-General ought to refer a case or take any other action notwithstanding his interest in the other matter?

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is competent as explaining why the witness went to the Attorney-General after knowing that he had already refused to act.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the question on the ground that he puts into the mouth of the witness what the answer should be.

Mr. HALL. That is not very wise in coming from you, because you have not being doing anything else since you have been here.

Mr. RANNEY. Another objection is, it contains a statement of his own. I object to it as being incompetent.

Mr. HALL. State, Mr. Humphreys, whether you had any reason to think at the time you made this application that the Attorney-General would be justified in taking some action, notwithstanding his interest in the Pan-Electric?

A. That was one of the reasons I was trying to impress upon him. One was that he had no interest in my clients' case, and the second was that I did not take it to be a judicial act, but an executive act, and not the same as a judge.

Q. Did you have an idea that he might refer the matter in some other way?—A. I asked him to send me to somebody else, or to refer it to somebody.

Q. Who was not interested?—A. Yes, not interested; to some of his subordinates

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What did he say to that?—A. He said I must not talk to him about the matter. He would not refer it, and he would not do anything about it.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. You represent the Globe Company, you state?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Ranney asked you the question as to what patents your company owned, which you declined to answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, did your company at that time own any of the Rogers' telephone patents?—A. They did not.

Q. Was there any connection of any character whatsoever between your company and the Pan-Electric?—A. There was not and never has been.

Q. No contract of any sort?—A. None whatsoever.

Q. Was there any contract or agreement made in which you agreed to unite your forces in bringing the suit?—A. Only in a general way, that if the Government suit was ordered to be brought we were all to furnish all the testimony we could control.

Q. With whom did you confer representing the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young.

Q. Did that conference take place in New York?—A. Here in Washington.

Q. Was that reduced to writing?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was simply an understanding that you would unite and endeavor to have a Government suit brought, was it?—A. All the understanding I had was that we were to furnish all the testimony and help all we could in order to have a fair full trial of the case.

Q. Was it understood that you should make an application on the part of your company to bring this suit?—A. I do not think there was any understanding between them and us. I determined to bring it on our own account.

Q. Was anybody with you when you presented this application to the Attorney-General?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was Colonel Young here at the time?—A. I had never seen him and never had a word with him before that time.

Q. Do you say you had no conversation with him?—A. No conversation with him.

Q. When was it that you say you had a conference with him and Colonel Looney?—

A. I never had a conversation with Colonel Looney in regard to this matter.

Q. Colonel Gantt, I mean.—A. Not until the hearing at the Interior Department.

Q. That was the telephone trial at the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are positive there was no partnership or contract or community of interest between your company and the Pan-Electric?—A. No, sir; no more connection with the Pan-Electric Company or no more interest in the matter than as citizens of the United States.

Q. You were not then and never have been?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You were in the same business, were you not?—A. What is that?

Q. The telephone business?—A. I was counsel for the Globe Company and we were getting ready to put up telephones.

Q. But you were in the same business. Your company invested its money in telephones and the Pan-Electric had invested its money in telephones?—A. We were all in the same business in this, that we were all interested in having the Bell patents vacated if we could, and we all wanted to do a telephone business.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. And you were all in the telephone business?—A. In the telephone fight.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. And in the telephone business?—A. If I would say telephone business, that would be a reason why the Bell people should come in and join us, which was not a fact. We were all getting ready to go into the telephone business.

Q. You were all really in the telephone business were you not?—A. You as a lawyer know that we could not be in the telephone business without being enjoined.

Q. You would not have to be enjoined if you were not actively engaged in the telephone business, would you?—A. If I told you we were in the telephone business they could bring it up to-morrow and ask for a restraining order against us.

Q. You are attorney for the Globe Company, I believe you stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the object of that company was to establish a telephone business?—A. The testimony will show that so far as the Globe Company is concerned it endeavored to secure a foot-hold to do a telephone business without infringement of any one, and do it safely. I think it is an outrage that—

Q. (Interposing.) Now had the Pan-Electric also got ready to do a telephone business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had a community of interests, did you not?—A. Yes, like every citizen of the United States.

Q. But indirectly you had a community of interests?—A. We were all interested in the same line.

Q. You were exclusive in your business, and expected to get your patronage from those people of the United States who transacted business with you, did you not?—A. We were interested more or less.

Q. Your interest and the Pan-Electric interest was a direct interest, was it not? That is to say, you expected to be patronized by the people to whom you had your wares to sell?—A. Yes, sir; we expected to do a telephone business.

Q. And you had a community of interest, did you not?—A. In one sense.

Q. Absolutely?—A. We had antagonistic interests, though.

Q. But you had a community of interest to beat some other interest, did you not?—A. In other words we all wanted, if we could do so lawfully, to set aside Bell's fifth claim.

Q. And then you would settle your differences?—A. Then I have no doubt we would settle our own differences.

Q. And several of you would join suit to set aside the patent of the other?—A. I should not be surprised if we did.

Q. You have not yet?—A. No, sir; but I have no doubt it will come up in the future.

ROBERT B. VANCE, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your full name.—Answer. Robert B. Vance.

Q. Do you hold any office under the Government at this time?—A. I am Assistant Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. HANBACK. I move we adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and I do it for a reason.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to give a reason.

Mr. HALL. Before we adjourn had we better not have an executive session?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to adjourn is in order. The gentleman has made a motion that we adjourn to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I had rather take this testimony this evening than wait until to-morrow.

Mr. HANBACK. Then I amend that motion, and move that we adjourn until Friday. I will withdraw the first motion and make a motion to adjourn until Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his first motion and moves to adjourn until Friday.

At this point Mr. D. Humphreys, the preceding witness, asked to make a correction in his testimony, and spoke as follows:

Mr. HUMPHREYS. May I make a remark in relation to the question of expenses asked me in my examination in relation to any arrangement as to the payment of the expenses of this hearing at Washington before the Secretary of the Interior?

The CHAIRMAN. We would like to know anything you can state in regard to that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I said that we were to pay a part of the cost of printing the record, and that the whole record cost something over $100, and that our part amounted to $30 or so. Colonel Young tells me that the printing of the record cost more than that; that it cost in the neighborhood of $500, and that our part of the cost of having the printing done amounted to something over $100. That was a part I did not look after.

Q. Did you have anything to do with making the arrangement with your company for paying the money?—A. I had nothing to do with the payment of the money, except that we wanted the record and were willing to pay our share for the printing of the same. General Beckwith was the manager of our company, and he looked after the part of paying the bill.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has moved that the committee adjourn until Friday at 12 o'clock. Those in favor of this motion will say aye, and those opposed will say no. [A viva voce vote was taken.] The chair is unable to decide. As many as are in favor of the motion will hold up their hands. [Two members held up their hands.] As many as are opposed will hold up their hands. [Two members voted.] The motion fails, there being two in the affirmative and two in the negative.

Mr. HANBACK. I ask the roll to be called.

Mr. HALL. Do I understand there is any objection to adjournment until to-morrow?

Mr. EDEN. I thought it important to allow Mr. Vance's statement to be taken to-day, as his services are required in his Department, and there is also another witness here from the Interior Department waiting to be examined.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas calls for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. The clerk will please call the roll.

The roll was called, and the committee refused to adjourn.

(Mr. VANCE, the witness who gave way for the purpose of allowing Mr. Humphreys to make his statement, took the stand.)

Q. You state, Mr. Vance, that you are the Assistant Commissioner of Patents?—A. Yes, sir; that is the legal phrase.

Q. You have been a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member from 1873 to 1885—twelve years.

Q. Of what Congresses were you a member?—A. From the Forty-third to the Forty-eighth.

Q. Inclusive?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. From what State?—A. North Carolina.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you at any time while you were a member Congress introduce a bill providing for the use of the name of the Government or the bringing of a suit by the Government for the vacation of letters patent for inventions?—A. I introduced a bill in the Forty-sixth Congress, in the Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth.

Q. The same bill?—A. The same bill, yes sir; authorizing or directing it. I have the bill in my pocket. Shall I use the bill?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. This is the bill of the Forty-sixth Congress. (Exhibiting bill.) It is not the original bill, but it is the bill as reported from the committee. It is a bill entitled "A bill to enable courts of the United States in case of frauds and misrepresentations to declare a patent void, on application of the Attorney-General."

Q. What is the number of that bill?—A. That bill is numbered 6456.

Q. Introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. Yes, sir; Forty-sixth Congress. I also have the bills introduced in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses.

Q. What is the number of the bill of the Forty-seventh Congress?—A. The bill of the Forty-seventh Congress is numbered 4573.

Q. What is the number of the bill in the Forty-eighth?—A. No. 1136 in the Forty-eighth.

Q. Are these bills all the same?—A. I think they are the same. I have not examined them word for word. There was some changes made from the original bill in the committee.

Q. That was in the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. Well, probably in all three of the Congresses which I have referred to, sir; changes and amendments were made in committee. This is the bill, though [indicating], which passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Q. Is it your recollection that they are substantially the same?—A. Substantially the same.

Q. In what respect does that differ from the bill you refer to—differ from the one introduced?—A. Nothing in particular that I call to mind. Just such changes as occur in a bill that is before a committee.

Q. Give to the stenographer the number of the bill introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress.—A. This bill I have here is the bill of the Forty-sixth Congress.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Those are bills of the Forty-sixth and Forty-eighth.—A. Don't you want also the Forty-seventh?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Put them all in.

The bills referred to are as follows:

[Forty-sixth Congress, second session. H. R. 6456. Report No 1711. In the House of Representatives, June 9, 1880. Read twice, recommitted to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.]

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported the following bill:

A BILL to enable the courts of the United States in cases of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney-General that there is probable cause for impeaching the validity of any patent issued, or reissued, or extended by the United States, either by act of Congress or by the Commissioner of Patents, on the ground that the same has been procured by fraud or misrepresentation, it shall be his duty to take legal proceedings in equity in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to have the said patent vacated and annulled; and if the party, at whose complaint the Attorney-General shall take the proceedings provided for in this act, shall fail to establish the invalidity of the patent, then the costs incurred by the Attorney-General in such litigation shall be chargeable to and collected from such party complainant.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not deprive parties interested of the right of appeal.

[Forty-seventh Congress, first session, H. R. 4573. In the House of Representatives, February 20, 1882. Read twice, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.]

Mr. VANCE introduced the following bill:

A BILL to enable the courts of the United States in cases of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney-General that there is a probable cause for impeaching the validity of any patent issued, or reissued, or extended by the United States, either by act of Congress or by the Commissioner of Patents, on the ground that the same has been procured by fraud or misrepresentation, it shall be his duty to take legal proceedings in equity in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to have the said patent vacated and annulled; and if the party at whose complaint the Attorney-General shall take the proceedings provided for in this act shall fail to establish the invalidity of the patent, then the costs incurred by the Attorney-General in such litigation shall be chargeable to and collected from such party complainant.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not deprive parties interested of the right of appeal.

[Forty-eighth Congress, first session, H. R. 1136. In the House of Representatives, December 11, 1883. Read twice, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.]

Mr. VANCE introduced the following bill:

A BILL to enable the courts of the United States, in the case of the improper grant of letters patent by reason of fraud, misrepresentation, or for other reasons, to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney-General that there is probable cause for impeaching the validity of any unexpired patent, whether original, reissued, or extended, which may have been or shall hereafter be granted, on the ground that the same has been improperly issued, or has been procured by fraud or misrepresentation, it shall be his duty to take due proceedings, by a bill in equity in the United States circuit court for the district in which the said patentee resides, or in the case of his death or the assignment of his entire interest in said patent, then in the district in which his legal representatives or assigns reside, to have the said patent vacated and annulled; and the court, on notice to said adverse parties, and in pursuance of such proceedings, shall have power to adjudge and declare said patent void in whole or in part, and to annul and vacate the same.

SEC. 2. That if the party at whose complaint the Attorney-General shall take the proceedings provided for in this act shall fail to establish the invalidity of the patent, or if the patent be adjudged invalid on other grounds than of fraud or misrepresentation, then the costs incurred by the Attorney-General in such litigation shall be chargeable to and be collected from such party complainant.

SEC. 3. That from the judgment and decree of any court rendered in the premises appeal shall lie, at the instance of either party, to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as is now provided by law in other judgments and decrees of circuit courts in causes arising on letters patent relating to inventions.

Q. Were you a member of the Committee on Patents in any one of these Congresses?

—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you first a member of Congress?—A. I was a member of the Forty-third Congress, and was continuously a member up to and including the Forty-eighth.

Q. Were you chairman of the Committee on Patents?—A. I was chairman of the Committee on Patents eight years, and the two years of the Forty-seventh Congress I was on the committee; but Judge Young, of Ohio, was the chairman.

Q. At whose instance did you introduce this bill in the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. I consulted first with the Assistant Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Doolittle. He suggested to me that he thought it a proper thing to do to pass the bill in relation to declaring a patent void that had been obtained through fraud.

Q. Had any one suggested it to you before that?—A. No one.

Q. Then how did it occur to you?—A. In conversation with him. I frequently, when in consultation with officers and in conversations with others, spoke of his suggesting it. My recollection is that the first time it came to my mind was in conversation with him, and it occurred as a proper thing to do, and I introduced the bill.

Q. That was the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. That, I think, was the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress. I am inclined to think the first bill was introduced in 1879, in the early part of the session. That is my belief about it.

Q. Well, sir, was the bill introduced in the Forty-seventh Congress at anybody's instance?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or in the Forty-eighth?—A. Nothing further than the conversation with Mr. Doolittle. Mr. Doolittle went out. He resigned and then he and I from time to time talked about it when we met.

Q. Was it suggested during the Forty-eighth Congress when the bill was introduced?—A. By no person except him that I can call to mind now. I had some conversation with a gentleman from New York who had seen a notice in the papers of the bill being introduced, and he said he thought it was a very good thing.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand you to state that you had conversations with Mr. Doolittle from the Forty-sixth to the Forty-eighth Congresses?—A. Yes, sir; when we met, and of course he knew I had the bill before the committee and the House.

Q. Had you had any conversation with any gentleman who appeared to have been connected with the Pan-Electric Company in regard to the introduction of this bill?—A. Not one.

Q. Did you have any consultation with any one of them about the bill either before or after its introduction?—A. Well, upon the floor of the House, when I was pressing the bill, Mr. Casey Young came to me and objected to the bill. He said he thought it was a bill that ought not to pass, and I remember that Mr. Holman, of Indiana, who was sitting near by and overheard the conversation, said the bill was right. Mr. Young was the only person who said anything about the bill to me that I know of, except the remark of Mr. Holman, and that was to me personally. He did not address the Speaker, as I remember.

Q. What Congress was that?—A. The Forty-eighth Congress.

Q. Can you remember the time?—A. I do not know, but probably the bill itself will show. [Perusing bill.] It does not. I think it was in the spring of the year.

Q. Will you state in what situation was the bill at the time the conversation took place; was it before the House?—A. Possibly before the House on its passage, and Mr. Young stepped up to me and said that the bill ought not to pass.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did he give any reason?—A. He said that he thought it might be the means of bringing troublesome suits is my recollection of what he said about it at the time. So we had some remarks about it, and I told him that the bill was a proper one; that any patent obtained through practicing fraud on the Patent Office ought to be declared void, and I think maybe I mentioned that the law as it stood in 1790 provided for the Attorney General bringing suit at that time, but it was left out in the law of 1836.

Q. When you originally introduced this bill in the Forty-sixth Congress, had you in view its use, in case it became a law, for the vacation of any particular patent?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you in any other Congress?—A. It was never connected with any patent that was in existence, as far as I was concerned.

Q. Did you look after the bill when it passed and went to the Senate?—A. No, sir; except I went there to talk with Mr. Platt, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Patents, and told him that the bill had passed the House, and I should like to have him look after it on the Senate side, as I thought it a good bill.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Attorney-General Garland while that bill was pending?—A. I am not certain, but I think either Senator Platt or Senator Garland said that Senator Garland's opinion was that the bill was not necessary. I am not sure whether it was said to me by Senator Garland or whether I got it from Senator Platt. I know the impression was made on my mind that Senator Garland thought it unnecessary.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any one connected with the Pan-Electric Company—you know the parties who have been named—while that bill was pending in the Forty-eighth Congress, in regard to its passage?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Except the conversation that day with Colonel Young which you have stated?—A. I would remark here, if the committee will permit me to do so, that the Pan-Electric Company had the Rogers patents assigned to it in 1882, which was two years after I introduced the bill I refer to, and I did not know that such a patent was in existence when the bill passed.

Q. Have you had any connection with the ordering of these Government suits?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. Did you take no part in the hearing before the Secretary?—A. Nothing at all. I was not invited to the hearing, and had nothing to do with it in any way whatever.

Q. How long do you say you have been in the Patent Office?—A. A little over a year.

Q. And your position is what?—A. Assistant Commissioner, sir. Mr. Montgomery is Commissioner and I am his assistant.

Q. When these bills were introduced successively three separate Congresses, were reports made on them?—A. Yes, sir; I have them here.

Q. Say if you signed the report giving your opinion that there was no authority now under the law to bring such a suit and it was necessary to have one?—A. Here is the report of the Forty-sixth Congress [displaying report].

Q. I do not want to encumber the record too much. Let me see it. [Witness handed two reports to Mr. Ranney.] Is this the report of Forty-eighth Congress [indicating?—A. It is marked there—that is, for the Forty-eighth; the other is for the Forty-sixth Congress.

Q. I see you say in here, "The law as it now stands, and has stood since 1836, provides no way in which a patent can be declared void, except upon the ground of interference with some other patent, and then only upon the suit of some rival patentee, or of some person claiming under one of the interfering patents. And such adjudication affects only the rights of the party to that particular suit and those subsequently deriving title under them." I see you give your opinion here that a suit cannot be maintained under the existing law.

Mr. HALL. I object to that question on the ground that it asks for an opinion, and the opinion of the witness is immaterial.

Mr. RANNEY. It refers to his action.

Mr. HALL. It is an official report, and it will speak for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the opinion of the witness is not material.

Mr. RANNEY. As a matter of law I ask that the report be included in the record.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 4, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

JANUARY 9, 1884.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 3036:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred bill H. R. 1136, submit the following report, and beg to accompany it by a substitute bill which more fully sets forth the object in view and the means of attaining it:

The title of the bill as originally reported read as follows: "To enable the courts of the United States in cases of fraud and misrepresentation to declare a patent void on application of the Attorney-General."

The law, as it now stands, and has stood since 1836, provides no way in which a patent can be declared void except upon the ground of interference with some other patent, and then only upon the suit of some rival patentee, or of some person claiming under one of the interfering patents. And such adjudication affects only the rights of the parties to that particular suit, and those subsequently deriving title under them. (See section 4918, Revised Statutes.)

For forty-six years prior to the act of July 4, 1836, provisions were in force whereby, upon proper complaint by any individual filed in any district court, and other due proceedings had, a patent could be declared void on the ground that it was obtained surreptitiously and upon false suggestion; but at present the general public have no protection against embarrassment and vexation from invalid patents, and the Government no power to repeal the grant of the same, however strongly it may be convinced that a patent has thus been wrongly granted.

Interfering patentees, as stated before, and individual parties when sued as infringers, alone have the means of showing that a patent was improperly granted.

It was intimated, but intimated only, by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Mowry vs. Whitney (14 Wall., 434), that the Attorney-General might maintain such a suit on the relation of some one who was interested adversely to the patent.

But, in a latter decision, rendered in 1876, in just such a suit, brought by the Attorney-General on the relation of one Hecker vs. The Rumford Chemical Works (reported in 9th Pat. Off. Gaz., 1062), the United States circuit court for the district of Rhode Island dismissed such suit, and in a most elaborate decision reviewed the whole history of the law on the subject, and arrived at the conclusion that no patent could be repealed in this country except in a manner prescribed by statute, and that no statutory provision existed authorizing the Attorney-General, in his own name or in the name of the United States on the relation of any one, or authorizing any other officer or individual, to bring suit for that purpose.

It having been well settled by numerous adjudications of our courts that a patent is in the nature of a contract, which, under the Constitution, Congress authorizes to be entered into between the Government and the inventor, securing to him for a limited time the exclusive enjoyment of his invention, in consideration of his disclosure of his invention to the public and his relinquishment of it to the public at the end of the term, it follows that there should be some way of abrogating such a contract when the Government becomes convinced through its proper officers that it was improperly entered into or was invalid by reason of fraud or false suggestion.

Fraudulent patents, your committee are convinced, are often used for the sole purpose of terrifying purchasers, extorting tribute, and disturbing trade, while suits thereon, by which their invalidity could alone be established, are carefully avoided.

The maintenance of such false and unjust grants is destructive to the principle on which patents are based by the Constitution—namely, to promote the progress of science and the useful arts—and they are simply odious monopolies.

Your committee, therefore, earnestly favor early action upon said bill and recommend its passage.

By the accompanying substitute bill we have added to the original provisions for maintaining such suit on other grounds than fraud and misrepresentation; for extending the application of the bill to patents granted before its passage as well as thereafter; for bringing the suit in the court for the district in which the patentee or the owners of the patent live; and for holding the complainant liable for costs when his suit fails, or when the patent is declared invalid for other reasons than fraud or misrepresentation.

We are of opinion that the suit should be brought by the Attorney-General and not by the individual alone, as the entire public through the Government should be properly represented in the repeal of its grant, which is the act of the Government and not of an individual.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Now, Mr. Vance, have you a distinct recollection of what Mr. Young said to you?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Was not the ground upon which he put his objection this, in substance, that if you passed that bill it would be exclusive in its operation, and that no other mode would be provided and allowed?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Have you read his testimony?—A. No, sir; I have not. The other makes the impression on my mind that he objected because it might bring too many troublesome suits.

Q. Did he not object on the ground that it might take a remedy already existing?—A. I am not able to answer that at present. I cannot remember whether he said that or not. I know positively he objected to it, and fixing my mind as to why he objected, this other occurs to me.

Q. He stated in the case what his reasons were, and I need not tell you.—A. I have not read his testimony.

Q. I will ask you did he not express this idea, that if you should pass that bill it would be exclusive in its operation on that subject?—A. I cannot remember that he said that.

Q. Whether he objected on the ground that you would take away a remedy already existing?—A. I cannot answer that, because I do not remember whether he said that or not.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Garland did not put his objection on that ground?—A. Senator Garland did not specify any particular objection, only he said, and I have explained to you, that it either reached me through him or Senator Platt; that it was unnecessary, and that was all I know of his saying.

Q. Did he say why it was unnecessary?—A. I understood that to mean that the law already authorized the bringing of such suits; that was my inference.

Q. Did you write a letter to Senator Garland, calling his attention to the bill when pending in the Senate?—A. I do not know whether or not—likely I did.

Q. Do you know you did, and he indorsed it over to Senator Platt?—A. I do not know whether I wrote him a letter, but I know I went to see him.

Q. Is it not in your recollection that you wrote him calling his attention to that bill?—A. It is likely that I did, because bills go over there sometimes and it is necessary to call particularly attention to them.

Q. Isn't it your best recollection that you did write such a letter?—A. I could not say I wrote such a letter, but I think I wrote him a letter once, though what the particular subject was I cannot call to mind.

Q. Do you remember writing him on any other subject but this?—A. I was very anxious about section 4887 of the Revised Statutes. I wanted that changed, because it was working a disadvantage to American inventors. I was anxious about that, and I wanted to see him frequently about it.

Q. Do you remember you wrote him about that or this matter?—A. I think I wrote about that, and I may have mentioned that in this letter.

Q. Why did you select Senator Garland for an opinion?—A. Why did I? I cannot say I did consult him, because I am not certain whether he told me or Senator Platt.

Q. Why did you go to him rather than to anybody else?—A. Well, sir, I cannot say that I did go to him.

Q. Why did you write to him rather than to anybody else?—A. I do not know that I wrote him.

Q. I thought you said you were sure as to whether you wrote or went to him?—A. I understood you to refer to Senator Platt.

Q. I said Senator Garland.—A. I misunderstood you. I have no recollection whatever; writing to Senator Garland is what I said.

Q. And no recollection of going to him about it?—A. I have a recollection that I either saw him, or that Senator Platt thought Mr. Garland thought it unnecessary.

Q. Are you related to Senator Vance?—A. We are brothers.

Q. Did you not speak to him about it?—A. I think I did. I think that I mentioned the matter to him, and probably he might have suggested to me to speak to Senator Garland, as Senator Garland was a distinguished lawyer. That might have been the way, but in the hurry of the moment, passing to and fro, I cannot call to mind whether I did speak to Senator Garland in person or not.

Q. Did Mr. Young say anything to you about consulting Senator Garland?—A. I do not think he did.

Q. Did he withdraw his objection to the bill?—A. When Mr. Holman spoke to him he did not say any more. It was one of those things which pass without any demonstration.

Q. Did the bill pass without any discussion?—A. Yes, except what I said myself. The ayes and noes were not called, and nobody objected to the bill. I think you were on the floor at the time yourself.

Q. Do you know Casey Young?—A. Very well, indeed.

Q. Has he ever been at the Department to see you or to confer with you about it?—A. He passed through there one day and I asked him a question or two about it.

Q. When was that?—A. This winter some time.

Q. Since this investigation?—A. I will tell you what I asked him.

Q. I do not care about any conversation you had with him during this investigation.—A. I was only answering your question.

Q. If it happened since this investigation, I do not care to go into it.—A. It was since the investigation began. It was personal to myself entirely what I asked him.

Q. You have known Senator Garland some years?—A. I never was intimate with him. When I would go over to the Senate I would speak to him.

Q. Being chairman of the Committee on Patents and as prominent as you were, is it possible you never heard of this Pan-Electric Company? It is hardly possible that you had not heard of this Pan-Electric Company.—A. I had never heard of it, and had no occasion to look into it. I did not know who the company were until I saw the matter discussed in the papers.

Q. You knew that the Pan-Electric Company was in operation, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you see it advertised?—A. No, sir; I hadn't my attention called to it at all.

Q. Had you known Mr. Rogers?—A. No, sir; I did not know him.

Q. Had you anything to do with recommending him for or getting Rogers the position of electrician?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. You went out of Congress at the expiration of the Forty-eight Congress?—A. I went out as President Cleveland came in.

Q. Was Mr. Young a member of that Congress?—A. I believe not.

Q. Well, he would hardly have been on the floor of the House when this last bill was passed.—A. Yes, sir; now that I come to think of it he was in the Forty-eighth. The Forty-seventh, I reckon, he was out.

Q. He was a member of the Forty-eighth, was he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know General Atkins?—A. Oh, very well, sir.

Q. Was he in the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. All these men knew that you were in the Patent Office, Mr. Young and these other gentlemen named?—A. Yes, sir; they knew that I was in the Patent Office since April a year ago.

Q. Were you solicited to sit on this hearing before the Secretary of the Interior in 1885?—A. No, sir; I was not invited into the discussion at all.

Q. How near are you in rank to the Commissioner of Patents?—A. Next in rank. I transact my business as Acting Commissioner of Patents; that is the way I sign my name, although really I am Assistant Commissioner.

Q. Do you know Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. No, sir; I do not know him.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Casey Young knew last October that you had given an opinion that there was no law under which the Government suit could be brought without further legislation—as expressing that opinion in that report?—A. This last October?

Q. Yes.—A. Well, if he had examined my report he would know that, because I had made the report in several Congresses.

Q. Had you any knowledge of the application of Van Benthuyzen when he went into your Department and conferred with the Secretary of the Interior on the 14th of July, 1885?—A. I did not know of it.

Q. Didn't it come into your hands?—A. I will explain that the mode of operation is that the business goes into the hands of the Commissioner, and he assigns to me such business as he wishes me to transact.

Q. Did you know by whom it was assigned?—A. I did not.

Q. It appears in the record that it was assigned to the Department by the Attorney-General. He says in his letter, "I have the honor to send you for your consideration, and for an expression of your views thereupon, a letter of the 12th inst. from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, asking the institution of suit against the Bell Telephone patents." That is addressed to the Secretary of the Interior. I see by the indorsement on it that it was referred to the Commissioner of Patents for report. You say you know nothing about that, do you?—A. I do not remember anything about it. If I was Acting Commissioner of Patents, and if the Commissioner presented it, it might have come into my hands and passed out without any thought about it. I do not call to mind anything at all about it.

Q. I see here in the indorsement, "H. L. Muldrow, Acting Secretary." Who is H. L. Muldrow?—A. Henry L. Muldrow, an ex-member of Congress, whom I presume you know very well, and who is now Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Q. Is he Assistant Secretary in the Patent Office Department or under the Interior Department?—A. The Patent Office is under the Interior Department. The Secretary's supervision extends over the Patent Office.

Q. That Mr. Muldrow was not connected with the Patent Office proper, was what I meant by asking; not that I did not know him. I see in the indorsement below that of Mr. Muldrow the following: "On request of writer, and on assurance that it is in accord with the views of the Attorney-General, this paper is returned to such writer without report. Dated July 31, 1885. M. V. Montgomery, Commissioner of Patents." Do you know anything about that being withdrawn? Do you know anything about this application of Van Benthuyzen being withdrawn?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. And you do not think it was referred to you?—A. I do not think it was.

Q. Do you remember whether the Commissioner of Patents was in town at his post of duty in July, 1885?—A. I could not answer that question, because I do not know; I know he was suffering from hay fever along in the summer, and sometimes he went out of town, which left the office in my charge.

Q. I did not know but what he left on vacation?—A. He had not gone out of the city, but was sick during the summer.

Q. That original paper, with its indorsements, is in the Patent Office. Will you do me the kindness to see if you had anything to do with it, and see in whose hands it went?—A. When I go from here?

Q. Yes, sir; at your convenience.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it known to Mr. Montgomery that you expressed the opinion that is embraced in that report?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether or not?—A. I do not know positively, but I have every reason to believe that he did not know anything about it.

Q. Has he been in Congress?—A. No, sir; he has never been in Congress. He lives in Detroit, Mich., and is a man who has not been about Washington much.

Q. Mr. Montgomery came into office when?—A. He came in early—not early in March, but in March, 1885.

Q. And you say he has not been a member of Congress?—A. No, sir; he has not been a member of Congress to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Lamar had seen your report?—A. I do not know that he had.

Q. Did you never talk with him on the subject?—A. No, sir; never with him or Mr. Montgomery on the subject.

Q. And you are not invited to sit on that commission?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any one in the Patent Office that was?—A. No one but Mr. Montgomery that I know of.

Q. Did you ever look up the records in the office to see what opinions on the subject had been given?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was an inquiry ever made at your office, during the summer or fall of 1885, in regard to whether that bill of yours in the Forty-eighth Congress passed the Senate and became a law?—A. It seems to me as if some one asked there if the bill had become a law.

Q. When was that?—A. It was, I think, perhaps the latter part of the summer or in the fall.

Q. Can you not fix the date?—A. No, sir; I cannot now fix the date, because at that time it did not occur to me that there was any pressing pertinency about it, and I felt no interest in the matter until I saw it in the New York World.

Q. Do you know who made the inquiries?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Do you know that some one stole the bill in the Senate?—A. I had such a suggestion as that.

Q. When was that?—A. That was, I think, the latter part of the summer or fall. I do not know that I heard that it was stolen, but that the bill was mislaid.

Q. Where did you hear that?—A. At the Patent Office.

Q. Who told you?—A. I do not remember. It may have been, though, in conversation between myself and Mr. Byington.

Q. Mr. Byington, the clerk of the Committee on Patents?—A. Yes, sir. It seems that I recollect somebody else talking of it.

Q. Can you not be more definite?—A. I could not now swear who it was who came to me and asked me if the bill was not mislaid.

Q. When was that?—A. I think along about the last of summer or first of fall; along about that time.

Q. Are you positive it was before or after the time this matter was referred to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I think after it was referred.

Q. Well, before that time had the Commissioner of Patents asked you whether that bill had been passed and become a law?—A. No, sir; he never asked me anything about it before or since.

Q. You were not aware of any reference from the Attorney-General or the Department of Justice of any inquiry of that kind, were you?—A. No, sir; I never heard any thing of that kind.

Q. Are you are not aware of the Commissioner making inquiry as to that fact?—A. He never asked me.

Q. And you never knew of any such reference?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think the Commissioner was aware of that report of yours?—A. I do not think the Commissioner knew any thing about it. I am confident we had no conversation about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It seems to have been assumed here that you reported that no power existed authorizing the Government to bring suits to vacate patents prior to the introduction of this bill.

Mr. RANNEY. They would not allow me to ask him what his opinion was, and then I put in the report of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. I have read this report of yours, Mr. Vance, and—

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). I was not permitted to ask him what his view of the law was.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not asked him what he reported. I think a wrong impression has been made in regard to the report, and I want to call his attention to it.

Mr. RANNEY. Then it should be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Did I understand you to say, Mr. Vance, that your three reports were substantially the same?

The WITNESS. I think so, though I have not read them over recently.

Q. You say you think they were substantially the same?—A. I think, substantially the same.

Q. I will ask if your first report in the Forty-sixth Congress went further than to take this position, that the question as to whether a patent had been issued fraudulently or not could not be inquired into collaterally.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the proper way would be to put the reports in, and then I should not urge any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If this report goes in, it goes in to show what was the opinion of the party making it at the time.

Mr. RANNEY. I was proceeding to examine with that view, claiming that it was a matter which affected his action and differed from the other cases, and, objection being made by Mr. Hall, I yielded to it.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood that the objection was made to allowing the witness to give his opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that you want to get his opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking him as to his opinion, but as to these reports produced here.

Mr. RANNEY. If you put the reports in I shall not make the objection, only I should have been allowed to have done it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not remember to have heard the gentleman ask the question or pursue the line of inquiry I now contemplate.

Mr. RANNEY. I say that I believe I was right then and you are right now.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not asked a question, and you do not know whether I am right or wrong until I do something. I will ask you, Mr. Vance, have you looked at your report made from the Committee on Patents in the Forty-sixth Congress.

The WITNESS. I have not carefully examined it; I have an impression that they are substantially alike.

Q. You say that they are substantially alike.—A. That is my impression.

Mr. RANNEY. Now I think I can with propriety object. I object to his saying they are substantially alike unless they are put in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to them going in.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1711, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

JUNE 9, 1880.—Recommitted to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Vance, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 6456:

The Committee on Patents have had under consideration sundry bills referred to them, relating to patents issued, reissued, and extended, where fraud, concealment, or misrepresentation are alleged to have been used in the procurement thereof, and now beg to submit the following report, with an accompanying bill, which they recommend as a provision to cure a serious defect in the existing law.

By the act of April 10, 1790, creating the Patent Office, it was provided that where suit was brought for infringement, the defendant could plead all the defenses now allowed by the statute, as well as fraud in the procurement of the original patent or the reissue or extension of the same.

This provision was re-enacted in 1793, but in the act of 1870, revising and consolidating the patent laws, the defense of fraud was omitted.

It thus appears that whilst the most flagrant fraud or misrepresentation may be practiced in the procurement of a patent or its reissue or extension, there is to-day no statute provision by which it may be successfully pleaded as a defense against a charge of infringement or against the validity of the patent itself.

The Supreme Court, in The United States v. Stone, 2 Wallace, 525, says:

"The United States may properly proceed by bill in equity to have a judicial decree of nullity and an order of cancellation of a patent issued by itself, ignorantly or in mistake, for lands reserved from sale by law, and a grant of which by patent was therefore void."

In Rubber Company v. Goodyear, 9 Wallace, 788, the court says:

"Extended letters patent cannot be abrogated on any collateral proceeding for fraud (p. 788)."

The opinion of the court was delivered by Swayne, J. He refers (p. 796) to the 5th section of the act 1790, which provided for the repeal of patents, and reviews the legislation of Congress on that subject, and concludes that—

"It was the intention of Congress not to allow a patent to be abrogated in any collateral proceeding except in the particular instance mentioned, but to leave the remedy in all other cases to be regulated by the principle of general jurisprudence."

The judge refers (p. 797) to Jackson v. Lawton, 10 Johnson, 23, where Chancellor Kent said:

"Unless letters patent are absolutely void on the face of them, or the issuing of them was without authority, or was prohibited by statute, they can only be avoided in a regular course of pleading, in which the fraud, irregularity, or mistake is regularly put in issue."

The court further say, in referring to 1 Hening & Munford, 19, 187:

"The patent in that case was for land; but, as regards the point here under consideration, there is no distinction between such a patent and one for an invention or discovery. If there be, the case is stronger as to the latter."

Eureka Company v. Bailey, 11 Wallace, 488, Judge Miller delivered the opinion—

"A patent from the Government cannot be impeached for fraud in procuring its issue in any other mode than by a direct proceeding to set it aside (p. 492)."

Seymour v. Osborn, 11 Wallace, 543, Judge Clifford delivered the opinion. He referred to Railroad v. Stimpson, 14 Peters, 458; and Stimpson v. Railroad, 4 Howard, 384, holding that the fact of the granting of the reissued patent closed all inquiry into the existence of inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and left open only the question of fraud for the jury.

The court say :

"Since that time it has been definitely settled that neither reissued or extended patents can be abrogated by an infringer, in a suit against him for infringement, upon the ground that the letters patent were procured by fraud in prosecuting the application for the same before the Commissioner (page 543)."

Mourey v. Whitney, 14 Wallace, 434, the court say, page 441 :

"The general public is left to the protection of the Government and its officers.

"1. The fraud, if one exists, has been practiced on the Government, and, as the party injured, it is the appropriate party to assert the remedy or seek relief.

"2. A suit by an individual could only be conclusive in result as between the patentee and the party suing, and it would remain a valid instrument as to all others.

"The patentee would or might be subjected to innumerable vexatious suits to set aside his patent, since a decree in his favor in one suit would be no bar to a suit by another party.

"If, on the other hand, an individual finds himself injured, either specially or as a part of the general public, it is no hardship to require him to satisfy the Attorney-General that the case is one in which the Government ought to interfere, either directly, by instituting the suit, or indirectly, by authorizing the use of its name, by which the Attorney-General would retain such control of the matter as would enable him to prevent oppression and abuse in the exercise of the right to prosecute such a suit (page 441)."

The committee submit that from the foregoing it will appear that the Supreme Court constantly recognized this defect in the law, and sought to suggest means of meeting the difficulty by the application of the "general principles of jurisprudence."

To remove all doubt in the matter, and to relieve Congress from the consideration of questions which more properly belong to the judiciary, as well as to avoid all question of the constitutional power of Congress to repeal, limit, or vacate letters patent by legislative enactment subsequent to the issue of the patent, and to provide proper protection to all innocent users from the charge of infringement of patents that have been improperly obtained, your committee have prepared the accompanying bill, and hope that it may receive the unanimous approval of Congress. It cannot affect any valid patent properly obtained. A patent improperly obtained should not be permitted to levy tribute from the people.

Q. Now I call your attention to your report in the Forty-sixth Congress. I submit it to you. [Handing report to witness.] I want to know whether in your report on that bill you went further than to maintain this general proposition, that whether a patent was issued fraudulently or not could not be inquired into collaterally?

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that because you are asking what is in a report.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that is a valid objection.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not think it is valid?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I appeal from that decision and call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. HALE. I object myself because it is not competent to examine the witness in regard to the contents of a printed report. The reports speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair thought he was examining the witness for the purpose of bringing out what is in a printed report, he would not pursue that line of examination.

Mr. HALE. I shall have to vote against examining the witness in regard to the contents of a report. These reports speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not question that, but I am not asking for the contents of the paper.

(The question was read by the stenographer.)

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose the Chair will overrule me, and I ask for the ayes and noes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from Massachusetts has given in evidence a report made by this witness when chairman of the Committee on Patents—when a member of the Forty-eighth Congress—for what? To prove what the opinion of the witness was, and also the opinion of the Committee on Patents. It is here for that purpose. May I not ask this witness whether he has not made a report different from this, and point out the difference, and may I not in cross-examination ask him whether or not this report is his opinion and he changed it. Why may I not do that?

Mr. RANNEY. Do you put it in the form of an interrogatory?

The CHAIRMAN. And cannot I call his attention to the difference between one and another?

Mr. HANBACK. But this is not his opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is, or it has no business here.

Mr. RANNEY. It is put in as the opinion of the Committee on Patents.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is not competent. The report of a committee is not authority for anything.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. MOFFATT. If this committee was governed by the strict rules of law in regard to the admission of evidence it would be different, but it seems to me that we are here for the purpose of getting at facts referred to us, and we should not attempt to tie ourselves down to a strict construction of the rules of evidence, and I shall vote to allow this question and sustain the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I now understand that there is no objection to the question as you have stated it (referring to Mr. Ranney, who had made a suggestion to the chairman which the stenographer was unable to hear), to call the attention of the witness to the difference between the two reports.

Mr. RANNEY. The chairman having changed his question, I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not changed his question. Well, Mr. Vance, answer the question.

The WITNESS. State the question, if you please.

The CHAIRMAN. I call your attention to the report made by you in the Forty-sixth Congress, and also to the report given in evidence, made in the Forty-eighth Congress, and ask you whether the report made in the Forty-sixth Congress was the action of the committee upon the same ground as that made in the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. RANNEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you whether in your report to the Forty-sixth Congress you did not state, and base the action of your committee upon the ground, that a suit to invalidate a patent fraudulently issued could be brought only in the name of the United States, and that the matter could not be inquired into collaterally?

Mr. HANBACK. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what ground?

Mr. HANBACK. On the ground that the report shows for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the objection.

Mr. HANBACK. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Ask the witness if he read the reports, and if he made any changes in his reports.

The CHAIRMAN. I call attention to the fact that he made inconsistent reports.

Mr. HANBACK. Is it a question of the inconsistency of the witness here?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANBACK. He did not make this report. The whole committee made it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been put in here, as I understand, as his views, or it is not competent at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is shall the Chair be sustained?

The ayes and noes were taken and resulted as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Eden, Moffatt, and Hall. Noes—Messrs. Hale, Hanback, and Ranney.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the chair is overruled.

The WITNESS. Will you let me make a remark? I should like to explain what I meant by the answer I gave to the question last recorded, when I said that I thought these reports were substantially the same.

The CHAIRMAN. If the witness wishes to explain answer already made he may do so.

Mr. HALL. Is there any objection to my asking one or two questions?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. HALE. First allow the witness to make his explanation.

The WITNESS. My meaning was that they were substantially the same.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that because it will open the whole ground.

Mr. HALE. I think the witness has the right to make an explanation.

Mr. EDEN. I never heard of any committee or any court where a witness was not allowed to make an explanation if he desired to do so, and he has answered you that the reports were substantially alike. Now, you object to that because as you say it will open up the whole ground.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Have you examined the two papers called reports, which have been called to your attention?—A. Not recently, not until now, and I have not had a thorough chance now to go over them and examine them critically.

Q. Do you remember whether you have testified to the committee anything touching the effect of these reports, or any reports of the Committee on Patents while you were on that committee?—A. At this meeting?

Q. Here to-day.—A. I do not think I gave any opinion. I said that I thought the reports were substantially the same.

Mr. RANNEY. That has been ruled out.

Mr. HALL. That is in the record now.

Mr. HALE. I heard him answer that he thought the reports were substantially the same.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you remember, in answer to a question of Mr. Ranney, you replied substantially that these reports were on file, holding that the Government had no power to bring suits to vacate patents obtained by fraud?

Mr. RANNEY. I object.

Mr. HALL. What is the objection?

Mr. RANNEY. Because the Chairman has ruled upon that. I put no such question as that myself. I sent out to examine him on that line, but by your objection I was prevented.

Mr. HALL. Let the stenographer read the question.

(The question was read by the stenographer.)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. RANNEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. I hold that the question is competent.

Mr. RANNEY. I appeal from the decision of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is shall the ruling of the chair be sustained?

Mr. RANNEY. That is the thing to be determined by the record and not by the witness.

A vote was taken and the chair was sustained.

The question was ordered to be read, and the stenographer read as follows: Do you remember, in answer to a question of Mr. Ranney, you replied substantially that these reports were on file, holding that the Government had no power to bring suits to vacate patents obtained by fraud?

A. I did not answer such a question, according to the best of my recollection.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you not remember what the question was which was put to you, and to which you made a reply relating to what the reports of the Committee on Patents were?—A. I do not remember what the question was, but I remember stating to the committee that the reports were substantially the same and looking to given point, and that is authorizing the Attorney-General to bring suit.

Q. Now, I will ask you whether you made any statement in correction or explanation of that answer?

Mr. RANNEY. I ask the ruling of the chair on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is competent.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand that you undertook to rule that out.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall it. It seems that the witness has made a certain answer which, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, he wishes to explain, and I think he has a right to do so.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I will ask the witness if he desires to say anything in explanation of that answer he gave the committee?

The WITNESS. I would like to state this, that I was not speaking so much to the precise language of the report as I was to the fact that they were substantially the same, and as going to the point that the present laws did not authorize the Attorney-General to bring suit, and if you will look at the reports you will see that there is a matter of doubt as to whether the Attorney-General has the power.

Q. Then you mean to say that the similarity of the two reports was in the direction of enacting a declaratory statute, so as to make it certain?—A. So as to make it plain; that is what I meant to say.

Mr. RANNEY. It is violating a rule, however, that the committee has established. The committee voted on that, and still the members persist in disregarding the decision of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I want to correct myself in one of the votes had here to-day. The first witness examined gave his opinion as to the honesty or dishonesty of a certain gentleman. I do not think that testimony proper to go into the record, and if I voted to admit it I want to withdraw the vote.

Mr. EDEN. It was not stated in response to any question. He simply, in giving an account of the transaction he had with the Attorney-General, made that statement.

Mr. HALE. And stated, in his opinion, that General Garland was an honest man. If I voted to admit that testimony I wish to recall it.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose the proper proceeding would be for the gentleman to move a reconsideration of that vote.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is a matter of such importance as that.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that all this latter part of the record be stricken out.

Without taking action upon Mr. Ranney's motion the committee adjourned until April 23, 1886, 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1886.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

A. H. BYINGTON was put upon the stand, but, by his request, he was excused from being examined at this time.

THOMAS H. GARDNER, being recalled, was examined as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. I have been informed Mr. Gardner, that you desired to make some correction in your former testimony?—Answer. I made a statement the other day that I never spoke to any member of Congress in relation to the sale of stock, and I now am of that opinion. I met my friend, Mr. McComas, some days afterward and he told me that I had mentioned the matter to him about two years ago, which was before our company was organized. I may have had a conversation with him, but I had no recollection of it, nor had I when I testified here, nor have I now. Mr. McComas says this conversation occurred about two years ago, and my impression is that our company was not then organized. I make this statement, although I do not deem it material.

Q. You say you have no recollection now of this conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. The fact as to whether you did or did not have a conversation with Mr. McComas does not appear by your correction.—A. I have no doubt that Mr. McComas will state his recollections in the matter.

L. E. MCCOMAS, being duly sworn, was examined as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question.—Are you a member of Congress?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. From what State?—A. Maryland.

Q. How long have you been in Congress?—A. In the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. In no telephone company in any way of any sort.

Q. Have you at any time been solicited to take stock in any telephone company?—A. The only occasion that I recall was in the long session of the former Congress, I think about this time of year; Major Gardner asked me to buy some stock in a telephone company in which he was concerned, which he said would be a very good thing, and which was about to put up lines in the District of Columbia and Maryland, and elsewhere probably; we had a brief conversation and he offered to sell me the stock, and thought it would be a good investment; I declined to buy any stock; the conversation was very brief, and I turned to see some people who were waiting to see me, and he turned to see some people he wanted to speak with; it was several years ago, about this time probably—certainly in the long session of Congress.

Q. The long session of the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. Yes, the Forty-eighth.

Q. Two years ago?—A. Yes, sir. It was a brief, and casual conversation in which he offered to sell me some stock of some company, and I simply said I did not want to buy stock in any company. He said it would be prosperous, and would be a good investment, but I told him I did not want stock in any company. That was the subject of conversation in a general statement.

Q. Did he name the company?—A. Very likely he did, but I gave it so little attention that I could not recollect if I heard it mentioned.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was this the Washington Telephone Company?—A. I really cannot recollect at this time. My impression is it was a local company in Maryland certainly, and the District probably—one or two States—and as I had known Mr. Gardner for years, and he had known me, and coming from my State, he offered to sell to me this stock, and urged that it would be a profitable investment. The conversation lasted probably five minutes. Other things probably were referred to in the conversation of which I have some vague and dim recollection, but what I have stated was the substance of the conversation.

Q. Do you remember, in calling your attention to this company, if he named any gentleman in it?—A. I tried to recollect that, and maybe he did, though I am not prepared to say now upon my affirmation whom he named. He named several to me.

Q. Do you remember whether Bradley T. Johnson was one of them?—A. I have quite a distinct impression that Mr. Johnson was one of them.

Q. Can you not recall others?—A. I cannot positively, sir; not enough to name them.

Q. Did he say anything about your coming in on the ground floor, or anything of that kind?—A. I cannot recall that expression. He wanted to sell me stock in a company which was about to be organized, and he told me he believed it was a very good thing and a very good enterprise, and thought it would be a profitable investment. That is the substance of it. I have vague recollections which I should not like to give after the lapse of two years.

Q. Did you decline to buy?—A. I declined to buy.

Q. On what committee were you at that time?—A. District of Columbia and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Q. You say you have known Mr. Gardner some time?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the price he named for it?—A. I really cannot recollect, I gave so little attention to it. I gave two reasons for not buying, either one of which was sufficient. I had not the money to invest, and if I had I should not invest it in any stocks that I know of.

Q. Did Mr. Gardner know what position you had in the House?—A. I have no doubt. I think from the conversation he did. My impression is that Mr. Gardner referred to the fact that I, being a Maryland man, and also here on the District Committee, and well known here, was a reason why he wanted me to buy stock in what he supposed to be a very good investment, and one that would make a good return. The conversation was so brief and casual, that I then turned and talked with some of my constituents who were there and waiting to see me, and Mr. Gardner turned to see some persons there he was inquiring for, and he went off with a gentleman whom I did not know. He was a tall man, as I recollect.

Q. As a matter of fact you do remember that he named several gentlemen who were in this company, is that so?—A. My strong impression is that Mr. Gardner mentioned several gentlemen of my acquaintance who had bought stock in this company and who were interested in it, but I cannot after this lapse of time state anybody, except General Johnston, whom he did name.

Q. Do you mean Bradley T. Johnson?—A. Yes, sir. The other names that he used I cannot bring clearly to my mind.

Q. Do you remember whether he said Bradley T. Johnson was president of it?—A. I cannot recollect more definitely than I have said.

Q. You would recollect any other gentlemen being mentioned, if you knew them?—A. I cannot do that with any distinctness, as the conversation was only casual, and there at the House door. I should not like to name anybody that I did not positively remember. The conversation was so casual and of so little interest to me that I do not like to name anybody whom I could not distinctly remember. The conversation was very brief indeed.

By Mr. HALL.

Q. I infer from what you state that you understood from the conversation that the company into which you were invited had not then been organized?—A. I really gave it so little attention that I cannot recall the name of the company or anything else about the company further than I have answered.

Q. I mean whether it had any existence at all at that time. I understood Mr. Gardner to say at the time you fix for the conversation the company to which he belongs had not been organized and I am simply calling your attention to the point, whether you were invited to become a promoter of a company of that kind?—A. I was simply invited to buy stock.

Q. Was the word "stock" used, or "interest"?—A. That he wanted to sell me some stock, and from that I inferred the company was organized and he spoke of the company being a good one in which to invest and wanted me to buy some stock in it. Although I had seen him before and have seen him since, the subject was at no other time alluded to.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I suppose you have read something in the newspapers on the subject since then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that Bradley T. Johnson was president of this company, and learned something about the relationship since?—A. Not from Mr. Gardner, whether he was an officer of this company he named or any other company.

Mr. MOFFAT. When was this company organized?

The CHAIRMAN. I have an impression it was organized in May, 1884. Can you fix the date of the conversation with any accuracy, Mr. McComas?

The WITNESS. You know, Mr. Chairman, how very hard that is to do. It was during the long session of Congress; the conversation was very brief and casual, and took place in the lobby in the presence of dozens of people, many of whom were waiting to see me.

Q. You state that it was about this time two years ago?—A. My impression is that perhaps it was about this time, perhaps two months earlier or two months later. I hope I have made it distinct that I have no stock of that company, or any telegraph company, or any telephone company of any sort.

The CHAIRMAN. You have stated that, sir.

EDWARD CLARK, being duly sworn, was examined as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you hold any office connected with the House of Representatives?—

Answer. I hold the position of Architect of the Capitol.

Q. How long have you had that position?—A. Twenty years about.

Q. Have you any recollection of an application having been made to you for the appointment of J. Harris Rogers as electrician of the House?—A. I have no recollection of such an application being made to me by Rogers. My impression is that the application was made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who sent for me to consult about it. I do not think the application was made directly to me at all.

Q. In what Congress was that?—A. That was the Forty-eighth Congress.

Q. That was Speaker Carlisle?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you ever spoken to on the subject by Mr. Rogers himself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you spoken to by any other person than the Speaker of the House?—A. I was spoken to by Senator Harris and by a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the resolution providing for the restoration of the Rogerses was referred.

Q. You may state what was said to you by Senator Harris respecting the appointment?—A. I was sent for by Senator Harris, and he told me that he took an interest in Harry Rogers, who was an applicant for restoration to his former position, that of electrician, and it would be gratifying to him if he could be reappointed. That is the substance of it.

Q. Do you remember your reply?—A. Yes, sir; I replied that there were reasons for not doing it; one was that he was connected with a company.

Q. What did Senator Harris say to that?—A. I said it would be damaging if the Rogerses were successful; that it would be damaging to some members of Congress and to himself; that they were interested in getting telephones and electric lights in the Capitol, and these gentlemen would finally be called upon to vote on a question in which they were personally interested. Senator Harris said that put it in a new light to him; that he never saw it in that light before, and urged it no more. It appeared to be revelation to him.

Q. Did you give any other reason why he should not be appointed?—A. Yes, sir; that Mr. Harry Rogers was not reliable; that he was a skillful electrician, but off his center often, and we had, at times, considerable doubt of his ability to perform his duties.

Q. Do you remember any other reasons that you gave in any other conversations?—A. That was the substance of all conversations on the subject. Senator Harris said, "I thank you for speaking so plainly in the matter and showing to me what the effects might be." Perhaps I magnified the evil of the thing.

Q. Did you then know the gentlemen who have been named as being connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir. I think I met Mr. Young shortly after I saw Senator Harris, Mr. Young being on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and this resolution having been referred to that committee. I met Mr. Young in the corridor one day, and went on to explain why I could not favor the project of restoring Rogers. He said, perhaps, "Well," or something like that.

Q. What reasons did you give to Mr. Young for not favoring this restoration?—A. I gave to him the same reason that I gave to Senator Harris. I explained that Senator Harris had sent for me and made this request, and being himself interested in behalf of the Rogerses, I told him what I told Senator Harris, as I thought the same applied to him, though I am doubtful if Mr. Young asked anything about it.

Q. What did he say to you if he did not ask an explanation?—A. He listened and walked off.

Q. Had he called your attention to the matter?—A. No; I met him and made this explanation to him, knowing that Mr. Young was connected with the company.

Q. I understand that you spoke to him about it; that you introduced the subject.—A. Oh, yes; I introduced the subject.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Senator Garland respecting the application?—A. No, sir; I cannot remember that I ever had any conversation with Senator Garland in relation to the reappointment of Rogers, but I did have a conversation with him in relation to placing telephones in the Senate Chamber. He said that the Rogerses were anxious to put telephones in the Senate Chamber, and asked me what would be the proper mode of getting permission, and I said that the presiding officer of each House had control of the respective Halls, and nobody but they could give the privilege; he would therefore have to go to Senator Edmunds, who was then the presiding officer pro tempore of the Senate. There was nothing more done in the matter. Senator Edmunds did not agree, or else Mr. Garland did not ask his permission. I suppose that was the case, as nothing more was done in the matter.

Q. Do I understand you that you made that statement to Senator Garland, that he would have to go to the presiding officer?—A. Yes, sir; and that is the only conversation I remember having with Senator Garland in relation to Rogers as electrician.

Q. Do you remember when that was, Mr. Clark?—A. No, sir; but I think it was the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress, about the time that Mr. Rogers was seeking restoration.

Q. Did you know at that time that Senator Garland was connected with the telephone company referred to?—A. Yes, sir; because I had the prospectus and saw who the directors were.

Q. Was any allusion made to that fact in your conversation?—A. No, sir.

Q. You state that you had an interview with the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in reference to J. Harris Rogers's reinstatement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the members of that subcommittee?—A. Here is a copy of the resolution which I presume was introduced in the House, and which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. [Displaying paper.]

Mr. HALL. Is that the Rogers resolution you have there?

The WITNESS. This is the resolution, I presume, which was introduced in the House. Here is a letter that I have that was not official, but I think came to the electrician. At any rate, the matter was referred to the subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, consisting of Mr. Stockslager (chairman), Mr. Keen, of New Jersey, and Mr. Reese, of Georgia, a member of the present House.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you say this is a copy of what you understand to be the Robinson resolution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you spoken to in respect to that resolution by any gentleman named—Mr. Young, Senator Harris, or any of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. State what occurred between you and the subcommittee.—A. They asked me what I thought of the matter; if I thought the resolution should pass, and I told them no, and gave my reasons. One reason was, as I had stated to Senator Harris, that it would bring scandal on some members, on one a member of their committee, meaning Mr. Young here. [Pointing to Mr. Young.] He said, "How?" I said that he and these other parties were connected with the company of which Rogers was the electrician, inventor, and a director. That appeared to be new to them, and they asked me if that was so. I happened to have the prospectus with me, and showed it to them, and then I heard nothing more of it. They did not report the resolution, however, as I suppose they saw the impropriety.

Q. Was any other person appointed at that time? Was there any change made?—A. No, sir; no change. Mr. Tolcot was then electrician, but Rogers wanted to supersede him.

By Mr. RANNEY:

If that is the resolution I should like to have it marked and put in the record of these proceedings. Did you refer in any of these conversations—at least I do understand that you did refer in these conversations—to the fact that these gentlemen were connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir; I did, both to the committee and to Senator Harris.

Q. Which member of the committee came to you?—A. I was sent for to the committee room to meet the subcommittee to which this resolution had been referred.

Q. Who composed that subcommittee?—A. Mr. Stockslager, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Mr. Reese, and Mr. Keene of New Jersey.

Q. How many men came to see you before Mr. Robinson introduced the resolution?—A. None. The only person I spoke to was Senator Harris. He did not come, but sent for me to see him at the Senate chamber.

Q. And you went there to see him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Garland, I understood you to say, went to see you?—A. I have an indistinct recollection of Senator Garland coming to see me, to know what course he should pursue to get Rogers' permission to put telephones in the Senate chamber, but I have no recollection of his saying anything about the reappointment. What fixes it on my mind is this, that when I saw Mr. Garland, whom I knew to be one of this company, I thought that his object was the Rogers' reappointment.

Q. You have not read his testimony, have you?—A. No, sir.

Q. I want you to read it, so that you may be able to state positively whether he did or did not. I understood him to say that he did see you.—A. I think he is mistaken. He came to see me about putting Rogers telephones in the Senate.

Q. Did anybody except Senator Harris speak to you on the subject, if Mr. Garland did not?—A. No; nobody else.

Q. Did Mr. Rogers come himself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect saying anything to any of them that you would not consent, because there were so many interested that it would be another Credit Mobilier?—A. Yes, sir; I did say something like that to Senator Harris and the three gentlemen of the committee.

Q. Did you say anything about Credit Mobilier?—A. Yes, sir; that was the expression I used.

Q. What did you say on that subject?—A. I said it might produce a scandal similar to the Credit Mobilier, because five of the directors were members of Congress, and it appeared that the stock might be divided among other members judging from the composition of the directory. I said to him, "Your political opponents might use this argument against you, and if they do not your business competitors would." He said that was new to him, as it never appeared to him in that light, and he urged it no further.

Q. That was said to Senator Harris, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did anybody ever offer you any of this stock?—A. I have a letter here from J. W. Rogers. It is headed 315 4½ street, N. W., Washington, D. C., and says, "My dear Mr. Clark: I send you herewith a proof of circular which explains itself, &c." Here is the letter, you may read it yourself. [Handing letter to Mr. Ranney.]

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Who wrote that letter?

Mr. RANNEY. J. W. Rogers. I will read it.

(Mr. Ranney had some difficulty in deciphering the writing and asked the witness to read.)

The letter was read, as follows:

315 FOUR-AND-A-HALF STREET, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CLARK: I send you herewith a proof of circular which explains itself, and mindful of the many pleasant entre pas which I and my sons have had with you for several years past, I beg you to accept $10,000 stock in the Pan-Electric Company.

Your name as a director, also, if you should permit it, would guarantee honest and square dealings with the public.

Your friend,

J. W. ROGERS.

P. S.—Now for bargains, intrigue, and corruption. Harry has made great advances in the thermotelemeter, and begs you to lend him one with the graduated galvanometer, in Landon's room, for a few days, when he will return it.

Q. What is the date of that?—A. It is dated February the 12th. I judge that from my reply, which is dated February the 13th.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. What year?—A. 1883.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What was your reply to it?—A. I will read:

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1883.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours, I will say that you can have the thermotelemeter whenever you send for it.

While thanking you for your kind offer, I must decline to be connected with any electric company either as a stockholder or director, as it is in the possibilities that I may be called upon some day to decide as to the use of some electrical apparatus for Government service.

Respectfully yours,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect, United States Capitol.

Mr. J. W. ROGERS,
No. 315 Four-and-a-half street, N. W.

Q. Was the stock inclosed in the letter?—A. No, sir; no stock was inclosed.

Q. What period was that in relation to the time when they applied to you to put Rogers in as electrician?—A. I think that was before.

Q. Which was before?—A. I think was dated before. I am not positive. I have not my mind connected with that and the other at all.

Q. If I recollect, that application to have Rogers's appointment made commenced December, 1884?—A. This is 1883.

Q. Then the time he tried to get you to appoint him was subsequent to your receiving this letter?—A. He did not try to get me to appoint him.

Q. I mean others?—A. Yes, and he was under the impression that the appointment lay with the Speaker; but the Speaker decided that he had simply a confirming voice in the matter. The Speaker told me he was pressed in this matter, and sent for me to consult about it, and I spoke to him, and he said he thought I was perfectly right.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is the reply dated the day of the receipt of this letter from Rogers?—A. The reply was made the very day that letter was received.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you ever have any stock sent to you afterward?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody connected with the House that did have any?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or with the Senate?—A. No, sir.

Q. I see you had a circular sent to you; you say that you were aware when Senator Harris came to you, of the fact that these parties were connected with this enterprise. How did you learn that?—A. I had a prospectus which the Rogerses sent, showing that these gentlemen were connected with that enterprise. Here is the prospectus now, and you will see the five names there. (Handing paper to Mr. Ranney.)

Q. From whom did you receive this prospectus?—A. I do not know. My impression is that the pamphlet which had the same names of directors in it was sent me by Rogers. But that one I picked up somewhere. I do not think that was sent to me at all. That is a more recent issue.

Q. This circular contains the names of directors, letter of Myers to Garland, and letter of Garland to Myers. I understood you to say that Mr. Rogers sent you a circular?—A. Yes, sir; a circular in which there was the same list of directors. I think I left that with the subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds when they were examining into the resolution referred to them.

Q. When you went to the subcommittee in relation to the matter, you had it then, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which disclosed the relation of these parties to it?—A. Yes.

Q. And you knew by the circular who they were?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was sent to you by Dr. Rogers?—A. I think so.

Q. Where did you get this one?—A. I think Mr. Tolcot, the present electrician, gave it to me, but I cannot be positive about that. But I do not trace it up as coming from either of the Rogers, in any way at all.

Q. Have you the circular which was sent to you which disclosed the relation of these parties to the enterprise?—A. I think I left it with that committee. It was a pamphlet perhaps of ten or twenty pages, and contained the names of the directors.

Q. Did you say anything to either of these gentlemen about the fact that there had been or was pending before Congress the project of establishing a postal telegraph?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you get the resolution which you presented here, and did not put in?—A. I think that was inclosed in Mr. Rogers' letter. I think he said, "I inclose resolution, which explains itself." That was the circular.

Q. Well, which circular was named in that letter?—A. Probably this one [pointing to paper headed "The Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Co."].

Q. That could hardly be, because I see in that a letter of Mr. Garland's dated in 1884, unless there is a mistake in the date.—A. No; I cannot tell, really. I cannot tell what this circular was. I think it is likely this may be it, because it looks like it had been folded to go in that same envelope in which Mr. Rogers' letter was inclosed.

Q. It would be impossible that that circular was sent with a letter dated in February, 1883, would it not?—A. Well, I may in looking over my papers find it.

Q. It may be that it was so near the first of January that 1883 may have been written instead of 1884. It is a very probable mistake to make.—A. It may be, but I can find out by looking in my press copy-book, which contains letters of my office.

Q. I see the company was not formed that early in 1883. It was not formed until the date of this written agreement, in March, 1883. If your letter was written in February, 1883, it would be before these men were associated with that company. Now, you may be mistaken about the date. Your letter in reply might suggest the possibility of your writing 1883 instead of 1884.—A. I guess that is the right date, because at the time I did not know that any public men were interested in this company at all.

Q. When you got that letter?—A. Yes, sir; and sometime after that I got this pamphlet—this prospectus.

Q. And in the letter you got the circular you cannot recollect?—A. I cannot.

Q. And cannot recollect when you got this one here?—A. No, sir; I think Mr. Tolcot, the present electrician, gave it to me.

Q. Do you know when?—A. No; may be he can tell. I could not say. Sometimes he would say, "Here is something on the telephone business," and hand it to me.

Q. You say you got other documents, and perhaps you can make an examination in your office and speak definitely in regard to this matter of date.—A. If that is a misdate I will find it in our press copy-book of letters; I will find there whether it was 1884 or 1883. The letters all come in regular order in the book, and I can tell very readily.

Q. Perhaps you are right about the date of the letter. Did anybody ever offer you any of the stock since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody else connected with Congress in a subordinate condition (employés) to whom stock had been offered?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. You have been a good many years Architect of the Capitol?—A. Twenty years, sir.

Q. That resolution which you have brought here, do you recall when you got it?—A. I do not. I do not know when I got that. I got it soon after the resolution was introduced. I do not think the resolution introduced was printed. I have not been able to find it. I wanted to get it, and I went to the committee-room to ascertain if I could get a copy of the resolution that had been referred. Whether it was because there was some difficulty in getting it, or the clerk was not there, that I did not get it, I cannot say; but I got Mr. Tolcot, the electrician, to go and get a copy of that, and a day or two afterwards, I think it was, he brought that printed copy, but that was not printed by the Congressional Printer.

Q. I observe that it is not the resolution which Mr. Robinson introduced.—A. Yes, and I think I have a letter which I got from Mr. Tolcot, written by J. Webb Rogers, saying that by the inclosed copy you will see the New York delegation desire the Rogerses restored to their former place, and hoping that Mr. Tolcot would vacate, or something like that.

Q. But you think you got that resolution in a letter from somebody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom?—A. I think that came in a letter addressed to Mr. Tolcot, the present electrician, from Mr. Rogers.

Q. I see that puts it on the ground of politics. I recollect in the testimony of Mr. Rogers that it was not put on the ground of politics. In the resolution introduced by Mr. Robinson there is nothing of that kind in it, but this one seems to refer to politics. Do you know anything of any change in the resolution as at first proposed?—A. No, sir; I did not read the resolution first proposed.

Q. Was this the one that was before the committee at the time you had the hearing, or the resolution that Mr. Robinson introduced?—A. That Mr. Robinson introduced. Were they not identical? I should judge from that erasure there [pointing to an erasure in the paper before him] that that was not in the Robinson resolution.

Q. Do you know by whom the erasure was made?—A. I do not. I suppose by Mr. Rogers.

Q. Now mark these papers, and have the stenographer put them in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. It should not go in the record unless it is known to be the Robinson resolution.

Mr. EDEN. It seems that is not the resolution the committee acted on at all.

Mr. RANNEY. The preamble part of it is not in the Robinson resolution.

The WITNESS. Was the Robinson resolution ever printed?

Mr. RANNEY. We have had it here. I suppose it is in the record. I have not looked at it lately.

The WITNESS. I think I could go to my office and find the letter in which I suppose this was transmitted.

(Mr. Clark was permitted by the committee to leave the stand for the purpose of visiting his office and making the examination alluded to.)

Hon. POINDEXTER DUNN, M. C., sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a member of Congress?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been a member?—A. I was elected first to the Forty-sixth Congress, and have been continuously a member since.

Q. Your name has been mentioned by some witness, I do not remember by whom, in connection with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, so I have seen in the public prints.

Q. Are you a stockholder in that company?—A. I am not, sir.

Q. Have you ever been solicited by any one to become a stockholder?—A. I am not sure as to solicitation. I have discussed the matter with persons who had stock; I am not sure that any one ever solicited me to purchase stock; I never was solicited to accept stock.

Q. Was the discussion you speak of at your instance or at the instance of the parties?—A. I think at my own instance.

Q. Who were the parties?—A. Perhaps I had better state the facts about as they occurred, if you will allow me.

Q. Yes.—A. The Rogers telephone was first brought to my attention, I think, during the Forty-seventh Congress. I am not sure whether it was the last part of the Forty-seventh Congress or the first part of the Forty-eighth Congress. I was informed that it was on exhibition over at what is called the Congressional Hotel, and was requested to go and look at its performance; but I did not go. Afterwards, I do not know how long, but a considerable length of time afterwards, the fact was brought to my knowledge that a company had been organized. Just how it came to my knowledge I do not remember, whether by seeing a publication in the papers or by getting in possession of a prospectus, or whether it was simply information given me by some friends, and in such terms as to lead me to conclude that it was probably a very favorable opportunity to make a good earning with the investment of a small sum of money. Finding also that a number of my friends were stockholders, members of the company, I made a very thorough investigation of it to ascertain, first, whether the stock was a promising investment, and second, whether I could buy it and on what terms.

I think I went first to Hon. Casey Young, who was the secretary of the company, to ascertain from him its exact business status and the business policy of the company. After a conversation with him I was referred to Senator Harris and Senator Garland for an interview on the subject of the law affecting the interests of the Pan-Electric Company, particularly as to possible litigation on the question of a conflict with the Bell Company on an infringement. I found, through Mr. Young, that the Pan-Electric Company would not sell stock at all. They refused to sell stock for the reason, as given to me by him and other members, that there was a legal question involved in possible conflict with the Bell Company; that the question of conflict must come up on the point of infringement and be determined somewhere, and the company had determined until that was settled they would not sell stock at all.

I then had an interview, I think, next, with Senator Harris, and that was of not much length and not any consequence; he referred me to Mr. Garland. I wanted to talk over minutely and carefully the law points involved, if I could ascertain what they were. I saw Mr. Garland. In the meanwhile I had been placed in possession of his written opinion on the subject, and I went to him and had a very thorough talk generally about the matter. I found on the matter of law points involved that he had examined very carefully Mr. Edmunds's brief in the Drawbaugh case, then pending in the United States court for the western district of New York. Mr. Edmunds was counsel for Drawbaugh. By comparison of the Rogers telephone with the Pan-Electric telephone on all the points that it claimed to have covered by its patent, he was of the opinion that the Pan telephone had one single point on which it might stand independently in a contest with the Bell telephone if Drawbaugh failed in that suit. In addition to all the points that Drawbaugh had, it had one additional on which he thought it might stand in conflict with Bell.

I found then, in the course of further conversations, that Dr. Rogers and Mr. Looney were willing to sell stock. Looney and Rogers seemed to own a block of stock to themselves. They were willing to sell their shares. None of the other members were willing to sell either their own shares or to allow the company to sell what it had subject to its control not assigned to individual members. I then had a conversation with Mr. Looney and Mr. Rogers—the doctor, the elder Rogers, I mean. I think I also met his son at his house. They were willing to sell and were very sanguine as to the possibilities of profit and wealth for the company and the stockholders of the company. We talked over matters a good deal, but the sum of all my investigations of the matter and talks with them, was that I concluded that I could not afford to invest the little money I might be able to borrow, for I had none of my own, in a thing so uncertain as that.

I should state, however, that in the meanwhile after I asked Colonel Young and Mr. Garland questions pertaining to the business management of the company and the law features of the case, I asked them as personal friends for their advice about the matter. They both advised me to invest neither money nor valuable property in it. Mr. Garland's remark was that he considered the stock something like a lottery ticket. If it stood in a conflict with the Bell Company he thought it would be very valuable, but the Bell Company had thus far won all suits against contestants. They both advised me to invest neither money nor valuable property in it, and my conclusion was that I would not buy the stock at any price at all.

Q. Is that all?—A. That is about the sum of all I know. Those interviews ran through perhaps a period of two months.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Be kind enough to fix that period as near as you can—the year and the part of the year, the season or month.—A. Let me see if I can do that definitely. [After reflecting.] My impression is it was the summer of 1884.

Q. During a session of Congress?—A. Yes, I think so. Was that a short session or a long session that terminated in 1884?

Q. A long session.—A. I guess it was during the latter part of the session and possibly extending—well, no. I left here very promptly when the session ended. I remember that. I left a day before it ended. It must have been during that session of Congress, I guess. I will not be positive about the time; I think it was that time.

Q. Do you remember whether it was before the Presidential election?—A. It may have been; I think it was before the Presidential election. I started to say it may have been the spring or summer of 1885.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Perhaps you can fix it by the Attorney-Generalship.—A. It was the summer of 1884—Mr. Garland was a Senator then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was before the Presidential election?—A. I was not here when he became Attorney-General, and did not see him since then until this last September.

Q. Then you fix it at the last part of the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What makes you think that Mr. Garland has examined the brief of Mr. Edmunds in the Drawbaugh case?—A. I think he told me so himself.

Q. Are you quite sure of that?—A. That is my distinct impression.

Q. Did you see the brief itself?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he tell you he had done it?—A. I have an impression that he did; that he had either examined it or knew the points made in it. We discussed the matter of a possible conflict.

Q. Did you have any correspondence with Rogers connected with it?—A. I do not think I ever did. I think all my communications were personal interviews.

Q. You had the interviews during the two months you have stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not have any poetry sent you?—A. No; I did not have any poetry sent me, nor any stock.

Q. Nor in the course of those two months did you have interviews with Mr. Young about it?—A. Oh, I could not tell you that. I think the first interview I had with any member of the company on the subject was with Mr. Young. He being informed—he was secretary of the company—I went to him for an interview as to its organization and as to the purpose and policy of the company.

Q. Well, how early was that, do you think?—A. My impression is that was pretty early in the spring.

Q. Was he then a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on the same committee with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where did you talk with him; where were you when you talked with him; in the House, at the Capitol?—A. No, sir; at his room on Thirteenth street was the first interview I ever had with him.

Q. Did he show you any papers?—A. Oh, yes; he showed me that prospectus, and an opinion signed perhaps by Senator Harris and Senator Garland both; at least one of them, if not both. I have an impression there was some paper signed by Mr. Marble, an ex-Commissioner of Patents, also that I was shown.

Q. He expressed confidence that the patent was valid?—A. Yes; I either saw a paper, or was informed it was Mr. Marble's opinion that it was the most sensitive instrument that was ever invented.

Q. (Submitting a paper.) Will you look at the circular with the opinion of Mr. Garland and see if you recall that opinion of Mr. Garland?—A. I would not undertake now to identify any paper I saw then.

Q. How many opinions of Mr. Garland did he show you?—A. I do not recollect of but one.

Q. But one?—A. No; and I would not say positively that there was but one, or more. I simply have a distinct recollection that there was a written opinion signed by Mr. Garland in some form.

Q. (Submitting a paper.) Perhaps by reading that you may recall it?—A. After looking at paper submitted.) Well, now, this corroborates very much my recollection of the character of opinion that I was shown at that time. I suppose this is it.

Q. The opinion of Mr. Garland? Dated when, as you read it?—A. This is dated January 5, 1884.

Q. What other papers did he show you?—A. He showed me, perhaps, a prospectus of the company, or some papers which I would not undertake to describe or identify. He did not show me numerous papers.

Q. Look through it. You recall a part of it. Perhaps you may recall the rest.—A. The thing had been represented to me in rather rosy colors, and when I had an interview with Mr. Young he discouraged me a good deal. I had gone there with a hope of finding something very good or promising.

Q. I thought you said Mr. Young was the first one who spoke to you about it?—A. No; I said he was the first one of the company to whom I spoke.

Q. Was that opinion of Mr. Garland on a separate paper or on the prospectus?—A. I do not remember that.

Q. Possibly if you will run your eye through that you will recall that that was the prospectus, as you have done with regard to the letter?—A. I do not think I saw this paper. I may have seen it. My impression is that I was furnished a pamphlet by Dr. Rogers, in which I found more literature about the company than anywhere else or everywhere else.

Q. Before your interview with Mr. Young?—A. No, sir; afterwards, and after my interview with Mr. Garland.

Q. I understood you to say that Mr. Young showed you the letter of Mr. Garland?—A. No; I do not know who did. I said I did not know who did. It may have been there or it may have been at Dr. Rogers's. I have now a more distinct recollection that Dr. Rogers gave me some kind of a pamphlet containing all that is here, and apparently more than there is here. I do not think Mr. Young furnished me any literature at all. I do not recollect that he did.

Q. You say Mr. Young discouraged you?—A. Very much, except on buying stock.

Q. And Mr. Garland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said it was like a lottery?—A. He said he regarded the stock very much in point of value as he would a lottery ticket.

Q. Did he say to you that its value depended upon the validity of the Bell Telephone patents?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did he say?—A. That it depended entirely whether it would stand in a conflict with Bell on the question of infringement. Litigation was not discussed on any other theory.

Q. Did he not show you that he had given his opinion that it was not an infringement?—A. Yes; he believed positively that it was not an infringement, and he believed it had one independent point to stand upon which no other telephone had. He said all others might fail in conflict with Bell, and yet the Pan might stand on one single point. I could not restate what that point was, but he stated that point and cited a decision or two to support it.

Q. And did he indicate any other difficulty in the way of the success of it beyond this alleged infringement of Bell?—A. None in the world; I never heard of any other.

Q. Then the only difficulty about the thing was the alleged infringement?—A. That was all.

Q. And on that he expressed a very confident opinion?—A. He and the company seemed to entertain no doubt in the world that there would be a conflict whenever their telephones were put into use.

Q. But he thought it was a very good thing, provided there was no infringement?—A. Oh, yes; they all believed that it was the most sensitive instrument that had ever been invented, and I was taken to where I could witness experimental tests of it. Of course I understood those tests were being made under the most favorable conditions which they could provide. I could hear not only ordinary conversation, but I could hear whispers between Harris's office and Rogers's office, and determined the fact that it was a whisper. I could plainly understand that it was a whisper—could distinguish the whisper.

Q. And could you tell whose whisper it was?—A. No; I could not tell that. I did know, because I knew who it was talking. I could recognize Dr. Rogers's voice very distinctly.

Q. Then I understand they indicated no doubt about its success, provided it was not an infringement?—A. No one had any doubt about that.

Q. And they had no doubt, so far as their opinion was concerned, that it was not an infringement?—A. Oh, no; they did not feel that there was no doubt; while they believed it would stand the test, they were full of doubts; I do not think they would have given me the advice they did if they had been entirely without doubt on the subject; they all felt a large measure of doubt and uncertainty involved in it.

Q. And the only thing in the way was the Bell patent?—A. That is what they thought; that is, as to whether it was an infringement on the Bell patent or not.

Q. Did they show you Mr. Harris's opinion on it?—A. I have an impression that I saw a paper signed by Mr. Harris in the nature of an opinion; I would not undertake to say just what it was; I have an impression of that sort; when I reached the conclusion that I would not buy any stock at any price, I dismissed the whole subject from my mind and never thought of it any more until it got into the newspapers again.

Q. You knew Mr. Looney, who was in it?—A. Oh, yes; I had known him from my boyhood.

Q. He was a citizen resident where?—A. Of Memphis, Tenn.

Q. Formerly a candidate for governor of that State?—A. I do not recollect that he was; I do not remember when he was ever a candidate for governor of the State. He is a very prominent and distinguished citizen of the State.

Q. What price was named to you for the stock?—A. Well, it was thought I could buy it for 10 cents. Looney thought that, and Rogers said if I saw proper to buy it he could sell it for 10 cents.

Q. Ten dollars a share, if par was a hundred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was Looney to let you have at that price?—A. No definite amount was stated at all. Dr. Rogers seemed willing to sell indefinitely.

Q. You have known Dr. Rogers how many years?—A. I never knew him in my life until I was introduced to talk to him about that matter.

Q. As I understand you, he did not come to you, but you went to him?—A. I went to him.

Q. You had heard it talked of?—A. The matter was brought to my attention with such colorings and accounts as to make me believe it was a very valuable purchase. I first went to Mr. Young and then went to Mr. Garland and had a law talk. In the mean time I met Looney and he told me that he and Rogers would sell stock, and that led to the interview with Rogers.

Q. Had you not heard it talked of in the House by the members, where you got your idea of it?—A. I do not know. I think the first account I ever had given to me of the invention at all was in the House. Some person in the House told me they were going to have an exhibition of the new telephone over at the Congressional Hotel. I was invited to go and witness it, but I did not go.

Q. Can you recall who that person was in the House?—A. I believe it was General Manning, of Mississippi.

Q. Was there any one else?—A. No; I do not remember of any one else.

Q. Had you not heard it talked up in the House?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Money talk of it?—A. I do not think I ever did until I met him in Mr. Young's office when I went there for an interview. I do not think he ever mentioned it to me.

Q. He was there when you had one of your interviews with Young?—A. I think he was there.

Q. Did he participate in it?—A. I think that we talked, very probably.

Q. Did he tell you he was a director in it?—A. I do not remember about that. I saw the paper showing he was one of the stockholders. I do not remember about his mentioning himself as one of the stockholders.

Q. Yes; he had ten thousand in one and fifty thousand in another?—A. No; I do not remember. I do not think I ever had much talk with Money about it. [Referring to a paper in his hand.] Yes; I see his name now. His name is on the prospectus, showing he was one of the directors.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Money was not a director in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. [Resuming.] On that circular you see his name. I think he was a director?—A. This is the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company. I do not recollect Money's name in connection with it.

Q. You knew at that time that he was interested in some way in the company?—A. I do not know that I did.

Q. Did he not speak of it?—A. If he did, I do not remember what he said. I would not pretend to relate the details of a conversation had then.

Q. Had you not heard Casey Young speak of the matter in the House too?—A. Oh, we talked of it often at various places during that time. We may have talked in the House, or anywhere. We may have talked about it anywhere at all. I could not undertake to state where; only I remember distinctly that my first interview was at his house, and I went there for that purpose.

Q. It would seem from the testimony that the stock had been offered to quite a number of the members of the House. Did you know of it?—A. No, I did not know of it until I saw it in proof here from Dr. Rogers's evidence. That is the first I ever knew of that.

Q. Did you have any letters from Mr. Young on the subject?—A. Never in my life. I do not think I ever had any correspondence with anybody at all about it.

Q. Did any one communicate with Senator Vest about some of it?—A. I do not remember anything about that. I do not recollect hearing his name mentioned in connection with it at all. I was simply making an investigation in my own personal interests to see whether I wanted to buy some or not, and when I got through with that investigation and dismissed the subject from my mind I do not think I ever talked of it any more.

Mr. RANNEY. Nobody claims that you ever purchased or took any of the stock.

The WITNESS. Oh, no; I never did.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You have been inquired of in regard to conversations in the House between yourself and other members, and you said at one time there was about to be an exhibition of the power of this?—A. [Interrupting.] Of what was represented to me then as a new telephone.

Q. In those conversations, was there any one urging you to become interested?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Or becoming a promoter or purchasing stock?—A. Oh, no; I never heard it discussed in that connection.

Q. Those conversations were simply in the direction of its being a valuable scientific improvement?—A. That was all. It had probably then become a historic fact that persons who had invested small sums in the Bell telephone had made great profits out of it, and I was investigating it purely as a business possession.

Q. But I am speaking about the exhibition at the Congressional Hotel.—A. I understood that to be an exhibition for the purpose of interesting people to—well, an exhibition of the real merits of a newly invented telephone for the purpose of interesting people in the enterprise, or selling stock, I do not know which.

Q. I understand you to say you never heard anybody and nobody ever proposed to sell you any stock except Young?—A. No, not Young.

Q. I mean Harris?—A. Looney and Rogers; not Harris.

Q. Looney and Rogers were not in the House?—A. Oh, no, sir; they were only private citizens.

Q. I will ask you whether this exhibition was not simply for the purpose of showing to any person who desired to make the investigation that this was a superior and wonderful instrument?—A. That was all.

Q. Was there any prospectus then pending in which the public were invited to invest in stock?—A. I think none at all. None were brought to my attention. Months after that, I do not know how long after that, the organization of this Pan-Electric Company was brought to my attention, and that was when I made my business investigation of it.

Q. Do you know whether quite a number of persons went over there to witness the operations?—A. I do not. I do not know who went, nor how many went. I heard some talk about its wonderful performances.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you suggest to Senator Garland or ask him this question: "Why are these letters of yours published recommending this thing if you do not think anything of it?"—A. No; that question did not occur to me, because I went to him to ascertain just exactly what he did think. I never saw anything from him representing the stock as being of great value. All I ever saw from him or ever heard from him was simply touching the law—its possible chances to stand a litigation testing a question of infringement on the Bell telephone. I never heard any other opinion from him. I think it was the universal opinion that the stock would be exceedingly valuable if the telephone could stand that test.

Q. Did it not strike you as a little singular if it was like a lottery?—A. (Interrupting.) O, he did not say it was like a lottery. He said he regarded the stock in point of value pretty much as he would a lottery-ticket—pretty uncertain.

Q. Did it not strike you as a little singular that he should say that and at the same time have his letters out speaking of it as if there were no doubt on the question of infringement and representing as to its value?—A. No, sir. Knowing Senator Garland as I knew him, that suggested nothing at all singular or unusual to me. To a man who did not know his integrity and character as I knew it, it might have suggested something of that sort; but I knew him too well to think anything of the kind. He is not generally an over-sanguine man; he is a man of sober judgment.

Q. You did not see the letter to Mr. Gardes that has been put in here, did you?—A. I do not know that I did. Is it that printed letter that you showed me just now?

Q. No; that is to Mr. Meyers.—A. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. One word further. Mr. Garland did not hesitate to state to you that he regarded this as a very valuable invention, so far as its utility was concerned, did he?—A. Oh, no; he never had a doubt of that. I do not think anyone doubted that. There seemed to be much reliance on Mr. Marble's judgment on that point. I either saw something over his signature or was informed it was his opinion that it was the most sensitive instrument ever invented, and, of course, was a most valuable one.

Q. Then, of course, as a matter of fact, if that invention could be placed on the market and be recognized by public use, it would have a great value?—A. The owners never doubted their ability to compete successfully with the Bell instruments.

Q. In that event, what was the understanding about its value—I mean its financial value?—A. Well, it was thought it would be exceedingly valuable stock. That was the general impression.

EDWARD CLARK resumed the stand and produced a letter-press copy-book and certain papers.

The WITNESS. Here is the letter transmitting that resolution that was in this letter when addressed, but it came to Mr. Talcot, the present electrician, who handed it to me. I will simply read a passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is it from?

The WITNESS. From J. H. and J. C. Rogers, dated January 20, 1884:

"As citizens of New York, we sent to you yesterday a resolution concerning the electrical department of the House of Representatives."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. This letter is dated January 20, 1884. This letter, I understand, was sent to you?—A. No; it was sent to Mr. Talcot, the present electrician, and he handed it to me with the inclosure, the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that letter should go into the record.

Mr. RANNEY. It concerns Mr. J. H. Rogers, one of the associates.

The CHAIRMAN. He is not an officer of the Government, though. It is not material at all. I do not think the record ought to be encumbered with that or with that resolution.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Clark is an officer of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not sent to him.

Mr. RANNEY. It strikes me that letter is competent in two aspects—that and the resolution together.

Mr. HALL. As I understand, that letter is from the two Rogerses who testified.

The WITNESS. My memory is refreshed. I said that was addressed to Mr. Talcot, the present electrician. It says, "Hon. and dear sir." I think it was addressed to some member from New York, who gave it to the present electrician, who brought it to me.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have no knowledge whatever?—A. No, I have no knowledge whatever; it is just my present impression. I wish to say that Mr. Rogers says here he was requested to vacate the place. That is not the case. Mr. Rogers resigned, and in presenting his resignation he told me he could not remain; that General Ewing had given him ten or twenty thousand dollars for an interest in his telephone, and that he was going to New York to organize a company in New York. That was his reason for leaving; that it would not pay him to remain.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is there anything else you know about this matter?—A. Nothing whatever; here is a copy of that prospectus you have reference to, which I found (submitting a paper).

Mr. MOFFATT. Who is this letter addressed to?

Mr. RANNEY. He does not know; it may have been to Mr. Robbins.

The WITNESS. Mr. Talcot, from whom I got it, may be able to tell.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Talcot, probably, will be able to identify it. Let the stenographer mark the papers for identification. Rogers has been a witness here, and it is a matter affecting his conduct.

Mr. EDEN. He did not testify about this matter.

Mr. RANNEY. No matter, it touches his conduct.

The CHAIRMAN. I would suggest that that letter be held until Mr. Talcot is examined.

He perhaps can testify from whom he received it.

Mr. RANNEY. Very well. I am willing it should be suspended until then, but I want it marked. I think his conduct in trying to become an electrician in the House is to be considered in relation to him alone. Then it may affect him as a witness. It is to be coupled with everything else that is in evidence about his trying to be electrician and others co-operating.

Mr. HALL. I think we want to know whether it was addressed to somebody belonging to the Government.

Mr. RANNEY. If Mr. Rogers were here he could state. Now, have them identified.

(The two papers submitted by the witness were marked for identification respectively "X" and "Y," "April 23d, 1886; Pan-Electric.")

By Mr. HALL:

Q. How long have you been the Architect of the Capitol?—A. Twenty years.

Q. Under what administration were you appointed?—A. I was appointed in the Johnson administration, by Andrew Johnson.

Q. Who do you say applied to you—that is, members of Congress—upon the subject of the application of Mr. Rogers to be appointed as electrician?—A. Senator Harris.

Q. I understood you to say Mr. Casey Young spoke to you?—A. No, sir; I met Casey Young and spoke to him; I crossed him.

Q. I think you referred to an interview between yourself and Senator Garland?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. In which I rather inferred you were going on to explain something at the time?—A. No; I simply said I thought Senator Garland was mistaken in saying that he had ever any conversation with me in relation to the reappointment of Rogers. I remember distinctly he called upon me to get information how telephones could be introduced in the Senate Chamber.

Q. You say he must be mistaken. Do you know that he has ever said he had such an interview?—A. I understood Attorney-General Garland had testified before this committee that he had.

Q. I do not think he stated that?—A. But I have no recollection of Mr. Garland ever speaking to me about it.

Q. But I thought when you were narrating that subject before, you were proceeding to state that when he came to see you you took it for granted in the first instance that he would talk about that subject?—A. I did, because he was a director of that company, and I was rather astonished that he said nothing about it at all.

Q. So that that rather impressed itself upon your mind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When Senator Harris came he explained that he would like young Rogers put back?—A. No, he did not come; he sent for me.

Q. You had an interview?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would just state briefly what the interview was.—A. He said he wished to see Rogers reinstated as electrician of the House of Representatives; that he took an interest in their behalf, and that he would like to see J. Harry Rogers reappointed; that was all.

Q. What response did you make?—A. I said that I was not in favor of that proposition for several reasons, and among them was one that I have mentioned.

Q. Do you mean to say that if he interested himself in the matter he would get himself into a scandal? Is that what you said to him?—A. I did say that to him.

Q. Did you use the word scandal?—A. I said that it might be magnified into an affair, and he said that he had never looked at it in that light.

Q. You knew, of course, what were Senator Harris's politics?—A. Oh, I knew what were his politics. I therefore said: "You will not only have your political opponents to look after, but your business competitors."

Q. Were you of the same politics as Senator Harris?—A. I have no politics at all. I have lived here for thirty years.

Q. You took that occasion to suggest for his own benefit the propriety — —A. (Interrupting.) Oh, I do not know as I did then. I did it to vindicate my own conduct.

Q. And to save his. Have you a distinct recollection of that conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not make any memoranda; you have nothing except pure memory to rely upon?—A. Oh, no.

Q. What time was it?—A. I think the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress; about the time this resolution was offered; I think before that resolution was offered, because I said to him, "The object will be thus and so, to get the telephone and electric lights throughout the building, and you gentlemen will be called on to vote upon a matter in which you are personally interested," and I think in a week or so after that this Robinson resolution was offered.

Q. You say you had no interview with Mr. Casey Young about the subject?—A. Mr. Casey Young never called upon me, but I met him in the corridor some few days after having the interview with Senator Harris, and told him about the interview with Senator Harris, and what I had said to him.

Q. And you mentioned the same subject about a scandal to Mr. Young?—A. No, I did not say anything about scandal, but I mentioned to him what I said to Senator Harris.

Q. The subject of that was the scandal?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you use the same language to Mr. Young?—A. I think I did.

Q. Did you mention to Mr. Young the fact that Mr. Rogers was rather too dissipated to be trusted?—A. No, sir; I said that he had often got intoxicated.

Q. Did you not give that as one reason?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you have a distinct recollection about the use of the word scandal?—A. I think I did to Mr. Young, and I think to Senator Harris.

Q. I understood you to say you mentioned that to Senator Harris in an interview with him at his house?—A. Yes, sir.

CECIL CLAY sworn and examined.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You are the chief clerk of the Department of Justice?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. You produced here the other day a file of certified copies. Is that here?

The CHAIRMAN. The paper is not here.

Mr. RANNEY. These I have are not all printed. There was among them one letter from the district attorney in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Townsend?

Mr. RANNEY. Townsend. That I saw the other day.

The WITNESS. There was a letter to the district attorney.

Mr. RANNEY. That does not seem to be printed here.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a letter to the district attorney.

Mr. RANNEY. Is it here?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is on page 672.

The WITNESS. There was a letter from Mr. Beckly, city attorney, but none from the district attorney.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you not applied it to the district attorney rather than the one who sent the letter?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no letter from Mr. Townsend.

The WITNESS. The matter came to the Department originally by verbal communication. Secretary Muldrow came there with a verbal communication, and a jacket was then prepared.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The first letter you produced here is the letter of the 23d of July to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Garland?—A. That was in reply to the oral communication.

Q. "On receipt of your communication by Assistant Secretary Muldrow"?—A. Yes; that was simply an oral communication. He came there with the papers in his hand, and I had a jacket prepared to cover that communication and put it on file. There is a certified copy of the jacket with a certified copy of the letter attached to it.

Q. There was one thing you called my attention to about it. There is a little discrepancy here about the date of August 3, 1875. The date has since been erased. I think you can explain that.—A. I thought I explained that the other day when I was here. A certified copy could not show that. We could not put it on and erase it afterwards.

Q. You called my attention to it this morning. That is an original letter with the Department stamp on it, as received August 1, 1885?—A. Yes; this letter, from the Secretary of the Interior, came up on the 5th of August, dated the 3d, and it showed on its face that he had started the letter by writing "July 29" with the pen, and then that was erased and August 3d was put on it; so that Mr. Montgomery, in saying that the matter was settled at the Department the day before, was correct, but it is dated the 3d. We got it the 5th.

Q. It is dated the 29th.—A. Yes, sir; we frequently get letters that way.

Q. You identify it?—A. This is the original letter from the Secretary of the Interior of August 3, 1885, on which I put in pencil "file 7178."

Q. There is a date put on it before that. Who erased it?—A. That was the way it came in.

Q. Has that the Government stamp to show when it was received at the Department.—A. It was received the 5th of August; yes, sir.

Q. So that your explanation is that it was written by the Secretary on July 29?—A. That they had arrived at this conclusion on the 29th, and Mr. Montgomery was aware of it. That letter was never jacketed.

Q. That was written to be sent July 29th?—A. To be sent; yes, sir; just as we get letters about important international matters from the State Department ten days after their date.

Q. The letter was dated July 29th, and this letter stated—A. (Interrupting). That Mr. Montgomery was aware of that.

Q. By some chance it was not sent over?—A. It was not sent over.

Q. And then the date was changed?—A. Yes; we sometimes get letters ten, twelve, and fifteen days after the necessity for writing them.

Q. Oh, yes; I understand that. So that it fixes the fact that Mr. Lamar wrote his letter after receiving Montgomery's on July 29, and it failed to be sent, and the date was afterwards changed to August 3, and the letter was sent then?—A. So that Mr. Montgomery's letter of the 30th did not have an official jacket put on it, as the Attorney-General said the matter was in the hands of the Interior Department.

Q. Oh, yes; I do not claim that there is anything wrong about it, but I did not understand that. You have not the other papers we asked for with you?—A. No, sir; I have not. The difficulty is our small clerical force.

Mr. RANNEY. If any of the committee want to understand it they can look at the letters.

Mr. HALL. Oh, I understand it. I do not understand why the letters are not printed in the order of their date in the record.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. There must have been another letter. There was a letter of transmittal from your Department to the Department of the Interior?—A. Yes; of the 23d of July.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the original letter of reference by the Attorney-General is not here.

The WITNESS. That is the letter of the 23d of July.

The CHAIRMAN. My examination was based upon that letter.

Mr. MOFFATT. It has been presented here, but not printed.

Mr. RANNEY. See if this is the one [reading]:

"I am in receipt of your communication [by Assistant Secretary Muldrow], with accompanying papers, touching the application of Albert S. Bigelow for the bringing of a suit to vacate a certain patent therein named, issued September 30, 1884, to James Sargent and Marion Warren.

"The communication does not give any wish or expression of opinion as to the request made by Mr. B. As the patent comes from your Department, it is usual in such cases before any action is taken here for your Department to give some expression of opinion, or indicate some wish in reference to the propriety of granting the application. And as I consider the cases in which such suits should be brought very rare indeed I would much prefer the Interior Department would in this case indicate its will or its opinion as to the propriety of the course insisted upon by Mr. Bigelow."

The CHAIRMAN. That letter was not printed. That letter was here because I examined upon it.

Mr. RANNEY. If we have a copy of it it is not necessary to copy it.

Mr. HALL. It seems to me these letters ought to have been put in in the order of their dates. They are all mixed up. It can be done yet without any trouble.

Mr. RANNEY. Here is another letter. Is this in? It is dated the 28th of July.—A. Yes.

Q. (Submitting papers to witness.) Now, Mr. Clay, be kind enough to say if I have handed you back all the originals?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon will you be likely to finish the other examination?—A. I think I can be through by Monday, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This application of General Johnston to have parts of the testimony of Mr. Gardener stricken out has not been disposed of. He desires to have struck out a part of the testimony of Mr. Gardener.

Mr. RANNEY. General Johnston said he wanted to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. He wanted to be heard if there was any hesitation about striking it out. I am not sure but it is too late now, as I believe it has been stereotyped.

Mr. RANNEY. I should not have any hesitation about it myself. In the first place, I think it is too late. In the next place, if anybody should make such an application it should be by the company itself. One man has put it in and any one other man cannot come and ask to have it stricken out.

Mr. EDEN. He cannot strike it out.

Mr. MOFFATT. It seems to me no one has any right to move to strike it out except a member of the committee.

Mr. HALL. I suppose a citizen has the same right in that respect as the right to petition.

Mr. EDEN. He has a right to petition the House, but not to petition us.

Mr. RANNEY. It went in without objection, and having gone in without objection there is no right to strike it out now.

Mr. HALL. Suppose you take the case of a letter. The writer would have some right, if it were a private matter, to have it protected. He could not make a motion as a member of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. In that case there might be some scandal or gross violation of confidence.

Mr. EDEN. It will be observed in the proceedings that I objected at the time to most of that part asked to be stricken out.

Mr. HALL. As far as I am concerned I do not care anything about the matter, except I suppose there are certain individual rights that ought to be regarded as sacred, if it comes within the proper definition.

Mr. RANNEY. We have not got through with Mr. Johnson's testimony. He was to look up some letters.

Mr. EDEN. Probably we may have to call his attention to it if he finds any letters of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. He is ready to come at any time.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we had better pass this by for the present. Before we go we ought to see about this last stenographer's report. The question arose yesterday. I got the copy for the first time this morning. I find some marked errors in it, and before we pass on we should dispose of the matter.

At this point all persons not members of the committee were requested to retire, as the committee wished to go into consultation. After consultation, the committee adjourned, to meet April 27, 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, April 27, 1886.

A quorum being present, the committee was called to order by the chairman at 12.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Mr. Forbes present?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are Mr. Forbes, of the Bell Company, are you?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you be sworn?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, sir.

WILLIAM H. FORBES was then duly sworn and examined, as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Mr. Forbes, are you in any way connected with the American Bell Telephone Company?—Answer. I am the president of the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Ever since the company was organized, in May, 1880.

Q. What is your place of residence?—A. In Milton, Mass.

Q. Do I understand you that the Bell Company was organized in 1880?—A. In 1880.

Q. Was that the beginning of its business as a telephone company?—A. The American Bell Telephone Company was organized in May, 1880, and began business at that time. Before that the business was done by the National Telephone Company, and before that by the Bell Telephone Company. Those were successive companies that were formed, the property being all taken by the National Bell.

Q. Were you president of the National Bell Telephone Company?—A. President.

Q. And of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I was a director in the Bell Telephone Company, but not an officer.

Q. At what time did you become connected with the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Early in 1879; I do not remember the exact date. I think it was January or February, 1879; somewhere in the winter.

Q. By what company or in what way were the Bell telephone instruments controlled or managed before 1879?—A. Before 1879 the Bell Telephone Company owned the patents for all the United States except New England, and the New England Telephone Company owned the patents for New England, and in 1879 the two companies were merged into the National Bell Telephone Company, which company operated then the patents for the whole United States. Before that it was operated by the Bell Company and the New England Company, and before that by an association. I do not know what organization they had. They merely used the invention.

Q. You say it was in 1879 they were merged?—A. In 1879 they were merged into the National Bell. That was when I was associated with the company; almost immediately after I became associated.

Q. When was the Bell Telephone Company organized?—A. I do not believe I can tell you that from memory. The patents were held by an association after they were issued until somewhere about 1877 or 1878. I cannot tell you from memory about that.

Q. Were you a member of that association?—A. No; I had nothing to do with the patents until the winter or early spring of 1879. I can easily give you those facts from the records of the company, but I am not familiar with them.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask to suspend the examination of Mr. Forbes for a few minutes. I want to call the attention of the committee to another matter. I have requested Mr. Linney, the reporter, to be present. I see he is here.

Mr. J. J. Linney came forward.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). The Attorney-General called on me yesterday and gave me a clipping from the New York Tribune purporting to be a letter from Washington to the Tribune calling attention to certain omissions in the official report of the testimony of this committee. He desired that I should bring it to the attention of the committee and ask that the omissions should be inserted in the official record.

Mr. MILLARD. Omissions from the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Omissions from the record. The Attorney-General says they are omissions, and he desires to have them appear in the official record.

Mr. RANNEY. Did the Attorney-General say the articles are really omitted?

Mr. MILLARD. That the articles referred to in the Tribune should be actually inserted?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that attention should be called to them so that the record might be corrected. I want to present that with a further statement.

Mr. HANBACK. I have not seen it.

The CHAIRMAN. The first matter to which attention is called in this article is this. This appears in the printed testimony and was not in accordance with the statement made by the Attorney-General on the stand. I read from the article:

"I came back, moving my family here, early in September of that year (1883) to put my children at school, as the schools all opened early in that month, and I remained here right along until Congress adjourned the next summer (1884). I had never brought my family here before then."

On his examination the Attorney-General stated he had returned here in November. On the morning after his examination I received a letter from the Attorney-General, which I will ask to have included in the record, and which I will now read if there be no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. Is the evidence of the Attorney-General in this volume (the volume of the printed testimony to date)?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANBACK. At page 643.

The CHAIRMAN (reading.):

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1886.

Mr. BOYLE: In thinking over my statement before the committee yesterday, I find I made a mistake in one matter. It may not be important, but I think I had better call your attention to it.

In replying to your questions, when I came back here after leaving in March, 1883, I stated I came back that fall, in November. This is a mistake. That was the usual month in which I returned here for the meeting of the Senate; but that year I determined to move my family here and put my two children at school, and I moved them here early in September of that year, as the schools all opened during that month. I remained here right along until Congress met and adjourned, &c.

Show this to Colonel Ranney and others of the committee, and if it is deemed important at all, let it be noted as a correction.

Very truly, yours,

A. H. GARLAND.

Hon. CHAS. E. BOYLE,
House of Representatives.

I showed this letter to Mr. Ranney and to other members of the committee, and it was agreed by all the members of the committee to whom I showed it that the corrections should be made, as the corrections were material; so as to that particular matter, that correction was made with the consent of the committee. The other matters are as follows: The Attorney-General is asked:

"Do you not think you were a little over-sensitive? Answer. I might have been, but I was like Lorenzo Dow's man. I would be damned if I did and be damned if I did not."

It is alleged that that should be as follows:

"Don't you think that was a little over-delicate?"

"It might have been, but you see I was a little like Lorenzo Dow's man. I would be damned if I did and be damned if I didn't, and so you see I was in a bad fix."

The last part of it is left out.

"Were you more particularly sensitive at that time than you had been at any other?"

"No, sir; I have generally taken that course where I have been situated in that way."

The recollection of the Attorney-General is that that is a correct report.

Mr. EDEN. That you say is omitted?

The CHAIRMAN. Part of it is.

Mr. OATES. I remember distinctly his saying that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then another part is as follows:

"Do you know any reason why you should have kept silent on the subject after what had occurred?"

"Well, after what had occurred it seemed to me that it was of the utmost propriety that I should be entirely silent. I think it would have been extremely indelicate, if not impolitic, for me to have said a word to anybody about it."

The committee's record says what I have read. Then follows:

"Are you confident that you never said or intimated to anybody that as you could not act, and as you were going away, Mr. Goode would have to act?"

"I know I never said it to a living soul."

"It never occurred to you?"

"No, sir; I never thought about it at all."

That part is omitted. The testimony was given by the Attorney-General, and he desires to have it appear on the record. The word "impolitic," it seems, appears in the committee's report, and also in the report by which it is sought to be corrected, which I understand to be the report of the Bell Telephone Company. It should be the word "impolite," instead of "impolitic," as the members of the committee will remember.

Mr. EDEN. In what connection is that used? Read it with the connection.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"Do you know of any reason why you should have kept silent on the subject after what had occurred?"

"Well, after what had occurred it seemed to me that it was of the utmost propriety that I should be entirely silent. I think it would have been extremely indelicate, if not impolite, for me to have said a word to anybody about it."

Mr. EDEN. Oh, yes. Can that be inserted in the record, or will it have to come in now by way of explanation?

The CHAIRMAN. That can all be corrected in proof. As this matter is before the committee, I will say further that some attention is called in the article to the change of stenographers on that particular day.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you got through with the corrections.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, there are more than those.

The CHAIRMAN. I am on the article; excuse me.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The change of stenographers was made in this way: There was allowed to this committee for its expenses, $1,000. The stenographer's bill up to the day I have spoken of was something over $1,500. I had learned that the official reporters had been appointed by the Speaker under the resolution of the House, and so I requested that we should be furnished with an official reporter, and the expense of a stenographer put an end to. In pursuance of that request, Mr. Linney was sent here as the reporter of the committee. I was under the impression that he was one of the official reporters, but learned afterwards he was not, but was a substitute for an official reporter who had met with an accident since his appointment. I do not know that there is any further explanation necessary in regard to the change of reporters. As far as I know, the reporter was not changed because of the coming of Mr. Garland on the stand, or for any other reason, except to save money.

Mr. RANNEY. There are some other corrections in this report of Mr. Garland's testimony, that we talked over the other day, that ought to be made at the same time. On page 643, at the bottom, in the last paragraph but one, this appears:

"I believe he mentioned the names of Mr. Harris, Dr. Rogers, and J. Harris Rogers."

Then he says he called afterwards and spoke to Mr. Harris.

"When I afterwards spoke to Mr. Harris—and when I say Mr. Harris, I refer to Senator Harris—he said that he desired me, being a poor man like himself, to enter this enterprise. I talked with him some time about it, and told him I had never undertaken to make any money at anything but law and poker; that I always lost at poker, but sometimes won at law; but I was willing to go into this thing if he thought it offered any good inducements. We then separated. The next day Senator Harris spoke to me about it in the Senate, and I made substantially the same response to him."

The error in that is, in omitting to state that in his first conversation with the Commissioner, Mr. Atkins, he made that statement to him, and then subsequently made it to Mr. Harris. I think it should be corrected at the bottom by saying that General Atkins says that he desires, instead of "he."

The CHAIRMAN. Strike out the word "him."

Mr. RANNEY. No; strike out "he."

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you strike out "him" and say "General Atkins."

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, I say strike out "he" and say "General Atkins."

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that?

Mr. RANNEY. The last line but one.

The CHAIRMAN (reading): "I talked with him."

Mr. RANNEY. You ought to begin before that. "I talked with him, General Atkins." I think if you change the "he" to "General Atkins," it will do.

Mr. HANBACK. Mr. Garland never spoke to Harris; Harris spoke to him; but this makes him speak to Harris.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, that is an error. It shows he meant the first conversation.

The CHAIRMAN. But he speaks with particularity there of having spoken to Mr. Harris and says whom he means by Mr. Harris; that he means Senator Harris. But say you let it stand as it is and it will read as follows:

"When I afterwards spoke to Mr. Harris—and when I say Mr. Harris, I refer to Senator Harris—he said that he desired me, being a poor man like himself, to enter this enterprise. I talked with him"—

Now say:

"I talked with General Atkins sometime about it, and told him," &c.

Mr. RANNEY. That would not do, because the next preceding line is what Mr. Atkins said:

"Mr. Atkins said he desired him."

The CHAIRMAN. I have no recollection of that remark. It is not very material, because it appears by the whole testimony that the first conversation was with Atkins and the next with Harris, and that he had made the same remark to both of them about law and poker.

Mr. EDEN. He did not repeat what he said, but said he remarked to Harris substantially the same thing.

Mr. RANNEY. The error is at the bottom of 643, in not making it appear that in the first place it was Mr. Atkins.

"Mr. Atkins said to Garland that he desired him, being a poor like himself, to enter this enterprise. I talked to Mr. Atkins some time about it and told him," &c.

He then repeated it. I think that should be corrected. Then in the next place, on page 647, at the bottom, before the remark made by myself, Attorney-General Garland said:

"I believe we all do it."

And then remarked, turning to me:

"I think I have seen you there."

And then I made the remark:

"I have always been ready to do it."

It looks as if I interjected that without any personal reference to me. There was a personal reference there. Looking at me he said:

"I think I have seen you there."

Therefore, I was justified in making that remark.

The CHAIRMAN. What change is suggested?

Mr. RANNEY. I think it should be, "I think I have seen you there. [Turning to Mr. Ranney.]"

I should not have made the remark I did except he made a personal reference to me.

There is one other correction, Mr. Eden. Where I put the question, and you said I had better withdraw it, and I said I thought it was a question I ought to withdraw, and said I would withdraw it. The Attorney-General requested that it be not withdrawn. They put in what you said, and omitted what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. It is towards the close, I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I think my remark was in substance like this:

"I think the question ought to be withdrawn, and I withdraw it."

Do you remember that, Mr. Eden?

The CHAIRMAN. I made the suggestion; it is on page 667, near the bottom of the page.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, yes. After the remark of the chairman. The chairman remarked:

"I would suggest that the gentleman withdraw that question."

I said, yes, I would, I thought, and I withdrew it. Then the witness asked that it might not be withdrawn. I think the gentleman will remember the fact.

Mr. EDEN. I did not remember distinctly what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney put a question to the Attorney-General, and I suggested that the question should be withdrawn. Mr. Ranney said:

"I think it should be withdrawn, and I do withdraw it."

That is not here.

Mr. RANNEY. That is omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness followed it by saying:

"Let it go."

Mr. RANNEY. The Tribune reporter brought me a report of his evidence and I compared the whole evidence with that statement, and while I think the sense or substance of the statement of Mr. Garland is not changed, and I see no evidence that it has been with any evil design, yet it is very evident that a good deal of it has been rewritten, or if not as it was given it was not correctly reported stenographically. The phraseology has the appearance of being changed, sentences changed, not with any design of making any substantial change, but it occurred to me the reporter possibly had himself probably done it, or submitted it to Mr. Garland, as they do in the House. He can state how that is. How is it, Mr. Linney?

Mr. LINNEY. I submitted this matter to the Attorney-General for revision, just as is the case in the House where members make speeches. They have the privilege of revising. But I did not know it was against the rules of the committee to do so until I saw it in the paper. It has been the custom in the other committees to do that. Some of the changes in phraseology are my changes in editing my notes and some are his. Every bit of that passed under his eye. As far as a "he" or a "him," or a little word like that being left out is concerned, it is possible. I am not infallible. I perhaps did not hear those questions.

Mr. RANNEY. The report bears evidence of having been revised.

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; that is correct. No two reporters' reports will ever agree. This thing of making one reporter's report a standard for all reporters is folly.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you the manuscript, as prepared by you, of the Attorney-General's testimony?

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. You submitted it to him and he revised it?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes, sir, I did; and he made those changes. And there have been other changes made in the other reporter's accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. That has no interest to us.

Mr. LINNEY. I just wanted to say—

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). I have compared the two very carefully, and I have always said there did not appear to be any material or substantial changes in the sentences.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Attorney-General strike out these paragraphs which I called attention to at the beginning?

Mr. LINNEY. He struck out two or three questions when he put in that statement about 1883 and his family.

The CHAIRMAN. That we agreed to. That was done by the consent of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY (indicating). Did he strike out these two questions?

Mr. LINNEY. Those two? No, sir. It is possible in writing 18,000 words I may have left those out.

The CHAIRMAN. I will call your attention to this:

"Were you more particularly sensitive at that time than you had been at any other?"

"No, sir; I have generally taken that course where I have been situated in that way."

Did he strike that out?

Mr. LINNEY. Not to my knowledge. I do not think the Attorney-General struck very much out.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"Do you know of any reason why you should have kept silent on the subject after what had occurred?"

Mr. LINNEY. That word "impolitic" for "impolite" is a typographical error anyhow. It is not my error. It is either a typographical error or an error in hearing. It does not amount to anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Here are two questions [reading]:

"Are you confident that you never said or intimated to anybody that, as you could not act, and as you were going away, Mr. Goode would have to act?"

"I know I never said it to a living soul."

"It never occurred to you?"

"No, sir. I never thought about it at all."

Did the Attorney-General strike that out?

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir. I do not think the Attorney-General struck that out. I think the only question he struck out was about the date there.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, September and November?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; that little statement in there. I think that is all.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you rewrite the whole thing, or is the manuscript at the printer's as he altered it?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; just as he changed it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you send for that and bring it here?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; but I do not think the—

Mr. MOFFATT (interposing). Who suggested that you should submit this to the Attorney-General?

Mr. LINNEY. I have been doing it all through the committees. I did not know that there was any rule of this committee against it at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Did anybody suggest to you to send it to the Attorney-General?

Mr. LINNEY. The other reporter suggested it.

Mr. MOFFATT. Who do you mean by the other reporter?

Mr. LINNEY. The official reporter, Mr. Welch.

Mr. MOFFATT. Did you submit the evidence of the other witnesses to them?

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir; some of them.

Mr. MOFFATT. All of them?

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. Why did you not submit it to all of them?

Mr. LINNEY. Some of them went away—Mr. Humphreys, for instance.

Mr. MOFFATT. Who did you submit it to?

Mr. LINNEY. To the Attorney-General, to Mr. Clark, and to Mr. Vance. I did not think there was anything improper in that. It is the custom with the other committees. I did not know there was any harm in it. I just did it to be right; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no rule to the contrary.

Mr. RANNEY. We have required in the case of all other witnesses if they made any substantial changes it should be done before the committee. This reporter was not aware of that.

Mr. LINNEY. No, sir; I was not. I would say as to leaving out your remark that I have had a little difficulty in hearing you at all times.

Mr. RANNEY. I see you revised the answers, but you did not put in the ground of my question, nor the sense always.

Mr. LINNEY. I think taking the report itself and the volume of that report—18,000

Mr. RANNEY. (interposing). I see you did not get the names of the members of the committee correct either.

Mr. LINNEY. Yes, sir; I was sprung into this committee without knowing anything about it.

Mr. RANNEY (to the chairman). He has given me the credit of questions put by you to which I am not entitled.

Mr. LINNEY. That has been corrected. I discovered that myself.

The CHAIRMAN. I made those corrections. I did not want Mr. Ranney to be responsible for my questions.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not want to claim any credit I was not entitled to. I do not think Mr. Linney intended any wrong.

Mr. LINNEY. I think, taking it all in all, it is a good report.

Mr. OATES. It is a very good report.

Mr. EDEN. Yes; I think so, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Forbes, we will resume.

WILLIAM H. FORBES resumed the stand.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Did you state that you were able now, Mr. Forbes, to tell us who were the members of the association?—Answer. Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard, Thomas Sanders, and I think Professor Bell. I am not sure who the third party was. I had nothing whatever to do with the affairs of this party. It is a mere matter of hearsay with me. I think those three gentlemen, at any rate Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard and Mr. Thomas Sanders and some one else, either Mr. Bell or some one representing him, had an informal association.

Mr. RANNEY. That was the original association?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Q. (Resuming.) I would like you to recall the name of the third person if you can.

—A. I could not testify positively about it.

Q. Had you any knowledge of it?—A. I had no knowledge of the transactions at all. I may possibly have become a director the 1st of January, 1879. It was in that winter. I did not know you wished to know anything except about the American Bell, and I have not refreshed myself; but the date may have been a little before the 1st of January, 1879. It was some time during the winter of 1878-'79.

Q. Do I understand you that the Bell telephone instruments were owned and controlled by that association up till 1879?—A. I think that the association did very little business in the way of putting out telephones. They were only beginning. They were trying to get the apparatus into working order. I think that about the time they were ready to develop the business they formed these two companies—the Bell Company and the New England, and those two companies, I think, were the first that did any material business at all. I think the association was simply formed as a matter of convenience for holding the property until the company started. I think those two companies took the patents and began to develop the business, to build exchanges.

Q. Do you know at what time those companies were formed?—A. I cannot give it to you from memory. It was during the year—well, it was 1877 or 1878; somewhere along there. I do not know. I had nothing whatever to do with the matter then. I do not recall it; I had no occasion to know, although I have been cognizant of that fact, though I have never had any reason to fix it my mind.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to who constituted those companies?—A. Well, they were substantially the same people who held it afterwards in the name of the National Bell. Gardiner G. Hubbard was the president of the Bell. Thomas Sanders was the president of the New England. George L. Bradley was the president of the Bell, and perhaps of the New England, both.

Q. Can you name the directors?—A. I can name some of them. The directors in the Bell were Gardiner G. Hubbard, George L. Bradley, Judge C. S. Bradley, of Rhode Island, Thomas Sanders; probably Francis Blake. I can give you the exact directors of the National Bell as soon as that was formed, because then I became familiar with the affairs of the company. I do not think I can give you any further. That group of gentlemen was with Mr. Alexander Graham Bell. I do not think he was an officer. I think he was simply the electrician at that time, connected with electrical matters. I do not think I can give you anything more precise than that up to the time I became connected with the company.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any officer of the United States Government being connected with the first association?—A. No.

Q. Nor any member of Congress?—A. No.

Q. Any judge of any court?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any such officer or member of Congress being connected with either the Bell Telephone Company or the New England?—A. No.

Q. In any way whatever?—A. Not in the slightest.

Q. Do you know what was the amount of the capital of the Bell Company?—A. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. And of the New England Company?—A. I think $250,000. I should not wish to state this as accurate information.

Q. Have you any means here of telling?—A. No, sir. The American Bell record is here, but I do not think we have the records that went before the formation of the American Bell Company.

Q. Your belief is that the capital of each company was $450,000?—A. No; $450,000 of the Bell and $250,000 of the New England. I think the treasurer of the company will probably be able to give that accurately, because he has had dealings with the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we will ask him.

Q. And these two companies were merged and the National Bell Company was formed?—A. In 1879.

Q. Then you became connected with it?—A. Yes, sir; I became connected with it shortly before that happened, in the winter, and I became director of the Bell Company, and shortly after the two companies were merged in the National Bell Telephone, which did business until the following year, in May, 1880; then the American Bell Company was formed.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any officer of the United States or member of Congress, or any public officer, being connected with the National Bell Company?—A. No.

Q. Do you say that there was or was not?—A. There was not to my knowledge; I do not think there could have been without my knowledge, either.

Q. Was the membership large as stockholders—numerous?—A. Well, it was some seven or eight hundred of the National Bell; I should say, from memory, that it increased some six or seven or eight hundred before it was merged in the American Bell; but that is mere memory.

Q. Have you any recollection of how many persons were concerned in the Bell Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. How many stockholders?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. Several hundred, but I cannot give you the number.

Q. And the New England?—A. That was much smaller. I do not know the number, but it was a much smaller number. I never was familiar with the affairs of the New England Company, but almost as soon as I became connected with the Bell—I never was an officer at that time. I never had to do with it until it was brought over into the National Bell. Therefore I was not familiar with the affairs of the New England Telephone Company.

Q. What was the capital of the National Bell Company fixed at?—A. Well, I do not carry figures very well. If you will refer that question to the treasurer you can get that. I do not remember that at all, because there was a large increase in the capital at the time the American Bell was formed.

Q. Yes; but I was speaking of the company that preceded it, the National Bell.—A. I have forgotten what that capital was fixed at, now.

Q. You were president of that company?—A. I was president of that company; yes, sir.

Q. Was it larger than the capital of the Bell and the New England combined?—A. Yes, sir; but it has passed out of my mind just what that transaction was. Just how much it was increased I cannot recall.

Q. Can you tell how the increased capital was taken, how distributed, at the time of the formation of the National Bell Company?—A. Some new capital was taken in; some new stock was sold. I cannot give you the particulars without referring to the record. It can be easily shown. We shall be happy to give you those figures exactly, if you desire them.

Q. You have the books here?—A. No; I should have to refer to Boston. I had no idea except that we were to be examined on the American Bell. I should much prefer to give you the figures from the record to giving them by memory.

Q. Perhaps you can tell whether any part, or what part, of the capital of the National Bell Company was allotted to the stockholders in the Bell and the New England?—A. The whole capital of the National Bell went to the stockholders of the Bell and the New England, with the exception of the new stock; that was sold at that time.

Q. Do you know what proportion was made new stock?—A. I have an impression that $200,000 of new stock was sold at that time and taken in, and the rest went to the stockholders of the National and the American; but I do not wish that to go on the record as my exact testimony.

Q. I understand you. Can you not approximate the sum at which the capital of the National Bell was fixed?—A. Well, if my memory is right, the capital of the two other companies amounted to $650,000 and $200,000 added, making $850,000. I believe I stated before that it was $250,000 and $450,000. That would be $700,000. There is some little inaccuracy. There may have been $450,000 and $250,000, or $450,000 and $150,000. I think the capital of the National Bell, if my memory serves me, was $850,000. But I cannot recall about that. It has passed out of my head.

Q. Do I understand you to say that that was the sum at which the capital was named in the charter or in the articles of association?—A. I think so; yes, sir. You see at one time in one of those changes there was a large increase in the value of the patents. As they became developed and the value was ascertained, they were found to be worth many times what anybody believed they were worth before, and when they were resold they were sold at the market value, or something a little less than the market value, in one of those changes. About six shares of the new company were paid for one of the old.

Q. So that it was increased sixfold?—A. It was increased sixfold.

Q. When was that?—A. I think it was when the American Bell was formed. But not expecting to testify on those points, I may be mistaken about it. It may be that that change was at the time of the National Bell.

Q. Was there any increase of that character at the time the National Bell was formed?—A. Oh, I say if I am not mistaken that change only took place once, and if I am not mistaken that took place when the National Bell sold out to the American Bell.

Q. Not when the two companies sold to the National Bell?—A. I think when those two companies sold to the National Bell it was sold share for share, and the new stock taken in was added, making $850,000.

Q. Was that sold for money?—A. Sold for money. And I think the change we speak of, when the patents were put in at that price it made perhaps six millions of dollars, something like that—I could not give it from memory—was when the American Bell was formed. That is my recollection of it.

Q. That was because of the increased value of the instruments?—A. Yes; the stock of the National Bell was quoted as high as eight or nine hundred a share, and it was sold at considerably less than the market value of the stock when the new company was formed, in order to be within the market value.

Q. I suppose that was because of the extension of the business of the company?

The WITNESS. That was caused by the extension?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. What do you mean? The increase in the market value?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. By the recognition of the value of the invention.

Q. You increased your stock to correspond with what you understood to be the increase in the market value of the property of the company?—A. And also sold additional stock from time to time as capital was wanted. Some $4,000,000, if I remember, had been sold for actual cash and put into the treasury.

Q. That would be in addition to the six millions?—A. Yes; the capital of the American Bell is now ten millions, of which six millions in all has gone in in cash, paid in by the different companies, the early stockholders in the formation of the Bell. Those figures you can get from the treasurer.

Q. Four millions went to Mr. Bell?—A. No; four millions were paid to the early companies for their patents.

Q. As I understand you the original association was composed of Mr. Bell, a Mr. Hubbard, and another gentleman?—A. But you will understand the association was formed or composed of $450,000, and they received their proportion of the stock. All the stock that was sold thereafter was sold for money and went to the people who put in money.

Q. Were not the original associations practically the owners at the outset of the stock of the New England and the Bell?—A. Well, a certain amount of money was put in by the people who preceded me in the business, besides Mr. Bell and Mr. Hubbard. Mr. Sanders, for instance, put in a considerable amount of money, and the other gentlemen put in considerable money, and they took stock to represent that money, so that the amount of shares left with Bell and Hubbard representing the patents was not the whole of the stock of the old Bell company and the New England, but only such part as had been awarded to them. The other patents represent the remainder for cash which the other gentlemen put in.

Q. You are not able to state how much was put in by the parties who were associated in the two original companies?—A. No.

Q. You do not know what proportion Mr. Bell and Mr. Hubbard received for the patent?—A. I had known, but I do not remember now. I think, if I remember rightly, Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Bell received a two-thirds interest in that old association.

and Mr. Sanders, or whoever the third party was, the one-third for the money he put in for developing the earlier part of the invention.

Q. You have stated so far as you know how many other persons were associated with that original company?—A. As far as I know those three were the ones. I recollect the history of it. I never had occasion to fasten it in my mind very much. As I understand it, it was composed of those three gentlemen, or some one in place of those three were the association that held those patents originally.

Q. Are there any books or papers in possession of your company which would give us this information?—A. I am not certain whether we took over the papers of those old associations or not. They gave us title to the property, but the records of the affairs of that association I do not think we have. I have never seen them.

Q. Is there any person now connected with the company who comes down from the beginning?—A. Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard is a director of the American Bell. So is Mr. Thomas Sanders.

Q. Does he reside in this city or Boston?—A. He resides in Washington in the winter.

Q. Is he here now?

The WITNESS. In Washington?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I do not know. Do you mean in this room?

Q. No, sir; I mean in the city.—A. I do not know.

Q. Your recollection is that the increase of the capital sixfold—

A. (Interrupting.) Mr. Bell tells me that he is in the city. Mr. Bell is present.

Q. Yes, sir; the increase in the capital sixfold took place at the time of the formation of the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. If my recollection is right that is the time it took place.

Q. And in addition to that, four millions of the stock have been sold, or how disposed of?—A. Of the ten millions the whole is now issued except one or two hundred thousand dollars.

Q. How was the additional stock issued; to whom; for what consideration?—A. All was issued to the stockholders; that is, offered to the stockholders at a hundred dollars a share. It is obliged to be offered first to the stockholders at a hundred dollars a share. It has all been sold at a hundred dollars a share.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. That is the par value?—A. That is the par value.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It must be offered to the stockholders at the time of the increase at the par value?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In cash?—A. It is substantially all issued now.

Q. Was the capital increased to the extent of four millions on the original basis?—A. When the American Bell Company got its charter, its charter gave it an authorized capital of $10,000,000, of which enough was issued to pay for the patent rights put in at the valuation that I have named, something over $4,000,000. If I am not accurate you can get that from the treasurer precisely. And the rest was a certain amount of cash that was subscribed and put in, and the rest has since remained in the treasury, and has been issued from time to time, sold and offered to the stockholders as it was desired.

Q. At its par value?—A. At its par value.

Q. At the time this additional stock was issued and allotted to the stockholders at $100 a share, what was its market value?—A. Well, it has been a very fluctuating quantity. All the way from one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty up to two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty.

Q. It has never been higher than two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty?—A. I think at one time it reached almost three hundred, but only for a few days.

Q. So that the ten millions of stock was really worth on the market thirty millions of dollars?—A. For a short time; yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any member of Congress or officer of the Government being connected with the American Bell Company at the time of its formation?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any member of Congress or officer such as I have named being a stockholder in the company at any time?—A. I have never known of it—never had occasion to know of any member of Congress being a stockholder.

Q. I do not ask you absolutely as to proving it by the books; but have you any knowledge of any member of Congress being associated with the company as a stockholder?—A. No; except the other day I received a telegram from Mr. Ranney asking me to look over the records and see whether he was a stockholder. As I understood, he was not.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not making this inquiry—

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). I waive that.

The CHAIRMAN. I speak of other members of Congress. I do not speak of Mr. Ranney.

Mr. RANNEY. I waive all objections.

A. Mr. Hudson, the general manager of the company, was requested to see if he was a stockholder. He looked over the record and saw that several years ago Mr. Ranney owned 20 shares. I was not aware of that.

Q. Since it has been brought out, I will ask you this: Has Mr. Ranney ceased to be a stockholder?—A. He is not a stockholder now, and, as I understand, has not been for two or three years. That is all I know about it.

Q. Now, is there any member of Congress who has been or is now a stockholder?—A. Not to my knowledge.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you mean that I was an owner of stock or that I had a collateral for a debt?—A. Mr. Hudson simply said you received the stock. He found 20 shares standing in your name.

Q. As collateral or as owner?—A. He did not state as to that. I think he said perhaps a lot as collateral and a lot not stated as collateral. He did not state about that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know in any way of any other public officer or member of Congress having any interest in your company?

The WITNESS. As a stockholder?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. No. It may be that there are stockholders who are members of Congress. I have not looked over the stock-list.

Q. Any interest other than that of stockholder?—A. Some two or three years ago we retained Mr. Patrick Collins to represent us before the legislature. When we had a bill before the State legislature to amend our charter Mr. Collins represented us, and from time to time since then Mr. Hudson, our general manager, has consulted Mr. Collins about matters in Massachusetts, but not matters outside of Massachusetts at all. Do I understand your question to be in regard to stock interests or being interested as officers in our company? Or do you refer to such occasions as that?

Q. Put it in both ways. I want to know of members of Congress having any relation of any kind.—A. As I say, Mr. Collins was, several years before he was a member of Congress; and from time to time since then, in regard to matters in Massachusetts, Mr. Hudson has consulted Mr. Collins; but if you wish to know of any consultations of that kind I have had with members of Congress, I can tell you.

Q. Oh, no; I do not care to go into private consultations, but I want to know the relations with the company.—A. As I say, I have had consultations on matters in Massachusetts, but not upon our general affairs.

Q. I do not care whether general affairs or not. If you ever had any relations with members of Congress, you can state it.—A. Last spring a bill was referred in the legislature to regulate our rates, and it was likely to be referred to the judiciary committee. It had been rejected by the committee on mercantile affairs. It went into the house with a minority report favoring it, and it was likely to be referred to the committee on the judiciary, and I asked Senator Hoar if, when it came before the judiciary committee, he could appear before the judiciary committee and argue the constitutional question.

Q. Before the legislature?—A. Before the legislature. Senator Hoar said he could do it, and held himself in readiness last spring to appear before the Judiciary Committee. The matter did not go before the judiciary committee, and therefore he was not called upon to act, and I think Mr. Storrow told me he had called upon Senator Frye several years ago upon some matter, and had seen him once.

Q. Senator Frye, of Maine?—A. Senator Frye, of Maine. Mr. Storrow, our lawyer, had consulted him upon some question he wished to have his opinion about two or three years ago. Those are the only instances where we ever retained or ever had anything to do with any members of Congress.

Q. You recall no others?—A. No; I am quite sure there have been no others.

Q. And you do not know, as I understand you, of any member of Congress being a stockholder in your company at that time?—A. No. With the exception I have mentioned, I do not think I have ever known of any member of Congress that I can recall being a stockholder in the company, although I think it is quite possible that they have been stockholders in our company.

Q. Has your company procured the publication in any newspaper of any matter affecting this investigation or connected with it?—A. No.

Q. Did your company procure the publication of any articles relating in any way to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any officer of your company having procured the publication of articles relating to the Pan-Electric Company or to the gentlemen who became associated as the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No; the only article that we ever procured the publication of that touched upon that subject at all was an industrial article that appeared in the New York Times last January. At the solicitation of some agent of the New York Times, who stated that he was preparing industrial articles for the first of the year upon many branches of industry, and would like to put in a history of the telephone and our relation to the progress of it, we consented to pay for the introduction in the Times of an industrial article, published as such, not as an editorial article at all. It was published in the month of January.

Q. What year?—A. This last year; and in that there was a general history of the development of the telephone, and in that the Pan-Electric Company was referred to, as well as various other suits, but merely as a matter of history; not in connection with this investigation at all.

Q. Can you furnish us with that article?—A. Yes, I have a copy of it here.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You have it here now?—A. Yes. Would you like to see it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. [Paper submitted by witness.] It appears to be an article of four columns. Will you leave this with us?

The WITNESS. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any objection to stating what was paid to the Times for the publication of that?—A. For the publication of it and certain copies that were bought for distribution, in the neighborhood of $1,200.

Q. How many copies did you get?—A. Either one or two thousand, I do not remember which.

Mr. RANNEY (referring to the newspaper). This is dated January 1, 1886.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) Do you know whether those were fair advertising rates and whether that was a fair price for the copies?—A. I do not know the particulars. He came on to see Mr. Hubbard, and Mr. Hudson, the general manager. The arrangement was made with them. I simply assented to it and had nothing to do with putting in the article.

Q. Mr. Forbes, have you procured in any way, directly or indirectly, by arrangement made with your company or some member of your company, or somebody in the interest of the company, the publication of articles relating to this Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir. There was an article published in a paper called the New York Commercial World which contained some account of this matter, and it was brought to me in New York on one occasion when I was there, written, completed and ready for publication, and the reporter, or whoever he was, happened to get me at the end of a long day's work when I was rather tired, and finally I agreed to take one thousand copies of the paper in that way at $100, and they were sent over to Boston and burned up or stowed away. It was an article of no particular value and I paid no particular attention to it.

Q. Have you a copy of that article?—A. No, I haven't a copy here, but I can get you a copy of it. As I say, we had a thousand copies, whatever they were. I told him to send them to Boston and we simply did nothing with them.

Q. Can you furnish us with a copy?—A. I think so; yes, sir. Those were the only cases where we had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the publication of any article connected with this matter. Mr. Dickerson you may have seen, over his own signature, had certain articles published in the Tribune; but not at our direction or with our knowledge at all.

Q. Were they paid for?—A. Not paid for by us.

Q. Have you any knowledge that they were ever paid for at all?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Dickerson was your attorney?—A. Dickerson was one of our attorneys. There were published several times interviews with Mr. Dickerson upon this whole question of the Government right to bring a suit.

Q. Has the company paid anything for the publication of any of those articles?—A. No. I had no knowledge of his intending to write such letters, and it was done without our desire and rather against our desire. Our policy has been to keep out of the newspapers in this whole matter. It has been a matter of policy with us.

Q. What officers of your company would look after matters of that kind?—A. Well, it being a matter of policy, nothing would be done without coming to me.

Q. Would such publications be made by your company without your direction, knowledge, or consent?—A. No; they would not. If they did, the person causing them would lose his connection with the company at once.

Q. The Bell Telephone Company seems to have a good deal of literature of one kind and another. Who looks after the publication of it?—A. What do you mean by literature? We have a great deal of printing of our law cases. Now we have the address of Mr. Robert M. Morse, jr., who is our counsel in Boston, who is representing our company in Boston. His speech on the subject of rates has just been published at our expense in the Boston Advertiser. That was done by our knowledge and by our consent.

Q. There was recently a report made by yourself to the directors published in pamphlet?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that report been published in the newspapers of the country?—A. There has been a short synopsis of it.

Q. Have you paid anything for that?—A. One local newspaper in Ohio sent in a bill for the printing of a synopsis of that report. We did not intend to pay anything for it. We simply sent it out to the newspapers to do as they pleased with it.

Q. You have sent out that report to the newspapers of the country?—A. Upon request we sent out several for information.

Q. You sent none without request?—A. Oh, yes. We were asked if we would send it out, and therefore we sent a considerable number of our reports to the newspapers. But in only one case did any of them charge anything, and that was unexpected to us.

Q. Have you a copy of that report with you?—A. No.

Q. Can you furnish us with a copy?—A. Yes.

Q. I would like to have a copy. Have you paid anything for the republication of articles appearing in any of the New York papers?—A. No.

Q. Touching this investigation or the matters out of which it grows?—A. No. I think I have stated to you the only cases where we have paid for any articles in newspapers at all, in any matter connected with this thing at all.

Q. Do you know of any arrangement by which they pay for the republication of any of their articles?—A. No.

Q. Do you know that that is done or has been done?—A. Not in our interest.

Q. In anybody's interest?—A. No; I do not know that it is done at all, but not in our interest.

Q. Well, I speak of paying in any way by any means whatever any kind of money?—A. We have not caused it to be done, and are not cognizant of its being done, by anybody in the way of compensation at all.

Q. Have you furnished to any New York papers, or to any newspapers of the country matter for publication, or given them information?

The WITNESS. In respect to this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Or in respect to the Pan-Electric Company?—A. With the exception of this industrial article in the New York Times, which did contain, among a history of our various matters, this matter you have before you. It was simply a matter of policy. We considered we had a perfect right to do so, but as a matter of policy we considered it would do us no good to go into the newspapers with our affairs at all.

Q. Have you in any manner aided in carrying on this investigation?—A. No.

Q. Did you have anything to do with having it instituted?—A. No.

Q. Did you have any consultation with anybody about having a resolution offered in the House?—A. No.

Q. Do you speak of your own conduct now or the conduct of the company?—A. The conduct of the company.

Q. Well, how as to yourself, individually?—A. Both. Neither myself nor the company has had anything to do in any way with the bringing of any investigation at all.

Q. Have your attorneys?—A. No; not to my knowledge. I think that the copies of the arguments of our counsel before Mr. Lamar have been furnished the committee, but, as I understand it, at the request of the committee.

Q. No; they have not to my knowledge.—A. Well, we have offered to. I told Mr. Storrow or told Mr. Swan, who was down here occasionally, that if the committee desired any information that we could furnish in any way, we should be happy to furnish it to them.

Q. You state, then, that so far as you know neither the American Bell Telephone Company nor any of its officers or stockholders, nor any person in its interest, has had anything to do with setting on foot the investigation or the carrying of it on?—A. Nothing about it at all, unless some members of the committee may have asked questions of our counsel who have been down here from time to time; but not with our knowledge or any authority of ours at all.

Q. I understood you to say that you would furnish or direct to be furnished to the committee, if they desired, the arguments of your counsel?—A. Mr. Storrow's and Mr. Dickerson's arguments before Mr. Lamar; yes, sir.

Q. Have companies for particular localities been licensed by the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes.

Q. How many of them?—A. I cannot tell you from memory.

Q. Are there many?—A. Yes; in many cases they were individuals. In other cases they were companies, and at one time there were, I think, one hundred and fifty, or perhaps over one hundred and fifty, licenses of the American Bell, and gradually they were consolidated in larger ownership, generally into large companies covering quite a territory, sometimes more than a State, sometimes two or three States; and now I do not know the exact number—fifty or sixty perhaps, possibly a hundred.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the capital of those companies, the extent of it?—A. I think it is about fifty millions of dollars—that is, in round figures.

Q. That would be at its par value, that is, the capital authorized?—A. Par value; properly speaking, fifty millions of dollars; something over that. I can give you that with exactness if you desire it, Mr. Chairman.

Q. I would be obliged to you if you would.—A. I think very likely the treasurer can state that.

Q. I would like to have the names of the companies and, as nearly as you can, the persons interested in them, if you have any means of giving them.—A. That would be a pretty long list, because each of these companies is organized with stockholders all over the United States, and we do not keep any list of those stockholders ourselves. We simply know of the organization of the company, and each company has its own list of stockholders—sometimes hundreds of them—and we should have to make a regular search for them.

Q. Yes; but I do not ask that. I see the difficulty of that. I thought if you had any information in regard to it you might give it to us. Is the American Bell Telephone Company a stockholder in the subordinate companies?—A. In most of them.

Q. Do you know what amount of stock it holds in those companies?—A. I think about twenty-two millions of dollars, par value.

Q. Are you able to tell us what is the market value of that stock as it stands?—A. Well, that is very difficult to state, sir; I would not want to venture an estimate off hand.

Q. What is it valued at among the assets of your company?—A. Well, I should prefer to give you that from —. That is in our report.

Q. Oh, well, sir, how do you regard it; as worth how much money?—A. I think, sir, from fifteen to seventeen millions.

Q. Not worth par, then; not worth the face value.—A. No; not worth the face value. It may appear upon our trial balance as twenty-two millions; but there has been a considerable shrinkage in the value of telephone properties within the last year, and, if you ask my opinion, I should not estimate it at over fifteen to seventeen millions the last time I looked over it.

Q. There has been a shrinkage within the last year?—A. Within the last two years; yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any member of Congress or public officer being interested in any of the telephone companies?—A. No. Do you mean any officer at all of the Government?

Q. Any officer of the Federal Government?—A. I have been told that Secretary Manning, of the Treasury Department, has always been a manager and stockholder of the Troy and Albany Company.

Q. Anybody else?—A. No one else that I recall. I do not think of any other.

Q. Does the American Bell Company itself occupy any territory to carry on telephonic operations, or is the whole territory of the United States occupied by telephone companies?—A. The whole territory is operated by outside companies. The American Bell, however, is now engaged in laying out a system of lines between the large cities, and has built a line from New York to Philadelphia, which is done almost wholly under its own ownership. For instance, in New York and New Jersey we have a firm, a company, to operate under the laws of those States. But we own the stock of those companies, and therefore practically it is a branch of our own business. But we are proposing to extend the ownership in the principal cities. That is not done under our name, but under the name of the American Telephone Company, of which we own the stock.

Q. You own the stock covering that territory?—A. No. Of the licenses of these different companies we reserve the right to connect one territory with another territory. This involves very large lines, and most of the companies do not care to engage in that work.

Q. Now state the present market value of the American Bell stock?—A. About one-sixty-two the last quotation I saw. That would be sixteen millions for the whole.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What was it a year ago?—A. I think it was two-forty or two-fifty; something like that. The fluctuations are so great that I cannot tell you from time to time. It has fluctuated within a year down to one-fifty or one-sixty. I cannot tell you exactly what it was in April or May last year.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was your last dividend?—A. Our regular dividend is 12 per cent. per annum, and we have paid extra dividends as we earned them. Last year we paid 12 per cent.; 12 per cent. regular, and 4 per cent. extra. For the first three or four years there were no dividends at all.

Q. Are you accumulating a fund, or do you divide all your net earnings?—A. We divide most of the net earnings. We have accumulated some reserve fund.

Q. Do I understand you, then, that all the earnings of the American Bell Company come to it from the subordinate companies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you occupy no territory yourself and carry on no telephonic operations?—A. It comes either from royalty on telephones or from dividends on stock that we hold in those companies.

Q. What proportion do you receive as royalties from telephones? You furnish the subordinate companies with the telephones, do you?—A. Yes; that is the bulk of our income—royalty upon telephones.

Q. I do not care to go into this, but it is suggested. Does your company own other patents besides those of Professor Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your company make disposition of its profits in any other way than by way of dividends?—A. No. Well, it has invested a considerable part of its profits in the construction of the plant that we own.

Q. But does any person receive payments from the Bell Company or money in any way from the Bell Company other than as dividends on stock?—A. Our lawyers get a pretty large part of it.

Q. I do not speak of expenses.—A. I do not think I quite catch the drift of your question. Our earnings are all gone into dividends or expended in the plant of the company, of which we have a considerable ownership.

Q. These other patents you speak of you say you own?—A. We have bought these patents. Part of our earnings have gone into the purchase of patents.

Q. Has any person from whom you purchased these patents a right to receive royalties, or have they been bought outright?—A. Most of them have been bought outright; upon some of them we pay royalty to the patentee, but I think no important one.

Q. Your capital is limited to ten millions, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you made an effort to have it increased?—A. Last year.

Q. To what amount?—A. Thirty millions.

Q. Do you think your property is worth thirty millions?—A. It was only to be put in as we put in money against stock to be issued; it was only to issue twenty millions more at par and sell it as we wanted it. That was all we asked for. That was because we were contemplating this system of building lines between large cities, and we foresaw a very considerable outlay beyond our State. Therefore we desired authority to increase our capital from time to time as we desired.

Q. Do I understand you to say that that increase, if allowed, would have to be paid for in money?—A. Every dollar of it.

Q. At par?—A. At par.

Q. I understand you, then, to say that you propose to add to your means for carrying on your operations $20,000,000?—A. No, I do not say we propose to do it. I say we asked authority to do it, because we saw that we were practically only at the beginning of the telephone business, and that our $10,000,000 having been used up in the first five years, we desired authority to increase it as we desired. We saw opportunity to invest $20,000,000 at once, in building lines between large cities.

Q. What is the name of the company controlling the city of Washington, your subordinate company?—A. The National Capital Telephone Company, I think it is called; no, the Chesapeake and Potomac. I beg pardon. It used to be called the National Capital. You must remember I have one hundred and fifty of these companies to keep in my head.

Q. Who are the officers of that company?—A. The president of that company is Morris F. Tyler, of Connecticut, and the directors are Mr. Theodore N. Vail and myself, Mr. Tyler, I think, and Mr. Faust is still a director, the manager here, Mr. Bryan, and one or two others that I do not recall at the moment. It can be easily furnished if you wish to have it.

Q. Do you know of any public officer or member of Congress having an interest in that company?—A. No, sir; I am not aware of a member of Congress or an officer of the Government having an interest in any telephone company with which I am connected except the case I have mentioned. It might easily happen that plenty would be interested in this company and I should know little about it, because I have very little opportunity to know about the details of these subcompanies.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Forbes, I believe that is all I care for. I turn you over to Mr. Ranney.

By Mr. RANNEY.

Q. Do not any newspapers or owners of newspapers own stock in your companies?—

A. I do not know of any of them.

Q. Does not the New York World own something in it?—A. I never heard of it.

Q. Or the Tribune?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Or the Sun?—A. I never heard of it.

Q. Or the New York Evening Post?—A. I think not.

Q. Does the Times?—A. I think not.

Q. As I understand you the only paper you paid any money to was the New York Times?—A. Yes, except for the purpose of that article in the Commercial World which we stowed away or burnt up when we got it in Boston.

Q. Does your company, as far as you know, or the men controlling it, own any interest in any of these newspapers?—A. No.

Q. Have you here the books showing the ownership of stock and the transfers of stock in the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. We have the stock list when the company was organized and the stock list to-day. That is what was asked for in the summons we had.

Q. Do you know of any member of Congress that ever has been or is now attorney for your company, or who represents you in any way?—A. Only those I mentioned just now.

Q. What were those?—A. I said Mr. Patrick Collins, who represented our company two or three years ago in Massachusetts, had been from time to time consulted by our company, and he is the one to-day that we should call upon.

Q. Some one appears to be anxious to find out whether I am an attorney for your company; do you know that I am an attorney for your company?—A. No.

Q. Have I ever been consulted, directly or indirectly, in any case?—A. Never.

Q. You spoke of some shares of stock held by me some years ago; have you looked at the record to see about that?—A. No; Mr. Hudson said he had received this telegram, and in looking at the list—

Q. (Interposing.) Did you find a transfer of shares?—A. I did not ask the particulars of it. He said it was three years ago, and since then there was no stock in your name. There were two lots; I think one was collateral and the other I do not know about.

Q. And that when the debt was paid it was retransferred?—A. I did not look into the question at all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was this article in the New York Times that you have referred to republished in any other paper?—A. I do not think so. I do not know that it was.

Q. How came it to be published in the Times; how came this article to be written and printed in the Times?—A. A representative of the New York Times came to Boston in December and stated that the New York Times was proposing to publish a series or a set of industrial articles regarding certain industrial matters, and that they would like to prepare one and submit it to us for our examination and see if it was accurate according to our understanding of the telephone development, and if we approved of it and wished to have it done they would insert it at our expense.

Q. Did you yourself read the article before it was published?—A. I do not think I did. The matter was arranged by Mr. Bowditch, the vice-president of the company, and Mr. Hudson, the general manager. I had a few words with this man from New York. I do not think I ever read the article there.

Q. Let me call your attention to a statement. You say: "Up to the present time, in all the litigation in which the Bell telephone has been forced to engage it has been successful, and every point has been decided in its favor." Is that true so far as you know?—A. I think so; substantially. It is a matter of public record if I am mistaken.

Q. What cases do you know that have been tried in which the Bell telephone has been a party?

The WITNESS. What cases do I know?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. Well, a very long list of them; some twenty or thirty.

Mr. EDEN. Wait a moment. It does not occur to me that litigation ought to be gone into. It is matter in relation to bringing the Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. It may turn upon the point whether there was sufficient reason and authority to bring it.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not going into the merits of those cases; I simply want to get at the fact whether in all these cases the decisions had been in favor of the Bell Telephone Company, and to know whether there was foundation for this article.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think we have a right to know whether the Bell Company was right or wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. It might be competent to inquire whether the Bell Company stated the truth in that statement.

Mr. EDEN. Well, in that light it may be proper.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. (Resuming.) I will put another question.

"It is of interest to know that every question which has been raised before the Interior Department in the present case has been elaborately presented and carefully argued in the United States courts, and that each and every one of them, without exception, has been decided in favor of Bell."

Is that true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You state also, further on:

"Moreover, each and every one of these questions is now on its way to the Supreme Court for final determination, and every such question is in a fair way to be finally and irrevocably settled by the Supreme Court before it will be possible to get it there, through a new suit founded upon a recommendation of the Interior Department, should such recommendation be made."

Now, what case do you know that has been carried to the Supreme Court in which your company has been a party?—A. The cases against what is entitled the People's Telephone, the Drawbaugh, the Molecular, the Overland, and the Dolbear. Those are several of the cases that I can recall.

Q. Had those cases been tried and appeals taken and perfected before application was made to the Interior Department to bring the Government suit?—A. I so understand. When you say perfected, I do not know exactly what you mean. I am not a lawyer, and, of course, I do not know about technical expressions.

Q. I mean surely on its way to the United States Supreme Court?—A. I understand those cases have been appealed, and are on their way to the Supreme Court, and will be heard early in October in the Supreme Court embracing these questions.

Q. That were before the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. All of them?—A. I think so. All that are material.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Can you state how long ago the first appeal was taken?—A. I cannot give you the date.

Q. Several years ago?—A. Several years ago. That was the Dolbear, I think.

Q. Has your company issued any fictitious stock or has it issued and sold any stock for less than par value?—A. No. It issued stock for patents; took its pay partly in patents and partly in cash. But the patents were worth considerably more on the market than the amount of stock that we took for them at the time.

Q. And in case you should increase several millions you would sell for par?—A. We cannot sell for less than par value under the law of Massachusetts.

Q. Did you incorporate under the law of Massachusetts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you issue one million or fifty millions of stock, you cannot divide it up among your stockholders, as I understand it?—A. It has to be offered to them at par first. If they fail to take it then there are other provisions about selling to outside parties. But it can be issued only for $100.

Q. Well, must they pay for it like outside parties?—A. Yes.

Q. And as Judge Ranney suggests, if it is not taken in that way, it is sold at public auction? That is the law, is it?—A. Mr. Ranney—

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). I think the law provides giving it to stockholders first and then it has to be put on the stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The question would be what your company has done, and not what the law provides?—A. As a matter of fact it has been taken by the stockholders at par.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Mr. Forbes, this article that you paid the New York Times for publishing was published after the suit had been ordered by the Interior Department, after the investigation there, and the Interior Department had decided in favor of bringing the suit.

The WITNESS. What do you say about it?

Mr. EDEN. I say that this article that you paid the New York Times for publishing was published January 1, 1886, after the order had been made by the Interior Department in favor of bringing the suit.

A. No; I think Mr. Lamar's decision came out in the middle of January some time.

Q. Well, the matter was pending in the Interior Department when it was published, was it not?—A. Yes. The arguments were heard in December, I think, and it was about that time that this industrial article was written.

Q. Are you acquainted with Dr. J. W. Rogers?—A. No.

Q. Or with J. Harris Rogers?—A. No.

Q. When did you first learn of the publications made in the New York Sun and the New York World attacking the Pan-Electric Association, or the gentlemen composing it?—A. When I saw them published in the papers themselves.

Q. You had not heard anything of it prior to seeing the articles in the papers?—A. No. I will state that an opportunity was given to us to use that matter that was published in the World and we declined to use it.

Q. When was that given to you?—A. Some time before the publication in the World; I do not remember when it was; a similar statement to that published in the World was offered to us for the purpose of publication, and we refused to have anything to do with it.

Q. By whom was it offered to you?—A. It was sent to me from Washington by Mr. Gardiner Hubbard. Some one offered it to him here; I do not know who it was; probably the same person who offered it to the World.

Q. You got your information from Mr. Hubbard, who was an officer of the Washington branch of your company?—A. Yes; similar information to that published in the World was offered to us for publication, and we declined to use it.

Q. Did you learn who offered it?—A. No; I do not know who offered it. We declined it not because we thought it was improper to use it, but merely as a matter of policy we decided we would have nothing to do with any publication of that kind. We simply said, "We do not care to know anything of it."

Q. Did you learn what the price of the material would be?—A. No; I did not ask any questions about it at all.

Q. How long was it before these publications were made in the New York papers that they were offered to you?—A. I do not remember how long it was. It was three or four weeks, or two or three weeks, I think.

Q. Two or three weeks before the publication?—A. Yes; I had some thought of learning the price and buying it to suppress it. I did not care anything about it myself. At that very time it was published in the World and whoever it was had it for sale sold it to them. As matter of fact I did not wish that agitation to take place, because I had taken the course of going to the President about the Pan-Electric matters, as I understood them, before that time. Therefore I did not follow this clue up at all, and did not attempt to find out the price about it; but, as I say, it occurred to me that it might be well to buy that article and suppress it. But in the mean time the article was published in the World without our knowledge or expectation.

Mr. EDEN. That is all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Are you a son of J. M. Forbes?—A. Yes.

Q. John M. Forbes?—A. John M. Forbes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You state that these Rogers letters were sent to you by Mr. Hubbard?—A. No; it was similar information to the first article that appeared in the World. It contained no letters at all, if I remember rightly. It was simply quite a long statement in regard to the bringing out of the Pan-Electric Company. It was the first World article that attracted considerable attention. I think it was somewhere along at the end of January, but I do not think it contained any letters at all.

Q. Was that article sent to you?—A. A statement similar to that. It was not exactly the same. It was substantially the same statement.

Q. Sent to you by Mr. Hubbard?—A. By Mr. Hubbard; yes.

Q. Was there a price fixed upon it?—A. No.

Q. Any compensation?—A. Oh, I assume that some one wanted to sell this information to us, but I decided to have nothing to do with it.

Q. I understand that. Have you Mr. Hubbard's letter transmitting it?—A. I do not know whether I have or not. I think very likely nothing was said about any price for it at all.

Q. If you can produce the letter I should like to have it.—A. I do not know that I kept the letter. It was simply asking if we desired to use it. I told Mr. Hubbard I did not care for it.

Q. Was that article submitted to your directors?—A. I think I read it to the directors; certainly to the executive committee—three of us.

Q. You say the impression made upon you was that it was offered for sale?—A. We assumed that that kind of information generally was expected to be paid for. But we were not, as I say, in that business. We did not make any inquiry as to the person.

Q. On what date was that sent to you?—A. I do not remember. It was some weeks, or perhaps a month, before it appeared in the New York World.

Q. You returned it to Mr. Hubbard? What did you do with it?—A. I do not remember what I did with the copy. I think I sent it to Mr. Storrow, and asked him if he had any use for it. I generally turn such matters over to him. Mr. Storrow said he did not wish to use it.

Q. What was the object of it; for publication?—A. To see if we wished to use it in any way.

Q. You declined to use it and simply kept it?—A. I sent it to Mr. Storrow and he declined to use it.

Q. Then what was done with it?—A. Nothing.

Q. You did not decline the article then; you put it in the hands of your attorney?—A. I placed the copy of it in the hands of Mr. Storrow.

Q. But you did not decline it. You say it was offered to you for any use you thought proper to make of it?—A. Yes.

Q. And you put it in the hands of your attorney, where you thought it might be used?—A. I supposed if we were to publish it we should have to pay for it. But we did not publish it, did not make any offer for it. Mr. Storrow has the copy now.

Q. Did you think you might use it through your attorney without paying for it?—A. No; I did not have any such intention.

Q. It comes to that, that your company did not decline the article; you retained it?—A. We declined to publish the article.

Q. Yes; but you retained it and put it in the hands of your attorney for any use that he saw proper to make of it?—A. Yes; that he saw proper to use it for.

Q. Have you any knowledge that that article was not published in the World (the very article you had) through the agency of Mr. Storrow or somebody else?—A. I know that it was not.

Q. How do you know?—A. Because Mr. Storrow told me so.

Q. Did you not put it in the hands of Mr. Storrow to have it published if he thought it advisable?—A. I have already stated that we did not wish it to be published; we did not wish to make use of it at all.

Q. What use did you think Mr. Storrow could make of it?—A. I simply turned it over to him as counsel; Mr. Storrow thought it best not to use it; I thought so, too, and nothing was done about it.

Q. Your company did not decline the article?—A. I do not think I can state any differently; we did not use it, and I think Mr. Storrow still has the copy; we did not use it in any way, shape, or manner at all.

Q. Do you know that fact?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you know it?—A. Because I know no one has any authority to do anything but our executive committee, except Mr. Storrow himself.

Q. And all you know is what Mr. Storrow told you?—A. Yes; he considered the matter and decided it should not be used.

Q. You say you had an interview with the President in relation to this Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes.

Q. For what purpose?—A. To tell him what I thought of it, and the facts, as I understood them.

Q. With what view?—A. The Government was proposing to bring a suit against our company. I thought it proper to state to the President what the facts were, as we understood them.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you had the interview with the President because of the fact that public officers were connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No; it was because the President was proposing to take the unusual course of bringing a suit against our company—which we understood to be out of the usual course—that our lawyers advised me they had no authority to do it, and they were proposing to bring it, so it was said, in a remote part of the country, away from the place where our company resided, and I desired to place the facts—all the facts, as I understood them—before the President.

Q. Did you do that by direction of the board?—A. I do not think I consulted the board.

Q. Did you consult your executive committee?—A. I do not think I consulted the executive committee. I do not remember whether I did or not.

Q. I wish you would try to remember it.—A. No vote was passed about it. I probably talked it over with the executive committee before I came down here.

Q. Then the fact is that the Bell Company, through a private interview with the President, sought to prevent the bringing of this Government suit?—A. No, sir.

Q. If that is not the fact, what is the fact?—A. I sought to let the President understand the facts as we understood them.

Q. For what purpose?—A. I presented to him the question of jurisdiction. If they thought proper to bring a suit, I put it to him that there were some fifty or sixty millions at issue; that we had been through this issue once, and that we were now about to bring it to the Supreme Court for final determination, which could be done long before this matter could be brought to trial before any court that the Government could begin in, and I pointed out to him that the manifest intention of the Pan-

Electric associates was to stop—not to get our patents tried; but to get them not tried—to get our suits stopped that were already in progress, and that I thought the Government ought not to lend itself to a scheme of that sort. I pointed out to him that the name of the Government had been used before the court at Baltimore, and Judge Bond had been asked to suspend the suit just being brought by the Pan-Electric Company; asked for a stay of proceedings, hoping to get the telephone suits hung up during a long and tedious trial in the name of the Government, and that Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson, who were in New Orleans at that time, and Mr. Bayne and Mr. Simms, our counsel down there, were confident that the same game was going to be tried before Judge Pardee, because the Government was going to bring this suit. I explained the motive of that whole gang, because I desired him to know what kind of use had come to be made of the Government name and power, and pointed out that the whole of this was going to be thrown in the scale before the Government courts as between two private parties, and I asked him if he proposed that the whole matter should be carefully considered. If the Government was interested in the fraud between its own officials in the Patent Office, that was one thing; if they proposed to open up these other inventions that were already on their way before the Supreme Court, that we had to face enormous cost and enormous damage, and that our people represented some fifty or sixty millions invested in legitimate business, and that we ought not to be subjected to that long and tedious investigation. Then I pointed out to him if that was to be done, that our counsel advised us that we could only be sued in Massachusetts, where our company belonged, and I asked him to have the scope of that inquiry at that time considered very carefully before the Government entered into such a plan as that.

Q. Then of course all that was, in the first instance, for the purpose of preventing bringing the suit?—A. It was for the purpose of making the Government understand what we understood about the matter.

Q. I suppose you did not care whether they understood or not. But I ask you to state as a witness now whether your purpose was not to prevent bringing a suit?—A. No; I had no expectation of preventing bringing a suit.

Q. Then what did you want to accomplish?—A. I wanted the President to understand what was being done in the name of the Pan-Electric.

Q. What for?—A. I thought it was for the interest of the Government that he should understand.

Q. What interest had he in bringing suit?—A. I saw perfectly well that an attempt was being made to make use of the Government influence, the influence of people associated with the Administration, to bring pressure upon the Government to bring suit against us. I thought probably the President had never had an opportunity, perhaps never had his attention called to the matter or been induced to look into it, to understand the justice and injustice of this proceeding, and I thought it was proper that our company should once more come and lay its case, as we understood it, before the party proposing to bring the suit in that way.

Q. You thought the use of the Government name in a suit of that kind was wrong?—A. Wholly.

Q. And you wanted to prevent it?—A. I should have been very glad to do so.

Q. Was that your purpose?—A. No.

Q. What was your purpose, then?—A. I thought in the first place the President would see through it. In fact there were two things I asked of him. I asked him to consider the scope very carefully; whether to drag us over this long and tedious road of investigation, or whether it was only a question to investigate fraud in one of his own Departments.

Q. You considered the suit was to be brought?—A. Yes. That was one of the things I asked. And in the next place I asked him to see to it that there would be no unnecessary delays. I thought there would be influence used to have this thing dragged, and dragged along to the great injury of ourselves, and I asked that no unnecessary injury should be inflicted by causing long and improper delays; and I asked him if anything could be done to prevent it before the United States courts, where these parties were claiming that our suits should be hung on the ground that it was the intention to try this suit; that it was proper for the Administration to say that it was not the intention of the Government to have any existing suits stopped. It seemed to us a great injustice would be done if these suits were delayed, and I asked him to have the subject of jurisdiction carefully considered also.

Q. Then you say you assumed that the suit would be brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you advised the President as to the place of bringing it; that is, you did not want it brought in a remote part of the country?—A. I told him—

Q. (Interposing.) Just answer my question. You have gone over it twice. Did you not object to bringing the suit in a remote part of the country?—A. I objected to its being brought anywhere except in Massachusetts.

Q. You wanted to advise as to the place where it should be brought?—A. I simply wanted it understood that we did not think it could be brought anywhere except in Massachusetts.

Q. I understand you also advised the President as to the scope of the issues to be tried in that suit?—A. I did not advise him; I simply asked him to see that that should be very carefully considered.

Q. I used the word "advised" in that way. Yes, but you advised him to have the matters to be tried in that suit confined to certain issues, did you not?—A. Well, I simply told him what I have said to you.

Q. In other words, you assured him that certain issues had already been determined?—A. I told him that the very question involved was already on the way to the Supreme Court in the cases already being tried.

Q. Did you not state that you wanted the suit confined to the question whether the patents had been obtained fraudulently?—A. Let me state that once more. I think I can state it so you will understand it.

Q. Very well. Do not go over the same matters. I have no objection to your stating it.—A. I asked him to have it very carefully considered whether the scope of this thing was to be limited to the question of fraud in the Patent Office, or whether it was to go into the question of priority of invention, which would involve years and years of litigation, all of which would involve great expense, over sixty days of argument by the best counsel we could get, and we felt it was a great injury to us to be asked to go over that again under these circumstances, and therefore I asked him to consider very carefully what the scope was to be.

Q. Did it occur to you that there was any impropriety in your advising the other side as to a suit to be brought against you?—A. Not in the least.

Q. In the first place to select the forum and in the next place to have a voice in what was to be tried; did not that occur to you as somewhat improper?—A. No.

Q. When was it that you had this interview with the President?—A. It was shortly after Mr. Lamar's opinion was published; I think towards the end of January.

Q. Did you make any suggestion as to the change of any officials under the Administration?—A. No.

Q. Did you make any suggestion as to who should be employed as counsel against you?—A. No.

Q. Did you discuss the conduct of the Attorney-General in the matter?—A. No.

Q. Did you make any allusion to it?—A. Simply in saying that we felt that an attempt was being made to use Government officers who were near the Administration in the interest of one of the parties, and that we felt that great delays would be caused if they were allowed to have any voice in the controlling of this suit; that we were entitled to be protected against it. You will find that all stated in the report to the stockholders.

Q. You thought, then, that the Government ought not to bring this suit or allow the use of its name?—A. I certainly thought not. I thought it was an outrage.

Q. And you so stated to the President?—A. I did not use those words.

Q. Substantially?—A. I told him that great injury was being done to the interest I represented in the name of the Government.

Q. You thought it better for you to have the suit brought in Boston than elsewhere and you so stated to the President?—A. I did not so state to him, or that I thought so.

Q. Why did you want it brought there?—A. In the first place, there would be a great deal of delay in the argument of the question of jurisdiction.

Q. If you raise it?—A. We certainly shall raise it.

Q. You need not raise it.—A. That is a matter for our lawyers to say. Perhaps they will not raise it.

Q. Then, in addition to that, you made some suggestion as to what should be tried in this suit—the question to be raised.—A. I pointed out the objections to all the questions that were for matter of delay.

Q. Did it occur to you that you could have made any other suggestion, except as to counsel who were to be employed?—A. It did not occur to me to make any suggestion of that sort.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did anybody accompany you when you went to have this interview with the President?—A. Only to introduce me; the Secretary of War; I asked him to introduce me.

Q. You did not take any attorney with you?—A. No.

Q. Was any one present at the interview?—A. No.

Q. That was after the matter had been decided so far as the action of the Interior Department was concerned?—A. Yes. It was after Mr. Lamar had made his recommendation.

Q. And do you know whether the Department of Justice had also made any order at that time?—A. I think no order had been made. I think simply that Mr. Lamar had written a letter advising that the Government had power to bring the suit and recommending that the suit be brought. That is all I remember.

Q. That was as far as it had progressed at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, had this question been raised and discussed about the scope of the suit—how much it should embrace—before you went and saw the President? That matter had been discussed before the Interior Department, I suppose. Of course the papers will show that.—A. Yes; I think if I remember rightly that the principal ground upon which Mr. Lamar made his advice was that there was some impropriety on the part of some of the officers of the Government, which could only properly be investigated by the Government itself, and therefore I simply said if that was all the investigation it could be done in a short time.

Q. And you presented that view to the President?—A. Yes; that if that was all, that could be done in a short time, and that if the other course was adopted great injury would be done.

Q. How long did the interview last?—A. About three quarters of an hour.

Q. Did the Secretary of War remain?—A. No.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. What did the President say about it?—A. Well, I do not think I have a right to quote Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Cleveland was non-committal. I should prefer not to quote Mr. Cleveland's language in that conversation. I am perfectly willing to do so if the committee insist.

Mr. MILLARD. I think if the committee can require this witness to say what he said to the President, we ought to have what the President said to him.

The WITNESS. I have denied even to the directors quoting what Mr. Cleveland said at all.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not material.

Mr. HANBACK. I ask him what the President said in response to this witness.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HANBACK. If the witness prefers not to answer; if he has a delicacy about it, I shall not care to press it.

The WITNESS. As to the matter what he said I should not have the slightest objection, but as a matter of propriety it seems not proper to quote the President.

Mr. EDEN. It is simply as a matter of propriety, then?

The WITNESS. That is all. I am perfectly willing to state the substance of it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the witness. The rule would be that the whole matter should come out.

The WITNESS. If the committee desires to insist I shall give the whole conversation, but as a matter of propriety I have never quoted what the President said at all.

Mr. EDEN. I do not insist on it at all.

The WITNESS. His answers were entirely non-committal.

Mr. HANBACK. I think that question is largely answered.

The CHAIRMAN. I yield to the witness.

Mr. HANBACK. Yes, and I yield also; and then, another thing, the witness has said Mr. Cleveland's answers were entirely non-committal, and he said very little, I suppose.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; he said very little.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say you were introduced by the Secretary of War?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he remain during the interview?—A. No.

Q. Or any part of it?—A. Perhaps to exchange a few words of courtesy; that was all; not during the business part of the conversation.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke about furnishing to the committee the printed record of the Interior Department, or the proofs?—A. Yes; the arguments of Mr. Storrow and Mr. Dickerson before Mr. Lamar. Would you like to have them?

Q. To any member of the committee, or to all the committee?—A. To all the committee. We have printed copies of them.

Q. I understand you those were the documents printed in the Interior Department?—A. Yes; it was simply for your convenience.

Mr. RANNEY. I got mine from Professor Gray.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not had any. I would like to have one.

Mr. HANBACK. If you have them to spare you might send one to each member of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. If the rest of the committee have not got it, I wish you would furnish the committee the second volume.

The WITNESS. In what case?

Mr. RANNEY. It is the one I showed to Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have the letter of Mr. Hubbard, forwarding that World article, we would be obliged to you if you will send it.

The WITNESS. If I can find it; I do not think I kept a copy of it.

Mr. HANBACK. It was information similar to the World article.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do I understand that your company retained that original letter, or that you have a copy now?—A. I think so; a copy in manuscript or type-writer, and I think Mr. Storrow has one.

Q. And you sent the original copy back to Mr. Hubbard?—A. No; this was a copy I had and sent it to Mr. Storrow.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was Mr. Hubbard in Boston?—A. No, Mr. Hubbard was in Washington.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that you produce the Hubbard letter if you have it, also the reply to that letter.

The WITNESS. I think I gave that to Mr. Hubbard personally when I was in Washington, and told him I thought it was best not to use it in any way. I do not think any reply was sent to him. Copies of the Dickerson and Storrow arguments and the paper called "Proofs and replies;" is that what you want?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; I think that the committee has some copies of the first volume; it is the second volume I want.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you seen the bill in the Government suit?—A. I have seen it, but I have not read it through.

Q. Do you know whether there are any facts or allegations or charges in that bill that have been passed upon by other courts?

Mr. EDEN. Oh, I do not think that is proper.

Mr. MILLARD. It certainly is proper if he knows.

Mr. EDEN. The decision of the courts and the appeal itself will show.

The WITNESS. I do not think there is anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a moment.

Mr. HANBACK. It was the opinion of the president of the company that every issue had been covered.

Mr. MILLARD. That is why I ask it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I am questioning you of your interview with the president. You spoke to him in regard to the questions to be tried, with a view of not trying old questions and involving you in unnecessary expense?—A. To let him understand that that would be the result if he should reopen the question.

Q. And that it had been passed upon by different courts on its way to the United States Supreme Court by appeal?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, in what State have those decisions been made and the same questions passed upon?—A. In Massachusetts.

Q. By what judge in Massachusetts?—A. By Judge Lowell and Judge Gray.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Did you state these facts to the president?

Mr. MILLARD. It is competent outside of that.

A. No, I did not state that.

Mr. HALL. Then I object to it.

Mr. HANBACK. The fact what courts it was before would be proper.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it is material.

Mr. MILLARD. In my judgment, it seems to be a remarkable proceeding to bring a Government suit to determine questions that have been once tried before a competent tribunal, and appeals taken to the United States Supreme Court.

The CHAIRMAN. If it was a material matter you would have to prove it by the records of the United States court. It is only an expression of his opinion.

Mr. MILLARD. I only ask what is within the knowledge of the witness.

Q. (Resuming. What courts and before what judges?—A. In Massachusetts before Judge Lowell and Judge Gray. In Pennsylvania before Judge McKennon. Before Judge Butler and Judge Nixon. I think Judge Butler sat with him—Judge Nixon, in New Jersey. Judge Wallace in New York. Those are all I recall.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Now has Roscoe Conkling been employed by you to defend this suit?—A. This Government suit? No. He is retained by our company generally and would be consulted generally. Not necessarily to argue this suit. That is entirely a matter for the future.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You do not mean to say that any of these questions were decided in the suit before Judge McKennon; he only heard one side?—A. He had all the evidence before him on both sides.

Q. He only heard the argument upon one side?—A. He heard arguments and I listened to them for four days on both sides in Philadelphia, in which the whole ground was gone over.

Q. Yes, in the Pittsburgh suit. He only heard one side, and ruled it upon the ground that it had been decided by other courts.—A. No, I beg pardon. He ruled it upon the ground that he heard it four days previous, covering the whole ground, and that he would not hear argument covering the whole ground.

Q. I cannot understand that. Sometimes courts refuse to hear the party they intend to decide in favor of. But that is not material.—A. That is matter for Judge McKennon and not for me.

Q. It has been stated that some of these cases which you say were determined in your favor, were decided after an arrangement had been made between you and the opposite party, by which practically you were on both sides; is that correct?—A. It is wholly untrue.

Q. As I understand you, in any suits in which the Bell Company has been a party, you have not made any arrangement with the opposite party?—A. No, except in the settlement made with the Western Union in the Dowd case.

Q. In what case?—A. Well, it was called the Dowd case, because he was the man called for the Western Union. We had a long controversy with the Western Union and final settlement.

Q. And then you say a decision was not had there?—A. Well, that was one of the cases. It has been quoted before Judge McKennon. In one of these cases quoted by the overland company as a case of collusive settlement—no, it was in one of the earlier cases. Mr. George Gifford, whom you all know, is one of the most upright, one of the most able patent lawyers in the United States, was the senior counsel for the Western Union, and upon it being set up that that was a collusive settlement, a collusive suit, he stated that the proceedings were adversary throughout; that the Western Union, after a long controversy, upon his advice and upon it being ascertained that in his judgment the Bell patents were valid, he recommended them to make the best settlement they could, and upon that decision they made a settlement with us in the Dowd case in which they put in certain valuable properties and other patents. We put in the Bell patents and other properties. I think an arrangement was made by which they took part of the royalties.

Q. Was not the case settled before the decision was made?—A. As I said, there was no decision. It was settled in that way.

Q. Was there not a decision?—A. Decree was entered by consent of both parties afterward.

Q. That is what I ask; after you obtained control of both sides, then the decree was entered?—A. Decree was entered by consent of both parties.

Q. That is one of the cases quoted in these numerous suits?—A. No, that is one of the cases quoted; that is not one of the cases that is on its way to the United States court.

Q. It is not on its way to the United States court?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is the Western Union Company a stockholder in the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. No.

Q. Is the American Bell Telephone Company a stockholder in the Western Union?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of any of the parties owning stock or interest in both companies, any single individual having stock in both companies?—A. I do not think I can tell you of one; I have from time to time heard some of our stockholders saying they had some Western Union stock, some small amount; but there is no mutual holding of the two shares.

Q. You have a contract with the Western Union?—A. Yes.

Q. By which you exclude other telegraph companies, do you not?—A. Yes. I should like to state, since you raise the point, what that is. At the time we made that there was no other telegraph company in the field except one firm put up by Mr. Gould to be sold, and there being none of any force in the field we made the Western Union agree to open all of its offices throughout the United States to our telephone companies and to give connection so that every exchange could by the best telegraph facilities then in the country reach the telegraph system of the country. They bound themselves to do that.

Q. And you agreed that you would not connect with any other telegraph company?—A. Yes, practically; there was none at that time; since then others have started.

Q. When was the time since we have had telegraph companies at all that we have not had more than one in the country?—A. About the time the Western Union consolidated with the American there was none.

Q. I see you have had a number of suits, some at least, by which an attempt was made to compel you to admit certain other companies?—A. Yes, and laws have been passed in several of the States compelling us to give—

Q. (Interrupting.) The Baltimore and Ohio?—A. Yes; we have no objection to giving these connections whenever we are requested.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. In these suits between your company and other companies were there not other patents involved than the Bell patent; was that the only patent you had on your side of the case that you referred to?—A. I think the two Bell patents are the main patents we have rested our cases on.

Q. But you did have other patents to support your suits with these parties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your suits were in part supported by other patents besides the Bell patents in the controversies you had had?—A. I think the Bell patent is the one relied upon in our cases. I do not think the others have been brought in to any extent. I am not posted thoroughly upon that question.

Q. The other patents were used in the suits to sustain the issues on your side?—A. I do not think they appeared on our side. I think the Bell patents have been the ones entirely. But I may be mistaken about that.

Q. In those suits you did not use the Bell patents of 1876-'77?—A. Yes; those are the patents on which we have made our suits, especially the first patent, of 1876, which is the principal patent that we have availed of in our suits. Whether any other patents have been used or not I cannot tell you. But I know that that is the principal thing. Whether other patents have been brought in or not I cannot tell you.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You used the original patent in the suits; but have you not abandoned that? Have you not adopted and used another device than the original patent?—A. No; simply an improvement on it.

Q. That is what I mean.—A. The original drawing in the Patent Office, which is described in that first patent, is as much behind the telephone of to-day—it involves a hundred improvements, and we hope to have a hundred more. But we still rely on that patent as underlying the theory, and the thing that controls the use of those other instruments we are using to-day.

Q. Your company has been purchasing quite a number of inventions on the subject of telephones?—A. Yes.

Q. About how many has it acquired?—A. I cannot tell you, I am sure; probably a hundred or two.

Q. And that has been its policy, whenever there is any invention of any practical use to purchase it?—A. Nearly every inventor who has a telephone brings it to us, and we examine it and find out if it is practicable, and we buy it if we can.

Q. And if you do not buy it it is of no value to him?—A. We do not think so.

Q. So that you absolutely control the use of the telephone?—A. We think so.

Q. Those you think proper to buy without competition you buy and those you do not think proper to buy you do not buy?—A. Well, our patents have seven years to run and those patents have seventeen years to run; so that it is not wholly without competition.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Were these inventions of the Pan-Electric offered to you?—A. A negotiation was proposed to us by the Pan-Electric Company at one time.

Q. State to the committee what you know about that?—A. I personally know very little about it. It was Mr. T. N. Vail who saw Senator Harris. There was some correspondence between them.

The CHAIRMAN. You had better not state that.

The WITNESS. I have looked over the original letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you those original letters?

The WITNESS. All the original letters were put together and given to Mr. Storrow. Those letters simply proposed negotiation. No terms were agreed upon and the matter was dropped.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What was the date of that interview, or negotiation; was it before or after the Government suit?—A. Long before. It was in 1883 or 1884. Somewhere along there.

The CHAIRMAN. In the view of the Bell Company there is nothing else to do but to sell out.

The WITNESS. I should like to go back to Boston to-night, unless the committee intend to call me again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman desire to call the gentleman again?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know of any reason for calling him again.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, the president of the company has just reminded me of a matter on the question of dividends. As I stated just now under the agreement with the Western Union we pay a percentage of our royalty to the Western Union; Under the Edison patent they take 20 per cent. of the royalty. I think the question you asked was in a totally different direction; whether we ever diverted our earnings to buying up any others.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What were the terms of that contract?—A. It ran from November 1879. It runs to 1894.

Q. So that the Western Union really receives 20 per cent. of your earnings?—A. No. 20 per cent. on the royalties for our telephones.

Q. What amount do you receive for royalties?—A. About sixteen hundred thousand.

Q. You say you bought from Edison?—A. Yes; they put in everything telephonic they had.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Does it include the Gray claim?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did Gray sell out everything he had?—A. Yes; he sold out once. He is trying to sell out again now.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did he include that in his caveat?—A. I think so. It is all there.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not desired that we go into that.

Mr. MILLARD. That was called out by the chairman.

Mr. EDEN. The patent?

Mr. MILLARD. No; the contract. The chairman called out the relations between the Western Union and them.

WILLIAM R. DRIVER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your relation to the American Bell Telephone Company?—Answer. I am the treasurer.

Q. How long have you been treasurer?—A. Since its organization in 1880.

Q. Have you been connected with any of the companies preceding the American Bell?—A. I was for about six weeks the treasurer of the National Bell, which sold out to the American Bell.

Q. Have you the books of the original association?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you the books of the two companies which succeeded the New England and the Bell?—A. I think I have the books of the Bell and the New England.

Q. Will you produce them, sir?—A. I beg pardon; I understood you to ask if I had them in my custody. They are in Boston.

Q. Have you any means of showing who were the stockholders in those companies?—A. Not here. In the summons nothing was said of any other company than the American Bell.

Q. That was because I did not know but that it was the original company. So you have come then with nothing but the American Bell?—A. That is all.

Q. You were an officer of the National Bell Company?—A. I was the treasurer of the National Bell for about six weeks before it went out of business.

Q. You have no books or papers of that company with you?—A. Not here. The stock list of the American Bell Telephone Company, at its organization, is substantially the stock list of the National Bell Telephone Company at the close of its business.

Q. Well, sir, we will begin where you began. What was the capital of the National Bell?—A. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. Can you state, from your personal knowledge or recollection, who were the holders of the stock?—A. There were about seven hundred of them. I could not name them.

Q. Did you know any of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state whether there were any members of Congress or United States officers among them?—A. I do not remember that any were officers of the United States.

Q. You say you have the stock list of the American Bell Company?—A. The first stock list; yes, sir.

Q. Will you produce it?—A. (Producing and submitting stock list.) Probably my estimate of the number was a little large; I had seven hundred in my mind; I should not think there were as many as that.

Q. I see the name Francis here without more?—A. You will find the surname at the right, farther down, without repeating there.

Q. Yes; Francis Blake.—A. We took some little time to get that up; of course we took the shortest way.

Q. Who was George L. Bradley?—A. He was a director of the company.

Q. Did you know him?—A. Yes, he was the son of Judge Bradley, of Rhode Island.

Q. What was Judge Bradley's name?—A. Charles S.

Q. He was a stockholder?—A. He was a director.

Q. You say he is a judge?—A. He was chief justice. I do not know that he was at that particular time, though.

Q. A. Cochrane & Co. Do you know who they were?—A. Yes.

Q. Who were they?—A. Manufacturers of chemicals in Boston; Alexander Cochrane & Co.

Q. I see the name of S. B. Dana. Do you know who he was?—A. He is a dry-goods merchant in New York. My impression is his firm is Upham, Tucker & Co., in New York. I do not know him personally.

Q. Is he still a stockholder?—A. I think very likely he is a small one. I do not remember.

Q. I see the name of George D. Edmunds. Who is he?—A. Well, I do not know him personally; he is a Boston man; a brother, I think, of J. Wiley Edmunds, formerly a large manufacturer in Boston.

Q. William P. Endicott. Do you know who he is or was?—A. Yes; he is a Salem man, a relative of the Secretary of War, I think.

Q. Is he a stockholder?

The WITNESS. Who; the Secretary of War?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; William P. Endicott. Is he still a stockholder?

A. Well, I can tell. I have a stock list here. I think he is. [After referring to stock list.] He is; he has fifteen shares.

Q. Richard S. Fay. Who was he?—A. He was treasurer of the Middlesex Company in Boston. He has been dead some three or four years.

Q. I see some stock here held by certain gentlemen as trustees—held by W. H. Forbes, Alexander Forbes, and Charles P. Bowditch—fourteen thousand shares.—A. Yes; they were trustees for the National Bell Telephone Company.

Q. That was the company which preceded this?—A. That was the company which took the stock in payment for its property. That was the company that sold off to the American Bell and took stock of the American Bell property and business.

Q. Was that the full consideration?—A. The full consideration was six millions and a half.

Q. Out of a capital of ten millions?—A. Out of a capital of $7,350,000.

Q. The capital was ten millions?—A. The authorized capital was ten millions. It was originally fixed at $7,350,000.

Q. Is that stock still so held?—A. Part of it. One thousand and fifty shares is still so held, but the trust has been changed. It is now held in trust for the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. What was done with the rest of it; you say there are 1,050 shares of the 14,000?—A. One thousand and fifty are still held—$1,142,000, I think, is the exact amount that was exchanged for convertible notes of the American Bell Telephone Company, which were issued at two different times; $500,000 at one time and $642,000 at another, issued for money, dollar for dollar.

Q. I am not sure that I understand the transaction.—A. This trust was changed some years ago, so that it finally became a trust for the American Bell Telephone Company. The American Bell Telephone Company in 1880, I think, issued, its convertible notes for $500,000, payable, I think, in five years. At all events the effect was, if at any time previous to the maturity of the notes any increase in the capital was made, the holders of these notes should share and the notes should then become convertible. An increase was made and the stock was issued in exchange for the notes—$500,000. A similar issue of convertible notes, differing somewhat in terms, amounting to $645,000 was made and converted at maturity. These notes were all issued for money, as I said, and converted into stock as the time came around.

Q. Who is Horace Gray?—A. Horace Gray, of New York.

Q. Who is he?—A. I think he is a merchant there.

Q. Is he in any way connected with the Boston Grays?—A. I do not know whether he is a connection of Judge Gray or not. He is not the judge.

Q. He has the same name?—A. The same name.

Q. Is he still a stockholder?—A. (After referring to stock list.) Yes.

Q. Who was Francis C. Gray?—A. I do not know him.

Q. Maurice Gray?—A. I do not know him. I think they are Boston people.

Q. Samuel S. Gray?—A. He is a broker in Boston, I think.

Q. Do you know whether any of these people are related to the judge?—A. I do not know that they are.

Q. S. R. Hawley. Do you know who that is?—A. I think he is a ready-made clothing man in Boston. It isn't F. A.?

Q. S. R.—A. Oh; the man I was thinking of was F. A. Hawley. I do not know who that Hawley is.

Q. James R. Hooper. Do you know him?—A. No, I do not.

Q. John S. Hooper?—A. I think that was the stationery man in Boston; Hooper, Lewis & Co.

Q. Formerly of the firm of Hooper, the Congressman from Boston?—A. Yes; that was Samuel Hooper.

Q. Do you know whether he had any connection with the company?—A. I should judge not. He is dead anyway.

Q. Do you know George D. Ladd?—A. He is a shoe man in Haverhill.

Q. Still a stockholder?—A. I think so. [After referring to stock list.] He is; yes, sir.

Q. Abbott Lawrence; do you know him?—A. I do not know him.

Q. Is he still a stockholder?—A. No.

Q. Do you know Augustus Lowell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is a brother of Judge Lowell, son of John A. Lowell, treasurer of several manufacturing companies in Massachusetts.

Q. Is that the Judge Lowell who decided one of the Bell cases?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Lowell and Judge Gray, I believe, sat together, did they not?—A. I think they did.

Q. That was Judge Lowell's brother; is he still a stockholder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is Abbott Lowell?—A. A son of Augustus Lowell.

Q. As I understand you, this is a list of the stockholders at the organization of the Bell Company in 1879?—A. The date is on the outside. I think it is May 1, 1880.

Q. Abbott Lowell?—A. He is a son of Augustus Lowell.

Q. Who is John A. Loring?—A. He is a lawyer in Boston; a brother, I think, of Dr. Loring.

Q. Was he ever in office that you know of?—A. I do not know; I do not know him.

Q. Here is John A. Lowell, trustee?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is he?—A. He has been dead for several years; he was the father of Judge Lowell and Augustus Lowell.

Q. When did he die?—Oh, I do not know; in 1883 or 1884, I think; possibly earlier. That was in his name as collateral, I think you will observe.

Q. Trustee—"Tr."—A. Yes, sir; but it was collateral. I am quite confident it was.

Q. Trustee for what?—A. He was trustee for large funds and he loaned money on call. People put this stock up as collateral.

Q. Here is Percival Lowell?—A. He is a son of Judge Lowell.

Q. Is he still a stockholder?—A. Yes.

Q. Do I understand you to say then that the father and the brother, and a son of Judge Lowell were stockholders in this company at the time the judge decided this suit?—A. If I am right as to the relationship, and they are on that list.

Q. Who were J. W. McIntosh & Co.?—A. They are brokers in Boston; Noah, McIntosh, Klous & Co.

Q. William T. Mason; do you know him?—A. Yes.

Q. What is his business?—A. He has no business.

Q. Do you know of him holding any office at any time?—A. I do not think he ever had a public office in his life. I do not think he ever worked.

Q. Here is Nathaniel Maverick?—A. [Laughing.] It is the National Maverick Bank probably.

Q. Oh, do you know the officers of that bank?—A. Mr. Potter, I believe, is president. I do not know who the officers are.

Q. What Mr. Potter?—A. Asa P. Potter.

Q. Robert B. Minturn?—A. He is of New York.

Q. A New York man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he hold any office?—A. I do not know whether he did or not.

Q. Ella M. Morgan, do you know who she is?—A. Yes; I believe she is the wife of Albert O. Morgan, of South Acton, Massachusetts.

Q. Who is John P. Morse, jr.?—A. He is a lawyer in Boston.

Q. I don't know whether this is S. Endicott Peabody or Peabody S. Endicott?—A. S. Endicott Peabody.

Q. Charles E. Perkins, who is he?—A. The president of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company.

Q. Who was Henry Saltonstall?—A. He is treasurer of a manufacturing company there; I forget which one.

Q. And William G. Saltonstall?—A. He is a treasurer in this company and director in the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. I see the names of J. J. Storrow and C. E. Hubbard, trustees. Do you know whom they are trustees for?—A. I do not know the nature of the trust; I do not know who they are trustees for.

Q. L. D. M. Sweet, who is he?—A. He is from Portland, Me.

Mr. EDEN. It has been a long time since he was a member of Congress.

Q. (Continuing.) Was he a member of Congress?—A. I do not know.

Mr. EDEN. I served with him in Congress twenty-two years ago.

Q. (Continuing.) He had only seven shares. Is he still a stockholder?

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman I speak of was from Maine. It may be the same man.

A. He is a stockholder.

Q. How many shares?—A. Ten.

Q. He has seven here. Who is Thomas A. Watkins?—A. He was an electrician; formerly electrician of the company.

Q. Clarence S. Whitney?—A. I do not know who he is.

Q. E. Herbert Whitney?—A. He is a Boston man. I do not know what his business is.

Q. Israel G. Whitney and James L. Whitney?—A. Israel G. Whitney is a merchant in Boston. James L. Whitney I do not know. I suspect though he is a relative of the water-power man there.

Q. You say the paper you produce is the list of the stockholders at the formation of the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. It is the list of the stockholders at the formation of the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Had these parties all been interested in the National Bell Telephone Company?—A. Most of them; some of them have.

Q. And acquired their stock by transfer of the National Bell property?—A. By dividend of the National Bell Telephone Company.

Q. How did they pay?—A. In money.

Q. Out of dividends from the National Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not know where they got their money. The National Bell Telephone Company never paid a cash dividend.

Q. Did they in fact pay any additional money?—A. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars to make the balance of the stock at the organization of the American Bell Telephone Company would make the balance of the money.

Q. What was the stock?—A. Seven million five hundred thousand dollars.

Q. Of the National?—A. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. Then there was seven million five hundred thousand made out of six hundred and fifty thousand dollars?—A. Six and a half million of this seven million five hundred thousand dollars was the profit and stock.

Q. Its capital was only six hundred and fifty thousand dollars?—A. Exactly.

Q. And the American Bell paid them six and a half million?—A. But that capital was selling in the market above the par of one hundred.

Q. So that it was simply increasing?—A. Simply taking the market value and making it par value.

Q. It was not paid in money?—A. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars was paid in money.

Q. But the six and a half million was not paid in money?—A. Six and a half million was paid off by the property of the National Bell Telephone Company—patents, accounts, machines.

Q. Without any actual increase of property at all?—A. No.

Q. You are merely giving its market value?—A. That is all.

Q. And its market value had been originally six hundred thousand?—A. Its market value had been one hundred and twenty-five thousand.

Q. Only $25 a share?—A. I think so.

Q. So that its entire value was at one time only about $150,000 then?—A. Yes, sir. That is an impression; anywhere from twenty-five to fifty.

Q. And by increase in the value of the property it became worth $6,500,000?—A. Yes.

Q. And the persons who were stockholders in the American Bell Telephone Company became holders of stock to the amount of $6,500,000 without the payment of any additional money?—A. Yes, sir. No; I am mistaken about that. This six and a half million was not all divided among the stockholders of the National Bell Company. Six shares of the American Bell were given to each holder of one share of the National Bell. That made $6,500,000. This $1,400,000 was left by vote in the hands of the trustees.

Q. These 14,000 shares?—A. These 14,000 shares were left in trust subject to the disposition of the American Bell Telephone Company.

Q. It actually belonged——?—A. (Interrupting.) Belonged to the National Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Belonged to the American or National Bell?—A. It was part of the price paid to the National Bell by the American Bell for its purchase.

Q. So that this capital, then, of the American Bell Telephone Company was not paid in money; it was paid by an increase in value between the par value of the stock of the National Bell and the American Bell?—A. It was paid off in property at the market value.

Q. And it had increased in market value?—A. It had originally been much lower.

Q. From $150,000 to $6,500,000?—A. It would not be a hundred and fifty; $25, you see, would be $212,500.

Mr. HANBACK. What is the point of these questions?

The CHAIRMAN. We will consider that when we come to look at the whole matter.

Mr. HANBACK. I object to the questions. I object to sitting here all day upon this. I object to it as being wholly irrelevant.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the point is quite clear. I am endeavoring to show that this other company we were talking about—

Mr. HANBACK. I withdraw the objection if that is the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the purpose.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Will you show me the present list? [A paper was submitted by the witness to the chairman.] I see a number of Allens here.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe there was an Allen a member of Congress from Massachusetts?

Mr. RANNEY. I believe there was one Judge Charles Allen a number of years ago.

Mr. HANBACK. There is one now.

Mr. RANNEY. There is one now.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know Judge Charles Allen, of Massachusetts?—A. No.

Q. You do not know, then, whether any of these Allens are related to him?—A. I do not.

Q. I see here there is a Sarah R. Ames. Do you know William Atherton?—A. I do not, unless he is a Shaker. I have in mind the head of a Shaker village up in Worcester County somewhere. It may be him.

Q. Do you know whether the man you speak of is an officeholder?—A. No; except as I say I think he was the head of this village. I do not know of any other office.

Q. I see Alexander Graham Bell set down as holding one share; is that the extent of his holding in the company?—A. I presume so. That list I believe to be correct.

The CHAIRMAN. It will take a long time to go over this, and I do not wish to detain the committee. Can you not leave this list with the committee?

The WITNESS. Yes; if you wish it.

The CHAIRMAN. We will not give it out for publication.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You have a stock-book that that is taken from?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. So that if anything should happen to it you would have it?—A. Oh, yes; I could have another one made with labor. I would rather get that one back.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand that you have no knowledge of the company which preceded the National Bell?—A. I have no knowledge. I was not connected with it except for a few weeks. I was treasurer of the National Bell just before it sold out.

Q. Do you know in what manner the National Bell Company was organized?—A. By consolidation of the Bell Company and the New England Company.

Q. Was there any increase of stock at that time?—A. I think there was two hundred thousand then.

Q. It was increased two hundred thousand at that time?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. And how paid for?—A. In money. Sold, I think.

Q. Sold to other parties not stockholders?—A. You see that was before my time, and I had nothing to do with it. I think it was sold to parties other than stockholders.

Q. It was sold, then, for money?—A. I mean it was sold for money to the persons to whom it went. I cannot say.

Q. It was not disposed of in the manner the stock was at the time of the transfer of the stock of the National Bell to the American Bell?—A. Well, the same manner; it was exchanged for property.

Q. I want to know whether it was the same.—A. It was for cash in the National Bell case, I think. I haven't any doubt that it was for cash; but as I did not receive the cash and deliver the stock I cannot say further than that.

Q. Do you know whether any money has been paid by the American Bell Telephone Company for the publication of newspaper articles within the past three years?—A. The article that has been testified to in the New York Times, and within a week or two an argument by our counsel before the Massachusetts legislature was published and paid for. With those exceptions, no money.

Q. Could money be paid by your company without your knowledge for that purpose?—A. Not if I was well and attending to business.

Q. Might it not be paid apparently for another purpose?—A. Well, I do not speak of possibilities; I speak of probabilities. Of course, that would be entirely possible.

Q. All you can say, then, is that it does not appear from the direct transactions of the company that money has been paid that way?—A. Yes, sir; all payments are made by me.

Q. All appear to be for some other purpose, I suppose?—A. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. I understand him to say he does not know, of his own knowledge, of any money being paid.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what he stated; no money appears from the books of any transactions.

The WITNESS. The question was whether it could be done. All I meant to say was it has not been done. I have no doubt it is entirely possible.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. It has not been done, so far as you know?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I take it the money transactions of the company are quite large?—A. Yes.

Q. Money paid out for different purposes?—A. Yes; all purposes that a large corporation would be likely to have.

Q. You do not know, then, of money having been paid in any way—I say you do not; I ask you whether you do know of money having been paid in any way for the publication of newspaper articles?—A. I can say that no money has been paid.

Q. You can say that?—A. I do say it.

Q. Do you know that all the money that has been paid out by your company has been for the very purposes which it appeared to go for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How could you know that?—A. I am tolerably familiar with the transactions of the company, and, as I say, all the money that is paid out is paid by me.

Q. Can you state the general place of residence of your stockholders; where does the body of these stockholders live?—A. In New England; in the New England States, although they are scattered all over the northern part of the country.

Q. Are they not principally in Massachusetts?—A. Very likely.

Q. They mostly live in Boston, I take it?—A. No. Oh, you say mostly; Boston has a very large number; I never had occasion to determine whether Boston had a majority of the shares or not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you speak of the American Bell or subordinate companies?—A. The American Bell Company,

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you state accurately the aggregate capital of the subordinate companies?—A. I cannot.

Q. Have you no books here to show?—A. No.

Q. It was stated by the preceding witness that he thought it was about fifty millions?—A. I should think that was about the sum.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Does that embrace the foreign companies?—A. We have nothing to do with any foreign company except that in Canada; we are stockholders in that in Canada, but in no other foreign company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I see that it was stated that an effort was made during the session of the last legislature to have your limit of capital enlarged to thirty millions.—A. Yes.

Q. Was it designed to sell the stock, or to convert the present stock at its market value into new stock?—A. As new capital was required, our design under the law was to sell for cash. Under the law, I think, we could sell for nothing less than par.

Q. Could you not convert the present stock into new stock?—A. If we could find a company that would buy our present property at our value it would be entirely possible.

Q. Find a company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The persons who should take the new stock, then, as I understand, would be compelled to pay cash for it?—A. Any increase of capital by the existing company can only be issued for cash or property at par.

Q. Did this increase of capital contemplate a change of companies or reorganization?—A. I never heard it suggested. The object of the increase, if I may be allowed to say, was to raise money, not to raise shares.

Q. To raise money. Well, the purchasers of new stock, I assume, would be put on equality with the present stockholders then; or would the holding of the present stockholders be increased?—A. I do not know of any way in which it could be done.

I think the law of Massachusetts is that value shall be received for every share that is put out. At all events there was nothing of that sort, so far as I am aware.

Q. I see the present stock is worth considerable over its present par value?—A. Yes, it is about a hundred and sixty-two to-day.

Q. And the purchaser of the new stock could— A. (Interrupting.) The purchasers of new stock would be in the first instance holders of the present stock; they are entitled to buy the stock at par; if they do not wish to hold the stock they can sell the right to do so.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know whether your company holds any interest in any newspapers?—A. It does not, nor are there any newspapers holding any substantial amount in the company.

Q. Or any amount or interest in it?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did you have the paying for the publication of this article in the New York Times?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it was paid for at the usual rates?—A. I do not, because I do not know what the usual rates are.

Q. It seems to cover four full columns.—A. I know the publication was solicited.

Q. Solicited by whom?—A. By a man who claimed to be the agent of the Times people.

Q. Did he come to Boston from New York for it?—A. I suppose so; he came to me first and made his proposition.

Q. What was his proposition?—A. Generally that the Times wanted to publish an article on New Year's day—a New Year's article on industrial matters—and wanted to publish an article upon the telephone.

Q. Were they publishing industrial matters generally or yours exclusively?—A. Oh, I understood him that he had other enterprises that were going to do the same thing.

Q. Do you know who wrote this article?—A. I do not.

Q. Who fixed the price of it?—A. I suppose the Times Company; I do not know. I referred him to the vice-president of the company, and that was the last I knew of it until I paid the bill.

Q. Did he decline to say anything about any other company paying him?—A. I did not ask him. He did not say anything, as I remember. I did not go into it at all. My notion was that we did not want it.

Q. Had you seen anything in the Times about the Pan-Electric Company at that time?—A. I do not recall anything at that time. I would like to make one correction. I think the question was asked if I knew about payment for any newspaper articles. We did have an arrangement with an electrical paper which lasted for one year. We did not pay for any particular article, and it was simply to have an electrical paper that our licensees could have. To that paper we subscribed a sum of money, but not any special article. It was simply to have an electrical paper to be depended upon.

Q. Has any present member of Congress ever held any stock in the company that you know of?—A. I do not remember any except yourself.

Q. And when was that?—A. Either in 1882 and 1883 or 1883 and 1884. I do not know. I gave a statement of that fact to the general manager.

Q. You looked it up, did you not?—A. I looked it up.

Q. It was held as collateral?—A. One hundred shares were held as collateral. There were 20 shares which did not appear.

Q. (Submitting a paper to witness.) There is a dispatch from your manager. The papers seem to be very anxious to know about it and I want to gratify them?—A. (Looking at the dispatch.) I saw that dispatch as it was sent.

Q. Just state what the facts are?—A. (Reading dispatch:)

BOSTON, MASS., April 14, 1886.

Hon. A. A. RANNEY:

Telegram received. Books show twenty shares standing in your name from November 23, 1880, to August 13, 1883, transferred to you by Howard, Walter & Co. and retransferred by you to same. Also that you held one hundred shares from March 15, 1883, to April 24, 1883, pledged to you by Rollins, Morse & Bro., as collateral to their note. Except as above your name does not appear on the books from organization of company to date.

JOHN E. HUDSON.

Q. That is, transferred and retransferred to the parties as collateral?—A. The collateral was transferred to you by this party, and by you retransferred to the same.

The CHAIRMAN. And the other twenty shares were retransferred?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Q. (Resuming.) Did you ever see the note in which they were specified as collateral?—A. I did not.

Q. Who were Howard Walter & Co.?—A. They were a company in Boston.

Q. And who were Rollins, Morse & Bro.?—A. Brokers in Boston.

Q. And while I held it as collateral did I ever receive any dividend?—A. The dividend checks on the twenty shares were transferred by you to Walter & Co., except the first one. The first one was deposited by you; by your clerk, I think. I presumed him to be your clerk. I think the indorsement is your name by somebody else for deposit.

Q. For them?—A. I do not think the first one stated. The first one was indorsed by you to them, and the other by your clerk to them.

Q. That was during the time I held it?—A. That was during the time you held it.

Q. Do you know whether the whole business was done by my clerk in behalf of a trust that was held?—A. I do not know.

Q. And that was the only entry?—A. The only one I found.

Q. Have you any personal acquaintance with me at all?—A. I have not; so little that I did not know you this morning.

Q. The newspapers have me as attorney for your company?—A. I did not know you by sight until this morning.

Q. Who are attorneys for your company in Boston?—A. Mr. Storrow and Mr. Chauncey Smith.

Q. Is there any member of Congress that has ever been attorney for your company?

The WITNESS. Any present member?

Mr. RANNEY. Any present member of Congress that has ever been attorney for your company, directly or indirectly?

A. I do not know of any.

Q. Something has been said about Collins?—A. I believe Mr. Collins was employed as counsel for us before the Massachusetts legislature in 1883, I think it was, or 1884.

Q. Are Walter Howard & Co. in business in Boston now?—A. Not as Walter Howard & Co., I think.

Q. And Rollins Morse & Co.?—A. They are still in business.

Q. I see by the reports published in the newspapers that you considered the matter, and concluded to have nothing to do with this investigation; how was that?—

A. That was a matter for the directors to determine, and as I am not a director I do not know.

Q. Are you clerk of the company?—A. I am treasurer of the company.

Q. Did your company have anything to do with it?—A. Nothing whatever.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I believe your company is having a report of these proceedings made; or do you know that fact?—A. I do not know. We probably find out the proceedings, whether through the newspapers or how, we propose to keep posted upon its proceedings the same as anybody else would. If we are having a special report made of it I do not know.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. When did you first see or know of these articles that were published in the New York World and the New York Sun attacking gentlemen connected with the Pan-Electric Association?—A. At the time of their publication, either on the same day or the next day.

Q. Had you any knowledge of the matter before it was published?—A. No.

Q. The first you heard of the publication, or of any intention of such publication, was when you saw it in the paper?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Has there been any claim preferred upon your company from any of the subordinate companies for any money expended on publications in the papers?—A. I think I paid a bill of $100 or $115 for the publication by one paper of a synopsis of the president's report for 1886. I do not think of any other.

Q. Well, that scarcely answers the question. I asked if any claims had been preferred by any of the subordinate companies claiming to have paid out any money for any of these publications?—A. Not to my knowledge; no.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. At the time the National Bell Company made its transfer of stock to the American Bell Company the National Bell Company owned a valuable franchise, did it not?—A. Patents.

Q. Well, patents, and it had a large number of telephones in existence?—A. A large number of telephones, some accounts, some cash.

Q. And the stock was of high value?—A. The stock was of high value.

Q. And quoted so upon the market?—A. Yes.

Q. It had an ascertainable value quoted in the stock reports?—A. Quoted in the stock list.

Q. From six hundred thousand to one million?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. How long had it that value?—A. At that time perhaps nine months.

Q. Do you know anything about the organization of the original two companies that made these transfers?—A. No; that was before my time.

Q. Do you know whether when they were organized the parties who subscribed or secured stock paid in cash for the stock?

The WITNESS. The original stock in the association?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

A. I do not know whether there was any cash paid for that or not.

Q. Do you not know that the consideration for the original stock was the patents transferred to the company?—A. Certainly; part of the consideration.

Q. And since then the company has been securing other patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had been enlarging their operations organizing these subordinate companies and agencies?—A. Yes.

Q. Increasing their royalties?—A. Oh, increasing the number of instruments put out.

Q. So that when the reorganization of the Bell Company occurred the property that was transferred to it had become very valuable?—A. Oh, yes. The value of the property that was transferred met the approval of the State authorities.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. At the organization of that first company, the first practical organization had, do you remember what the capital stock was?—A. There were two companies then; one was $450,000 and the other $200,000.

Q. That was divided into shares of $100?—A. One hundred dollars each.

Q. And taken by purchase?—A. Well, I do not know; that was before my time. Of course, part of it, I presume, was paid for by the patents of the association.

Q. Well, by the patents?—A. And some money.

Q. Yes; under the law of the State?—A. Under the law of the State.

Q. Under the law of the State you have to pay in property and money?—A. Yes.

Q. In order to organize it?—A. Yes.

Q. That is you cannot organize upon a simple patent alone, can you; you have to have a stock organization?—A. The value of the property given for the stock has to be approved by the commissioner of the corporations of the State, who is the treasurer, I think, of the State, or the deputy commissioner, I do not know which.

Q. You do not know how much money was paid in in addition to the property?—A. I am not certain about it. I think it was $50,000. Of course this is not of my personal knowledge.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The actual property paid for the $6,500,000 was the telephones and the franchises of these two companies?—A. Yes; and the property that had been purchased with the three or four hundred thousand dollars.

Q. What property was that?—A. Stocks in other companies, and telephones and telephone supplies, accounts collectible—various properties; about $500,000 of property.

Q. What stocks did you hold in other companies?—A. We had some stock in the Bell Telephone Company of Philadelphia. Well, I do not know at that time. Most of our stocks that we now have have been acquired since.

Q. You say there may have been $500,000 of property?—A. About $500,000 of property, and about $600,000 for the patents. That is the way I commenced my accounts.

Q. So that the patents at that time had really become—A. (Interrupting.) They were worth that in the market as determined by the value of the stock quoted on the stock board.

Q. The organization of the two companies were supposed—A. (Interrupting.) The organization of the two companies was $450,000. That was the property of the two companies. Part of that was cash.

Q. That was after the association had expired, the patents were supposed to be worth $450,000?—A. Not quite that, because part of that was money.

Q. That was in 1879?—A. That was in 1878. The National Bell was organized in March, 1879.

Q. Yes, that is right. On a capital of how much?—A. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. That was not much of an increase, only $200,000?—A. Only $200,000.

Q. And the following year the American Bell was formed, and at that time you counted the same franchises?—A. No.

Q. The same patents?—A. Oh, no. There were other patents; all the patents acquired under this Western Union agreement.

Q. Was the Western Union arrangement in that year?—A. November 10, 1879. That was the date of the contract.

Q. Counting this in it was six million five hundred thousand?—A. Six million five hundred thousand was property—tangible.

Q. Have you any recollection of the highest rate that the American Bell stock has reached in the market?—A. Two ninety-nine and a fraction.

Q. Call it three hundred.—A. It never did. We were hoping to get it to three hundred, but it didn't go.

Q. That was on the ten million?—A. On the seven million three hundred and fifty thousand. Nine million eight hundred and two thousand one hundred is the actual capital.

Q. How was the difference between the six million and the nine million paid?—A. In money.

Q. At par?—A. At par, $100 for each share; and more than that in some places, because some of this trust stock was sold at a premium.

Q. By holders of this stock?—A. By holders of this stock and by those to whom it was transferred. Part of this went out in notes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It is charged here by Mr. Van Benthuyzen that you control all the courts. Is that true?—A. I haven't anything to show it.

Mr. RANNEY. If any member of the firms of Rollins, Morse & Co., or Howard Walter & Co. is summoned the committee will find that I loaned them money on the notes; that these stocks were put in as collateral, and when the notes were paid the stock was given up, and while I had it they enjoyed the dividends, and I think you will find that one of them certainly, and I believe both, were taken by a clerk of mine who had charge of a trust estate. I have no interest in the stock, and never had. If the committee want to examine me I am willing to be examined on it.

Mr. EDEN. I am satisfied.

Mr. RANNEY. I never had any interest in the company other than taking it from the man from whom I got it, and I thought it was good, and I do not think I should have gotten that idea except I sent to ascertain; I never, directly or indirectly, counseled this company or did any business for them; I never had the good fortune to be employed by them; I should not recognize either of the men who have been here—unfortunate for me; I could not have told who a single director or officer of the company was, except as I have seen it in these records. Although it is not open to investigation, to satisfy the gentlemen of the press I hope you will summon those men and verify it, or, if you wish, I am perfectly willing to be examined.

The WITNESS. May I make one inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

The WITNESS. Mr. Forbes understood that I said that one of these Lowells was the son of Judge Lowell. That is an error. I should have said the son of his brother, Augustus Lowell, who appears as a shareholder. He is a brother of the judge, and these other Lowells were brothers of Augustus Lowell, and not sons of the judge.

The CHAIRMAN. You did state he was a son of the judge.

The WITNESS. I did not understand it so.

Mr. RANNEY. I hope the committee will call every one of the members of Congress whose names have been connected with this investigation.

Mr. EDEN. I want to get through with the investigation.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we are in duty bound to call every one of the members of Congress whose names have been connected with this Pan-Electric Company.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think the evidence already in exonerates them?

Mr. RANNEY. I should like the facts and circumstances about it.

The CHAIRMAN. We cannot get Mr. Cox.

Mr. RANNEY. We have his letter. That is enough for him.

Mr. EDEN. What about Mr. Randall?

Mr. RANNEY. The Speaker, Mr. Randall, and Mr. Hewitt.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think there is anything before the committee that affects them at all.

Mr. RANNEY. I as one member of the committee desire to have them called and find out just what occurred. We called Mr. Dunn. We ought not to be invidious.

Mr. HANBACK. And Mr. McComas.

Mr. RANNEY. And Mr. McComas.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the committee ought to call also Charles P. Huntington.

Mr. EDEN. We ought not to call a Senator unless he comes at his own suggestion.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not mean to summon them. Give them an opportunity.

Mr. EDEN. Of course, give them the opportunity.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I think you ought to call Charles P. Huntington. I understand—by the by I do not know him—that he has been here. We ought to examine Mr. Beckwith and the printer from New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. It is agreed that you may prepare the questions to be sent to them.

Mr. RANNEY. All of those witnesses ought to be summoned. Then Dr. Rogers has to come again. Senator Harris's letters also ought to be put in, and there are a lot of letters that are material to the case that ought to go in.

The CHAIRMAN. You can make the selection.

Mr. RANNEY. Most of them are printed. It was left to Senator Harris that when his were put in he would like to be here. (Turning to Mr. Driver, the treasurer of the American Bell Company.) Have you the correspondence of Senator Harris and Mr. Vail?

Mr. DRIVER. I will see if they are in the records.

Mr. FORBES. I had those letters sent down to Mr. Vail, or Mr. Storrow, or somebody last week.

Mr. RANNEY. The original ones? Somebody said they were copies of the correspondence; we want the original letters.

Mr. FORBES. The letter-press books?

Mr. RANNEY. Those will answer; then there was a Mr. Gustine, or Augustine, I do not remember which.

Mr. FORBES. You have copies of the originals already.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; copies won't do; Senator Harris might not remember the copy. There is a man by the name of Augustine ought to be sworn.

Mr. EDEN. I understand the only purpose of having Mr. Beckwith and the printer from New Orleans is to ascertain the time that bill was passed.

Mr. RANNEY. We ought to have Mr. Huntington because of the interview with the President on the 28th.

Mr. EDEN. We had better telegraph him at once.

Mr. RANNEY. And the man who put up this Pan-Electric telephone in the Capitol.

The CHAIRMAN. I am afraid you are cutting out a summer's work; so far as I am concerned I have no objections. Just give us the names of the witnesses you wish summoned.

Mr. RANNEY. And if you could, allow this witness (Mr. Driver) to swear to the press copies and the letters he wrote and then send on Senator Harris's letters. [To Mr. Driver:] Did you make out these copies that were sent here?

Mr. DRIVER. No.

Mr. RANNEY. (To Mr. Forbes.) If you can swear these are correct copies and send the originals here we will preserve them and send them on to you.

Mr. FORBES. Would you like to have me take these copies back and have them attested and send them back to you?

Mr. RANNEY. Well, Senator Harris might not like that. Senator Harris would like to have the letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us try that first.

Mr. RANNEY. We will let you know.

At this point the committee adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday April 28th, 1886.

A quorum being present, the chairman called the committee to order at 12.45 p. m.

Prof. ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is your present place of residence?—A. No. 1500 Rhode Island avenue, Washington.

Q. How long have you been a resident of Washington?—A. I have been a resident for some years. I cannot, from recollection, say exactly how long. I suppose five years or more.

Q. At what place did you reside at the time the letters patent of 1876 were issued?—A. I am not sure whether at that time I resided in Boston or Salem. I had resided previously to that time in Salem, coming into Boston every day for my professional duties. I think I resided then in Boston.

Q. Had you obtained patents for electrical inventions prior to what is known as the patent of 1876?—A. I had applications, and I think one, if not more, patents.

Q. I notice in the application for the patent of 1876, reference made to an application made in 1875; what was that application for? What manner of invention?—A. I had a number of applications at that time, sir.

Q. And the particular one referred to?

The WITNESS. To which one do you refer?

The CHAIRMAN. I will call your attention to it; the one referred to in the application of '76.

The WITNESS. It is hardly necessary for you, Mr. Chairman, to trouble yourself; I know the one, I think, to which you refer; it was one of the applications I had in reference to my invention with regard to multiple telegraphy; the one referred to in my specification of 1876.

Q. Yes; you state that the letters patent had been granted on the 6th of April, 1875?—A. Yes; I was under the impression that I had at least one at that time.

Q. The application of 1876 was made on what day?—A. It was sworn to January 20th, 1876, and filed in the Patent Office, February 14th, and granted March 7th—dated March 7th.

Q. The patent bore date the 7th of March?—A. That is my impression.

Q. You seem to have obtained a patent in 1877. Will you state what that patent was for; the one that is known as the 1877 patent?—A. That was for improvements in the form of apparatus.

Q. Improvements on the invention of 1876?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I observe that the word telephone is not used in the application for the patent of 1876, and it does appear in the application for the improvement in 1877; at least I think it is not used in the application of 1876. Will you state at what time you made that word or came into a knowledge of it.

Mr. EDEN. Just wait a moment. Is it the design of the chairman to go into the question of the issue of the patent?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, not at all. This is merely preliminary.

Mr. RANNEY. If you are going into the trial of that question that is one thing. If not, it should not be done partially.

Mr. EDEN. I supposed it was preliminary. I did not suppose the object was to go into that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is merely preliminary. I agree that it is not proper to go into that question here. The resolution does not refer to patents or anything relating to patents.

A. The word telephone was a word well known at the time. I termed my apparatus a speaking telephone to bring it under the same general head with the earlier attempts with regard to the transmission of sound, the distinction in my case being, I termed it, a speaking telephone. The world has since called it a telephone. I never called it so.

Q. You say you called it a speaking telephone. When did you so term it; in what paper, if any?—A. I cannot say from recollection. I have for many years termed it so.

Q. It is not so termed in the first applications?—A. Probably not. I cannot undertake to say from recollection.

Q. After obtaining the patent of April, 1876, what steps did you take towards putting it into use?—A. Before the patent of 1876 I had parted with the invention to an association.

Q. At what time did you part with it?—A. I think in 1874. I made arrangements by which I had parted with all those inventions to an association, of course retaining an interest myself, so that I had nothing whatever to do personally with putting the invention into practical operation. That is what I mean.

Q. Was this assignment or contract by which you parted with your inventions in writing?—A. I am not certain. I always thought it was a verbal arrangement; but I have a recollection that in some case, some lawsuit or other, we found it was in writing.

Q. I infer, then, that you do not have the writing or a copy of it?—A. No, sir; I do not have that.

Q. Do you know where it can be had?—A. I do not.

Q. You may state what it was you parted with at that time.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, now, is this competent? You are going into the history of the patents.

The CHAIRMAN. No, I am not going into anything affecting the patent. It is only for the purpose of beginning at the beginning and showing the organization in which the Bell Company finally resulted. That is all. It is the same line of examination we had yesterday.

Mr. RANNEY. That is outside of this inquiry. I call your attention to it. The investigation thus far has been limited.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no desire to conceal the purpose I have in view in this line of examination. I am not prepared to say just how nearly it is within the resolution, but I intended to pursue the same line of inquiry as to the formation of the Bell Company, and the successive steps taken in its development, as was pursued in regard to the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. RANNEY. The inquiry should be such as will answer the demands of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is as much within the scope of the resolution as the other inquiries. I do not want to be partial.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not object to the other thing, and I state I do not object now, except to suggest that we ought to pursue the same line—

Mr. HANBACK. The chairman wants to show that the Pan-Electric was organized upon the basis of the patent alone.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no particular desire to show it.

Mr. RANNEY. You see this inquiry does not cover the Bell telephone at all. [Reading:]

“To make inquiry into any expenditures upon the part of the Government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies to priority of patents.”

The CHAIRMAN. It mentions the Bell Telephone Company in the same connection that it does the Pan-Electric.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see why, if these parties are in contest now in the trial of cases, as it appears there, we should attempt to go into any matter which may relate to those controversies, especially if it is necessary to be partial.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not my purpose to do that. I have said all I desire to say in regard to the patents, and certainly have asked nothing that reflects on the Bell Company or Pan-Electric Company or any other company. It is only with a view to explaining the formation of the company,

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to give any information you desire in the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. We do not doubt that, but we want to get through with the inquiry some time.

The CHAIRMAN. I will proceed in the same line. I will go further. I think I have not gone so far as in the other branch of the inquiry, and I certainly shall not take so much time. With that statement I will proceed.

Q. (Resuming.) You are unable to produce the writing, if there was one, showing what it was you disposed of in 1874?—A. I made an arrangement with two gentlemen, Mr. Sanders and Mr. Hubbard, to pay the expenses of experiments and patents for the inventions that I was then at work upon.

Q. Inventions of any particular kind?—A. Yes, sir; the inventions which you are inquiring about to day.

Q. Did it include inventions other than telephonic inventions?—A. I think not.

Q. It did not include your invention of 1875, then, for multiple telegraphy?—A. That is a telephonic invention, sir.

Q. Can you remember the name by which you called the invention, or the way in which you designated it, that you intended to transfer to Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Sanders?—A. I do not recall the way in which I designated it. The substance of the arrangement was that I would transfer to them my inventions relating to the production or transmission of sound by electricity.

Q. Transmission of sound?—A. Sound; yes, sir.

Q. It did not include all your electrical inventions—any that you might make?—A. No, sir; it did not. Well, I could hardly say that, because these were the inventions which I was specially working.

Q. It was restricted to inventions upon which you were then at work?—A. It was.

Q. Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Sanders, you say?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was Mr. Sanders?—A. Mr. Thomas Sanders was a gentleman of Haverhill.

Q. Was he a public officer?—A. No, sir; he was in business in Haverhill. He had personal relations with me. A son of his was a pupil of mine.

Q. Who was Mr. Hubbard?—A. Mr. Hubbard is now my father-in-law.

Q. Was he at that time?—A. He was not at that time.

Q. Was he a public officer?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Has he ever been?—A. I do not know. He has been connected with the board of education in Massachusetts.

Mr. HANBACK. You mean an officer of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. An officer of the United States? I do not know exactly what you mean by an officer of the United States. I know he has been connected with postal railroad arrangements; I believe so. I do not know anything about it.

Q. (Resuming.) I mean an officer under the Federal Government?—A. Yes. I am sure I cannot answer.

Q. Has he ever been a member of Congress?—A. I cannot answer. However, Mr. Hubbard is here. He will be able to answer those questions better than I, of course.

Q. What part or proportion or what interest in your inventions did you transfer to these gentlemen?—A. We were each to have one-third.

Q. And the consideration to be paid, you say, was—A. (Interrupting.) Was that those gentlemen between them were to pay the expenses of experiments, to pay all expenses of patents and litigation of patents, and to put the inventions on the market when completed and perfected.

Q. Were they to be at the whole expense of putting the inventions on the market, or were you to contribute your third?—A. No, sir; they were to pay the whole expense.

Q. So they paid you no direct consideration for the interest they obtained from you?—A. Nothing further than that.

Q. They were to contribute to the prosecution of the business which would result to their advantage as well as yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, sir, were any steps taken by this association to put on the market or to make valuable the patent of 1875, with regard to multiple telegraphy?—A. I think not. I do not know.

Q. After the patent of April, 1876, was obtained, were any steps taken by the association to give it a value by putting it into operation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time?—A. I think in the autumn of 1876 I was requested to exhibit the apparatus to create an interest in the subject. In 1876 I explained my inventions to a number of prominent gentlemen and exhibited it at the Centennial Exhibition, and that was in pursuance of recommendations from these gentlemen.

Q. Did you exhibit it anywhere else?

The WITNESS. Than at the Centennial?

The CHAIRMAN. Than at the Centennial.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. I exhibited it at Harvard College to some professors there. I also made an exhibit to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. In fact that was before the Centennial Exhibition. That was on the 10th of May, 1878.

Q. Did you exhibit it in Washington?—A. I do not think I exhibited that in 1876. I did in 1877.

Q. At what time?—A. If my recollection serves me it was in January, 1877.

Q. That was before the granting of the patent of 1877 then, or what was the date of the patent of 1877, if you recall it?—A. It was January; I do not remember the date.

Q. Where did you exhibit it in Washington?—A. Before the Philosophical Society of Washington.

Q. Any place else?—A. I may have done so privately at the rooms of Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard, and perhaps at the Smithsonian. But I am not certain.

Q. Did you exhibit it to any members of Congress?—A. Oh, I do not know. It was a public exhibition.

Q. Do you recall the fact of having invited members of Congress to the exhibition?—A. Oh, no; I invited no one. I was invited myself by Professor Henry to exhibit it before the Philosophical Society.

Q. When was the telephone first put into use as a business venture?—A. I do not think, sir, that I could give accurate information on that point. It is probable Mr. Hubbard may be able to answer more accurately. I have never had anything to do with the business matters of the telephone. I only know it was some time early in 1877.

Q. Some time in 1877?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you know where it was first set up for that purpose?—A. I remember the place, but I could not venture to give the name, I am sure, from memory.

Q. You do remember the place?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it?—A. In Boston.

Q. At that time had any other persons been admitted to the association?

The WITNESS. At which time; 1877?

The CHAIRMAN. At the time in 1877 when you began to put it into operation as a business matter?

A. Yes; I think at that time another person had been associated.

Q. Who was it?—A. That was Mr. Thomas Watson.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was a workman in the employment of Charles Williams, electrician. He had assisted me with my experiments, and it was determined that it would be a good plan in order to gain the advantage of the services of this good mechanic to give him an interest in the invention; so each of the three parties gave him a small interest.

Q. Did he pay anything for it?—A. In services; yes, sir.

Q. No money consideration?—A. No; no money consideration.

Q. So he became owner of one-fourth?—A. No, not one-fourth; it was one-tenth. I am not sure; that is my recollection.

Q. Did you take an active part in the business management of your association?—
A. No, I never had any part in that.

Q. Who had?—A. Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Sanders were the business managers.

Q. How long were your instruments managed by the association you have spoken of?—A. I do not know.

Q. First, before I ask that, were any other persons subsequently admitted to the association or partnership?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir. I think not.

Q. You would know whether you transferred any part of your interest. Did you do it?—A. I think not. I may say that I went abroad in the year 1877 and during my absence abroad the association was changed into a company.

Q. When did you return, sir?—A. I staid abroad for more than a year; I do not know how long. I think it must have been a year and a half, or more. I was away during nearly the whole of 1878, if not the whole of it.

Q. You say that while you were abroad a company was formed?—A. I believe so. It may have been organized about the time I left, for I have a recollection of having made permanent arrangements in regard to my interests before leaving for Europe.

Q. What company was that?—A. Oh, I do not know the names of the companies. I cannot answer technically. I think it was simply called the Bell Telephone Company—one of the companies.

Q. There seem to have been two companies preceding the National Bell, one called the Bell Telephone Company and the other the New England Company. And you think this was the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I think this was the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Do you remember the original capital of the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; nothing about it.

Q. Do you remember transferring your interest in the property to that company?—
A. I made a gift of my interest to my wife before I left for Europe.

Q. Do you know of your wife transferring that interest to the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, is this evidence admissible under the order?

Mr. RANNEY. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. It is admissible.

Mr. MILLARD. We are directed to make the investigation as to the Pan-Electric stock, but no such direction is given in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. You remember in the case of the Washington Telephone Company we were prohibited from going into the stockholders, or what was done, or whether anything was transferred to Government officers.

The CHAIRMAN. I know we did go into the stock in the Washington Telephone Company and the subordinate companies very largely.

Mr. HANBACK. This is one of the matters springing out of the Pan-Electric Company. I am in favor of going ahead myself.

Mr. MILLARD. I am in favor of investigation, but it does not seem exactly proper unless we are authorized and directed to make investigation in this case, in a suit pending between the Government and this company.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not touch the suit at all—nothing connected with the suit. I think we had better go on.

Q. (Resuming.) You may state, Mr. Bell, if you know of your wife transferring this interest which she acquired of you to the Bell Telephone Company.—A. No, sir; she retained her interest in her own name.

Q. Her interest in the association?—A. Well, I do not remember of having transferred shares, so I presume that shares were issued to my wife originally in the old Bell Telephone Company.

Q. I presume that the ownership in the invention was transferred to the Bell Telephone Company, the corporation that you speak of as having been organized?—A. Certainly.

Q. That is what I am trying to get at. Do you remember of your wife joining in that transfer?—A. She probably left a power of attorney before leaving for Europe at that time.

Q. Do you remember the fact whether she did or did not?—A. She left power of attorney to manage all her patents. I say I am not absolutely certain whether that interest remained at that time in my name or my wife's; but the power of attorney was left before we went abroad, so that the power could be given to act for us.

Q. What amount of stock did you or your wife receive in the Bell Telephone Company in lieu of the interest which you had in the association?—A. We received an equivalent interest. The amount of stock I do not know at this time. Of course it might be ascertained, but it was equivalent to the interest that we held in the association.

Q. Which was the third, less your contribution to the one-tenth to the mechanic?—A. Exactly.

Q. And you do not remember the capital at which the Bell Company—A. (Interrupting.) No; my recollection is that the whole Bell telephone had gone into other hands before I returned from Europe. I am not sure as to that, but I have very little knowledge as to that first Bell Telephone Company. I was abroad during the greater part of its existence.

Q. You say your wife has never parted with her interest that you transferred to her?—A. No; she has sold some portions, but she is still one of the largest stockholders in the company.

Q. Do you remember the fact of the organization of the New England Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about that company.

Q. As I understand you, you do not know what the capital stock of the Bell Telephone Company was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who were the stockholders?—A. No, sir; no further than the old members of the association.

Q. Only those?—A. I only know of those; I do not know of other stockholders; there may have been others.

Q. You say that your wife has parted with certain portions of her stock. Has she ever sold or disposed of any to any member of Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to any officer of the Federal Government?—A. No, sir; all that she has sold has been sold in public market.

Q. Do you know how long the Bell Telephone Company continued to exist?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what company succeeded it?—A. I am afraid I shall expose my ignorance of the business matters of the telephone a great deal. I could not answer with certainty. I only know it was another Bell Company.

Q. I presumed, sir, that you did not know about that. Do you know when the present American Bell Telephone Company was organized?—A. No, sir; not of my own knowledge. I heard Mr. Forbes testify yesterday it was in 1880.

Q. Do you know how much stock your wife obtained in the National Bell Telephone Company in place of her interest in the Bell Telephone Company?—A. It was the equivalent of what she held in the other company.

Q. Well, can you state the amount?—A. No, sir; not of that company.

Q. Then do you know what amount of stock your wife obtained in the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. It was again the equivalent of what she held in the preceding company.

Q. Can you state the number of shares?—A. Not from recollection; I could by consulting the stock book; I do not know how many shares she held when the company was organized.

Q. Can you state about how many?—A. No; I cannot even approximate.

Q. Had she disposed of any part of her interest prior to the organization of the American Bell Company?—A. I do not think she disposed of any portion prior, but I would not like to state with any positive certainty.

Q. If you are correct as to that, she must have obtained very nearly one-third of the capital of the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; I do not think that, because she obtained her proportion of what she held in the original association, and money had been brought in extensively in the intermediate stages.

Q. Yes; I believe $200,000 had been added?—A. I do not know. You can calculate it probably. We can ascertain exactly by consulting the American Bell Telephone Company stock list.

Q. But she must have been a very large holder of the Bell Telephone Company stock?—A. I presume so.

Q. And whatever may have been her proportion of the ten millions of dollars had grown from the original one-third of the value of these instruments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From 1876 until 1880, I believe was the date—some time in 1880?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Passing through two or three companies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever known, Mr. Bell, of any member of Congress having an interest in the American Bell Company or any companies that preceded it?—A. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Q. Have you known any of the stockholders at all except the original ones?—A. I have met a few of them from time to time, but I have no general knowledge of the stockholders.

Q. Have you any connection with the company now?—A. None whatever save as a stockholder.

Q. I see you have but one share of stock?—A. Yes, I was proud to keep my name on the list of stockholders; therefore I retained one share.

Q. You are not an officer of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. And have nothing to do with its management whatever?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Are you acquainted with its practical operations and its business operations?—A. I do not quite understand the distinction, sir.

Q. Do you know what instruments it uses?—A. I think so. I know the instruments in ordinary use: I do not pretend to know all the instruments possessed by the company or that may be used in different parts of the country.

Q. Does it use the instrument invented in 1876?—A. Substantially the same, sir.

Q. Substantially the same? How substantially the same; to what extent?—A. Well, its mode of operation.

Q. Is there anything more in the instrument used now by the company—anything that is identical with the instrument invented by you, except the mere fact that they both transmit sounds?—A. The mode of operation is substantially the same as that described in my original application. Of course there are valuable, very valuable details of construction in which they differ.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Professor Bell, at the time that you were making these inventions and these gentlemen took hold with you—you will pardon me for the inquiry—I want to know whether at that time you were poor or had means?—A. I was poor, sir. Before they took hold I was in receipt of a comfortable income from my professional services, but I had to give up my professional work a great deal to devote myself to my experiments, and as these gentlemen had made no provision for paying me for my time, I soon found myself in very poor circumstances.

Q. You speak of your profession. You will pardon me. What was your profession that you refer to?—A. I was professor of vocal physiology in the Boston University, and teacher of articulation.

Q. What had called your attention to this matter of the theory of sound?—A. My professional work in studying the mechanism of speech led me, of course, to study the works of others who had written upon the subject.

Q. Well, I do not care to go into the history of your theory now. You spoke of exhibiting this invention at the Centennial Exhibition; was Prof. Gray present when you exhibited it?

The WITNESS. Mr. Elisha Gray?

Mr. RANNEY. Elisha Gray.

A. Yes, sir; he was present.

Q. When the telephone was exhibited there did it talk?—A. Yes, sir; it spoke.

Q. Did Prof. Gray test it?—A. Yes, sir. He listened at one of the instruments. I do not know that of my own knowledge, for I was at the transmitting end of the line. I know Prof. Gray was there.

Q. Oh, I do not care to go into the details of it. You were at the transmitting end and he was at the receiving end?—A. Yes; he was at the receiving end.

Q. You spoke of Prof. Henry, that is Prof. Henry at the Smithsonian Institute?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. We won't go into the caveats because it is not a subject of substantial inquiry here. I do not know as I need to put you any more questions.

The WITNESS. You understand, gentlemen, I have no hesitation in answering any question you think proper to put.

Q. Has your wife any difficulty in hearing? I have read somewhere that your attention was called to the matter on account of the difficulty of hearing of your wife, or some one.—A. Yes, sir; my wife is unable to hear.

Q. Did that have anything to do with your giving attention to this study?—A. No, sir; it had particular reference to my meeting my wife in that I was instructing persons who could not hear.

Q. You had been studying the ear, instructing persons who could not hear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that led you in the line of study which resulted in your acquiring the invention?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Any question with reference to the originality of your invention or discovery would be involved in this suit that has been brought by the Government, would it not?—A. I think not. That has been decided so often by the courts—

Q. (Interposing.) Well, is not that question one involved in the adjudication to come?—A. I do not quite understand the purport of your question, sir. Would you repeat it once more?

Q. I say any question here with reference to the originality of your invention or discovery would be a question involved in that suit, would it not? Is not that question involved, in other words, necessarily?—A. Well, I do not know. I do not know about this suit. I have not had the opportunity of seeing anything except what has been stated in the newspapers. I do not know exactly what the questions are in this new suit. But that question has been decided by the courts already, so I suppose it would hardly be involved.

Q. Not in any Government suit, though?—A. I cannot quite catch the drift of your question, sir.

Q. Well, I won't press any question on that point because I think it is involved in the adjudication.—A. I should like to understand the point and answer to my best ability, but I do not quite understand it.

Q. I would press the question, but my own opinion is that it is involved in the suit, therefore I won't press it?—A. Well, I should like to consult counsel on that point, and I would prefer you would not ask me any questions to which my counsel would object. But I am ready otherwise to answer.

Q. You are ready to prove that you are the inventor?—A. I am ready to answer any question you think proper to ask.

Mr. OATES. I think that is beyond the scope of our inquiry, anyhow.

Mr. MILLARD. I think it would be a great outrage on the part of this committee to make inquiry or seek as to facts involved in this suit. I do not think this committee has any right to go into that.

Mr. OATES. No further than the resolution instructs.

Mr. MILLARD. No further than the resolution instructs.

Mr. EDEN. There is no controversy among the committee about that.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall claim hereafter, whenever we come to pass upon the proceedings before the Secretary of the Interior, the right to discuss the question, whether he was justified in—

Mr. OATES (interposing). That question is not open now.

Mr. RANNEY (continuing). Trying the question of invention, and the justification the Department of Justice had in ordering this suit either. That will be determined on the record which is in.

Mr. HALL. It is important to find out whether his action was induced—

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, that question is not open now.

The CHAIRMAN. The only matter before the committee now is the examination of Prof. Bell.

Mr. MILLARD. I have no questions.

Mr. EDEN. I do not want to ask anything.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

By Mr. HALL.

Q. I would like to inquire whether you have been connected with all the corporations organized since your patent was issued that were interested in the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think he answered that before you came in.

Mr. HALL. That is simply introductory.

A. Oh, yes; I have been interested in all as a stockholder.

Q. Do you know whether it has been the policy of those organizations to acquire all subsequent inventions or devices and improvements upon your original patent?—

A. It has been their policy to purchase and adopt any improvement that seems to be real improvement.

Q. And have you a general idea about how many patents have been acquired by these corporations since then?—A. No, sir. I have no doubt there are very many; I suppose nearly a couple of hundred or more.

Q. You are an electrician?—A. Not professionally. I do not profess to be an expert.

Q. You have not pursued the subject since you obtained this patent?—A. Oh, I have pursued the subject in experimenting, but I mean to say I am not a professional electrician.

Q. Have you not pursued the subject by experiment with patents that have been subsequently submitted to your investigation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the questions involved have been decided by some other authority than yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand, you invented the original principle by which human speech could be transmitted by electricity over the termini of wire or battery?—A. I claim to have invented the method and apparatus shown in my patent of 1876.

Q. Have you ever invented or devised any instrument other than that which you submitted to the Patent Office and upon which your patent was issued?—A. Oh, yes; a number of different forms.

Q. And did these corporations subsequently acquire those patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, they all consisted in improved methods of carrying out the original principle invented by you as claimed?—A. Yes; improvements in the apparatus.

Q. Does the American Bell Telephone Company now use generally any device invented by you; I do not mean the principle, but I mean the instrument?—A. Yes, sir; certainly.

Q. Does it not use others than those invented by you or patented by you?—A. Oh, undoubtedly, sir.

Q. Do you know which device is most generally used by the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. I think my apparatus is the only one that is universally used.

All the other instruments have to be used in connection with it. The hand telephone that is used as a receiving instrument is used everywhere.

Q. Then your corporations have simply been buying up these other inventions to lay them on the shelf and have not put them in practical operation?—A. It has tested them, but nothing has yet been discovered that exceeds, in sensitiveness—

Q. (Interposing.) They purchased them before testing them?

The WITNESS. Do you allude to my invention or to other persons'?

Mr. HALL. Other persons'.

A. Oh, I do not know. I presume they tested them.

Q. Are you not aware of the fact that the American Bell Telephone Company and those corporations which it succeeded have purchased a large number of inventions other than yours?—A. Oh, yes; a large number.

Q. Now, is it true that these inventions have simply been laid upon the shelf and are not in use?—A. Oh, no; the best of them have been put in use.

Q. About how many have been put in use?—A. I do not know; I cannot answer that.

Q. Have you no general idea? Have not a considerable number of them been put in use?—A. A very great number; so many that I would not even venture to guess at the number.

Q. But there are none in use possessing such excellent qualities as those invented by you?—A. I beg pardon, sir.

Q. Are these that have been acquired from other parties, to some extent, or any extent, regarded as superior or inferior to those invented by you?—A. Well, I hardly know how to answer that question. The Blake transmitter is in very general use everywhere with mine. The two go together. The Blake transmitter would be of no use whatever without a receiving instrument.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is all, sir. [Turning to Mr. Driver, a witness examined yesterday.] Mr. Driver, I desire to ask you some questions.

WILLIAM R. DRIVER recalled and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are the lists of the stockholders which you submitted to the committee yesterday correct?—A. I believe them to be.

Q. I did not want to leave any doubt as to the matter that I called out in examination, or have any injustice done. I see that Horace Gray owns two hundred and thirty-six shares of the stock of that company. Will you state who Horace Gray is?—

A. I do not know him personally; I understand him to be a merchant in New York.

Q. How do you understand that; by what means?—A. His address upon my books is given as in New York; well, I do not know who told me that he was a merchant there.

Q. That is the address of this person, Horace Gray—New York?—A. Of that person, yes, sir.

Q. Who is the present Federal circuit judge in Boston?—A. I think his name is Nelson.

Mr. RANNEY. He has the district court. Judge Colt, of Rhode Island, is circuit judge.

The WITNESS. I do not know.

Mr. RANNEY. He is a Rhode Island man.

Mr. MILLARD. Is Massachusetts in that district?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir; that is the district of Rhode Island and Massachusetts and New Hampshire and Maine, I believe.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say the district judge is Judge Nelson?—A. There is a Judge Nelson in one of the courts; I have no means of knowing.

Mr. RANNEY. I know him. It is Judge Nelson, of Worcester. He is district judge; Colt is the circuit judge.

Q. (Resuming.) I see that Thomas Nelson held twenty-four shares of stock on the 1st of May, 1880, when the American Bell Company was organized, and Thomas Nelson now holds ten shares; do you know who Thomas Nelson is?—A. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Ranney). Do you know what the judge's first name is?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know; I do not think he holds any shares.

Q. (Resuming.) I see Henry W. Nelson owns forty shares at this time; do you know who he is?—A. I do not know who he is.

Q. Do you know where he resides?—A. I do not remember; our records at home will show.

GARDINER G. HUBBARD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is your present place of residence?—A. My place of residence is Washington, sir.

Q. How long have you resided here?—A. I have resided here off and on for about fifteen years. I have a home in Cambridge, Mass., as well as here, residing generally here in the winter and in Cambridge in the summer.

Q. Are you the gentleman referred to by Prof. Bell as one of the original associates in the Bell Telephone enterprise?—A. I am, sir.

Q. What interest did you receive from Professor Bell?—A. I received one-third.

Q. What did you pay for it?—A. I paid a great many thousand dollars; I cannot say how much, sir.

Q. At the time of the purchase?—A. No, sir; nothing at the time of the purchase; but I came under obligations to provide the means for the development of the enterprise. I came under agreement to provide the means for the development of his invention.

Q. There seems to have been another gentleman associated with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Thomas Sanders.

Q. Do you know whether he paid anything to Professor Bell for his interest?—A. I know nothing, sir. I presume he did not.

Q. To what extent do you say you became liable at the time of the purchase or at the time of the gift?—A. For one-half of the expense of prosecuting and developing the enterprise.

Q. When was that arrangement made?—A. I am not certain. I think it was made in 1874; but I may be mistaken, sir.

Q. You say that you became responsible for half of the expense?—A. One-half.

Q. Who was to pay the other half?—A. Mr. Sanders.

Q. What did Professor Bell pay, or was he to pay?—A. He was to contribute his services in the development of it; nothing pecuniary; his services and knowledge being considered an offset to the money furnished by us.

Q. At the time of that arrangement had he made any invention?—A. Whether he had made any inventions or not I cannot say. He was at work upon inventions.

Q. Have you stated when that arrangement was made?—A. I said I was not certain, but I thought it was in 1874.

Q. Was it in writing?—A. I think the original agreement was not in writing.

Q. Was it afterwards reduced to writing?—A. I think it never was.

Q. Why do you distinguish, then, in answer to the preceding question, by saying that the original agreement was not in writing?—A. Subsequently to the original agreement there was an agreement for the formation of a joint stock company called the Bell Company, and the original agreement was merged in that.

Q. Was that the first agreement that was in writing?—A. I think it was.

Q. When was the Bell Company formed?—A. I should say in 1886 or 1887 probably.

Q. In 1876 or 1877 you mean?—A. 1876 or 1877. It was not a corporation. It was a joint stock company.

Q. Was the Bell Company never incorporated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you the articles of association?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know where they could be found?—A. I do not.

Q. Were they ever recorded?—A. At the Patent Office?

Q. No, sir. Was it a mere partnership, or was it an association formed under some statute?—A. It was formed under the common law. It was a joint stock company in which there was a trustee, and I was the trustee holding the title to the patents.

Q. Now, sir, do you know where the writing can be had?—A. I do not. I have not seen or heard of it for years.

Q. You say it never was recorded?—A. It may have been recorded in the Patent Office here, but I do not know.

Q. Were the patents held by the partners—the three of you—transferred to that joint stock company?—A. I think they were. The records at the Patent Office will show.

Q. Was there any effort made prior to the formation of the joint stock company to put these inventions on the market?—A. I think there was not.

Q. And you say that that company was formed either in 1876 or 1877?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you not be more particular as to the time?—A. No, sir; I cannot. The same parties are interested in the company that were interested in the joint stock company. It was merely for the purpose of facilitating the carrying on of the business.

Q. As I understand you, then, no person had been admitted prior to the formation of the Bell Company?—A. No, sir; unless it was Mr. Watson. I do not know when he was admitted.

Q. Can you not state whether he signed the articles of association?

Q. Well, after the formation of the Bell Company—the joint stock association—how long did it continue?—A. It continued until the formation of the National Bell Company.

Q. When was that?—A. That was in 1879.

Q. Was it incorporated?—A. That was incorporated.

Q. Where?—A. In Massachusetts.

Q. Under a special or general law?—A. We have no special laws in Massachusetts, sir. They are all general.

Q. Incorporated, then, under a general law in Massachusetts?—A. Under general law.

Q. That, you say, was in 1879. Had any person been admitted before that time?—A. I think a few parties had been. There had also, prior to that time, been formed in New England a telephone company, which owned the telephone for New England.

Q. That was while the joint stock———A. (Interrupting.) Was in existence; yes, sir.

Q. Formed under a license granted by that joint stock company?—A. Under license under that company granted by myself as trustee.

Q. Who constituted the New England Company?—A. I do not remember who. I was president.

Q. Were there any other persons interested in that company besides those interested in the Bell Company?—A. Yes, sir; a number of others.

Q. Can you not name some of them?—A. Mr. Bradley is the only one I recollect.

Q. Who is Mr. Bradley?—A. Judge Bradley.

Q. What Judge Bradley?—A. Charles L., I think, of Providence, R. I.

Q. Was he a judge at that time?—A. He was not.

Q. He had been?—A. I think he had been.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Chief justice of the supreme court of the State?—A. I think he was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say there were a number of members, but you cannot recall them?—A. I cannot recall them.

Q. Can you state whether any of them were public officers?—A. I do not think they were, sir.

Q. Were any of them members of Congress?—A. They were not.

Q. Did you state whether any person had been admitted into the joint stock company before the formation of the National Bell?—A. I think possibly one or two parties had been.

Q. Will you name them?—A. The only one that I remember is my brother. But I do not mean to say there were not others; that is the only one I remember.

Q. On what terms was he admitted?—A. He bought some shares and paid for them.

Q. From whom?—A. From the company; from myself as trustee for the company.

Q. Will you state whether you can recall the name of any other person who became interested in the joint stock company?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. But you think there were others?—A. No, sir; I do not think there were, and yet there may have been. It is some eight or ten years ago and I have not charged my memory with it.

Q. Was there a capital fixed for the joint stock company?

The WITNESS. Was there a capital fixed for it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, was there any sum fixed for the capital of the joint stock company?—A. I do not remember that. I presume there was, but I am uncertain.

Q. I infer, then, that you could not state the amount?—A. No, sir, it was divided into shares, and therefore there must have been a capital.

Q. Now, sir, I would like you to state the capital, if you can.—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Or about how much?—A. I have no recollection, sir.

Q. Do you know how many shares your brother got?—A. Only a few.

Q. Do you know what proportion of the capital he got?—A. I said, sir, only a small proportion. It may have been a hundredth part, or something of that kind.

Q. You do not know how many shares constituted that hundredth part?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how many shares you had, if you had any individual holding of shares in the association?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Did you hold any shares individually?—A. Why, of course, sir. I said that I had a third interest originally, less the tenth parted with to Mr. Watson.

Q. I asked you that question because you stated that the shares were held by you in trust and that the company sold your brother whatever shares he had. If the shares were held individually the company did not have any to sell.—A. You misunderstand me, or perhaps I did not state myself correctly.

Q. Perhaps I did not understand you?—A. What I meant to state was that I was trustee for the company, and as trustee the patents, I think, were transferred to me and the property stood in my name as trustee for the shareholders of the company. I held individually, not as trustee, a portion of those shares.

Q. You stated a moment ago that the shares purchased by your brother were purchased from the company?—A. They were not purchased from the company but from the individual members of the company.

Q. From each one of them?—A. From myself, I presume.

Q. Then you are not able to state how many shares you held?—A. I am not, sir.

Q. Nor what the capital was?—A. I am not.

Q. When the National Bell Company was incorporated, what was its capital?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Can you not state what the capital of the National Bell Telephone Company was?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Have you any means of ascertaining?—A. I could tell by applying at the office of the company. I am one of the directors of the American Bell.

Q. Do you know how many shares of stock you had in the American Bell Telephone Company?—A. I do not, sir. If necessary, I can ascertain those facts and give them to the committee.

Q. And you do not know the amount of the capital of the Bell Company?—A. I do not.

Q. Was it four hundred and fifty thousand dollars?—A. I do not remember anything about it, sir.

Q. Do you remember the amount of capital of the New England company?—A. I do not. I think it was three hundred thousand dollars. But I may be mistaken.

Q. Was it merged with the Bell Company in forming the National Bell?—A. It was merged into the National Bell.

Q. Along with the Bell Company?—A. Along with the Bell Company.

A. Was there any money put into the National Bell Company at the time of its formation?—A. There was.

Q. How much?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Can you not approximate it?—A. I cannot. There have been a great many hundred thousand dollars paid into it, but how much I do not know.

Q. I speak, sir, of the time of the formation of the company?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Can you state whether it was a hundred thousand or a million?—A. I cannot. I can ascertain and inform you, sir, if you would like to know.

Q. I would like to know.—A. If you will address me a note for the information which you wish I will have it answered.

Q. I would like to know the amount for which the property transferred by the Bell Company to the National Bell Company was capitalized?—A. If you will address me a note for the information which you wish it shall be furnished.

Q. Can you not approximate the capital of the National Bell Company?—A. I cannot, as I have already answered.

Q. Was it a million of dollars?—A. I have answered the question, sir.

Q. Well, sir, answer that if you please.—A. No, sir; I have already answered.

Q. Do you decline to answer that question?—A. I do, on the ground that it has already been answered several times.

Mr. HANBACK. The witness has said he would furnish everything.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will excuse me. I am examining the witness.

Mr. HANBACK. I understand; but I am a member of the committee, too.

The WITNESS. If there is a member of the committee who says I have not answered it, I will answer.

Mr. HANBACK. I propose to say that the witness has said he will answer everything you want seriatim, and then you continue to ask questions.

The CHAIRMAN. I have seen you sit here and a question repeated over twenty times without objection.

Mr. HANBACK. I do not think you have, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I have, sir. I know of a cross-examination that covers two hundred pages and over.

Mr. HANBACK. I do not object at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood you to object. If you do not object there is nothing to talk about. There is no objection on the part of the witness to answering the question more than once.

Q. (Resuming.) I ask you whether the capital of the National Bell Company amounted to a million dollars?—A. I have already answered that I did not know.

Q. You will not say whether it was a million?—A. I do not know.

Q. Will you say whether it was more or less than a hundred thousand dollars?—A. I could not say. I have no doubt it was more.

Q. Are you unable to say because you have no recollection of it?—A. It is eight or nine years since it was formed, and I have not charged my memory with it.

Q. Now, I ask you again how much money was added at the time of the formation of the National Bell Company?—A. I have answered that I could not recollect.

Q. Can you not approximate it?—A. I cannot. I do not know that I ever knew.

Q. Was the property of the Bell Company and the New England Company transferred to the National Company?—A. It was.

Q. At what amount; do you know?—A. I do not.

Q. Can you not approximate that?—A. I cannot. I will furnish the information if requested, on a note from the chairman of the committee.

Q. And you cannot state what amount of money capital was added at that time?—

A. I cannot.

Q. And you cannot state the amount of the capital of the National Bell Company?—

A. I cannot.

Q. Can you state whether any other persons came into the company at the time the National Bell was organized?—A. There were a number of others.

Q. Can you name them?—A. Mr. Forbes came in at that time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Which Forbes?—A. The gentleman that was here yesterday and his brother. I think Lee & Higginson came in at that time. There were a great many came in about that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you remember any others?—A. I cannot recall their names, sir; I know them perfectly well, too.

Q. I would like you to answer whether you can name others?—A. I do not recall the names of any others now, and yet as I remarked, sir, I know them perfectly well.

Q. Can you tell how many shares you had of the stock of the National Bell Company?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Can you approximate it?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you come anywhere near it?—A. I will furnish it if you will send me a note requesting that information, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I will have to ask you to appear before the committee with the information and also to state who were the stockholders and the amount of capital.

Q. (Continuing.) How long did the National Bell Company continue to exist?—A. I think it continued about a year, sir.

Q. And what company succeeded it?—A. The American Bell.

Q. Was the property of the National Bell disposed of or transferred to the American Bell?—A. It was.

Q. For how much and what amount?—A. I think the capital of the American Bell was ten millions of dollars, but I am uncertain whether it was all issued at that time.

Q. What part of that was paid for the rights and property of the National Bell?—A. That I do not recollect, sir.

Q. Are you able to state the purpose of the merging or the transfer of the property of the National Bell to the American Bell?—A. I am not, sir; I was not an active director at that time, and do not know.

Q. Well, I will ask you, sir, whether it was not done for the purpose of increasing the capital stock without the payment of money?—A. I do not think it was, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other purpose?—A. It was to acquire more money to carry on the business in part, sir. It was undoubtedly one purpose to bring the par of the stock nearer to its then selling value. My impression is that six shares of the new were issued for one of the old, that being at that time the market value of the stock.

Q. Do you remember the par value of shares in the old companies?—A. I think they have always been one hundred.

Q. So that the holder of a hundred shares in the old company became entitled to six hundred in the new?—A. I think he did, sir.

Q. Without the payment of any money?—A. I am not certain but what there was more money paid in at that time for which more stock was issued.

Q. But not for that part of the stock?—A. Not for that, sir.

Q. Well, I would like you to state your best recollection as to whether any additional stock was issued at the time of the formation of the American Bell Company?—A. I have just said, sir, that six shares of the new stock were issued for one of the old.

Q. I say additional stock, stock besides that which was issued to the old stockholders?—A. I think there was some cash stock issued at that time.

Q. Can you state to what amount?—A. I cannot. I am not certain that I was in this country at that time, sir. At any rate the headquarters of the company was at Boston and I was residing in Washington.

Q. Have you not always been a director of the company?—A. I have always been a director; yes, sir.

Q. Have you not been the president?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you ever the president of the company?—A. Never.

Q. Or of any of these companies?—A. Never; that is, I was never president of either the National or the American. I may possibly have been chosen president of the National and immediately resigned on its organization. I am not certain how that was.

Q. But they were the only two corporations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you name any of the persons who came into the American Bell Company at the time of its incorporation?—A. I do not know anything about that, sir.

Q. Do you know whether anybody did?—A. I do not know, sir. I have no doubt they did, but I have no knowledge of it at all.

Q. Mr. Hubbard, did you not, up until the time of the incorporation of the American Bell Telephone Company, manage the business of the company?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you not manage it up to the time of the incorporation of the National Bell Telephone Company?—A. I did.

Q. Did you have an active part in the formation of the National Bell Company?—A. Yes, sir; I had an active part in it.

Q. There seem to have been but very few of you at that time?—A. I do not recollect, sir, how many there were; there were a good many interested in the New England Company at that time, and I think most of those interested in the New England Company were interested in the National.

Q. Did you not superintend the organization or incorporation of the National Bell?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you not originate the movement by which the Bell Company was transformed into the National Bell?—A. I assisted in it.

Q. You were president of the Bell Company?—A. I was the trustee of the Bell Company.

Q. Trustee of the Bell Company. You held all its property in your name, you say, as trustee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not the principal man in the formation of the National Bell?—A. I was one of the parties largely interested in it.

Q. As trustee, you transferred to the National Bell the rights?—A. I did.

Q. And you do not know what amount?—A. I do not.

Q. Or the valuation of it?—A. I do not.

Q. That is only seven years ago. You cannot approximate it?—A. I cannot.

Q. You cannot say whether any new stock was added, or if so, how much?—A. I cannot; but, as I before remarked, it can be ascertained.

Q. You and Professor Bell and these other gentlemen were the principal holders of the stock, were you not?—A. We were.

Q. Prof. Bell seems to have had nothing to do with it?—A. He had nothing whatever to do with the business management of it at any time.

Q. Did the other gentleman have any active part in the formation of the National Company?—A. He had a good deal to do with it; yes, sir.

Q. As much as you?—A. I think he had more, as he was on the spot and I was here.

Q. Do you remember of any interviews between you with a view to fixing the capital of the new company?—A. I do not remember any. I know we must have had them.

Q. You do not remember any conclusion reached as to the amount of the capital?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the American Bell?—A. Am I? Yes.

Q. How many shares have you?—A. I hold one thousand shares.

Q. And what is the whole number of shares?—A. I think the capital is ten millions of dollars and the par is one hundred dollars.

Q. Are you a director in the company?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Have you taken an active part in its management recently?—A. I have not taken any part.

Q. Have you looked after its interests in the city of Washington?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you taken any part in, or done anything looking to, the interests of the American Bell Company latterly in the city of Washington?—A. I have not. I have, of course, seen the counsel and the president once or twice when they have been here this winter.

Q. Have you taken any part in the matter of the bringing of a Government suit against your company?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you tried to prevent it in any way?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you had any consultation with any public officer in regard to it?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you attempted to procure any newspaper publications?—A. I have not.

- Q. Did you send an article to the president of the company?—A. I did.
- Q. Where did you get it?—A. I got it from Mr. Bell.
- Q. From Mr. Bell?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know who prepared it?—A. I do not.
- Q. When did you get it from Mr. Bell?—A. I should say it was some three or four months ago.
- Q. Was it the same article which afterwards appeared in the New York World?—A. I think it was, sir; but I cannot say certainly, as I never examined it with much care.
- Q. Was it the article which was called the history, the connected article, giving a sort of history of the Pan-Electric enterprise?—A. As I say, I think it was, sir; but I do not know.
- Q. You say that was three or four months ago?—A. I think so.
- Q. How long was it before the article appeared in the New York World?—A. I should think it was at least a month; it may have been six weeks.
- Q. Have you a copy of the letter which accompanied the article when you sent it to the president of the company?—A. I do not think I have, sir.
- Q. If you have will you produce it?—A. I will, sir.
- Q. Did you receive a reply from the president or any officer of the company in regard to it?—A. I either received a reply or heard from Mr. Forbes in regard to it.
- Q. Was that article ever returned to you?—A. It was not.
- Q. You stated it was given to you by Mr. Bell?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know where Mr. Bell got it?—A. I do not.
- Q. Did he tell you?—A. I think he did, sir.
- Q. Well, what did he say?—A. He told me that general somebody gave it to him—a gentleman that lived directly opposite to him, I think.
- Q. The generals in Washington are so numerous you will have to be more particular.—A. I do not recollect his name. [Turning to Professor Bell.] What was it, Mr. Bell?
- Professor BELL (to witness). General Sypher.
- The WITNESS. General Sypher was his name, sir.
- Q. Do you know where General Sypher lives?—A. He lives directly opposite Mr. Bell. I think he is a lawyer in this city, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether he prepared it at Mr. Bell's instance?—A. Mr. Bell told me that he did not. That is all I know about it, sir.
- Q. Do you know how he came to give it to Mr. Bell?—A. As I say, he was a friend of Mr. Bell, or an acquaintance, rather. I won't say a friend. He was an acquaintance of Mr. Bell and as such gave it to him.
- Q. Did you learn whether General Sypher prepared the article?—A. I did not, sir.
- Q. Did Mr. Bell state to you who had prepared it?—A. He did not, excepting that he told me he had received it from General Sypher.
- Q. And it was delivered to him without a request from Mr. Bell. Was it a voluntary offering?—A. It was a voluntary offering; sent to him in a letter.
- Q. What purpose had you in sending it to the company?—A. I thought perhaps they would like to use it, sir.
- Q. Was any price fixed on it?—A. There was not.
- Q. Did you know that it was to appear in the New York World?—A. I did not, sir.
- Q. Did you know that fact before it did appear?—A. I did not, sir.
- Q. Were you not surprised to see an old acquaintance turn up in the World?—A. I was not very much surprised, sir.
- Q. Had you an intimation that it would appear in the World?—A. I had not.
- Q. What did the president of the company say to you, either by letter or when he talked to you face to face; what did he say about the article?—A. That they were unwilling to use it, as they did not wish to appear in public or have anything to do with the press.
- Q. Did he give any reason for not returning it?—A. He did not.
- Q. Did he tell you he had given it to the counsel for use?—A. I do not think he did, sir.
- Q. Did you ask him to return it to you?—A. I did not.
- Q. Had you retained a copy of it?—A. I did not.
- Q. Had Prof. Bell?—A. I do not know.
- Q. Can you give the conversation between yourself and Mr. Bell at the time of the delivery of the article to you, substantially?—A. I think he told me he had a curious or an interesting paper relating to the Pan-Electric Company which he thought I might like to see.
- Q. Well, anything further?—A. I think not.
- Q. There was nothing said about sending it to the company?—A. There was nothing.
- Q. Did he know you were going to send it to the company?—A. He did not.

Q. Were you to return it to him when he handed it to you?—A. There was nothing said about returning it.

Q. Did you understand that he gave it to you to use or merely gave it to you to see?—A. I supposed he gave it to me for me to use—to do what I thought fit with it.

Q. Was there anything said between you as to the use you might make of it?—A. There was not, sir.

Q. What was your view about it; you say you supposed he gave it to you for any use you might see fit to make of it?—A. He gave it to me as a curious document. I laid it away for some time in my drawer, and then I thought proper to send it to the president for any use he thought fit.

Q. I understand you no copy was retained?—A. No copy was retained by me. Whether Mr. Bell retained one or not I do not know.

Q. Was the first knowledge you had of the article when Prof. Bell gave it to you?—A. It was the first knowledge that I had of this paper that Mr. Bell handed me; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not know before that that an article was to be prepared?—A. I did not.

Q. Why do you say it was the first knowledge you had of this paper?—A. Because I did not know but by "article" you referred to the piece that appeared in the paper. I wish to make a distinction between a newspaper article and a paper handed me.

Q. This article did not refer to any other piece that appeared in the paper?—A. I do not know that the paper I had and the article in the newspaper were the same.

Q. I understood you a moment ago to say you thought them to be the same?—A. No, sir. I understood them to be the same. It was merely a memory of something six or eight weeks apart.

Q. Substantially the same?—A. Substantially. I said this was substantially the same thing I saw before.

Q. Did you not know before Prof. Bell handed you this paper that some article or something in relation to this matter was being prepared, or to be prepared?—A. I did not.

Q. Had such a thing been talked of?—A. It had not.

Q. The advisability of making a publication of that kind?—A. It had not. It was deemed inadvisable to publish anything on behalf of the American Bell.

Q. That you learned after you sent the article?—A. I had been so informed by the president.

Q. Then why did you send this article?—A. Because I thought that was of peculiar interest, and he might think fit to change his mind.

Q. Of peculiar interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had the substance of it appeared previously?—A. I think the substance of it had all appeared, but not in the form and order of arrangement.

Q. You stated that the company had concluded before that not to publish anything?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present at that meeting?—A. I was not.

Q. How did you know it?—A. I was so informed by the president.

Q. How were you informed, by letter or orally?—A. Orally.

Q. Where?—A. Here.

Q. How long before you sent on the article?—A. I cannot say, sir; I do not recollect.

Q. Well, was it a long time or a short time?—A. Oh, it could not have been a very long time.

Q. When the president informed you of that fact, was there any talk of any particular matter for publication?—A. No, sir; all that was said was that the American Bell had better keep out of the newspapers in every way.

Q. How was that question brought up between you and the president, if you can remember?—A. I think it was in discussing the policy which we had better adopt in regard to these suits.

Q. And you say there was no particular matter for publication then talked of?—A. Nothing; no, sir.

Q. Only the general question of policy not to publish anything?—A. The general question of policy.

Q. And yet you thought that this was such a peculiar article that the company might change its policy.—A. I did.

Q. Although it contained nothing new, nothing that had not already appeared?—A. I do not say it contained nothing new. I say the substance of it had already appeared at different times.

Q. What made you think, then, that the company would change its policy?—A. I did not think so. I merely thought it was my duty, having received this document, to turn it over to them to let them act upon it.

Q. When you had your subsequent conversation with the president, was nothing said about the return of the article?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or what disposition was to be made of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not feel bound to return it to Professor Bell or General Sypher?—A. did not.

Q. Is there more than one General Sypher or Lawyer Sypher in this city that you know of?—A. I am not aware of more than one, sir.

A. Do you allude to General Sypher who was a former member of Congress from Louisiana?—A. I do not know whether he was or not, sir. I think I have heard that he had been, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any other articles or papers or letters in your possession submitted to you by Mr. Bell or by anybody else with reference to the Pan-Electric?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Did you call Professor Bell's attention to the article after it appeared in the New York World?—A. I have no recollection that I did, but I haven't any doubt that I did, sir. It is rather singular if I did not.

Q. Did you have any knowledge as to how it got into the newspaper?—A. I did not.

Q. As you had sent it to your company and your company had determined not to publish it, did it not surprise you a little that the article should turn up in the World?—A. It did, sir.

Q. Did you make any inquiry about it?—A. I do not think I did.

Q. I wish you would try to remember whether you did or not?—A. Will you repeat the question, please, sir.

Q. You say you were surprised to see the article turn up in the World after you had sent it to the company and the company had determined not to publish it. I want to know whether you gave expression to that surprise to any person or made any remark about it whatever?—A. I have no recollection of any, sir, yet I should not be surprised if I had.

Q. Well, that is only quite recently.—A. That is only quite recently, sir.

Q. Did you never talk to the World representative here, sir?—A. I do not know him, sir.

Q. Or the editor of the World?—A. I do not know him.

Q. Or anybody connected with the World?—A. I do not know them, sir.

Q. You never asked how he got it?—A. I never asked how he got it.

Q. If I recollect the testimony of Mr. Pulitzer, that article was in his possession a couple of months before the time you fixed as sending it.

Mr. MILLARD. This is a copy of the original, as testified by Mr. Forbes yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he knew of no copy retained.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Forbes?

The CHAIRMAN. This witness.

The WITNESS. I said what?

Q. (Resuming.) I believe that you said that you did not know of any copy being retained?—A. I did not, sir. There may have been a dozen for all I know.

Q. But I want to call your attention with a view of refreshing your memory to the testimony here. That for two months prior to the time you sent it to the company at Boston it was in the possession of the New York World, in Mr. Pulitzer's desk, according to his testimony. Did you know that fact?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Was it in manuscript or type-writing?—A. I do not know; I rather think it was in type-writing, but I am not certain; I do not think I should have read it if it had not been.

Q. Was it in print?—A. It was not in print.

Q. Did you concur in the policy of the company not to go into the newspapers?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Why did you send this article on, then?—A. I have already said that I wished to have them determine.

Q. And yet you thought its publication would have been a mistake?—A. I have not said that, sir.

Q. Well, you have agreed that that was the better policy?—A. I have said that I agreed that it was the best policy for the American Bell not to, sir; I have not said that it was not a good thing to have that published.

Q. Well, did you think it was a good thing to have it published?—A. I think it was, sir.

Q. Well, did you undertake to have anything else published?—A. I did not, sir. I did not undertake to have that published, if you please, sir.

Q. That seemed to be a step towards its publication.—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, did you assist or forward the publication of anything with relation to this matter?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. You thought it was a good thing to do by somebody else than the company?—A. I thought it was. I still think so.

Q. Why might the company not have published it as well as anybody else if it was or the benefit of the company?—A. Because, as I have before said, the company had decided that they would not in any way enter into a newspaper controversy in regard to this matter.

Q. And you thought that was wise?—A. I thought that was wise; I thought so.

Q. And yet you think it would be well enough for somebody else to publish it?—

A. I did.

Q. Then why might not the company have done it as well as an individual?—A. As I have before said, sir, we did not wish to appear in public in the press.

Q. But you would like to have it done by somebody else?—A. I personally should. Whether the company would or not I cannot answer. The same way that I am very glad that this investigation has gone on before this committee.

Q. I am glad to find somebody is pleased with it; perhaps you have helped on the investigation?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Have you had any consultations with any person—I do not speak of members of the committee, but any outside persons—with a view to bringing matter before the committee?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Have you made any suggestions to anybody?—A. I do not remember any, sir; I do not think I have even spoken to our counsel and Mr. Forbes; I may, possibly, but I have no recollection of having done so.

Q. With a view to bringing in matter before the committee?—A. I have not that I recollect of, sir.

Q. You thought the investigation was a good thing?—A. Yes, I do think so.

Q. You did not attempt to help it in any way?—A. No, sir; I had other matters to attend to.

Q. Have you other matters more important than the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I have paid but very little attention to it. I have not attended a meeting of the directors for eight months, I think—nine months. Some time since I offered to resign my position as director because I could not attend to it.

Q. I understood you to say, Mr. Hubbard, that you have not communicated with any public officer in any way in relation to the Government suit?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Or with a view to procuring the discontinuance of what is called the Memphis Government suit?—A. I have not, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, sir.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. After you three organized your company, did you approach members of Congress and offer to give them a large amount of stock?—A. We never gave anybody any stock, sir, unless we had value received for it.

Q. You did not have any United States Senators and Members of Congress by gift or otherwise?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You were not giving anything; your part of that transaction was in taking everything?—A. I do not know what you mean.

Q. Mr. Hanback has asked you whether you gave away any stock. Of course you did not. The original transaction seems to have been a transfer of interest to you without the payment of any present consideration?—A. I beg your pardon; it was not, sir. It was for the payment of a large consideration.

Q. In futuro. There was no consideration paid at the time, you have stated already?—A. There was not at the very day, but, as I have said before, there were many thousand dollars paid by me under that contract.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Wait a moment, please. You say that contract was a verbal one?—A. I think it was, sir.

Q. That is to say you entered into an obligation———A. (Interrupting.) With reference to the inventions of Mr. Bell.

Q. You entered into obligations to pay many thousand dollars?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, now, that is the impression that your statement made?—A. I did not mean to make that. I said I entered into an obligation under which I subsequently had paid many thousand dollars; I did not at the time I made it expect to pay anything like I did.

Q. You acquired how great an interest in his invention?—A. I acquired one-third.

Q. And the only obligation you entered into was to pay such sums of money from time to time as were necessary for its developing?—A. In taking out patents and developing the invention.

Q. How much does it cost to take out a patent?—A. Well, sir; it depends upon who your counsel is.

Q. Well, I do not mean your counsel; that is not a part, properly speaking, of taking out a patent; I speak of the amount paid the Government?—A. Really I do not know, sir.

Q. Is it a large or an inconsiderable sum?—A. It is an inconsiderable sum, sir; but the counsel fees are very large; that is a considerable part.

Q. Are counsel fees for procuring a patent which is not contested by anybody considerable?—A. I have always found it so whenever I have been interested in any manner; I know I have always charged pretty well myself.

Q. Then you probably had to take some of your own medicine?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Now, in this agreement that you speak of, was there any limit to your obligation that it should go to any extent, or to what extent it should go?—A. There was not.

Q. Was it left to your discretion to pay as much money or as little as you pleased?—A. Substantially it was. There were three of us, all friends, working together.

Q. And you became a third owner and the whole thing was left in your discretion to pay as much or as little money as you saw might be to your interest in connection with the other gentlemen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that at any time you could have stopped and said, "I will pay no more?"—A. I suppose I might. In that case I should have been obliged to return my share of the patents, however.

Q. Yes. That is, you would do that when you found out that it did not amount to anything?—A. Yes.

Q. But as long as you thought there was value in it you would experiment and proceed?—A. Yes.

Q. When you came to organize the corporation—I do not remember what the first was?—A. The first was the joint-stock company, called the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Now, as I understand your testimony, instead of transferring this property to that company it was transferred to you in trust?—A. Because it was a joint-stock company.

Q. That, I suppose, was in pursuance of law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at that time some other individuals were admitted?—A. Well, I do not think there were any at that time. If there were they were very few in number.

Q. At that time there was no new consideration paid, as far as you were concerned?—A. There was not. We were continually spending money in the development of the invention. Every month more and more sums were called for.

Q. The invention was gradually making progress, and its property was increasing in value?—A. Constantly.

Q. And finally, by reason of its development, it had increased to such value that you went through the process of forming several organizations until it finally terminated in the American Bell Company?—A. No, sir; only one.

Q. That was the intermediate company?—A. Yes; then it was thought best, and the two were merged into the Bell Telephone Company and the New England.

Q. The Bell Company owned ten millions of that stock. Six shares were issued for one?—A. I do not think there were ten millions issued at that time. I do not want to say that I am correct about these figures.

Q. I understand that. That, however, would represent the capitalization of the former stock, this six hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Was there that much stock there?—A. No, sir; there was not. It might have been a million perhaps. So that six for one for the new stock would make six millions.

Q. So that this constantly increasing stock represents the increasing valuation of these patents as well as patents that you were constantly acquiring from the beginning in which you acquired a third interest upon the mere consideration of paying the expense as far as you saw proper, and quitting when you saw proper?—A. Yes, sir; which, as I say, developed into the expenditure of many hundred thousand dollars.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you state what amount of this money you paid out before you received anything from the undertaking?—A. I think Mr. Sanders and myself paid out some fifty or sixty thousand dollars.

Q. Before you had any return?—A. Before we had any return. I may be mistaken, but I think that is about the amount.

Q. What did you receive for the license granted to the New England Company, if anything?—A. We received a portion of the stock, sir.

Q. Anything else?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Any money consideration?—A. I think not, sir; I am very certain we did not.

Q. Were there any other local companies?—A. We took our share and the other parties took their stock and paid in cash into the company for the amount they received.

Q. Paid into the treasury of the New England Company?—A. Paid into the treasury of the New England Company. That gave us more money for the purpose of developing the enterprise.

Q. Did you organize or license any other local company during the existence of the other company?—A. We did not, sir.

Q. Did you license any during the existence of the National Bell?—A. That I do not know, sir; immediately after the National Bell was organized I went to Europe.

Q. Have you received money for licenses granted to local companies?—A. Our plan is this, sir: To furnish the telephones to the companies and charge a rental upon those so furnished.

Q. Is that all?—A. That was the original plan. Then after that, as these companies were formed, they have paid us a portion of their stock in consideration of the patents.

Q. Have any of them paid you any money?—A. I do not know, sir. I could not answer that question.

Q. Is not the license regarded as a valuable privilege?—A. Yes.

Q. And you give the license to a piece of territory for a part of the stock?—A. Yes, sir. That is, a company will be organized with a capital, and a portion of that stock will be given to the parent company for the right to use the telephone within that district.

Q. All you receive then, if you receive no money, is the royalty on the instrument and the part of the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What part of the stock do you usually get?—A. Generally, I think, it has been 35 per cent. There have been instances, I think, where as high as 50 per cent. has been paid.

Q. I wish you would recall whether you have not in some instances received money?—A. I do not know anything about it, sir. I am not the treasurer of the company.

Q. Oh, I am aware of that, sir. But you were president of the company for awhile?—A. No, sir; I never was the president.

Q. You were president of the Bell Company, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were president?—A. I was of that company, but that was a joint stock company, and we never gave any licenses of this kind, and we never received any money for licenses.

Q. Had the Bell Company set up instruments before it was merged?—A. Yes, sir; it set up a great many.

Q. And received a considerable sum of money, I suppose?—A. Our royalty was ten dollars an instrument, fifty per cent. of which we allowed as commission to the agent.

Q. Is it more than ten dollars now?—A. No, sir; it is no more. I think it is less.

Q. Ten dollars a year?—A. Ten dollars a year; yes, sir.

Q. When did you begin to receive dividends from this enterprise?—A. I think in 1881, sir. I think that was the first one. [Looking around.] Am I right, Mr. Driver? He is not here. It may have been in 1882, but I think it was in 1881, sir.

Q. Well, the company had had considerable earnings before that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those earnings had been applied to the business of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you expend this fifty thousand dollars?—A. We expended it prior to the formation of the National Bell Telephone Company, which was formed in 1879.

Q. Well, had not the Bell Telephone Company had considerable earnings?—A. They had had considerable earnings but much larger expenditures.

Q. Larger than to the extent of fifty thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir; my impression is, sir, that it cost us over fifty thousand dollars to get up a call bell.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. [Facetiously.] You do not mean the original Bell?—A. Not the original; that was one of the great surprises, disappointments, we met; that when we got the telephone we found it was no use until we could get some means of calling, and the call bell was one of the most difficult things we had to get up.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And that cost you fifty thousand dollars?—A. Oh, I say in round numbers. I do not mean to give exact figures of course. I think I went over it one time and found that the bell alone had cost us that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Just a single question. When you increased your capital stock, do I understand you issued stock for more than the actual value?—A. I was gone at the time, sir. As I understand it they took the actual market value of the stock at that time.

Q. You mean the actual cash market value?—A. The actual cash market value of the stock at that time. The stock went up of course very rapidly in value after the invention became thoroughly known and appreciated by the public.

Q. Now, then, when you came to multiply your stock or issue the stock, did you exceed the actual cash value that it had at that time?—A. I think we never did.

Q. In other words, one share prior to the enlargement was equal to the six shares?—A. Yes, sir; the invention had become known and appreciated in the value and estimation of the public, and they gave us that price for it.

Q. And it had that cash value in the market?—A. It had that cash value in the market.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will just come back some time and tell us what your capital was, we shall be obliged.

The WITNESS. If you will address me a note stating what you want I will give it to you, sir.

Mr. HALL. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, so that he may not forget it, he desires merely a memorandum.

Prof. ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL recalled and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. It appears from the testimony of Mr. Hubbard that he received from you the article spoken of by the president of the company yesterday; from whom did you receive it?—Answer. It was a copy, sir, of one that I had received. Of course, I am frequently receiving a great many communications from people I do not know anything at all about.

Q. From whom did you receive it?—A. I received it from Gen. Sypher, of this city, with a note. I took it as a friendly offer, on his part, of information.

Q. Who is Gen. Sypher?—A. I do not know, sir, except that I have met him here. He lives opposite to me, on the same street—on Rhode Island avenue.

Q. Do you know who prepared it?—A. I think he stated in his note to me; I am not certain.

Q. Who did he say prepared the article?—A. I cannot undertake to say from memory. I have a copy of his note here, if you will allow me to consult it.

Q. Yes.—A. But at the same time I may say I took this as the confidential act of a gentleman having friendly intentions. I do not know whether it is proper for me to give the information contained within his note, but if you desire it I will do so.

Q. I think it is within the scope of the investigation.—A. I may say in regard to this matter that I received from General Sypher a copy—a type-written copy, if I remember rightly—of this article referred to by Mr. Hubbard as the one he received from me, and as usual in such cases I turned it over to the counsel of the company; but it seemed to me to possess such interest that before sending it to Mr. Storrow I made two type-writer copies of it, and presented one to my father-in-law and kept one myself.

Q. You may say who wrote the article.—A. General Sypher says it is an authentic statement of facts compiled by Col. E. N. Hill.

Q. Is that the same Col. Hill referred to in another investigation that is going on here?—A. I know nothing about him, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. My recollection is that it is the same E. N. Hill that Casey Young said did some writing for him.

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, I said nothing of the kind, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. I suppose you want to trace it back to the original author?

The CHAIRMAN. We will call on Col. Hill.

Q. (Resuming.) It was prepared by Col. E. N. Hill?—A. So Gen. Sypher states.

Q. Did he state to you how Col. Hill happened to prepare the article?—A. No, sir; nothing about that, sir.

Q. He did not explain how it came about that Col. Hill had prepared it?—A. No; he simply says:

“I hand you herewith an authentic statement of facts compiled by my associate, Col. E. N. Hill. It may be of interest to you. The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured, and it remains to be seen whether this reform administration will lend itself for its consummation.

“Very truly yours,

“J. HALE SYPHER.”

Q. That is the same man, then, who was a member from Louisiana—J. Hale Sypher. I remember his name. Col. Hill is the witness who was called in the investigation of the alleged bribery of officers of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you testifying now?

The CHAIRMAN. I am asking the question.

A. I did not know about that; I do not know the man.

Mr. MILLARD. He is not the party charged.

The CHAIRMAN. He is the man who finally got the money, so it is alleged.

Mr. RANNEY. The chairman seems not only anxious to identify him but to destroy him.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I spoke of him as a witness. It comes out on the other side where the money comes from.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems he told the truth in his article.

The CHAIRMAN. You had better wait until we get through the investigation before you make up your mind as to what is true.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better wait before you make up your mind.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not made up my mind.

Mr. MILLARD. You passed judgment on Sypher.

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all; and I do not want it understood that I have made any remark derogatory to Mr. Sypher; when he said J. Hale Sypher, I simply remembered him as a member from Louisiana at one time.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think either of us ought to indulge in comments as to anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. I certainly shall not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) Was that the first information you had of the preparation of an article?—A. The first, sir; yes.

Q. Had you ever spoken to General Sypher about it before?—A. No; I have not spoken to him about it now. I have not seen him, sir. It was a communication to me. I thought it best not to see any one.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with Mr. Hill?—A. Not that I know of. I know a great many people by the name of Hill, but I do not know this gentleman at all.

Q. Had you any acquaintance with General Sypher?—A. I have met him in society. That is all.

Q. You say you knew nothing whatever of the publication of this article?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. It was a voluntary offer?—A. So I took it; an offering of friendship on his part.

Q. Has Gen. Sypher been attorney for your company?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Or Mr. Hill?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Do I understand you that you had a copy of that article made?—A. Yes, sir; I had two copies made, one I gave to Mr. Hubbard, and the other I kept myself.

Q. Did I understand you to say you sent one to Mr. Storrow?—A. I sent the original to Mr. Storrow.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. That is the one you received?—A. The one I received I sent to Mr. Storrow, and also sent him the note Sypher sent to me.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any recollection whether the article received by you from Gen. Sypher was in manuscript, in type-writing, or in print?—A. I am not very certain; I think it was in type-writing. It certainly was not in print, but I think it was in type-writing.

Q. Do you remember that you intimated or stated to Mr. Storrow any use that might be made of the article, or stated your purpose in sending it?—A. No. It is simply my custom to hand over anything that comes to me in that way to counsel without any comment whatever.

Q. Why did you give it to Mr. Hubbard if you sent one copy to Mr. Storrow?—A. It seemed to me of peculiar interest, and I thought that my father-in-law would like to have a copy of it.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Hubbard to send it to the company?—A. No, sir. I was unaware that he had done so, for I had sent the original to Mr. Storrow.

Q. Was there anything said in your letter about the publication of the article?—A. Nothing. Shall I read it again, sir?

Q. You may if you wish.—A. He says [reading]:

“DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith an authentic statement of facts compiled by my associate, Col. E. N. Hill. It may be of interest to you. The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured, and it remains to be seen whether this reform Administration will lend itself for its consummation.

“Very truly, yours,

“J. HALE SYPHER.”

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Is that letter dated?—A. Yes; it is dated October 26, 1885.

Q. You have now read the whole letter?—A. I have read the whole letter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long after the receipt of this article did you send it to Mr. Storrow?—A. The next day, sir.

Q. It appeared in the World in January if I recollect aright. Do you remember?—A. I do not remember. I do not know that it appeared in the World at all. I know the substance of it was published in the World, but I have never compared the two to find out whether they were identical.

Q. It appeared in the World the 27th of January. I wish you would look at this article and state whether it is your recollection that that it is the one referred to?—A. Well, I cannot very well tell, sir. But I have my copy of the article here.

Q. Here present?—A. Oh, yes. I should be very happy to give it to you.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. A copy of the one you received?—A. Yes, sir ; I made two type-written copies, gave one to Mr. Hubbard and kept the other myself. [Submitting the paper to the chairman.] If you will allow me I shall be very happy to leave this for the use of the committee.

(At this point the chairman of the committee and Mr. Oates proceeded to compare a portion of the article referred to appearing in the New York World with the article submitted by witness.)

Mr. RANNEY. I think the article itself ought to go into the record and the fact, after it had been compared, be stated whether they are the same. I suppose the purpose is to show they furnished it to the World.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know whether they did or not ; we will see about that.

Mr. RANNEY. In that view it would be competent.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be better to put in now the copy made by Professor Bell, as he is on the stand, and then we may be able to show that this article published in the World is the same as the one already in evidence.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. (Resuming.) You say it is the article you received?—A. Yes, sir ; a copy made in type-writing.

Q. At what time did you send it to Mr. Storrow?—A. The day after I received it.

Q. What is the date of that letter?—A. The date is on it ; October 26, I think.

The type-written copy made by order of the witness as referred to by him is as follows :

THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

ITS INCEPTION, RISE, AND PROGRESS—WHAT IT PROPOSES AND WHAT IT HAS ACCOMPLISHED.

The Pan-Electric Telephone Company is founded upon inventions and patents issued to J. Harris Rogers, formerly of Memphis, Tennessee, but now a resident of Washington City, and it will therefore be not amiss before commencing its history, to say a few words as to his antecedents.

The Hon. Casey Young was elected to represent the Tenth Tennessee district, as a representative to the Forty-fourth Congress. After taking his seat in December, 1875, he succeeded in having Mr. J. Harris Rogers appointed electrician of the House of Representatives. Whilst in that position Mr. Rogers claims to have made a number of discoveries in telephony and telegraphy, which, after his retirement from office, he patented. These patents were transferred to an organization known as the "Secret Telephone Company," and this company after the lapse of some years transferred its patents to the "National Improved Telephone Company."

After the sale of his patents Mr. Rogers continued his experiments in electrical matters, and after a time secured other patents. Upon these latter patents a company was formed by Mr. Rogers and his father, Dr. J. Webb Rogers, called the "Pan-Electric Compay," which was located in the city of New York.

The management of the "Pan-Electric" failed to attract capitalists as investors in its stock, and the Messrs. Rogers bethought them of the old patron of the inventor, Col. Casey Young, who was again in Congress.

In the spring and summer of 1883 the organization of a new company was determined on. Dr. J. Webb Rogers, a gentleman of ability, standing, and culture, and an enthusiastic believer in the genius of his son, J. Harris Rogers, saw the advantages that a company controlled by men of high political position and character would have over any other in the event a postal telegraph bill should become a law. He knew Senators Harris, of Tennessee, and Garland, of Arkansas, two Senators than whom none stood higher in the South, and also Col. J. D. C. Atkins, one of the leading Democratic Representatives from the South, who had for years been chairman of the Appropriation Committee. All these gentlemen agreed to take an interest in the organization of the company, and as this was to be an enterprise appealing to the South for its political aid, it was now only necessary to secure a distinguished Confederate general to put at the head of it. This was done by getting Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, and the combination was complete.

It was determined to divide the telegraphic and telephonic inventions and form two companies, and accordingly there was organized in the spring of 1883 "The Pan-Electric Company" and "The Pan-lectric Telegraph Company."

These companies were identical in their stock, stockholders, organization, and officers, so that a statement as to the one covers the other.

The Pan-Electric Telephone Company has five million dollars capital stock, divided into shares of one thousand dollars each; these shares were held originally by the following named persons:

Joseph E. Johnston.....	$500,000
Isham G. Harris.....	500,000
A. H. Garland.....	500,000
Casey Young.....	500,000
J. D. C. Atkins.....	500,000
J. Harris Rogers.....	2,000,000
The Company.....	500,000

It will be observed that these five gentlemen each held one-tenth of the stock, but knowing the vagaries of inventors, they required that another tenth, making a majority, should be put under their control, so that they could have the business in their hands. This $500,000 worth of company stock belonged to the holders of the other shares in proportion to their holdings, but was controlled by the board of directors and could be used in any way it saw fit. These directors were old politicians and had not forgotten that notable saying of Oakes Ames, as to "placing stock where it would do most good."

The board of directors of the company was composed of Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, A. H. Garland, Casey Young, J. D. C. Atkins, and J. Harris Rogers.

The officers were: Joseph E. Johnston, president; Isham G. Harris, vice-president; Casey Young, secretary and treasurer; A. H. Garland, attorney; J. Harris Rogers, electrician.

Messrs. Johnston, Harris, and Young were made an executive committee with all the powers of the full board.

The telephone company was chartered by the State of Tennessee, with its principal office in Memphis and another in Washington City. Under the laws of that State as to corporations, all that was necessary to be paid in of the five million capital stock was the fee to the Secretary of State for using his seal, amounting, in this case, to four dollars and fifty cents.

The agreement by which these gentlemen became the owners of the Rogers patents was that they should put up what money was necessary to take out patents, manufacture telephonic instruments, and to put up experimental wires.

All this work was done in the summer of 1883.

In November of 1883 the incorporators of the Pan Company were assembled in Washington, and, as the experiments had been pronounced successful, the directors determined to commence operations. In the mean time Mr Rogers had disposed of one-third of his interest, $833,333, to Col. Robert F. Looney, a lawyer and speculator, of Memphis, Tennessee, and he was added to the board of directors and took an active part in its management. The directors determined to issue licenses to local companies, that is, sell territory in which the Pan-Electric instruments were to be used.

The terms upon which these sales were to be made were agreed upon, and are as follows: "Forty per centum of the capital stock of the local company to be held by the Pan Company; all instruments to be furnished by the Pan Company at a stated price. A royalty of ten dollars per annum to be paid by the local company on each instrument; a bonus, in cash, to be paid by each local company."

Under these conditions eight local companies were formed: One for Pennsylvania, with the Hon. Robert Klotz, formerly in Congress, as the principal promoter, Gen. Frank Armstrong, now Indian inspector, being the secretary; one in Baltimore, the Hon. Eli J. Henkle, formerly in Congress, being the promoter, to which the States of Maryland, Virginia, and District of Columbia was sold; one in St. Louis for Missouri; one in Wisconsin; one in Tennessee; one in Alabama, of which Gen. Upshaw, now chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, was the promoter; one in Texas, and one in Louisiana. The two first-named companies were not required to pay any bonus, but in all their contracts the Pan Company agreed to defend the validity of its patents at its own expense.

An opinion was asked for and given by the attorney of the company, Senator Garland, as to the validity of the patents, which reads as follows:

When the first local company paid its bonus of ten thousand dollars, the directors proceeded to pay back the sums expended by themselves in paying for patents, experiments, &c. This amounted to $275 for each of the five, showing that of the five million dollars capital stock there never was paid in but one thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars, being a little more than one fortieth of one per cent.

After this money was paid back the directors next proceeded to divide the remainder of the ten thousand dollars as a dividend to the stockholders, the amount received by each holder of one-tenth of the stock being a little less than six hundred dollars.

The five hundred thousand dollars of company stock had in the mean time been partially distributed, one hundred shares going to Ex-Gov. Jno. C. Brown, of Tennessee, now resident in St. Louis and principal attorney for what is known as "The Gould system of Southwestern Railways." Other sums were given or sold to other parties having or supposed to have either local or national influence, Senators Vest, of Missouri, and Vance, of North Carolina, each getting a portion.

Mr. Rogers, for reasons not necessary to explain, was removed from the position of electrician, and Dr. J. E. Harlan was given that place.

At the beginning of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a brother of Senator Vance, Mr. R. B. Vance, then a Representative from North Carolina, introduced a bill in the House of Representatives giving the Attorney-General power to bring suit, upon application, to vacate patents; this bill was referred to a committee, which reported in favor of its passage, saying in its report that since 1836 the Attorney-General had not been intrusted with this power. The bill passed the House of Representatives almost unnoticed, but was never reported from the Senate Committee on Patents.

It might make an interesting newspaper article if the names of the parties who went before this Committee on Patents to advocate the passage of this bill could be given.

At the same time with the bill above spoken of there were introduced into the House several postal telegraph bills, all of which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of which the Hon. H. D. Money, of Mississippi, was chairman. These bills created a vigorous fight, and the result was no legislation. The interest of the Pan Company in this fight can best be told by Dr. J. Webb Rogers himself. In the winter of 1883, in a conversation with a gentleman whom he was trying to get interested in the Pan Companies, and who asked why so many politicians had been put into the companies instead of well-known business men, Dr. Rogers said: "You do not understand our idea; we intend to get a postal telegraph established, and political influence will give us the control of that, then we will have the grandest monopoly in the world."

But to return to the movements of the Pan directors in a business way. Contracts continued to be made in the spring of 1884, until eight local companies, as before stated, were organized; as these companies paid in the required bonus, the money was paid out to the stockholders as dividends, two being declared in July of $1.50 per share, giving each of the original promoters, Garland, Johnston, Harris, Young, and Atkins, seven hundred and fifty dollars at each division, or fifteen hundred dollars in that month. Another dividend of the same size was declared later, aggregating about three thousand dollars profit to each of these gentlemen within eighteen months upon an investment of two hundred and seventy-five dollars each.

When the Democratic national committee met at the Arlington Hotel to determine the time and place for holding the Democratic convention there was a vacancy from Tennessee. To secure still greater political power, Senator Harris, Col. Young, and Col. Atkins, leading Democrats from Tennessee, succeeded in having Col. Robert F. Looney, then the largest individual holder of Pan-Electric stock, placed on the committee as the representative from Tennessee.

The Pennsylvania Company, under the energetic handling of Mr. Klotz, had gotten so far along that the Bell Company interfered, and asked for an injunction upon the ground that the Rogers patents were an infringement upon the Bell patents. Under its contract the Pan Company had to defend this suit, and its attorney commenced preparation to do so.

In the mean time an episode had occurred in New Orleans. A nephew of Col. Looney had gone to that place to promote a local company to work under the Pan-Electric. A Mr. Van Benthuyzen had been suggested as "the most fit and proper" person to manage the business, but it seemed that he, in connection with Mr. C. P. Huntington, of Mississippi, and other parties, had become the owners of the first patents of Rogers, sold by him to the Secret Telephone Company, and that a company was organized to work these and other patents, under the name of the National Improved Telephone Company. This company claims that it owned, by prior purchase, all the inventions of J. Harris Rogers, and that the Pan Company was using what belonged to them. There was a bitter fight, which resulted in driving the Pan Company out of New Orleans.

The stopping of the Pennsylvania Company by legal process acted as a damper upon purchasers, and there were no more victims coming forward with their bonuses so that dividends in the Pan Company ceased.

Nearly all the distinguished corporators were so busily engaged in politics in the fall of 1884 that they could not attend to the Philadelphia suit. When the result of the election was known they rejoiced in the idea that their political friends were to rule, and at once commenced to work for such places as would give them most power.

Col. Money, who, as chairman of the Post-Office Committee, had favored a postal telegraph bill, was pressed for Postmaster-General, Mr. R. B. Vance, who had introduced and passed the bill through the House of Representatives, giving the Attorney-General power to bring suit to vacate patents, was slated for Commissioner of Patents; Col. Casey Young, secretary and treasurer of the companies was to be Solicitor of the Post-Office Department. Colonel Atkins, one director, was to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs. General Johnston, a director and president of the company, was pushed for Railroad Commissioner, and Senator Garland, a director and the attorney of the companies, for Attorney-General of the United States.

An examination as to who was backing and urging these appointments will disclose the fact that every one connected with the Pan Companies was urging them. Only the three last-named of the list were appointed. Mr. Vance, however, failing to get to be Commissioner, was made Assistant Commissioner of Patents. A part of the programme failed, but enough was carried to give the Pan Companies great political power. The president of the company was in a condition to dictate terms to some of the most powerful railroad companies in the country. Its friend was placed where he could overlook the question of patents. Its attorney was Attorney-General of the United States. One of the directors was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which would place him in communication with numbers of wealthy contractors, whom he could enrich or ruin.

When all that could be had been done towards securing high places for its members, the Pan Company could once more look after its local interests.

The case in Philadelphia had been allowed to go by default, and various efforts had been made to get a case at St. Louis or Memphis, but had failed.

Just at this juncture an occasion was offered which was eagerly seized upon by the shrewd politicians who controlled the Pan Company.

The National Improved Telephone Company had established itself in Pittsburg and had been promptly enjoined by the Bell Company. At once the Pan Company proposed to aid it in defending the suit. After some conferences this proposal was accepted. The terms of compromise between the two companies are not known, but the fact is known that instead of fighting each other as before, these companies had joined forces to fight the Bell Company. All the preparations made by the attorneys of the Pan Company were given to the National for its fight at Pittsburg. Col. Young, with Col. George Gantt, of Memphis, one of the leading lawyers of that city, came to Washington, and after a meeting of the Pan directors, went to Pittsburg to attend the trial on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of July. The decision of the court, that it would not hear arguments, but would follow the precedent established by the courts and grant the injunction, destroyed the well-laid plans of the two companies, and left them adrift.

The leading spirits in the Pan Electric Company are Senator Isham G. Harris and Col. Casey Young, of Tennessee. Both these gentlemen are bold and fearless. They had a great stake at interest, and it was doubtless through their advice that the next card was played. They knew nothing of the Fabian policy, which, as a general, the president of the company understood so well, but they knew how to make a down-right attack.

Dr. Rogers says that he called on Attorney-General Garland and asked him to commence proceedings against the Bell Company to vacate its patents, and the Attorney-General refused, because of his interest in the Pan Company.

This has not been denied. Mr. Garland himself tells of the call made by Senator Harris, Col. Young, and others, and of his refusal to act.

If the laws of the country justified such a suit the refusal of the Attorney-General to bring it because Mr. Garland held stock in a rival company is absolutely unjustifiable. His duty, his sworn duty, was to execute the law as he understood it. If the Bell Telephone Company was, as alleged, using a patent fraudulently issued, no personal consideration should have kept the Attorney-General of the United States from moving to set that patent aside, if there was any statute authorizing such a suit.

But he refused to bring the suit.

It will be remembered by every one who reads the daily papers that when plans were being published of how the President and members of the Cabinet were going to spend their vacations, the facts being obtained directly from the parties, that it was announced that Secretary Lamar and Attorney-General Garland would take no vacation, each remaining in or near Washington.

On the 29th of August Mr. Van Benthuysen and Mr. C. P. Huntington, representing the lately defeated National Company, registered at the Ebbitt House in Washington. On the next day Col. Casey Young and Col. Gantt, representing the Pan Company, stopped at the same place as did Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, the president of the local Pan Company in Baltimore. That these gentlemen were in consultation together is well known. On the first of September Col. Casey Young secured private apartments at 1327 G street, a most central locality, within two squares of the Ebbitt, Riggs, and Willard's. At these rooms a number of conferences were held amongst the parties named above, and among the callers upon Col. Young while these conferences were being held was Attorney-General Garland. Shortly after the conferences closed it was announced that the Attorney-General would soon start for a visit to his country place in Arkansas, and he did leave on August 27th, burying himself in the woods away from all postal or telegraphic communication, and remaining there until the press of the country was glowing with comments upon the action of the Department of Justice.

In a few days all the parties to these conferences, Messrs. Young, Gantt, Van Benthuyssen, Huntington, and Johnson, went to their respective homes.

The Bell Telephone Company, of Boston, commenced suit in Baltimore against the local Pan Company for infringement of its patents. Immediately the local Pan Company, of Memphis, Tennessee, commenced suit against the local Bell Company of the same place for infringement of its patents. In the one instance the parent company brought the suit for the benefit of its licensees; in the other instance the local company brought the suit.

In his letter published in the New York Tribune of September 30, in defense of the Attorney-General, Dr. Rogers says: "Col. Young informed me and my son that the Attorney-General had agreed that a suit should be brought by the Solicitor-General against the Bell Telephone Company, at the instance of the National Improved Company." That statement has never been denied by any of the parties.

Attorney-General Garland left for Arkansas on the 27th of August. Promptly on the first of September Col. Young arrived in this city and stopped at Wormley's. Private rooms were not needed on this occasion.

On the second, Col. Casey Young and Senator Harris called upon the Solicitor-General, finding there the application which had arrived that morning, made by the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee, to bring suit in Memphis to vacate the Bell patents. This application was granted at once, and without reference or consideration, for Solicitor-General Goode informed Col. Young the next morning that the order had been forwarded to commence the suit. Mr. Goode was acting Attorney-General on the second day of September, and had all the routine work of the Department of Justice to perform; had to receive visitors who came on business to see the Attorney-General, and yet he had time to consider a question involving millions, examine the papers in the case, determine upon the propriety of the suit, see that authority existed to bring it and order the commencement of it; all within one working day of seven hours. Such prompt action has hardly ever been paralleled in a Government office. And Mr. Goode by his action showed that he was not afraid to assume responsibility. A committee of Congress a year before that the Attorney-General had no power to bring such a suit, as Mr. McCorry, district attorney for Tennessee, had requested authority to bring. Mr. Goode did not know that such a report was in existence, or, if he did, assumed to know more as to the powers of the Attorney General than Congress did.

But to return to our narrative.

Each one of the companies holding under the Pan Company, except the Pennsylvania and Baltimore, paid a bonus for its privilege, and besides paid ten dollars each for all the telephone instruments it used in its plants. In addition, these companies paid all the expenses of "a plant." All this was an actual cash outlay, varying in amount according to the size of the "plant" and the number of instruments purchased. The bonus in each case was the same—ten thousand dollars. Then forty per cent. of the capital stock of each of these companies was reserved for the Pan Company, and it paid no part of the "bonus" or the cost of the "plant" and instruments.

For this expenditure the local companies received a license to use the Pan-Electric telephones and a guarantee of protection in using them.

The Pan Company having failed to protect its licensees by the ordinary processes of law, brought its powerful political influence, originally intended to be used in another way, into play, and brought, or attempted to bring, the whole power of the United States to its aid in crushing out all opposition—that is, the Bell patents.

To fully understand the interest which Attorney-General Garland had in breaking down the Bell patent, it will be necessary to recapitulate a little.

First, there was his five hundred thousand dollars stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company—one-tenth of the whole company was his. Then there is the forty million dollars capital stock of the licensed companies, of which forty per cent., or sixteen million dollars, belonging to the Pan Company; of this one-tenth, or one million six hundred thousand dollars, belongs to Attorney-General Garland. But that is not all, nor even a small part of what would result from the breaking down of the Bell patents. In that event there would not be eight but at least fifty companies, with capital stocks averaging five million dollars each, that would seek licenses from the Pan-Electric-Company. Two hundred and fifty million dollars is an exceedingly small estimate of the amount at which the companies using the Pan-Electric Telephones would be capitalized, if the Bell patent was invalidated. Forty per cent., or one hundred millions, of this stock would belong to the Pan Company; one-tenth of that, or ten millions, would be the property of Attorney-General Garland. Paying only five per cent., and this is a small allowance, he would have an income of over five hundred thousand dollars, and that without being out one dollar.

Senator Harris and Col. Young, Gen. Johnston and Commissioner Atkins, Dr. Rogers and Col. Looney, would each have as much, or more. Is it to be wondered at that these gentlemen brought all the political influence they could command to have the United States, which had succeeded in crushing a rebellion wherein eleven millions of people were engaged, to interpose its power to crush out a rival company?

There was another potent reason working upon these parties one and all. The laws of the country are particularly severe upon bogus corporations which obtain money without giving an equivalent, and though corporations are without souls or bodies, the men who compose them are not, and hence, unless the Bell patents could be broken down and declared invalid, the men who had invested their money in the sixty per cent. of the local companies, which had been licensed by the Pan Company, who had paid bonuses, built plants, bought telephones, which were without value, would be apt to call upon the parties who had induced and profited by these expenditures, made upon false statements as to law and facts, to make good the losses. Messrs. Harris, Young, Garland, Looney, Johnston, Rogers, and Atkins were the parties who had made the statements and profited by the expenditures, and they could be made to repay all these losses.

There was ruin both in fortune and fame upon the one side and almost unbounded wealth on the other. It was worth stretching the law and the power of the Government to secure the one and prevent the other.

In the formation of the local companies, particularly in the East, where it was to be expected that the Bell Company would first assert its rights, particular care was had by the Pan Company to secure local political strength. Dr. Eli J. Henkle, an ex-member of Congress, and a leading Democrat of Baltimore, was intrusted with the formation of the company that was to control the cities of Baltimore and Washington. General Bradley T. Johnston, one of the most popular of the Southern Democratic leaders in Maryland, was made president of the company.

In the Pennsylvania Company, Mr. Robert Klotz, a leading German citizen, and an ex-member of Congress, was selected to organize the company. In the South and West the political magnates who controlled the parent company knew their power was supreme, and only required money from their licensees, furnishing the political influence themselves.

The list of the names of the leading stockholders and officers in this company reads almost like a page from the Government Blue Book:

A. H. Garland, Attorney-General.
Joseph E. Johnston, Railroad Commissioner.
J. D. C. Atkins, Indian Commissioner.
Isham G. Harris, U. S. S., Tennessee.
George G. Vest, U. S. S., Missouri.
Zebulon G. Vance, U. S. S., North Carolina.
Robert Klotz, ex M. C., Penn.
Eli J. Henkle, ex-M. C., Md.
Casey Young, ex-M. C., Tenn.
—— Upshaw, ch'f clerk, Ind. Bureau.
Frank Armstrong, Indian Inspector.
Jno. C. Brown, ex-gov., Tenn.

Q. (Referring to a paper submitted by witness.) I see on this same sheet your reply to Mr. Sypher's letter?—A. Yes, sir; from my secretary.

Mr. RANNEY. Read it.

The WITNESS. (Reading:)

J. HALE SYPHER, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Mr. Alexander Graham Bell directs me to thank you for your letter of 26 October instant, and the accompanying papers upon "the Pan-Electric Telephone Company."

Very truly, yours.

For ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL,
F. L. RADCLIFFE.

27 OCTOBER, 1885.

Mr. RANNEY. That letter and answer ought to go in.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say you sent that article to Mr. Storrow about the day or day after you received the copy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if I recollect right, it is already in evidence that it appeared in the World on the 27th of January following, just three months after. Do you know whether Mr. Storrow furnished the World with that article?—A. I asked him so, sir. I was struck by the likeness between the World article and that, and so, specifically, asked Mr. Storrow whether it had been furnished by himself or the company, and he informed me that it had not; that he had nothing to do with it.

Q. It seems to agree with the testimony of Mr. Pulitzer, that he had the article three months before the publication, and you say Mr. Storow told you that he did not furnish it to the World?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you that he did not furnish the article or that he did not furnish the copy you sent him?—A. He said that he had made no use of it whatever in regard to furnishing it to newspapers.

Q. When did you see him to talk with him about it?—A. When he was in Washington. He has been on to Washington a number of times. I cannot say when.

Q. How long was it after you sent it?—A. After the appearance of the World article.

Q. Did you call his attention to the fact that it had appeared in the World or an article substantially the same?—A. Well, yes; we had some conversation upon the subject, in which I remarked he might have seen it was the same article, and I was curious to know whether he had anything to do with it.

Q. He seems to have had two copies of this article; one received from you and one received from Mr. Hubbard, through the president of the company. You say he stated he had made no use of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did send the letter received by you from General Sypher to Mr. Storow?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Retaining a copy of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the way you made this copy?—A. Exactly. That is a copy of a copy.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you say you knew Mr. Hill?—A. I do not know, sir. I haven't any knowledge of that gentleman. I know a number of gentlemen by the name of Hill, but whether any of them may be the gentleman mentioned in the letter of Mr. Sypher, I do not know.

Q. You do not know the gentleman mentioned in that letter?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know where he lives?—A. I do not.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Did this communication come to you through the mail or was it delivered by a messenger?—A. That I do not remember; I simply know I received it at my house.

Q. Have you an office?—A. No. It came to my house.

Q. You do not remember the circumstance how it came?—A. No; except that it came in an envelope; I found it in my mail, but whether it came through the mail or was delivered at the door I do not know.

Q. You have a secretary who conducts your correspondence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this a copy from your books, or is it a copy that was prepared at the time you sent this communication with your answer?—A. This is a copy of a copy that I made of General Sypher's letters at the time I sent it to Mr. Storow.

Q. Well, I want to know whether———A. (Interrupting.) The answer is a copy of a press copy, however.

Q. And when you sent this original letter of J. Hale Sypher's to the attorney of the American Bell Company you directed your secretary to make a copy of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not in a letter-press book, but on a separate piece of paper?—A. I presume so; I do not remember just now. I can find out if it is of importance at all.

Q. When did you have this copy made?—A. To-day, sir.

Q. You had no knowledge or information upon the subject of the preparation of such a paper as accompanied this letter until you received it?—A. Nothing whatever, sir.

Q. Had not the matter been spoken of between yourself and Mr. Hubbard?—A. No, sir; excepting in a general way, but I was carefully warned by Mr. Hubbard and by the counsel of the company to have nothing to do with newspapers.

Q. Then you did know that something was going on? You knew that the papers in some way were handling matters or were going to handle matters, and you had been carefully warned to keep your fingers out of the matter?—A. No. A number of newspaper reporters were after me to interview me on various subjects, and I was simply warned to keep clear of them.

Q. Then you were simply warned to keep clear of them?—A. Yes; and not to communicate anything to the press.

Q. Had not Mr. Hubbard and yourself discussed the question of the propriety of the Bell Telephone Company becoming a party to the controversy, and hadn't you heard it was best for their interests to keep out of it?—A. No, sir; I had not heard anything about it. But I was anxious to contribute things to the newspapers in my own defense, and I consulted counsel and was very much mortified to be told that I had better not do so, but to trust my vindication to the courts.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Has the question been asked you whether you paid anything for this article or not?—A. I think not; but I did not, sir.

Q. Do you know of any of your company, or any of its directors, directly or indirectly procuring this publication?—A. No, I do not. In fact, I have the most positive assurance they did not.

Q. And was any demand made by Sypher or anybody else for compensation for it?—A. No; I took this as a friendly offer, as a proof of a friendly spirit towards myself. I did not understand that he desired in any way payment, although, as you saw from the testimony of Mr. Forbes, it was presumed payment was wanted.

Q. When you took it from the envelope was that the first knowledge or information you had that such an article had been written?—A. It was, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. What had been the business relations between you and Gen'l Sypher?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You never had any business relations in the world?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Were you on social intimate terms?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he a stranger to you?—A. I don't think I should recognize him now. I have met him in society.

Q. Then you thought that was a friendly act?—A. Yes, I took it in that way. I am not in the habit of receiving matters of that kind—

Q. (Interposing.) You did not make any effort to make his acquaintance?—A. No; in fact, after that I made an effort not to make his acquaintance.

Q. Were you afraid?—A. No; it was simply as a matter of policy. I wanted to keep out of this matter.

Q. What was there as a matter of friendly feeling about it if you did not want to make his acquaintance?—A. I say I took it as a friendly offering. I may say I had forgotten at the moment that following my reply I received another letter from General Sypher, in which he enclosed some newspaper scrap which I have here in which he suggested that this history would not be complete without this newspaper scrap. I do not remember what it is.

Q. Let us have those?—A. This is the only copy I have [producing same]. This is the original letter and has the scrap attached to it.

Mr. RANNEY. You can read the letter and let the stenographer take it down.

The WITNESS. It is addressed to my secretary, I think.

Mr. HALL. Let me see it [letter submitted by witness]. It differs from the former in that respect.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. It is a letter headed J. Hale Sypher, attorney and counsellor at law, number 1313 F street N. W., Washington, D. C., October 27th, 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the same day.

Mr. HALL. (Reading:)

Mr. F. L. RADCLIFFE.

1500 R. I. Ave.:

DEAR SIR: I omitted to attach Mr. Garland's opinion to the paper which I sent to Prof. Bell yesterday, as referred to therein. I beg to enclose it herewith, as without it the paper is not complete.

Very truly, yours,

J. H. SYPHER.

Shall I read the enclosures?

Mr. MILLARD. I suppose it is his opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. What are the enclosures? Are they newspaper slips?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. They are opinions, are they not?

Mr. HALL. Yes. This is the note in reply to Myers.

Mr. OATES. It is already in.

Mr. HALL. It is already in.

The CHAIRMAN. Make a reference to it then to show it is in the record.

Mr. HALL. The clippings enclosed in this letter consist of a note dated Washington, January 4th, 1884, to Hon. A. H. Garland, and signed by D. E. Myers, and dated January 5th, 1884, addressed to D. E. Myers, and signed by A. H. Garland, supposed to be papers that are already in evidence.

Q. (Resuming.) Now this letter is dated the day following the first note received by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the same day the reply was written?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. J. H. Sypher had received that reply before this note was written?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you send your note to him through the mail or by messenger?—A. I am sure I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember whether his letter to you was written upon a letter-head like that or not?—A. I do not recollect that either, sir.

Q. Are these the only communications you received from J. H. Sypher?—A. I believe so.

Q. You never had a personal interview with him?—A. No, sir; I was very careful not to have. He called at my house.

Q. Did you ever inform anybody of the fact that he had sent you these communications?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who made the copies of that statement for you?—A. There was a young lady who was at my house doing some other work for me at the time on the type-writer, a Miss Nicholson, I think, who is a professional type-writer; she made it on the type-writer in duplicate, at my own house.

Q. When were they made?—A. Just right off, because I sent the original the next day to Mr. Storrow.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you answer the second letter at all?—A. No, sir; not at all. It did not seem to require an answer. I was not anxious to correspond on the subject.

JOHN D. O'CONNOR sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Washington.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Stenographer.

Q. Were you at any time the clerk for Mr. Cox who was a member of Congress from New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you his clerk?—A. In 1884.

Q. You say you sustained that relation to him in 1884?—A. Yes, sir; I was clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and acted as his secretary. He was chairman of that committee.

Q. Have you any recollection of Mr. Cox receiving a letter from Dr. J. W. Rogers?—A. Well, I have recollection of his replying to a letter received from Dr. J. W. Rogers.

Q. Did you see the letter received from Dr. Rogers?—A. I do not remember that I did, sir; I may have. I undoubtedly did, but I do not think I read it; if I did I do not recall it now.

Q. Do you remember of any inclosure in the letter, or was there any?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. It was a certificate of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. For how much?—A. My recollection is that it was for twenty thousand dollars.

Q. Now, you may state what occurred, as far as you know, at that time?—A. Well, in replying to his correspondence of that day, he said, "I have received a letter," or "I have here a letter from Mr. J. W. Rogers, in which he says I enclose you a poem, but I do not find any poem but this certificate," and he made some jocose remark about there not being very much poetry in that, and he did not know whether it was a joke or what, but anyway he dictated a letter returning it.

Q. Did you write at his dictation?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say there was no poetry in it?—A. There was no poem in the letter—so he said. He did not receive any; only that enclosure, the certificate.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated it was a Pan-Electric Telephone certificate?—A. That is my recollection of it; I found the original letter. Mr. Barr let me look at Mr. Rogers' letters yesterday evening, and I found the letter I wrote to Dr. Rogers.

Mr. RANNEY. The letter Mr. Cox wrote is on page 9 of the printed record.

The WITNESS. I mean the letter Mr. Cox wrote to Dr. Rogers.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no doubt this is a copy of that.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought you referred to the letter of Rogers to Mr. Cox.

Mr. RANNEY. No; I referred to the letter of Mr. Cox to Rogers.

Q. Have you that?—A. No, sir; Mr. Cox has that himself.

Q. You say he dictated the reply?—A. He dictated the reply.

Q. And is it the letter that you find in the package of Dr. Rogers' letters before you?—A. Yes, sir. [Exhibiting a letter.] This is the letter that I wrote at Mr. Cox's dictation.

Q. You say you have the letter before you?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Dr. Rogers, when he was on the stand, stated what his reply was.

The CHAIRMAN. Hand it to the reporter and let him put it in now.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., Jan'y 13, 1884.

DEAR MR. ROGERS: Presuming on what you have already written me, and not having received your poem, and not understanding the nature of the shares which you send me, I am bothered, and can only solve the problem by sending you back the shares, which I enclose herein. I don't suppose they are good for anything, or you would not be sending them around so fluently.

Yours, with respect,

S. S. COX.

(1 enclosure.)

Mr. RANNEY. Let us compare it to see whether it is right. [The printed copy and the manuscript copy were here compared by witness and Mr. Ranney.]

Mr. RANNEY. Is that a correct copy?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. It is marked "one inclosure."

Mr. RANNEY. That was the stock?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Well, sir, what direction did Mr. Cox give you about the delivery of that letter?—A. Well, this letter which he dictated and which I wrote was signed "S. S. Cox," by me. I was in the habit of signing a great deal of his mail for him at his request.

Q. How is it signed?—A. "S. S. Cox." And when he came into the committee-room that afternoon I said to him, "Mr. Cox, will you allow me to make a suggestion?" He says, "Well, what is it?" I says, "In regard to this letter to Dr. Rogers returning this certificate of stock. As you say, apparently it is a joke, but you do not know what may be in it. You do not know what time may develop about it or what may come of it in the future, and if there is any ulterior motive about it, if you return it through the mail, as you seem to want to do, it can be easily said, if they are so disposed, that it was never received back, and therefore I will take this letter and deliver it to Dr. Rogers in person and get his receipt for it." He said, "I think that is a very good suggestion; you had better do it." So I wrote a receipt myself and went down that afternoon to see Dr. Rogers. I do not think he was there, and I called next morning on my road to the committee-room and found him and presented the receipt to him and told him my instructions, and he treated it rather lightly; said he did not see why there was so much formality about it; that he and Mr. Cox were friends. But at any rate, after a moment or so, he signed the receipt before I handed him the letter with the inclosure. When he signed the receipt I gave him the letter. The receipt that I made or wrote was something like this: Dated; "Received of John D. O'Connor, clerk to S. S. Cox, certificate number so and so," whatever it was, "and representing so many thousand dollars' worth of stock."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you keep the receipt?—A. No, sir; I am coming to that now. After he signed it I asked him myself for a couple of copies of the poem to which he referred. As matter of curiosity I wanted them for myself. He gave them to me, and when I came back to the Capitol I showed the receipt to Mr. Cox, and then placed it along with Mr. Rogers's letter, forwarding the certificate, both of which Mr. Cox has, or had when I ceased to be his clerk, in his bundle of answered letters. If he has not destroyed them he has both yet.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated that it was Pan-Electric Telephone stock?—A. That is my recollection; yes, sir.

Q. I see Dr. Rogers testifies that it was the Rogers telephone stock; that he sent it both to Mr. Cox and Mr. Beach, and also to Mr. Carlisle. Have you any distinct recollection about it?—A. Well, I cannot say I have distinct recollection about it. By the way, Mr. Cox said that he did not think that it could be of any very great value or they would not be distributing it so gratuitously, especially in such large amounts.

Q. Did Mr. Cox send you to Dr. Rogers to make any inquiry or to get any more light in regard to this company or stock or anything else?—A. The only time I saw Mr. Rogers was at the time I state, and the only conversation that occurred between us was what I stated. I asked him nothing at all regarding the stock or anything pertaining to it.

Q. Did Mr. Cox direct you to make any inquiry regarding it?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. I ask you that question because Dr. Rogers says, "At any rate he wanted more light about it before he would keep it." Did you state to Dr. Rogers that Mr. Cox would keep it under any circumstances?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Or that he wanted more light or information about it?—A. No, sir; I did not, and I did not state anything from which he could draw such an inference.

Q. Did you say this to him; I will read his testimony:

"He sent his clerk down to my office to say that Mr. Cox did not know anything about this thing, and would not take stock unless he knew enough about it, and he returned the stock to me at the same time."

Did you make any inquiry about the stock whatever?—A. No, sir; I told Mr. Rogers that my instructions were to return him that certificate of stock and get his receipt for it, and when he signed the receipt I would give him the certificate for it. At first Mr. Cox did not seem to—

Q. (Interposing.) Do you know anything more about the transaction?—A. I was going on to say that at first Mr. Cox did not seem to recollect who Mr. Rogers was, and when he told me the name I told him that he undoubtedly knew him; that he was more or less of a prominent man in Washington, and that he must have met him at some time or other, and I told him that his son Harry Rogers used to be electrician of the House, and he recollected who he was.

Q. You say you returned the receipt to Mr. Cox?—A. Yes, sir; and he retained it amongst his file of answered letters.

Q. Did you have any more conversation with him at the time of taking the receipt?—A. No, sir. I have told you what I told him; that Mr. Rogers rather hesitated to sign the receipt, and that he didn't see why there was such formality about it; that he and Mr. Cox were friends.

Q. You reported that to Mr. Cox?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Cox say to that?—A. I do not recall anything.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did Mr. Cox take his letters abroad with him or are they here anywhere?—A. I do not know whether he took them abroad or not. I ceased to be his clerk. I was his clerk from January to April.

Q. I see his reply was January 13, 1884.—A. This letter is dated January 13, 1884.

Q. Then there is another letter of Senator Garland's introducing Rogers of January 18 to Mr. Cox. Were you present at any time when he presented that letter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you present when anybody came to see Mr. Cox in regard to getting the younger Rogers appointed electrician of the House?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any pamphlet or circular inclosed in the letter when the certificate of stock came?—A. Mr. Cox said that it referred to a poem and the only thing inclosed was this certificate, and he made some jocose remark about there not being very much poetry about that.

Q. About the stock?—A. About the stock.

Q. Did Mr. Rogers say anything about having omitted to send any poem?—A. I believe I told him Mr. Cox failed to receive the poem, and I asked him for a copy myself, and he gave me a copy. He gave me a couple, I think.

Q. Have you them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Dr. Rogers say that he failed to inclose it?—A. He might have said he possibly overlooked it. I do not know that he said anything about it at all.

Q. Have you that poetry?—A. I did have it for awhile.

Q. What has become of it?—A. I suppose it is lost. I left it in the committee-room.

Q. Do you know what it related to?—A. As near as I can recollect, it was some poetry about the assassination of President Lincoln; something referring to that in some way or other.

Q. It was not singing the praises of the Pan-Electric?—A. No, sir; I do not think it was.

Q. Are you quite sure?—A. I am rather sure that it did not refer to any company.

Q. What did Rogers say other than what you have now stated? You have stated some things in my examination of you that you did not recollect before. Is there anything else you have forgotten?—A. No, sir. He did not state anything at all.

Q. Did he not say in substance he did not see why he should not keep it?—A. No, sir; and he did not state anything from which I could draw any such inference, either.

Q. I do not mean to intimate that there was anything wrong under heaven in Mr. Cox's connection with it, or that he ever took it or accepted it. But Dr. Rogers seemed to think otherwise. Did he not seem to be rather surprised when you wanted him to sign the receipt?—A. Yes, sir; he seemed rather surprised that Mr. Cox should think it necessary to take such formal steps.

Q. Did he read Cox's reply in your presence?—A. I handed him the receipt first and told him when he signed the receipt I would give him the letter. After he signed it I handed him the letter.

Q. Did he read that in your presence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say when he read the letter?—A. I do not recall what he said.

Q. Did he laugh?—A. He rather smiled.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was there any special reason why you should take this receipt?—A. None in the world that I know of, only just the suspicion happened to cross my mind at the time I was writing the letter.

Q. Had you not heard anything about the Pan-Electric scheme at that time?—A. I do not think I had.

Q. Are you quite positive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did Mr. Cox state any reasons for returning the stock, other than stated in his letter; did he state any reasons to you why he should return it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say he wanted nothing to do with it? What did he say to you?—A. He may have said something of that sort.

Q. What do you recollect he said to you on the subject when he found that that stock had been sent to him?—A. He had not said anything. As I say, after coming to that letter, he took it out and said, "Here is a letter that I have received from a Mr. J. W. Rogers, in which he says he incloses me a poem. I have not found any poem, but I find this certificate of stock," and he laughed about it and made some jocose remark and said there did not seem to be very much poetry on that.

Q. On the certificate?—A. On the certificate; and then immediately commenced dictating his reply.

Q. Do you know of any other members of Congress having stock sent them?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. This remark that was put in your letter was made by Mr. Cox, I take it: "I do not suppose they are good for anything, or you would not be sending them out so fluently."—A. That letter was taken from Mr. Cox's own dictation and written out from his own dictation.

Q. As he dictated it at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, is the committee through with me as a witness, and the books and papers?

The CHAIRMAN. As far as I know.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to take them. I will return them at any time.

Mr. RANNEY. We may want to look at them. You will have them where you can return them?

Mr. YOUNG. Oh, the committee can have them at any time.

At this point the committee adjourned until 12 m. to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, April 29, 1886.

A quorum being present, the committee was called to order at 12.35 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to say to the committee that I have here the manuscript of the testimony of the Attorney-General. It appeared from a statement made to the committee a few days ago that the manuscript had been submitted to the Attorney-General, and had been corrected by him before it went to the printer. It was also stated by the reporter that perhaps the Attorney-General had struck out two or three questions and answers. I have examined the manuscript, and find that the reporter was mistaken. The Attorney-General struck out nothing, and made very few corrections—merely verbal corrections; nothing changing the sense of any question or answer, so far as I am able to discover. He made the change, which the committee had agreed should be made, as having returned to Washington in September instead of November, 1883. The manuscript is submitted to the committee for the inspection of any of the members who desires to inspect it.

I understand Mr. Sypher is present. Will you be sworn, Mr. Sypher?

J. HALE SYPHER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your present place of residence?—Answer. New Orleans, La.

Q. Have you a residence in Washington?—A. A temporary residence.

Q. How long have you been in Washington, sir?—A. I have been here at different times for twenty years.

Q. Did you formerly represent a Louisiana district in Congress?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What Congresses?—A. The Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, and Forty-third Congresses.

Q. Do you practice law in Washington?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Have you at any time been concerned as an attorney or counsel for the American Bell Telephone Company or any other telephone company?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know E. N. Hill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A letter was read to the committee yesterday purporting to have been written by you to Professor Bell, in which you speak of E. N. Hill as your associate. Have you any recollection of having written such letter?—A. I have.

Q. In what sense was Mr. Hill your associate?—A. He was associated with me in some cases, claims particularly; cases in which he had a contingent interest.

Q. Is he a lawyer?—A. I believe he is, sir.

Q. Does he practice in the courts of the district or any other courts?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You did not mean to say then that he was your partner in business?—A. No, sir; in no sense.

Q. The letter to which I have referred seems to have accompanied the manuscript of an article relating to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Do you recall that fact?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of having sent such an article with a letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To Prof. Bell?—A. To Prof. Bell; yes, sir.

Q. Did you write the article in question?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it?—A. E. N. Hill compiled the article in my office.

Q. Were you present at the time?—A. Part of the time.

Q. Did you assist in the compilation?—A. I suggested some matters in the compilation of the article.

Q. Did you suggest the preparation of the article?—A. I think I suggested the compilation of the article—to put on paper the facts which he had and which I thought I had.

Q. What facts did you have?—A. Personally?

Q. Yes; what facts did you put into the article or were put in by your suggestion?—A. I do not recollect specifically.

Q. Had any person suggested to you the preparation of the article?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will show you an article which subsequently appeared in the New York World. [Submitting a newspaper to witness.] You may look at it, sir, and state whether to the best of your recollection that is the one sent by you to Professor Bell?—A. (After looking at the newspaper article.) I recollect of reading this article in the World at the time of its publication.

Q. Is it the same article?—A. The facts are substantially the same.

Q. Is not the language the same?—A. I would not testify to that without a critical examination. The facts are substantially the same.

Q. Well, sir, will you make a critical examination?—A. If you will hand me the other manuscript.

Q. You may look it over. I do not mean word for word, but are not a good many of the words the same?—A. I decline to testify to words. When the two papers are before the committee I will verify them if you will give me the original.

Q. We will pass that for the present until we get the paper. You state that you had certain facts?—A. Information.

Q. Have you any recollection as to what it was?—A. Not definitely; no, sir.

Q. Will you give it to us as you do remember it?—A. By permission of the committee I will relate the source of some information which I possessed which will perhaps be intelligible to the committee.

Q. Will you give us the source of all the information you possessed?—A. During the month of July or August, while in New York—

Mr. HALL (interposing). I think we had better have him answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to the statement. We may recur to the question.

A. (Continuing.) I met a gentleman by the name of Cahoon—Maj. William J. Cahoon, I believe, formerly of Louisiana. He informed me that he had some connection as agent or stockholder with the National Improved Telephone Company. He had been to St. Paul, Minn., where a suit had been instituted, as he informed me, to determine some question, and he stated that an organization had been perfected in New Orleans which was to unite with some other companies—the Pan-Electric I believe he named as one—for the purpose of introducing the Rogers' patents, and in the course of his conversation he gave me to understand that they proposed to make an assault upon the Bell Company, and if they could destroy those patents they expected to introduce others. I inquired of him if he had any literature on the subject, any publications on the subject in reference to his own company, the National Company I believe he called it. He said there were some publications and he would send them to me. He afterwards sent me some St. Paul papers containing the court proceedings and some other information. I submitted those papers to Mr. Hill when I returned here to Washington, and he said he knew a great deal about the Pan-Electric Company, and I then suggested to him that he compile the information contained in these papers with that which he possessed himself, and when he had done so I sent the manuscript with a personal note to Prof. Bell, who is my neighbor.

Q. When did you have your interview with Major Cahoon?—A. I think it was during the month of July or August; I won't be positive which month, but one of those months, probably August.

Q. There had been a suit in Saint Paul?—A. So I understood from Major Cahoon.

Q. Have you the Saint Paul papers?—A. No, sir; I did not preserve them.

Q. Did they relate to a suit in Saint Paul?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. Who were the parties to that suit?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Was the American Bell Company a party?—A. I think not.

Q. Was the Pan-Electric?—A. That I do not know. I think not, sir.

Q. Was the National Improved?—A. I think that was one of the parties litigant.

Q. It related to telephones, did it?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. You think the National Improved was a party. Now, who, or what company, was the other party?—A. I do not recollect. I gave it but the most casual attention—turned the papers over to Hill.

Q. What was the character of the suit?—A. I do not recollect, sir.

Q. Then you did not get much information from the Saint Paul paper?—A. I did not read it close enough to get the facts from it. I paid very little attention to it.

Q. Did you get any information which you afterwards embodied in this article?—A. Nothing but general information.

Q. Of what character?—A. Well, as to the purposes of this new organization more than anything else, and that I derived more from the conversation with Major Cahoon than from reading these papers.

Q. You did not get it from the Saint Paul papers, then?—A. No, sir; not fully. That is my recollection.

Q. Who is Major Cahoon; where does he live, and what business is he in?—A. I think he resides in New York. He formerly resided in Louisiana. When I knew him he resided in Louisiana, some twelve or fifteen years ago. My recollection is he was a member of the legislature of Louisiana, a State senator. He and General J. B. Price, of Missouri, had some transactions with the Rogerses with reference to their patents. I think at one time they had an assignment of a large interest in the Rogers patents with a view of introducing them.

Q. I understand, then, that that was the origin of the article in the World; that was the suggestion?—A. That was the first information called to my attention concerning this matter.

Q. Did you have a suggestion from any person else as to the preparation of an article of this kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. That you say was in July?—A. In July or August.

Q. The article does not seem to have been prepared until ——. A. (Interrupting.) I think it was in August.

Q. The article does not seem to have been prepared until the latter part of October, from the date of it?—A. I may state, Mr. Chairman, that there was a publication made in the New York Tribune preceding this article that you have before you.

Q. What was it, sir?—A. It contained much of the matter there is in that article you refer to that was afterwards published in the World.

Q. In what shape was it; a letter?—A. A communication from here. The correspondent of the Tribune I presume sent it from here.

Q. Do you know the date of it?—A. Well, I won't be positive; but I will state, to the best of my memory, that it was the 25th of August or September—the 25th of September, probably.

Q. Was it a letter from Dr. Rogers?—A. No, sir; it was a correspondence. I think it was matter sent by the regular correspondent of the Tribune in this city.

Q. My recollection is that the date you speak of was the date of Dr. Rogers' letter which appeared in the Tribune.—A. It was prior to Dr. Rogers' letter.

Q. Well, sir, did this Tribune article have anything to do with suggesting to you the preparation of the article in question?—A. That was matter which had been prepared prior to the preparation of this manuscript of which you speak.

Q. (Submitting a paper to witness.) That is the copy produced by Prof. Bell of the World article. Is that the article, sir; do you recognize it?—A. (After looking at the article.) I think this is the article, sir.

Q. The one which afterwards appeared in the World?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you had no other suggestion as to the preparation of this article?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. What was your purpose in undertaking the preparation of an article of that kind?—A. I had no definite purpose.

Q. Had you no design of any kind?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Why did you do it, then? You are a lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You practice I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you much spare time on your hands?—A. Mr. Hill prepared this article, I testified.

Q. I know, sir; but with your assistance it seems?—A. At my suggestion more properly than my assistance.

Q. Well, I want to know what your purpose was in having the article prepared?—A. I had no definite purpose in view, sir.

Q. Why did you do it?—A. I suggested it to Mr. Hill, who is a newspaper man, and he had abundance of leisure, and he did it.

Q. That is all?—A. That is all.

Q. In your letter which accompanies the article you say, "The scheme to destroy your patents was tolerably well matured."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And it remains to be seen whether this reform Administration will lend itself for its consummation?"—A. Yes, sir; that is my letter.

Q. That is your letter?—A. Yes, that is my letter.

Q. Did you intend it as an attack on the Administration?—A. Oh, no; not at all.

Q. Why did you couple the Administration and its reform pretenses with the matter?—A. Well, I thought the Administration was pretty well represented in the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Then you did intend it as an attack on the Administration?—A. No, not an attack.

Q. What was it, then?—A. Well, you may denominate it. It was not an attack. I do not make attacks that way. It was not an attack.

Q. How do you make attacks, if you do not make them in that way?—A. Well, not in that way.

Q. You give us a name for it?—A. A statement.

Q. A statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you in the habit of making statements about matters that do not concern you?—A. In matters of public importance, I am.

Q. What other statement have you ever made; anything like this?—A. None in writing that I recollect particularly about. The only communications that I have had on the subject were communications with Professor Bell, and I believe one other letter. That is all; and I did that as a friendly act, the act of one neighbor to another.

Q. A neighborly act?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you regarded that as a neighborly act to Prof. Bell how did you regard it as to the gentlemen to whom it related? Was it neighborly towards them?

The WITNESS. To whom do you refer?

The CHAIRMAN. The men named in the article; the Attorney-General of the United States, General Atkins, Senator Harris, and others.

A. I would prefer that they would be the judges of that.

Q. You decline to say anything about that?—A. I will answer any question.

Q. Well, I want to know. You say you did it as a neighborly and friendly act to Professor Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know whether you do neighborly and friendly acts of that kind by attacks upon other people?—A. My friendly and neighborly acts do not extend to all creation. This is not an attack on anybody.

Q. You befriend some people at the expense of others?—A. Yes; I believe that is human nature.

Q. You say you had no interest in the matter whatever?—A. None whatever.

Q. You say Mr. Hill is a newspaper man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Hill he might make some money out of the article?—A. Possibly.

Q. Was not that the design?—A. Not on my part.

Q. Of course I do not say upon your part. You are not a newspaper man?—A. No, sir; nor did I make a dollar out of it, and did not expect to.

Q. But you expected Hill to make some money out of it?—A. No; I did not expect anything of the kind.

Q. You said you thought he might?—A. Undoubtedly he might; it is possible he might.

Q. In what way?—A. Do newspaper men do that kind of work for nothing? They get paid for what they do. They are entitled to be paid.

Q. With what newspaper is Mr. Hill connected?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Why do you call him a newspaper man?—A. Because he writes for the newspapers.

Q. And yet he is not connected with any one to your knowledge?—A. Not to my personal knowledge.

Q. You say you did this as a friendly act to Mr. Bell. Had you had any previous acquaintance with Mr. Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any intimacy with him?—A. We have lived with one street between us for some years as neighbors.

Q. Perhaps the street was always between you?—A. It always was and always will be as long as we occupy our present residences.

Q. Did you ever cross over?—A. Yes, frequently.

Q. You can answer the question whether you had any intimacy with Professor Bell before doing this friendly act?—A. I have known Mr. Bell for eight or nine years, and esteem him very highly as a gentleman.

Q. That is not an answer to my question. I want to know whether you had any intimacy with him?—A. What do you call intimacy?

Q. Oh, friendly relations, meeting frequently, and all that sort of thing.—A. Yes, we met frequently.

Q. Where did you meet?—A. On the street.

Q. Did you visit his house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How frequently before the preparation of this article?—A. I do not know—not frequently.

Q. Did he ever visit your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Frequently or otherwise?—A. Not frequently.

Q. Have your relations been more intimate with him since the article than before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you met him at all since the offering of the article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. At his house.

Q. Has he ever been at your house?—A. No, sir; not since.

Q. On what occasion had you visited Professor Bell's house before the preparation of this article?—A. Well, on the occasion of his receptions, and other times.

Q. What are known as public receptions, or card receptions?—A. He does not give public receptions, as I understand it.

Q. Card receptions?—A. I think nobody goes to Professor Bell's house unless they are invited.

Q. How many times had you been there before the publication of the article?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Had you been there many or a few times?—A. Several times.

Q. Then you seem to have made this suggestion and to have taken part in the preparation of the article without any design or purpose. Is that a fact?—A. Without any special design or purpose.

Q. Did Mr. Hill occupy the office with you at the time, or about the time, this article was prepared?—A. He had a desk in my office at the time.

Q. When you sent the writing to Prof. Bell did you retain a copy?—A. Mr. Hill retained a copy.

Q. In your office?—A. It was in my office for a time; yes, sir.

Q. Did Hill do more in connection with this article than simply compile it under your direction?—A. Hill compiled the article mostly from facts in his possession. He had more facts of the Pan-Electric than I had. He knew more of the men in it and more of the facts connected with it.

Q. It is stated in this article, Mr. Sypher, that after Col. Young had taken his seat in Congress, in December, 1875, he succeeded in having Harris Rogers appointed electrician to the House. Did you furnish that fact or did Mr. Hill?—A. Mr. Hill furnished it; I knew nothing about it.

Q. It appears in the article that in the spring and summer of 1883 the Messrs. Rogers, after having associated Col. Young with them, induced Senators Garland and Harris and Col. Atkins to join in this Pan-Electric enterprise. Did you know that fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was furnished by Mr. Hill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is stated in the article that they were selected because this Pan-Electric enterprise appealed to the South for its political aid, and that in order to complete the party General Joseph Johnston was taken in. Did you furnish that fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not know it to be a fact, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is stated also that the company was chartered in the State of Tennessee, and that its principal office was to be in Memphis. Did you know that fact?—A. No, sir; not from personal knowledge.

Q. Well, was it contributed by you or by Mr. Hill?—A. It was contributed by Mr. Hill; that was a public fact known to everybody who knew anything about the Pan-Electric concern; that they were organized under the laws of Tennessee, and that their office was in Memphis.

Q. It is stated that Col. Robert F. Looney, a "speculator or lawyer," was added to the board of directors. Did you know that, and did you contribute it to the joint undertaking?—A. Mr. Hill contributed that information.

Q. It is stated also that local companies were to be formed upon certain terms. The terms are given: That the parent company should have 40 per cent. of the capital stock, the instruments to be furnished by the parent company at a stated price. Did you know that?—A. Not from personal knowledge.

Q. Who contributed it to this article; you or Mr. Hill?—A. That was a statement variously made. Upon that basis the company was organized, and organized its companies in the different States of the Union.

Q. What do you mean by "variously made"?—A. I think I saw it in print several times.

Q. Did you contribute it to this article or did Mr. Hill?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. I see the letter of D. E. Myers to Senator Garland and Senator Garland's reply embodied in the article. Who furnished these?—A. My recollection is that it was a clipping from a newspaper here in Washington that that was derived from, a publication known here as the Republic, which came to my office. It was in every number of the paper. It was a sort of an advertisement for the Pan-Electric concern.

Q. The fact of combination with the National Improved Company is stated also. Did you know that fact?—A. My recollection is that Major Cahoon gave me the fact that there was to be a combination between the two companies.

Q. Then you put that in the article?—A. I do not recollect whether I put it in or not. That is the source of my information to the best of my recollection.

Q. Had not Mr. Hill, who you say compiled the article, been a clerk in Colonel Young's office or had desk room in Col. Young's office?—A. I think he stated something of the kind to me on various occasions—that he had something to do with the Pan-Electric concern or was the private secretary or something connected with Col. Young. I have heard him state that in substance.

Q. That he had been connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes; in some way or other.

Q. And did you join him in giving information to the public which he had obtained by his connection with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I did not join him in anything.

Q. You have stated you did join him in preparing this article; that it was prepared on your suggestion?—A. He prepared the article in my office.

Q. And upon your suggestion?—A. Yes, upon my suggestion; you may call it so.

Q. And upon the facts contributed by you and Mr. Hill?—A. Yes, principally.

Q. And you knew he had been clerk for Mr. Young and connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I did not know anything of the kind.

Q. You stated a moment ago that you did.—A. No; I did not, I beg your pardon. I stated he told me so, which is a very different thing. I did not know it at all. You have not asked me for my belief.

Q. Did you believe it to be the fact?—A. I had no reason to disbelieve it.

Q. Did you know it?—A. I never saw him in the employ of Col. Young; how could I know it? The honorable chairman is a lawyer himself. He knows I could not know it possibly unless I had seen it.

Q. Yes; I have heard distinctions of that kind made before.—A. I think it is a reasonable one.

Q. I do not think it is.—A. Which is a difference of opinion.

Q. Here is a man who tells you a fact, and you have no reason to disbelieve it, and you swear you do not know it because you did not see it.—A. That is good ground for stating that I did not know.

Q. Then you do not know anything you do not see?—A. I did not swear anything of the kind. I did not know it. That is the way I prefer to put it.

Q. You have sworn to the suit in Saint Paul, and sworn to many other things you did not see?—A. I swore to seeing it in the newspaper. You are misinterpreting my testimony.

Q. I beg your pardon. You swore to Major Cahoon telling you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know that fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. You made no such distinction then?—A. No, sir; because that statement was drawn out of me in order to lay the foundation of my testimony, and I gave it to you voluntarily.

Q. I will put it in this way: Mr. Hill told you he had been Colonel Young's clerk, and had been connected with the Pan-Electric Company, and he furnished certain facts relating to the Pan-Electric enterprise. You say you had no reason to disbelieve him. You joined him then in embodying those facts in the article for publication?—A. I did not know to the contrary. I did not know his relations with Colonel Young. I heard him state repeatedly and publicly what his relations were. He did not state them to me, but it was common talk as to what his relations had been.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Won't you state what those were?—A. I understood from Hill that he had been his clerk or secretary, or in some capacity had been in his office. The exact relation I never knew.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say you thought Mr. Hill was a newspaper man. This article was prepared with a view to publication, was it?—A. No, sir; it was not prepared with reference to any particular purpose or view or design.

Q. You say you thought Mr. Hill might make something out of it, as newspaper men do not work for nothing?—A. I said he might.

Q. Did you have that in view as one possibility?—A. No; I did not know what might happen.

Q. Then what has the fact of his being a newspaper man, and of newspaper men not working for nothing, to do with this article; why did you mention it?—A. I mentioned it from the fact that it was drawn out of me by questions; I am answering questions; that is why I mentioned it.

Q. That is your answer to that question?—A. If I understand the question.

Q. Will, I will make you understand the question the best I can.—A. If you please.

Q. You have stated that Mr. Hill prepared this article as a newspaper man?—A. I testified he was a newspaper man.

Q. He prepared the article?—A. Therefore he prepared the article.

Q. That he might make some money out of it, as newspaper men do not work for nothing?—A. I did not testify he prepared it for the purpose of making money out of it.

Q. But you have testified to what I have stated?—A. I prefer to state it in my own language.

Q. You may state it in your own language now; you did before.—A. I will state that the article was prepared by Mr. Hill. I understand that part of his profession is that of writing for the newspapers. I do not know whether he had any thought in his mind that he would make any money out of the article by giving it to a newspaper or not when he wrote it; I had no such thought in my mind. I am not connected with the press, if that is clear.

Q. Then you have given no reason why the article was prepared at all?—A. Certainly I have not.

Q. As pastime, was it? How was the article to help Professor Bell or his company without publication?—A. I did not prepare it to help Professor Bell or his company.

Q. You did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have said you did it as a friendly act?—A. Certainly. After it was prepared I thought it might be interesting to him. It is pretty interesting reading to the public.

Q. Just good reading?—A. Good reading. It is not good Sunday-school reading, but it might be to some people who do not observe those conventionalities.

Q. Then, Mr. Sypher, you had no design whatever, in suggesting the preparation of this article?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. None whatever, sir; no special design. It was prepared as a memorandum.

Q. For what purpose?—A. Well, for any purpose that you may prepare a memorandum. You may lay it away.

Q. Do you prepare a memorandum without purpose?—A. You compile facts very often without a specific purpose.

Q. Then in suggesting the preparation of the article and contributing to it, you did not take into account the fact that Hill was a newspaper man and might make some money out of it?—A. Well, it is a matter I did not think about at the time we were preparing it.

Q. Was there anything said between you and Mr. Hill as to the advisability of keeping a copy of the article?—A. No, sir. I will tell you how the copy happened to be kept.

Q. Well, sir.—A. I will relate it to you if it is of interest.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. Mr. Hill wrote the article in his own handwriting and I had it type-written, and I always make it a rule when I type-write a paper to make a copy.

Q. Then it cost you something to have the copy made?—A. Oh, yes; $5 or $6.

Q. That was your purpose; to have good reading?—A. Pro bono publico.

Q. If it was not to be published nor given to the public, how was the public to profit by it; you wasted your five or six dollars?—A. It happens now to be pro bono publico by the publication of this committee.

Q. Without design upon your part?—A. Without design upon my part. I certainly did not foresee this committee's investigation when that article was written.

Q. You seem to have had the manuscript of Mr. Hill and you seem to have had the copy made and to have paid for it. Did you retain the original?—A. It was lying about my desk for some days, and I think Mr. Hill put it in his pocket and took care of it.

Q. Do you know what he did with it?—A. I do not.

Q. Did he ever tell you?—A. My recollection is that I heard Mr. Hill say something in relation to giving it to some newspaper for publication, or something, afterwards; I do not recollect distinctly. It is an indistinct recollection that I have. He was not in my office much after that matter, and therefore I did not see him so frequently.

Q. How long was it after the article was prepared that you heard Mr. Hill say he had given it to some newspaper for publication?—A. Well, perhaps a month.

Q. Did he say to you what newspaper he had given it to?—A. My recollection is that he mentioned the New York World.

Q. Did he tell you whether he had been paid anything for it?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he say whether he had or had not been paid?—A. I did not ask him and he did not volunteer the statement whether he had been paid anything or not.

Q. Did he not tell you that the World had paid a hundred dollars for the article?—A. No; he did not tell me; he did not make any such statement.

Q. Did you not advise him to dispose of it to some newspaper?—A. No, sir; but on the contrary I advised him not to do so.

Q. When did you give him that advice?—A. Well, soon after the memorandum had been made in the office, not to publish it.

Q. Mr. Sypher, did you not expect Prof. Bell or the Bell Company to pay you for sending this article to Prof. Bell?—A. [Laughing.] Well, I did not send it for pay. If they chose to employ me that was another matter. But I will remark right here that if they had I think you would have a different state of things developed before this committee than you have to-day.

Q. You think they made a mistake?—A. I think they made a mistake in not employing me.

Q. You think they employed the wrong man?—A. I think so. I think I have resources that would have been useful to the Bell Company and this committee.

Q. They may employ you yet?—A. It is possible. I am open to an offer from them.

Mr. RANNEY. We had better have the information from the witness while he is on the stand.

The WITNESS. I am sorry you have got me.

Mr. RANNEY. I am glad of it. If you know anything, we ought to have it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) You then perhaps had in view when you prepared the article the possibility that the company might employ you?—A. Well, if the committee want my thoughts about it that is another matter.

Q. What was your purpose or what was your expectation?—A. I had no purpose and no expectation about it.

Q. What were the possibilities or probabilities of delivering this article—A. (Interrupting.) Well, the probabilities of life are too vague to talk about under oath.

Q. You can tell us whether it entered into your mind that the furnishing of this article by you to Professor Bell might lead to your employment?—A. I thought Professor Bell would appreciate the fact if I gave it to him that there was an organization or a conspiracy against his interests and his company. I thought it was my duty to give him the information.

Q. That is not an answer. Speak out now in relation to the employment.—A. Mr. Bell has never employed me professionally.

Q. That is not an answer, either, exactly. My question is, can you tell us whether it entered into your mind that the furnishing of this article by you to Professor Bell might lead to your employment?—A. Well, I regarded the facts stated in that statement as of some value to the Bell Telephone Company, and thought they might desire my professional services, and if they did I was open to employment. Is that satisfactory?

The CHAIRMAN. Quite, sir; quite. That is an answer to the question.

The WITNESS. I desire to answer every question the committee propounds. I am here for that purpose.

Q. You have succeeded after two or three efforts. Now, Mr. Sypher, had you not sought employment from the National Improved Telephone Company before that?—A. No, sir; and no other telephone company.

Q. Well, you would not have regarded it as discreditable to you to have served the company?—A. No, sir; but I am stating a fact.

Q. Do you know a gentleman by the name of Seixas, or some such name as that?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. I will give you the spelling of it: S-e-i-x-a-s: Seixas; do you know him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know a gentleman named Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir; slightly. I know him by reputation.

Q. Had you any conversation with Mr. Seixas in regard to telephone matters?—A. None, to my recollection.

Q. Never a word?—A. Never a word.

Q. Did you have any with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in regard to telephone matters?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any person with regard to your employment as attorney for the telephone companies?—A. No, sir.

Q. None whatever?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You started out with the Bell Company to seek employment?—A. I did not start with any company, sir, for any purpose.

Q. Have you not been told (I will not ask you whether you know, because you make a distinction, I see) by Mr. Hill that he received money for the article?—A. I do not recollect. I will testify to my impression, and my impression is that he did get paid for his article.

Q. How much?—A. I do not know.

Q. And your impression is also that it was furnished the New York World?—A. That is my impression, because I saw it in the World in print and recognized the article.

Q. Did you ever assist in the preparation of any other article relating to telephone matters for publication, or for any purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever suggest the preparation of any other article relating to telephone matters?—A. As I stated in the beginning of my testimony, or in the early part of it, I made some suggestions to Mr. Hill which I afterwards saw in the Tribune article, a prior article to this one you refer to; and I will state that the facts, upon which I based my suggestions that appeared in that article, were obtained from the New Orleans Times-Democrat, that had an extensive account of the litigation down there between the two companies.

Q. Did Mr. Hill, at the time you made these suggestions, or afterwards, or before, prepare an article embodying the suggestions you made to him?—A. He had some memoranda.

Q. Nothing more?—A. Nothing special that I saw; some loose memoranda.

Q. And you recognized them in the Tribune article?—A. Substantially; not verbatim.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Hill prepared that article?—A. I do not know personally.

Q. Well, did you ever hear him say that he had?—A. My recollection is that I heard him say he had furnished the correspondent of the New York Tribune here some data on that subject.

Q. That article had appeared quite a month before the World article was prepared?—A. Yes, I think so; some time before at least.

Q. Had you heard Mr. Hill say before the preparation of the World article that he had furnished the material for the Tribune article?—A. I do not catch the question.

Q. Was it before the preparation of the World article that you heard Mr. Hill say he had furnished the material for the Tribune article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet when you were preparing the World article, or Mr. Hill was preparing it, you did not expect him to contribute that one to any paper although he had furnished the previous one to the Tribune?—A. It was not a matter suggested by either of us that it was being prepared for the newspapers at all.

Q. Did you think Mr. Hill might furnish it for the newspapers?—A. Oh, I did not know what he might do.

Q. He had furnished one already for the Tribune prepared in the same way?—A. Yes; newspaper men when they get a good thing like to see it in print, especially when they get paid for it.

Q. Yes. Well, now, those are two. Do you know of any other article prepared by Mr. Hill?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of him furnishing information for any other article?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will show you an article in the Tribune. [Submitting a scrap-book and indicating.] State whether that is the one you refer to.

Mr. RANNEY. Have it identified so that it may go into the record if competent.

A. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that is the article.

Q. That is about the first publication that was made?—A. That, I think, was the first publication—September 25. My recollection is that that was the date.

Q. It appears then that this agitation and discussion originated with you and Mr. Hill?—A. Well, I would not claim any such honor, Mr. Chairman.

Q. You are not aware of any publication preceding this one?—A. There might have been in some other newspapers; I do not read all the newspapers in the country.

Q. You do not know of any?—A. I do not know of any.

Q. So that for aught you know all this matter sprang from the conferences between yourself and Mr. Hill?—A. I should not be surprised if Mr. Hill and myself are responsible for the first publication on Pan-Electric matters, if that is what you want.

Q. That is what I want.—A. I think probably that is true.

Q. Without design?—A. Without design or purpose.

Q. And without expectation of reward or pay?—A. Whatever Mr. Hill got as pay from the newspaper is all right; I never got a dollar.

Q. Your design was the possibility that you might be employed by the Bell telephone Company?—A. I have not said that and do not propose to. I have no right to say it. I do not know what the telephone company designed to do.

Q. I did not ask you that?—A. I will state it otherwise, and if my language is harsh I will retract it. I do not wish to be disrespectful to the chairman; but I will say this: I had no communication whatever with the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. I have asked you what your expectation was, and you have stated so far, to all my questions, only one possibility of advantage or reward to you, and that was the probability, or, as you put it, the possibility that you might be employed by the Bell Company?—A. I will let my answer to that stand as I have given it. I do not care to modify it or change it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will have this article identified. It is an article that appeared in the Tribune, dated September 24, appearing in the Tribune of the 25th. It is on the second page of the book I have here.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you tell the committee during what period, as you understood him to say, Mr. Hill was connected with Casey Young?—A. I do not recollect that he ever stated any particular period.

Q. State whether it was during the period covered by these statements or purported facts contained in the article.—A. Well, I will state in answer to that, as an inference from what he said at different times, that he was associated with Casey Young during that period.

Q. So that you understood he was personally cognizant of many of the facts which he put into that article?—A. I so understood from him; that he was stating those things from his own personal knowledge.

Q. Of course you do not include some of the things that come in the paper outside?—A. No.

Q. You have said in answer to the chairman that you had a reservoir of facts which you thought were important in this matter that the committee had not yet discovered. If you can give the committee any aid to discover more important facts we would like it. I would for one.

The CHAIRMAN. So would I.

A. The gentleman from Massachusetts misquotes me. I did not mean to say that I was in possession of a mine of facts. I meant to say that I would have developed a mine of facts that would have been interesting to this committee if I had been the attorney of the Bell company.

Q. Do you mean that what you know is an imaginary mine?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or one that contains ore that can be worked?

Mr. EDEN. An undeveloped mine?

The CHAIRMAN. With no ore in sight?

Mr. HALL. It is one for a joint stock corporation; it is that kind of mine.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not comprehend the force of your remark, therefore I won't exercise my imagination.

Q. (Resuming.) If you can indicate anything that will give us a source of valuable information, I would like that.—A. I say to you, to put an end to all that sort of questions, I have no personal knowledge on this subject.

Q. Then the chairman dealt a good deal in hearsay. On committees of investigation we have to depart from the regular rules of finding sources of information.—A. I believed that I had some sources of information.

Q. Are they of a professional character, so that you cannot disclose them, or are you ready to disclose them to us?—A. Some are professional and some are not. Most of them are not.

The CHAIRMAN. You say they are imaginary?

Q. (Resuming.) If you can give us sources of information by which we can learn important facts, we shall be obliged to you.—A. Do you desire me to name persons for you to summon before this committee to testify?

Q. Yes. If you know any persons whom you believe know anything about this matter, or important facts connected with this investigation, I should be obliged to you if you would mention them.—A. I will furnish the committee with a list of such names, if you will give me a little time.

Q. You prefer to do it in that way rather than do it now, do you?—A. Yes, sir; that is, I will give you a few names, not any large number, of gentlemen who can probably give you some information.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Hill got his information about this combination between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Did you know or learn from him anything in relation to interviews had between these gentlemen associated with respect to companies last August, the 1st of July, and 1st of September, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?—A. He related to me on several occasions that such interviews were being held in Washington.

Q. At the time they were being held?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you learn from him who was there and participating in them?

The CHAIRMAN. If you want this as proof of the fact, of course it is not competent.

Mr. MILLARD. We have not had anything but hearsay this morning.

Mr. RANNEY. You asked what Mr. Hill said, and we are discovering the source of information.

The CHAIRMAN. My questions were all intended to affect Mr. Hill.

The WITNESS. I will state I think the committee might get more valuable information from Mr. Hill himself on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. I hear that he is sick.

Q. (Resuming.) Won't you tell us where that mine is, so that we may be enabled to sink a shaft in it?—A. Probably you have got the ore on the dump now, if you know how to work it up.

Q. We will try that now, and go through the smelting process by and by. Can you give us any more information? I think the committee are competent to handle what they have got.—A. I have no personal knowledge in reference to these conferences of which you speak.

Q. Was Mr. Hill with you at that time?—A. He was in and out of my office every day during that period.

Q. Do you know anybody that does know who were there and what was being done?—A. Why, I might answer that Colonel Young was present, I reckon. He ought to know.

Q. Well, we want what somebody else knows about it.—A. I do not know.

Q. You did not have any Rogers telephone connected with their room in your office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Hill connected on intimate terms with Mr. Young at that time?—A. That I do not know.

Mr. MOFFATT (to Mr. Ranney). Did the witness answer your question in regard to what Mr. Hill said with reference to who was there?

Q. Did Mr. Hill tell you who was there? Of course it is not evidence of the fact. It may lead to knowing.—A. He gave me to understand that he knew who was there.

Q. He did not say who they were?—A. Well, if he did, I do not recollect.

Q. Did you know or get any information as to the Van Benthuyzen application to the Patent Office for the withdrawal of the Government suit?

The WITNESS. You ask whether I knew anything in relation to the withdrawal?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes. Do you know of anybody that went to the Patent Office to see what was done there in the matter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, if there was anything and you can state the sources of information we would be very much obliged to you.

Mr. EDEN. He said he would furnish a list.

Mr. RANNEY. Furnish them by name if you are going to.

The WITNESS. I will furnish the committee a few names.

Q. (Resuming.) Something was said about Mr. Hill being sick. I believe about half the witnesses we have had here have been taken sick. Has he been taken sick lately or how long has he been ill?—A. I do not know how long he has been ill or how seriously he is ill.

Q. Is he in town?—A. He resides in the city.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would give the chairman his residence, if you can, so as to enable him to summon him.

The CHAIRMAN. A subpoena has been served upon him, and I was informed by the officer that he was too unwell to come.

Mr. RANNEY. I was not aware that any subpoena had been served upon him. Then I will not trouble you any more, general.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In the World article you stated that Senator Vance was one of the parties interested. I will read it:

"The list of the names of the leading stockholders and officers in this company reads almost like a page from the Government Blue Book."

And then you give the names:

"A. H. Garland, Joseph E. Johnston, J. D. C. Atkins, Isham G. Harris, George G. Vest, Zebulon B. Vance, Robert Klotz, Eli J. Henkle, Casey Young, Mr. Upshaw, Frank Armstrong, and John C. Brown."

On what information do you state that Senator Vance was interested?—A. Mr. Hill furnished that list.

Q. You did not furnish it?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I believe you designated the article furnished to and published in the World as a statement?—A. A memorandum.

Q. Do you know whether Attorney-General Garland was informed of the existence of that paper before you sent it to Professor Bell?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know whether he had any information about it or any opportunity of replying to it, or that he was offered an opportunity of suppressing it?—A. I do not know.

Q. Is Mr. Hill one of the witnesses whose names you suggested to the committee as having information touching these matters?—A. I have not suggested his name to the committee.

Q. You spoke of some names which you could give?—A. Yes.

Q. Is his one of them?—A. I did not have his name in my mind when I said I would furnish a list.

Q. Will you name any one else that you will furnish?—A. Yes.

Q. As probably knowing something of interest?—A. Yes.

Q. At this time can you name any one else?—A. I should name J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, as an interesting witness.

Q. J. R. Beckwith?—A. Yes, sir. If his professional obligations will not restrain him from testifying freely, I think he can give you valuable information.

Q. Who else would you name?—A. I would name J. R. G. Pitkin, of Louisiana.

Q. Who is he; what business does he follow; where does he reside?—A. He resides in New Orleans.

Q. What business does he follow?—A. He has been United States marshal of that State for a number of years. He is a professional gentleman.

Q. What do you suppose he knows about it? I am not asking you to detail what he knows, but with reference to what parties or what subject-matter you suppose he is informed?—A. My impression is that he knows something of the history of this consolidation of the two companies (the National and the Pan-Electric), and he certainly knows many of the people associated with those two companies.

Q. Well, do you suppose he knows anything more about it than the written agreement between the two companies shows?—A. Well, I cannot testify as to what he knows.

Q. Well, do you know of anything that Mr. Beckwith knows except by being connected with or being the attorney of the National Improved Company?—A. I must decline to testify as to what these gentlemen would testify to if they were on the stand themselves.

Q. I did not ask you to do that.—A. My impression is that they are men of information on this subject, and my impression is gained from conversations with them; no particular definite conversation, but general talk with them in regard to this telephone question.

Q. Then you have no knowledge or information that either one of them knows anything that this committee is not already in possession of?—A. I do not know what this committee is in possession of.

Q. If this committee is in possession of the written agreement that was made, or agreements, between the National Improved and the Pan-Electric Telephone Companies to engage in fighting in the courts the Bell Company, do you know or have you any reason to believe that either one of these gentlemen could give us any higher or better information than that?—A. I cannot tell you. I cannot answer that question.

Q. Can you name any one else who is likely to know of who would be able to tell us?—A. Not just at this moment.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. At the time of the preparation of this article for the Tribune were you acquainted with Dr. J. W. Rogers?—A. No, sir; I am not acquainted with him now. I would not know him if I met him on the street.

Q. In the interviews between you and Professor Bell was there any discussion between you and him about this article?—A. None whatever.

Q. You merely handed him the article or sent it to him?—A. I sent it to him in an envelope.

Q. You never talked with him about it?—A. Never has a word passed between Professor Bell and myself on that article.

Q. Did you ever talk with any man connected with the World or the Tribune about it?—A. No, sir; I have had no communication with any newspaper man with reference to any of those articles.

Q. Have you talked with any of the Bell people about any of these articles?—A. I have not.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. A simple question occurs to me. From whom did you learn that a combination was to be formed to fight the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I gained my information first from Major Cahoon that a scheme, which I have so denominated in my letter to Professor Bell, was organizing between the Pan-Electric and the National Telephone Companies to destroy the Bell patent for the purpose of putting their patents upon the public and realizing what profits they could from them. That information which I received from Major Cahoon was supported by publications in the newspapers pointing to the direction of the litigation.

Q. Do you refer now to subsequent or prior publications?—A. Subsequent publications. And then on the heels of that information came the suit instituted at Memphis, and my inference from all these facts was that the purpose was to destroy the Bell patent and to establish themselves; and that is why I wrote as I did in my note to Professor Bell. That is my interpretation of my language in that letter.

Q. Was it in Washington that you received the information from Major Cahoon?—A. In New York City, at the Astor House.

Q. And where do you say he resides and where is he now?—A. My impression is that he resides in New York. I am not sure, but I think he resides in New York.

Q. Well, is he one of the gentlemen whose names you propose to give the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you not receive similar information from this man Hill?—A. That was his belief all the way through; that that was the purpose of this company.

Q. Well, did he not state the fact to you? Did you not get the fact from him as well as from Major Cahoon?—A. Yes, certainly.

Q. Now, will you state whether it was prior or subsequent to the alleged conferences between the Pan-Electric people and the National Improved at the Ebbitt House?—A. Well, it was both before and after. We were convinced in our own mind that that was the purpose, and the information pointed in that direction to confirm our impressions.

Q. Well, now, in any of your conversations with Hill or Major Cahoon did you hear anything said to the effect that Attorney-General Garland would not bring a suit, but that Solicitor-General Goode would institute it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or that in substance?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first learn of the commencement of the Government suit?—A. My recollection is that I had information of the intention to bring that suit a week or ten days before it was published in the newspapers. That is my recollection now.

Q. And you understood from Mr. Hill that he gave this compilation here to the New York World. Now, do you know of any other paper having published this particular article than the New York World?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did not the facts appear substantially in all the papers—that is, the leading papers of the country?—A. I think in some of the papers of the country.

Q. Take the leading New York papers.—A. I think that the New York Tribune and a Saint Louis paper published those facts nearly simultaneously. This is my recollection now. I am not positive about it, either. And then afterwards the New York Sun published something and then the World came in with that statement that has been produced here.

Q. Well, it is not an unusual thing for a newspaper to pay a correspondent for facts gathered for publication, is it?—A. Why, I should imagine not; they ought to pay and pay well.

Q. It is a matter of business, is it not?—A. Certainly.

Q. If the facts are legitimate—facts to go to the public?—A. If they are facts; they publish a good deal that is not fact, I imagine.

Q. Then they get sold?—A. It is interesting reading all the same.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. With whom did you converse on this subject first—Mr. Cahoon or Mr. Hill?—A. I conversed first with Major Cahoon about it. He is the first gentleman who called my attention to this matter.

Q. In New York?—A. I was in New York on a matter of business.

Q. Do you not know you got the information before Hill did?—A. The information from Major Cahoon was the origin of the whole thing between Hill and myself.

Q. That started the thing?—A. That started the thing.

Q. You told Hill that he had been in connection with this Pan-Electric Company and certainly must have some knowledge about it, and for him to go to work and work up what he could about the matter?—A. When I returned from New York I related to Hill the interview between Cahoon and myself at the Astor House. In a few days after that the newspapers followed giving an account of that suit in Saint Paul. I turned those over to Hill. I had not time to read them. After he had read them he says, "Why, I know all about it." Says I, "Write it out," and he wrote it out.

Q. There had not been very much in the papers prior to that time of the data furnished by Hill?—A. Nothing, I think.

Q. Then Hill furnished the data upon your information?—A. Yes, and his own.

Q. Do you know whether Hill furnished any data intermediately?—A. I do not know that he did.

Q. Nearly three months elapsed?—A. It is possible he did.

Q. You knew the New York World had Hill's manuscript for nearly three months before he published it?—A. That I understood.

Q. Didn't you take any trouble to ascertain why they did not publish an article for which they had paid so much?—A. None whatever. I had no pecuniary interest in it, and paid no attention to it. It was a trifling matter.

Q. You have spoken about your knowledge of the combination?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been very careful to testify here of nothing you did not have personal knowledge of. Did you have any personal knowledge of the combination?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why are you not as careful when you speak against this company as when you speak for it?—A. If you will read my answers you will see I said it was my impression. Do not misquote me, if you please.

Q. Did you not answer the gentleman from New York (Mr. Millard) about your knowledge of the combination?—A. I testified to the best of my knowledge and belief from information gained from the newspapers and from gentlemen that such combination did exist and I believe it to-day.

Q. Your first knowledge was gained from Cahoon?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Cahoon have any knowledge except what he gained from newspapers?—A. Cahoon gave me to understand that he was an employé or a party in interest under the National Improved.

Q. That does not answer my question; did he profess to have any personal knowledge of these negotiations which you so promptly answered a moment ago amounted to an arrangement between the companies?—A. My recollection of my interview with Major Cahoon was that he, as an officer and agent and party in interest of the National Improved Telephone Company, was looking after their interests with reference to the introduction of patents and establishing branch companies, and that they were going to consolidate with the Pan-Electric, and there was a grand combination to be made to clean the Bell Company out and put themselves in their place.

Q. He told you all that?—A. He told that, but not in those words.

Q. Did he speak of his own personal knowledge, or did he speak as you do, from inference?—A. That I do not know; he was not on oath.

Q. When you came to have your interview with Mr. Hill, you say he spoke of some things of his personal knowledge and some that were not?—A. Yes.

Q. You have already stated, I believe, that you knew he had been in Mr. Young's office in some capacity?—A. He stated that he had had some relations with Mr. Young; yes.

Q. Were they of such a character that you regarded them as confidential?—A. No, sir; I did not regard anything as confidential that was between Hill and Young. They ate, and drank, and slept together.

Q. You did not recognize any confidential relations then?—A. Not between those two gentlemen. I had no knowledge of such relation.

Q. If a man is in the employ of another man attending to his private business as clerk, you do not regard that as a confidential relation?—A. Yes, sir; I do. I did not know that he was in his employ. I did not know anything about it.

Q. Did you not believe he was in his employ?—A. I did not believe anything about it, sir. I simply took his statement for what it was worth.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How much was it worth?—A. I leave that for the committee to judge.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I will ask you whether you did not instruct him to get the books of the Pan-Electric Company and have copies made?—A. I did not.

Q. Don't you know he brought them in your office and copied them?—A. I do not.

Q. Would you not have regarded that as a breach of confidence?—A. If I had known he was in the employ of that company I certainly should. I did not know he was ever in the employ of that company.

Q. Did he not tell you, at the time he was in your office and had a desk there, that he was in the employ of the company?—A. I did not know anything about it.

Q. Then upon a subject of that kind you are entirely oblivious?—A. I did not catechise him on the subject. I took his statements as they were made for what they were worth. I had no knowledge on the subject whatever.

Q. As I understand, you say that you suggested this matter of the preparation of this article to Mr. Hill?—A. I have stated that three times now to the committee, but I will state it once more. On my return from New York I related the conversation between Major Cahoon and myself to Mr. Hill, and gave him the papers to examine as they came by mail, and after he had examined them he said he knew all about it, and I said, "Write it out," and he wrote it out.

Q. You have not stated that before?—A. I have stated that three times.

Mr. RANNEY. Twenty times is the limit of this committee.

The WITNESS. I am obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts for the information.

Q. How long was Mr. Hill engaged in writing out that statement?—A. Several days, I think.

Q. Was he at the time engaged in any other employment?—A. I think not.

Q. Was he in your employ?—A. No.

Q. Performing any duties for you?—A. No.

Q. Copying anything else for you?—A. No.

Q. And then after it was completed you went to some expense to have copies made?—A. I had it type-written.

Q. When you ascertained the fact that he had been paid for the article, did you ask him to compensate you for your six dollars or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; I did not ascertain that he had been paid for the article.

Q. No, but you said you understood him to say he had received something?—A. That he received some remuneration for the article, and my inference was as strong as my information, because I know men do not furnish such articles to the newspaper press without getting some pay for them. I think that is the custom.

Q. Did you make that suggestion to him as a friendly suggestion, in order that he might benefit by it?

The WITNESS. The compilation of the article?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Q. Well, I made the suggestion without reference to any particular matter. I said, "You had better write that out"—"write that out," was the remark.

Q. Well, I ask you now so far as the motive was concerned whether that was a friendly suggestion, you expecting he might be benefited by it?—A. Yes, sir; as much as anything.

Q. How far is your office where this paper was prepared from Mr. Bell's residence?—A. My office is on F street and Mr. Bell's residence is on Rhode Island avenue; at Thomas circle; a half or three-quarters of a mile apart.

Q. Are you sure you ever had a personal conversation with Mr. Bell before you sent that article?—A. I never had a word with him before or since.

Q. I do not mean upon the subject, but I mean any conversation at all?—A. Not at all; I never had a word with Mr. Bell on the subject.

Q. I asked you whether you ever had a personal conversation with Mr. Bell on any subject?—A. I was at his house prior to that and since, but we have never had any conversation whatever on the subject of this telephone controversy; never has a word passed between us; I want it distinctly understood that there has never a word passed between Professor Bell and myself before I sent that article or since I sent that article; and yet he is my neighbor.

Q. You say he is your neighbor?—A. He is my neighbor, and lives across the street from me.

Q. And the only correspondence which transpired between you was simply the sending of that note and the acknowledgment of its receipt?—A. Simply the sending of that note and the acknowledgment of its receipt; yes.

Q. Have you had any correspondence with any body else upon the subject?—A. None.

Q. With nobody else whatever?—A. No one whatever.

Q. No newspaper journal?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever had any correspondence with any newspaper upon the subject?—A. None whatever. I am not a newspaper man.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to say you acquired information in regard to bringing the Government suit some nine days before it was brought. Which suit did you refer to?—A. I had information of that sort some week or ten days prior to the public announcement of it in the press.

Q. Of which suit?—A. Of the Memphis suit.

Q. Where did you obtain that information?—A. I think I got it from Hill.

Q. You do not recollect any one else that talked with you about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say where he obtained his information?—A. I think not, sir. I do not recollect.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. One question. Do you know whether Mr. Hill was in the employ or service of Colonel Young at the time of the conferences at the Ebbitt House?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Was he in your employ at that time?—A. No, sir; he never was in my employ.

Q. Did he have a seat or desk in your office at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. At that particular time?—A. At that particular time; yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. That has all been gone over.

Mr. MILLARD. I was out then.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. How long have you known Colonel Young?

The WITNESS. Let me ask Colonel Young a question. [Turning to Mr. Young.] Colonel, were you in the Forty-third Congress?

Mr. YOUNG. I was in the Forty-fourth.

A. Well, about that time was the beginning of our acquaintance.

Q. What have been your relations with Colonel Young?—A. Very pleasant, and they are to-day.

Q. How long have you known General Garland?—A. I have not known him intimately; I have known him more as a public man.

Q. What have been your relations with him?—A. Always pleasant.

Q. How about Senator Harris?—A. I have not the pleasure of knowing Senator Harris excepting as a public man.

Q. And General Atkins?—A. General Atkins I know and esteem highly.

Q. General Johnston?—A. General Johnston I know and esteem highly.

Q. When this article was prepared in your office you knew, of course, it would be regarded as public scandal?—A. I had no right to know, because I did not know it was going to be in the public prints.

Q. And the article was prepared upon your suggestion?—A. Prepared upon facts, at my suggestion.

Q. The article would have a tendency to injure these public men, would it not?—A. It would depend upon its use.

Q. Well, if used publicly in the newspapers?—A. Well, it might. The character of public men belongs to the public, you know. They used to treat me that way when I was in public life.

Q. Had you no idea at the time this article was being prepared that if published or getting into unfriendly hands it might bring some discredit on these men?—A. I never thought of personal injury to anybody.

Q. You had no intention of that sort?—A. Not in the least.

Q. But you could have known that such facts published in that shape would have that tendency?—A. Well, the public judge of public officials. When officers administering public trusts go into speculations it may reflect on their characters.

Q. At the time of this publication did you not think that article was improper in its character?—A. I did not think of its being improper in its character.

Q. What did you think would be the effect of it?—A. My notions on that subject may differ from those of other men. I do not think it is a crime for a man in public life to make money if he does make it in speculation honestly.

Q. You sent a copy of the article to Prof. Bell?—A. Yes.

Q. Was your object to benefit Professor Bell or his company or to injure these public men that have been mentioned?—A. Neither.

Q. You had no object whatever, then?—A. No; it was a friendly, neighborly act in transmitting information to Prof. Bell.

Q. You regard it, then, as a friendly act to Prof. Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which did not benefit him at all?—A. He did not avail himself of it at all, which was not my fault.

Q. Your intention was to benefit him?—A. If he availed himself of it.

Q. You intended to benefit him by publishing these facts?—A. I had no other motive in view than that of benefiting him. If a man came along and raised a club over the head of my friend I would ward it off if I could.

Q. You expected the use of it to benefit him in some way?—A. If he chose to use the information, and it might result to his benefit, I would have been glad of it.

Q. You simply wished to convey to him that there was a combination being formed against his interests?—A. I simply desired to convey to him that there was an organization forming between these two companies which had in view the destruction of his company and the establishment of their own rights.

Q. And also the additional fact that there was a combination being formed amongst a number of public men to have a suit brought for the purpose of breaking down the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I made no comment upon public men. If they happened to be public men that was no fault of mine.

Q. You gave the facts?—A. I gave the facts as I understood them.

Q. And that a combination was being formed to bring this Government suit and break down the Bell Company?—A. That seemed to be the object of the combination.

Q. And you say you had no feeling against these public men?—A. None whatever.

Q. They had been your friends so far as you knew?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not regard that this might become a great public scandal?—A. No, I did not look at it in that light. It did not occur to me.

Q. What have been your relations with Attorney-General Garland since these publications?—A. Entirely pleasant.

Q. Have you ever met him since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did anything occur between you in regard to this publication?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Have you ever talked with him?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Your intercourse had been friendly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you never notified him you were going to publish this article?—A. No, sir. He was incorporator of this company, and if there was any odium attached to it was not by business to notify him.

Q. Have you been an applicant for any office under this administration?—A. Who? Me an applicant?

Q. Certainly?—A. Are you joking?

Q. No, I am serious?—A. I never held a public office in my life and I never have been an applicant for one under any administration. I had the honor of being a member of Congress, but under the Constitution that is not a public office. I do not want an office from this or any other administration.

Mr. MILLARD. Perhaps he has some Pan-Electric stock. How is that?

By Mr. OATES:

Q. You state in this letter to Professor Bell:

“The scheme to destroy your patents is tolerably well matured and it remains to be seen whether this reform administration will lend itself for its consummation”

Are you now and were you at the time of the writing of that letter a friend and supporter of or opposed to that reform administration?—A. I am not a Mugwump.

Q. Just answer that question.—A. I am a friend of genuine reform but not of bogus Democracy.

Q. What are your politics?—A. Well, I haven't any politics just now.

Q. To what party do you belong; with what party do you act and vote?—A. I will say to my friend that I have never voted a straight ticket.

Q. You vote a mixed one?—A. I vote a mixed ticket. Now that ought to explain my political position.

Q. That satisfies me. When you were in Congress to what party did you then belong?—A. I was elected to Congress by the Republican party; that is, I was the nominee of the Republican party, but I had about as many Democratic votes as I had Republican or else I could not have been elected. The district had about four thousand Democratic majority, and I will say in addition that there has never been any other Republican from that district before or since. It is Democratic by six thousand majority now.

Q. You stated in answer to my question that you had no knowledge that Attorney-General Garland was informed of the existence of this statement, or memorandum, as you call it, before its publication. Do you know whether or not any person interviewed either one of the other members of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company with reference to that article or gave them any information of it before its publication?—A. I do not. My impression is that they did not know anything about that article before its publication. That is my impression. I may be deceived; but I have no information that anybody knew of the article before the publication of that article except the newspaper people and Professor Bell.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long was it before the preparation of the World article that you had your interview with Major Cahoon in New York?—A. My interview with Major Cahoon I think was in July. It was July or August; either the latter part of July or near the first of August. The first publication after that was the Tribune article in September. Then the World publication was prepared along in November. That is my recollection of dates.

Q. The main facts had appeared in the Tribune article before that?—A. Yes; prior to the publication in the World.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Who is Major Cahoon; where did he reside at that time?—A. He formerly resided in Louisiana, and after that I think in Missouri, and he was connected with General J. B. Price, of Missouri, in some mining enterprises, and they together, he informed me, had secured a controlling interest in the Rogers patent at that time, and he complained to me that the Rogerses had not dealt honorably by him, and that they had turned their patents over to somebody else, and he went on with the whole history of his troubles with them and with the organization of that company and with the National Improved, and then informed me of the proposed uniting of the two companies. He gave me a statement of his whole scheme. I do not remember the particulars about it; just the main facts.

Q. Do you take an active part in politics in Louisiana?—A. No, sir; I have not in ten years.

Q. Did this man?—A. He did at one time.

Q. Was he ever a member of the legislature?—A. My impression is that he was in 1868 or 1870; somewhere along there.

Q. For the purpose of identifying him I will ask you what appearance he has; what sized man is he?—A. He is a gentleman of perhaps five feet and a half, weighs 180 pounds, has black hair and black eyes—a nice, gentlemanly man. [Facetiously.] I think he wears a 15-inch collar; that is a fashionable size.

Mr. OATES. My purpose in asking was, I know one gentleman in Louisiana of that name. I wanted to see if it was the same man. It is not, though.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. One question. You have been asked whether you intended a scandal on those men by the publication of this paper. Had you any reason at that time to doubt the truth of what was in the article?—A. None whatever, nor have I now. I believe that statement is true, and I think that the books will show it, and I believe that the gentlemen were honest in going into that company. I do not mean to scandalize any of them now.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Did you regard that as an honest combination—public men in public office; did you convey the idea in your letter that it was an honest, fair combination?

The WITNESS. In the statement?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

A. There is nothing in the statement to the contrary.

Q. And the letter?

The WITNESS. The letter to Professor Bell?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

A. I simply warned him that, in my belief, there was a combination of that sort organizing against his interests.

Q. Did you regard it as a fair organization, one that was proper for men in that position?—A. Well, I had not enough information to judge of it.

Q. You do not mean to say that you had no impression at that time, that it was proper or improper for men of that kind?—A. You have asked me a pretty broad question; you have asked me my idea, not my opinion. I believed at that moment in view of the information that I had that this was a combination of public and private men of this country for the purpose of breaking down and destroying the Bell patent and of putting their company—the combination of the two companies, the National Improved and Pan-Electric to make that combination—in place of the Bell and destroy it.

Q. One other question. Did you regard that as a proper or improper combination?—A. I did not think of it.

Q. You do not wish to be understood in that way; that you had no impressions at the time as to whether it was proper or improper?

Mr. RANNEY. Is that a proper question with regard to the letter?

Mr. HALE. Well, he understands the question.

The WITNESS. Is the purport of your question in a moral or a legal sense?

Mr. HALE. You may blend the two if you choose. Did you regard that as a proper or improper combination between public and private men—men occupying public positions and private positions? Were there no impressions on your mind at that time as to the propriety of the combination?—A. I will answer. If the public men who went into the Pan-Electric scheme went into it as an investment, without any purpose of exercising their official power as against a private corporation, I say there was nothing wrong, legally or morally, in it. If they went into that organization with the purpose and intention of exercising their official power and bringing to bear the power of this great Government against a private corporation, they were morally and legally wrong.

Q. Now, in this letter to Professor Bell did you not convey at least the information that this combination was formed for the purpose of influencing the administration to bring that suit and break down the Bell Company?—A. I will admit that that is a reasonable inference.

Q. Then of course you had it in your mind that such a combination had been formed?—A. That it might happen.

Q. You state it in your letter?—A. I leave the impression that it might occur.

Q. Did you wish to be understood that, if a combination had been formed by public and private men, you had never thought that a publication of that sort would have any tendency to injure these men if it should get into unfriendly hands, or the newspapers?—A. You make a mistake. I had no thought of the publication of that paper when I suggested its preparation.

Q. But you knew you were putting it in unfriendly hands, to say the least of it?—A. No; I did not know that.

Q. You knew Prof. Bell represented the Bell Company?—A. I explained my motive for putting it in the hands of Professor Bell. If I had a friend who was going to be assailed anywhere by an enemy and I could save him I would do it.

Q. You knew you were putting it in the hands of a newspaper man?—A. Mr. Hill was a newspaper man, but he isn't editing a newspaper.

Q. You knew you were putting all this thing in the hands of a hostile company, in the hands of a newspaper, that it might be used against public men?—A. They might be facts to be used against them. I did not use them against them, and had no purpose of using them against them.

Q. And yet you say you had no purpose of injuring these public men?—A. None whatever.

Q. Although you knew such would be the necessary effect of the article if it went into the paper?—A. Well, it might be.

Q. Your relations, you say, had been friendly with Mr. Garland?—A. Entirely so.

Q. Is not this the first time the fact has been made public that you were the author of that article or contributed to its publication?—A. Possibly it may be the first time that the fact is known that I had any connection with it. There is no part of that article that has connection with Mr. Garland that is mine whatever.

Q. It is hard to separate them. Your intercourse has been friendly with Senator Garland and others since that time?—A. Yes, sir; as far as I have met them.

Q. You have never given them any information that you were responsible, in part at least, for the publication of that article?—A. I was not responsible for the publication of that article.

Q. Well, turning it over into hostile hands. Prof. Bell represented the opposite combination. You have often met Col. Young since that time?—A. Not often, but occasionally.

Q. You have met General Garland occasionally?—A. Occasionally, officially.

Q. And done business with him?—A. With the Department.

Q. And met him socially?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How about Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And General Atkins?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever intimated to these men that you were to a great extent responsible?—A. I do not accept your language. I did not compile the article and did not compile the facts in relation to any of those gentlemen you are talking about.

Q. You suggested it?—A. I suggested the article in relation to the compilation of the subject-matter, but not to the use of the names of any of those gentlemen. That was matter furnished entirely by Mr. Hill.

Q. You suggested the compilation of the article; you gave the facts that were in your possession, and after it was compiled you gave a copy of it to Prof. Bell?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL. I observe in the morning papers that I am credited yesterday with answering a question that I have no recollection of having been put to me, and I should therefore be very glad if the committee would let me have a copy of my testimony to see if there are any inaccuracies.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

WHELAN REID sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you connected with the New York Tribune?—Answer. I am.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I am its editor-in-chief, and its publisher, and its principal proprietor.

Q. Has the Tribune taken any part in the discussion of the Pan-Electric matter, now under consideration by this committee?—A. It has.

Q. Can you state the general view taken by the Tribune of the question involved; I mean as to which side of the question it has taken.

The WITNESS. As to which side of what question?

The CHAIRMAN. Which side of the question as to the propriety of the formation of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, as it is understood to have been formed?

A. In the editorial discussion we have generally disapproved such actions on the part of officials; have held that the position was inconsistent with their official duties.

Q. Has that been done under your direction?—A. It has.

Q. Do you know of any paper having published articles in relation to the Pan-Electric Company before the Tribune?—A. I do not know of attention having been called to it specifically before the Tribune's publication. There were some advertisements and things of that sort which I saw.

Q. The witness who preceded you, General Sypher, has spoken of an article which appeared in the Tribune on the 25th of September, and, which I have before me. Was that the first article appearing in the paper?—A. I think it was, although I cannot speak accurately without looking at it. I glanced at it this morning. I think that is the one. That is the one headed "Mr. Garland, the speculator"?

Q. I do not remember, sir.—A. I think that is the first article which we published.

Q. The article bears date the 24th of September, and appeared in your issue of the 25th of September. Of course, the date of the paper is right. Do you know whether the article was prepared on the 24th of September?—A. I think not.

Q. How long had it been in your possession before it appeared in the paper?—A. My recollection is (which is only vague) that it was there three or four days; perhaps three days.

Q. By whom was it furnished to you?—A. By my Washington correspondents, or one of them.

Q. What is his name?—A. I think it was Major Clark who sent it.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to where Major Clark obtained the facts narrated in the article?—A. Not in detail.

Q. What knowledge have you?—A. None excepting that I asked him, being startled somewhat by the statement, if he was entirely sure as to the facts, and he told me that he was. My inquiries were brief and by telegraph.

Q. Did you ask him from whom he obtained them?—A. I do not recollect asking for the names nor do I recollect getting the names.

Q. Was it your understanding that he had prepared the article or that it was furnished to him?—A. I assumed that he prepared it, but that, like other articles, he secured the information wherever he could in Washington.

Q. Was the name of Mr. Hill mentioned in connection with it?—A. I do not think I ever heard of it.

Q. Or of General Sypher?—A. I do not think I ever heard that in connection with it, either.

Q. Did the Tribune pay anything for the article?—A. Not to my knowledge, beyond the ordinary salary to the correspondent who furnished it.

Q. Was the correspondent paid a fixed salary?—A. The correspondent was paid a fixed monthly salary.

Q. So that the article cost nothing in addition to his salary?—A. The article came in the ordinary way, as his contribution to the paper.

Q. Might not something have been paid by the Tribune without your knowledge?—A. It is possible. I cannot say. If there was any considerable payment for it, it would be likely to be mentioned to me.

Q. Suppose the correspondent had paid for it; would he have mentioned that fact to you or to some other gentleman in the office?—A. If he paid any large sum, he would have communicated it either to me or my representative in the office.

Q. Who was that?—A. Mr. Nicholson would be the gentleman to whom it would naturally come.

Q. What is his first name?—A. Donald Nicholson.

Q. What position has he in the office?—A. He represents me in the management of the paper.

Q. So you do not know of anything having been paid for that article?—A. I do not. I can very easily ascertain if it is of any consequence; that is to say, if there was any considerable sum paid it would probably appear in the monthly statements of our Washington office, which are on file in our office and which I would take pleasure in sending on to you.

Q. Have other articles appeared in the Tribune since that date relating to this matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have any of them been paid for?—A. Probably they were all paid for in some way; so far as I know they were.

Q. I mean in addition to the correspondent's salary?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know of one article having been paid for specially?

The WITNESS. Bearing on this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I do not.

Q. Has the Tribune paid anything to other newspapers for republishing any of these articles?—A. It has not.

Q. Has the Tribune received anything from the American Bell Company or from any other company or person for publishing any article relating to the Pan-Electric Company or to the controversy between it and other companies and the Bell Company?—A. It has not.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the American Bell Company?—A. I am not.

Q. Do you know of any person holding stock in the Tribune, or having an interest in the Tribune, being a stockholder in the American Bell Company?—A. I do not know of any, and my strong impression is that there is no one.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the Western Union Telegraph Company?—A. I am not.

Q. Do you know of any person connected with the Tribune having stock in that company?—A. I do not, and I do not think there is any one.

Q. Have you any stock in any of the subordinate Bell companies?—A. I have not.

Q. Or any person connected with the Tribune?—A. Not to my knowledge and not to my belief.

Q. Is Mr. Mills an owner of any interest in the Tribune?

The WITNESS. Mr. D. O. Mills?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. He is not.

Q. Do you know whether he is a stockholder in the Bell Company?—A. I think he is not.

Q. Or in any subordinate company?—A. I think not, though I have no knowledge on the subject.

Q. Is he a stockholder in the Western Union Telegraph Company?—A. I think not. He was formerly, but I think he has not been for a number of years.

Q. How many years?—A. I should think five years.

Q. So you say that so far as you know nothing whatever has been paid outside of regular salaries for matter relating to this telephone controversy?—A. So far as I know. I have no information on the subject, and minor payments might be made without coming to me of course, but if you are at all desirous of prosecuting that inquiry I will take pleasure in examining my accounts when I go back to New York and send the information on to Washington to you.

Q. If you find anything we should like to have it, sir.—A. I will have a search made on my return.

Q. Have you had any correspondence or communication of any kind with any officer or stockholder of the Bell Company relating to this controversy?—A. I do not know that I have. I do not think I am acquainted with any officer of the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. Have you had any correspondence or conversation with any one, speaking in the interest of the Bell Company, relating to this controversy or investigation?—A. I directed inquiries to be made, immediately on receipt of the first dispatch, from the counsel of the Bell Telephone Company in New York. I sent my reporters to him immediately to see what his side of the story was.

Q. Who is that, sir?—A. Mr. Dickerson.

Q. Well, sir, did you receive any information from him?—A. I think you will find that we published some reports, which my reporters brought in, immediately under the Washington article which you showed me just now.

Q. Did you have any personal interviews with Mr. Dickerson?—A. Oh, yes; I have chatted with him on the cars since then about it.

Q. Has he visited your office? Has he called upon you in relation to this matter?—A. Not until, I think, long after the publications. Mr. Dickerson has been in my own employ once or twice as counsel; has been in attendance at my office, and I might have chatted with him about it. But there was no conversation, I think, until after the publication.

Q. Is he your counsel at this time?—A. No, sir; he is not.

Q. Has he been within a year past?—A. I think within a year past he was counsel in a special case. I employed him to investigate a patent.

Q. How long ago do you think that was?—A. I think about a year ago. I can fix the date almost exactly in a few moments. [After briefly reflecting.] I think it was in April of last year.

Q. Have you any objection to stating what patent that was?—A. None whatever. It was a type-setting machine. The business was confined entirely to the investigation of that patent and was closed by the payment of his fee.

Q. Has any person tried to induce the Tribune to pursue any particular line of policy or conduct in regard to this controversy, this investigation, or the matters out of which it grows?—A. Not to my knowledge.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke about holding that first article some time. I am seeking to ascertain whether it was such as warranted you in having it published. What mode did you adopt?—A. I telegraphed over to the Washington office making some inquiries. I do not remember specifically what I asked. I wanted to be sure about the facts. I instructed my reporters to see Mr. Dickerson, the counsel of the Bell Telephone Company and see what their side of the story was.

Q. Did you come to Washington?—A. No; sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Has there been any correspondence on the part of any person with the New York Tribune suggesting any articles with a view of affecting the official conduct of any officers of the Government, influencing them?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. During the time this matter was under hearing before the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I do not recall anything on that subject; it is of course possible that people may have come into our office and asked us to publish this, that, or the other thing; that always happens when there is any public excitement.

Q. As matter of fact at the time of the publication of that article you were aware the thing was pending before the Interior Department?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether persons connected with the Bell Telephone Company made any requests of that character, either personally, verbally, or otherwise?—A. I have no recollection; it is quite possible.

Q. Would it be much trouble for you to make some inquiry?—A. Not at all. If there was any letter received it is on file, and I will make search.

Q. It would not be any violation of confidence or anything of that kind?—A. Oh, no; we were seeking for news, and would seek it from all sources. We would go to the Bell people and go to the other people. I printed letters or interviews from the Bell people, from Attorney-General Garland, and from Dr. Rogers—after taking some pains to verify its statements.

Q. During the time you held this matter in abeyance did you make any inquiries about what parties were to be affected by the article?—A. I directed my correspondent to see Attorney-General Garland, but he was then absent. I then directed him to see him as soon as he could get at him.

Q. But you did not withhold the article until he returned?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you publish the interview with Mr. Garland?—A. Immediately; I believe we telegraphed also to the Southwest, but I am not quite sure on that point. I think we tried to get something by telegraph, but I would not state that positively.

Q. I will ask you whether the information in regard to this matter that has come to you from Washington has come in the usual way?—A. It has come in the usual way.

Q. And you have regular correspondents here?—A. I have.

Q. And it has come through them?—A. It has come through them.

Q. Have you any personal acquaintance with any of the officials involved?—A. I do not remember at this moment any one with whom I have an acquaintance on either side. I do not think I am acquainted with any officer of the Pan-Electric or Bell Telephone Company.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Have your agents here in your office authority to conclude the payment of a reasonable sum of money in the procuring of information without consulting headquarters?—A. They would pay any small sum.

Q. So they are regarded as having authority to pay a limited sum?—A. Oh, small sums.

Q. But you know of nothing being paid?—A. Nothing at all. If anything was paid my correspondent would know of it.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did you inquire of your correspondent to ascertain whether he saw any other gentleman affected except Attorney-General Garland?—A. I do not remember the specific instructions, but that would be his understanding of his general orders—to get all the facts he could from all the parties concerned. Those are always his instructions.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The Tribune has given to this matter something of a political turn, has it not?—A. It has seemed to have some bearing on politics.

Q. I see in the editorial which accompanied the original publication something of that kind. And that has been kept up from the beginning, has it not?—A. I think you will find that we have generally called attention to the political bearings of it.

Q. At the time of the publication of this article, as I understand, you had not been able to communicate with Mr. Garland?—A. I think not.

Q. And yet I think the editorial was principally about Mr. Garland. Is it not a fact that it reflects more upon him than anybody in the company?—A. He certainly seemed to us to be more involved than anybody else.

Q. And he had had no opportunity for explanation?—A. We were seeking for his explanation. In the mean time the facts, advertisements, and so on had been laid clearly before me in the papers to some extent.

Q. What advertisements had you seen?—A. I had one special advertisement on my table which I remember which appeared in some Washington newspaper—I think a weekly newspaper—in which the Attorney-General was advertised as one of the directors and as counsel of the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. The most of your editorial articles were directed against the Attorney-General, were they not?—A. I could not say. We probably made him the front of the discussion.

Q. Did you regard him as more culpable than anybody else?—A. The proceedings which we were criticising took place under him, in his office. We directed our criticism to the propriety of his holding the office of Attorney-General and instituting a proceeding in that office, or allowing proceedings to be instituted, which might affect his private interests.

Q. You had information at that time that he had nothing to do with instituting or allowing the institution of proceedings?—A. We put our interpretation on that, which you will find in the editorials. I presume you do not care to discuss it.

Q. You stated you were taking pains to make inquiry as to the fact with a view to being just to all parties?—A. We think we have been quite just.

Q. You had seen Mr. Garland's denial and published it?—A. I saw that. I saw it when it was telegraphed from the Southwest.

Q. If that was true, Mr. Garland would seem to have had nothing to do with instituting the proceedings?—A. I should not take that view of it.

Q. If it was true, sir, that he had no knowledge whatever of it, why would you not take that view of it?—A. I should not take the view that Mr. Garland's denial freed him from censure in the matter.

Q. I see in one article you call it Mr. Garland's telephone suit. At that time you knew Mr. Garland had disclaimed any connection with the bringing of the suit?—A. I knew Mr. Garland had tried to escape from the responsibility of the bringing of the suit by the subordinate in his office.

Q. You knew he had stated he had nothing to do with it?—A. I knew he had tried to escape from responsibility for the acts of subordinates in his office.

Q. Did you not know the fact as I put it?—A. That is not my view of it, Mr. Chairman.

Q. Did you not know that he disclaimed any responsibility whatever for bringing the suit?—A. Whatever statement Mr. Garland made on that subject I printed in full and at once.

Q. Have you had any personal feeling against Mr. Garland in this matter?—A. None whatever.

Q. I see in an article appearing in the Tribune on the 28th of October it is said: "The Attorney-General tries to make Government trust funds valueless." What funds were they; does that relate to telephone stock?—A. I do not recall the article at all; I should have to examine it.

Q. It is a Washington letter, headed as follows: "Garland's sense of honor. Appearing against the United States. The Attorney-General tries to make Government trust funds valueless."—A. I do not recollect the article; I should have to look at it.

Q. It is accompanied by an editorial which bears this caption: "Mr. Garland's bad faith." Do you recall that?—A. I do not recall it, but if it appears as an editorial it was doubtless under my sanction.

Mr. RANNEY. If you are going to take up the matter I think we should take it up and discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you think that? I do not think we should discuss the opinions of newspapers on this matter.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not trying to do that. It is not within the scope of the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not desire to have any bout with Mr. Reid; my labors in that line are confined to members of the committee.

Mr. EDEN. The newspapers are the foundation for the charge.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state my view of it. If the question were whether the Tribune had been influenced by the Bell Company, or by any other company or person, and as some evidence of that fact it was shown that the treatment was entirely one-sided, and violently one-sided—I do not say it was—by making publications that did not seem to be warranted by the facts, that would be some evidence that it was proceeding from improper motive, and under improper influences.

Mr. RANNEY. It is the same as with the other papers taking the other view.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. I am only dealing with the business now in hand.

Mr. RANNEY. I am suggesting that you should not extend the inquiry so far. I shall not press the objection, but I shall claim the right, if I care to exercise it, of doing the same. I do not think I shall.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will call your attention to the subject-matter of this article.—A. I should like to see it, Mr. Chairman, if there is to be a discussion about it.

Q. Certainly. You will see that it relates to a matter not connected with the telephone investigation, as I understand [submitting scrap-book to witness].—A. I remember the article somewhat indistinctly, Mr. Chairman. It had passed quite out of my mind.

Q. What was the subject-matter of it?—A. It is in relation to the appearance of the Attorney-General in a suit in Virginia, or affecting Virginia bonds, in which, as it seemed to the writer of the article (which I approved afterwards, although I believe I did not see it beforehand), he took sides in a way which it was thought would injure the interests of the United States, he appearing in the capacity of private counsel while Attorney-General.

Q. Has he appeared in any case against the United States since he became Attorney-General?—A. I would not like to say, as it is not within my knowledge at all.

Mr. RANNEY. How is it competent as bearing upon the Pan-Electric Company?

The CHAIRMAN. Only in showing the animus of the Tribune—that the Tribune was seeking for matter of attack other than the Pan-Electric.

The WITNESS. You asked me to what it related?

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to your stating.

The WITNESS. It says—

“The facts we present upon another page to-day are matters of record. They show that the United States has a claim of $1,357,286, principal and interest, upon a trust investment in State bonds, against the State of Virginia; that, in common with other bondholders, the Government has suffered from the repudiation laws enacted after the partition of the State; that the claim is utterly worthless unless it be converted into the 3-per cent. coupon bonds issued for the purpose of funding the State's bonded indebtedness; that a further attack has been made by Virginia upon its good faith by an attempt to discredit and invalidate these coupon bonds; that actions have been brought by private creditors to enforce the provisions of the act which authorized the funding, and that Mr. Garland, after he became Attorney-General, and with a full knowledge of the Government's claim, appeared before the Supreme Court and argued, under a private retainer, for the State of Virginia, and against the interests of the United States.”

That seems to be the substance of a Washington dispatch, repeated in the editorial, and on which the editorial writer bases some censure of the Attorney-General.

Q. And you entitled it “Mr. Garland's bad faith.” So you were attacking Mr. Garland at the time on other than telephone matters. Then, when you publish as to the other side, you say, “Prof. Bell's defense—Plain words in the telephone case—E. N. Dickerson on the Pan-Electric suit—A sharp reply from Mr. Gantt.” That is the heading. You did not see any bad faith or anything wrong there?

Mr. RANNEY. Well, has this anything to do with whether the Tribune was paid any money by the American Bell Telephone Company; that is the only issue there is?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not direct evidence of the payment of money, or evidence of the payment of money at all.

Mr. RANNEY. That is the only thing we are required to investigate. We are not required to investigate the motives of these people or the soundness of articles they may think proper to write. For the sake of raising the question I object to that course of inquiry.

Mr. MILLARD. I only asked if the facts alleged in the article to which attention is called seemed to justify any criticism.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you think you were justified in expressing an opinion at that time?

Mr. MILLARD. You expressed an opinion. I am trying to get the facts from the witness.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I believe the Tribune has defended pretty much everything on the side of the Bell Company, including Dr. Rogers, has it not?—A. I am not aware that it has.

Q. I see here an article on the subject of cranks.

Mr. HANBACK. Are you going into the crank question?

The WITNESS. We have not intended to defend the Bell Company at all, excepting so far as to bring out the facts; we haven't any more interest in the Bell Company than we have in any other company.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I will ask you whether you have seen any contradiction of the facts alleged in the article to which the chairman calls your attention?—A. My memory is not fresh on that subject. It had largely passed out of my mind; but I do not recall any contradiction.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I suppose you were ready to publish anything any of these gentlemen indicated or would state?—A. Within reasonable limits.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. What gentlemen do you understand as being alluded to by the question?—A. Attorney-General Garland was alluded to in the article he is speaking of.

Q. Of course you appreciate the fact that an opportunity to reply to an article several months afterwards is not equivalent to an opportunity to reply at the time of the publication of the article?—A. I gave him an opportunity just as soon as I could get at him.

Q. Of course we all understand that you could not get at the Attorney-General in the first instance?—A. No, I did it just as quick as I could.

The CHAIRMAN. I had a letter from Mr. Dana yesterday, saying he was not well and could not be here until next Tuesday. Mr. Jones, of the New York Times, was requested to appear, but he is not here, it seems.

T. C. CRAWFORD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you connected with the New York World?—Answer. I am.

Q. What is your relation to it?—A. Well, I have charge of their Washington office.

Q. How long have you had that position?—A. I have been with the World nearly three years.

Q. Have any articles appeared in the World sent to them from the Washington office in relation to the Pan-Electric and Bell Telephone matters?—A. Yes, sir; a number of articles.

Q. Do you know the date of the first article in the World?—A. I cannot recall the exact date. When I first came back here in September I sent several small dispatches. I sent a brief interview with the Attorney-General in September. I think it was done after his return.

Q. I see an article dated the 6th of January, which is the first I have. It is a Washington letter. I will show it to you [submitting a paper to witness].—A. The 6th of January. That is an article that I sent.

Q. You sent that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to stating where you got the facts set forth in this article of the 6th of January?—A. I had that information in confidence from a Senator.

Q. Do you decline to tell who it was?—A. I decline to tell without his consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It is headed a loud call for Mr. Goode.

Mr. MILLARD. He always responded.

The CHAIRMAN. Promptly.

Mr. MILLARD. Promptly.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you mean that he wrote the article or that you got the facts from him?—A. The facts. I think I wrote the article myself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that the statements contained in this article were furnished you by a United States Senator?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you call on him for them or did he volunteer them?—A. It was in the course of a casual conversation. I do not remember whether I called upon him for the facts contained in that specific article. I do not think that I did.

Q. I see you state in this article this—it begins this way:

"Dr. Rogers has not made a single statement yet which has been contradicted. He says distinctly that Casey Young went up to see the Solicitor-General about the bringing of the suit last summer, and that when he returned he said that Garland was going away so that the suit could be ordered."

Did the Senator give you that fact?—A. No; Dr. Rogers.

Q. Dr. Rogers gave you that fact?—A. Yes, sir; the only part that the Senator gave me relates to the consideration of the case by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Q. Allusion is also made to the meeting at Casey Young's rooms when Gant, Van Benthuyzen, and Bradley T. Johnson were present. Where did you get that fact?—A. I think that came from the original article.

Q. Which was that?—A. That connected history.

Q. Well, it did not appear until a month afterwards. This is dated the 6th of January and that appeared on the 27th of January?—A. Well, I had read that; I had had that in my possession. I think that is it. I do not remember about that.

Q. You state here:

"Mr. Garland, to judge by what he has said in conversations with other Senators two years ago, was perfectly well aware of the duties of the Attorney-General in the matter, and knew that he would be called on to bring suit in the name of the United States to vacate the Bell patent."

Had you that information from any person?—A. From the original history.

Q. That he knew that before he was made Attorney-General?—A. I think that is in that original history.

Q. Sir?—A. I think that is in that original statement.

Q. The sentence preceding reads as follows:

"It has been held by the friends of Mr. Garland that he was not aware of the position in which he would be placed regarding the Pan-Electric Company as Attorney-General when he accepted that position."

Now, had you information from any other source than the "history" that Mr. Garland knew he would be called upon to bring suit against the Bell Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. It would be important to know whether that is in the "history." I do not remember it myself?—A. Well, I say as it occurs to my memory now. I say that I think it was from that. I have had a number of conversations with a number of people upon this whole subject.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose it is based upon the fact as to the bill that passed the House.

The WITNESS. Senator Platt spoke of that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) Spoke to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to saying whether Senator Platt was the Senator who gave you the information for this article?—A. He did not.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You say Senator Platt did not?—A. Not that.

Q. Not the one you alluded to?—A. Not the one I alluded to when I first spoke. He gave me some general information once about a conversation he had with Mr. Garland about that bill before his committee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You do not recall any other source of information but that statement, that the Attorney-General knew he would be called upon to bring suit in the name of the United States to vacate the Bell patent?—A. Not at present; no.

Q. You state here that after this bill had been introduced by Representative Vance, and rushed through the House, he went over to the Senate several times to look after the bill. Can you state where you received that information?—A. I received that information from the writer of the original article, and I examined the record about the passage of the bill in the House.

Q. To whom do you refer as the writer of the original article?—A. I refer to the person who furnished me the article, Mr. Hill.

Q. That is, the history?—A. Yes.

Q. You state here that while this bill was under discussion two letters addressed to Senator Garland, bearing on the subject, were referred to the committee?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you have that information from?—A. Senator Platt.

Q. And that one of them contained suggestions as to amendments to the bill?—A. Senator Platt was chairman of the committee.

Q. You say that Mr. Platt, the chairman of the committee, went across the Senate Chamber one day and spoke to Mr. Garland concerning his communications, to ask him if he had any interest in the bill. From whom did you get that?—A. Mr. Platt.

Q. Did Senator Platt state to you that he went over to Mr. Garland to ask him if he had any interest in the bill?—A. Any amendments to put in the bill?

Q. Not any private interest?—A. Not any private interest. I did not so understand him.

Q. There is no matter here, then, that any Senator could have furnished except that which you say was furnished by Senator Platt?—A. I think I misunderstood the article. I thought it was an article that I wrote that referred to his case before the Senate Judiciary Committee. When I looked at the date I thought it was that article.

Q. Now as to the article of the 27th of January; you say you obtained that article from Mr. Hill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you had any private acquaintance with Mr. Hill?—A. No, sir.

Q. Under what circumstances did you get the article?—A. He came into my office one day.

Q. Will you give us the date?—A. Some time in November; I cannot give the exact date. The occasion of it was the publication of a small paragraph that I had written in a letter. That was the occasion of Mr. Hill's call [producing a newspaper clipping].

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Is that in evidence?—A. No.

Mr. MILLARD. Let him read it, Mr. Chairman, right in this connection.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was after this publication that Mr. Hill came to you?—A. That was the excuse for his call; I had never seen him before in my life.

Q. He called Dr. Rogers "J. K. Rogers?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say Mr. Casey Young, Senator Harris, and Gen. Atkins are relatives of Dr. Rogers?—A. That was from Mr. Talcot. Col. Casey Young afterwards called at the office and stated that he wanted to disclaim the relationship.

Q. Are you able by that to fix the date Mr. Hill called?—A. It was some time in November—about the middle of November, soon after my return from New York.

Q. This information you obtained from Mr. Talcot?—A. Yes; casual conversation on the street.

Q. The electrician of the House now?—A. Yes. He said there were some inaccuracies.

Q. The gentleman who succeeded young Mr. Rogers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see he said young Mr. Rogers was not much of an electrician?—A. That was what he said.

Q. State what was said between yourself and Mr. Hill at the time he called.—A. I had previously some instructions from New York to look into this matter. I had been to New York and Mr. Pulitzer had suggested to me that I look into this whole affair and find out what there was in it. He said there had been a good deal printed about it. I had looked up the previous publications and looked up some advertisements and my conversation with Mr. Talcot was in that direction. So when Mr. Hill came in he introduced himself and said that he had furnished a good deal of the information upon the subject to the Tribune, and that he had been in the employ of Col. Young, and that he could give me a complete history. He said that it was furnished in fragments, and that he would like to be paid for it. He said that he had not received any pay for what he had furnished, and he would like to get some money for the history, and I told him to go to work and prepare the history and I would pay him for it what I thought it was worth. I think he came in a day later, or perhaps two days later, with an article in type-writing. He let me read it over, and then I think he said he would like to make some changes. I do not remember about what, but I know he took it home with him and he sent me a note telling me where to send for it. I did not go for it myself, but a gentleman connected with the bureau went to Mr. Hill and obtained it and brought it to me, and I sent it over to the New York office with a personal statement, that I thought it was an interesting story, and I believed, so far as I could learn from the previous publications and from the advertisements and from the statements made publicly in connection with it that it, was a true statement. The amount of money we paid for it, if you would like that, was $25, I think, for the first article.

Q. For the history?—A. For the history. He said that he could furnish some other articles in connection with it. He did furnish, I think, perhaps five. I paid him in all for those articles $60.

Q. Including the $25?—A. Yes. None of those articles were printed, though. The only article we ever printed from Mr. E. N. Hill was the original statement. That is the only contribution he gave us that we ever used. Those other articles, I think, are in the World office now. He furnished us later what he called a transcript of accounts. He wanted to know if I would like that, and I said I would take it.

Q. What accounts were they?—A. The accounts of the Pan Electric Company. For that there was no specified sum fixed. He said I could give him whatever I liked for it. I told him that was a very vague way of putting it; I would like him to put a price on it. He said I could give him whatever it was worth. I sent it over to the office, and they sent back word they did not think they would print it, and there was nothing more said between Mr. Hill and myself until he came in one day—no, he sent me a note in which he said if we were not going to use those accounts he would like to have them, as he was in need of money, and I sent him word to come to the office. I told him if that was what he wanted I would pay him just the same as if they were printed, and I paid him $25 more.

Q. Eighty-five dollars altogether?—A. Eighty-five dollars. I do not think he has been in the office since then, except he has come once or twice with other things I did not want.

Q. You say in his first interview with you he stated he could prepare or furnish an article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you infer at that time that the article was already written or that he was going to write it?—A. I think he said that he had an article written; that is my impression; that he had one prepared.

Q. Did he make some changes in it after he took it away?—A. I do not know as to that; no material changes.

Q. You say you communicated with the office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you get authority to purchase it?—A. I have general authority to purchase matter at any time according to my judgment.

Q. Had you any acquaintance with Mr. Hill before he furnished this article?—A. No, sir; I never saw him before he entered the office.

Q. Did he tell you who he was and what he had been engaged in?—A. He told me his name was E. N. Hill. I had heard of him several times in connection with certain newspaper publications. I had seen his name attached to them; and I will add, in sending that history over to the World, I put his name in the introduction. I wrote on a separate sheet of paper, "The following history of the Pan-Electric Company is prepared by Col. E. N. Hill, formerly in the employ of the company."

Q. Did you append that for publication?—A. I intended it to be printed. I do not know why it was not. Being on another sheet of paper, and being kept for some time, it might have been dropped.

Q. If I recollect aright, Mr. Pulitzer said the matter was furnished by the Washington correspondent, and that $100 had been paid for it?—A. He said in all not more than $100. He would not remember probably the exact amount.

Q. Did Mr. Hill ever tell you the circumstances under which the article was prepared?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Sypher was in any way connected with it?—A. No, sir; I only knew this, that Col. Hill had desk-room in General Sypher's office, and whenever he would send me word that he wanted any money or anything, he would say, "Send around to room 23, Glover Building, General Sypher's office," and I went around there once to see him.

Q. You say you have published but the one article from Mr. Hill?—A. That is all.

Q. Has any person else furnished articles?—A. Nobody, except the regular employés of the World as reporters.

Q. Did you know that this same article had been furnished to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I did not.

Q. When did you first become aware of that fact?—A. Here, in this committee room.

Q. You say that you did know that Hill had been in the employ of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Well, from his own statement, he seemed very familiar with their affairs.

Q. And you intended to have that published along with the article?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know that these accounts which he furnished you were taken from the books of the company?—A. Only from his statement. The office did not use them.

Q. Did you know that he had been in Casey Young's office?—A. Not of my own personal knowledge.

Q. Had you heard it?—A. Only from him.

Q. Did he tell you that he had gotten this information by being in Col. Young's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the employment of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you buy it with the understanding that he had gotten it that way?—A. I did not ask him very many questions about it.

Q. You knew the fact I presume that he got it by reason of his connection with these people?—A. Well, I supposed so.

Q. Did he furnish you any of Col. Young's letters?—A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?—A. I do not remember of his furnishing me any of Col. Young's letters.

Q. Did he not furnish you with the stenographic notes of Col. Young's letters?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you at any time have in your possession a book of the short-hand notes of Col. Young's letters?—A. I did not know they were his. There was a newspeddler who called at the office one night—a great many call nearly every day—with a book which he said contained a number of Col. Casey Young's letters.

Q. Who was he?—A. I do not know. He said that that contained a number of Col. Young's letter.

Q. How long was that after the history had been furnished you by Mr. Hill?—A. I think that was within the next two or three weeks.

Q. You say you do not know the man?—A. I have seen him, but I do not remember his name. I had never met him before he came into the office. As I did not transact any business with him, I did not charge my mind with his name.

Q. You took the book?—A. I took the book; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not submit it to a stenographer with a view to having it written out?—A. I did.

Q. Was there any arrangement made by you with this person to pay him for that book?—A. I said if the book contained anything of any value I would buy it from him.

Q. How much did he ask for it?—A. He did not name any particular price.

Q. To whom did you submit that book to have it written out?—A. I submitted it to M. L. York.

Q. Any other person?—A. Well, if I did, it was in confidence.

Q. Was the confidence of such character that you cannot state the fact as a witness?—A. Well, it was a professional stenographer. If he does not object, I will give you his name.

Q. He declined to write them out, did he?—A. No; he did not.

Q. Why did he not do it, then?—A. He said that it contained nothing of any interest. He said they were mere casual business letters, and nothing relating to the Pan-Electric. My instructions to him were: If it related to the subject of this company, I wanted it; if it did not, I did not.

Q. Did you furnish it to Mr. York after this stenographer returned it to you?—A. No; Mr. York had it first.

Q. Mr. York wrote out the letters, did he not?—A. He attempted to translate it, but it was too difficult and he gave it up.

Q. Did he not furnish you some translations?—A. He wrote out part.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was it in cipher?—A. No, shorthand.

Mr. RANNEY. Shorthand letters of whom?

The CHAIRMAN. Col. Young. It was Col. Young's private note-book, written by his stenographer.

The WITNESS. I do not know to this day that it was his note-book. I do not write shorthand. I know nothing about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you not learn the fact from Mr. York?—A. Mr. York said so; but I have no personal knowledge. I do not read shorthand.

Q. Had you obtained any other of Col. Young's papers or letters?—A. Those that you have had here in the Rogers album.

Q. Yes; but I do not refer to them. Did you obtain any others besides what were obtained from Rogers and this unknown man and from Hill?—A. Mr. Hill furnished none of Mr. Young's letters.

Q. Well, I speak of the article; did Mr. Hill furnish you any of Col. Young's papers?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. You have referred to the Rogers matter; did you receive some letters from Mr. Rogers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whose letters were they?—A. That bundle that you have here before the committee.

Q. Letters from a great many people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the date at which you received them?—A. I think it was the next night after the publication of what was called the original history.

Q. Had you made any previous arrangement in regard to them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he bring them to you?—A. No, sir; I had never seen Dr. Rogers before the night he called.

Q. Was it the first interview when he produced the letters?—A. No.

Q. When have you ever seen him?—A. Well, he produced the letters the next day. I had an interview with him, I think, the first night after the publication of the letters, and in that interview he agreed to give me the letters.

Q. That was the first night after the publication of the history?—A. Yes, sir. He came in there for another matter, however.

Q. In any way connected with the Pan-Electric?—A. It was on account of that meeting that was had at the rooms of Senator Harris. He came in to tell me about that.

Q. Did he want to have something published about that?—A. Yes; he wrote me an account of it himself.

Q. Did you publish it?—A. No, sir; he was very much excited and it was almost illegible.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was after that fracas, that knocking down there?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And you say he then agreed to furnish you these letters he had received from other persons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he turned them over to you the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Great bundles of them, were there not; two large packages of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. They were not in a bundle, but pasted on to the leaves of a book as I saw.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Q. (Resuming.) That must have been, then, on the 30th of January. Did Dr. Rogers give any reason why he surrendered these letters?—A. Oh, yes; there was a general discussion. He thought he had not been treated fairly in that article; he thought the enterprise had been represented in a bad light, and he said, "Why, I have hundreds of letters on that subject that will give you a different idea;" something like that. I said, "Have you any objection to letting me have those letters?" "Why," he said, "not in the slightest."

Q. The doctor did not want any pay for them, did he?—A. Not at all.

Q. Have you paid him anything?—A. Not a cent.

Q. At what date did you publish any of those letters?—A. The next day, I think; I was to go out to his house; his version is substantially correct, but he met me at the station; I missed the train or something; I did not go out on the train that he thought I would.

Q. You did not go to his house?—A. Not that time.

Q. Did you at any time?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. For what purpose?—A. Well, I went out there and made a sketch of the doctor and his son and his house and his grounds, &c.

Mr. RANNEY. You are good at sketching if you cannot write shorthand.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Continuing.) Did you publish any of the letters furnished you by Dr. Rogers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I see that they appeared on the 3d of February dated Washington, February 2?—

A. The first batch of letters were telegraphed.

Q. Was that this batch [exhibiting a printed slip], or was this an additional batch?—A. No; that was mailed.

Q. You telegraphed what was more important?—A. What appeared to be more important.

Q. Did you publish any except those which seemed to you to be against the parties who were connected with the enterprise?—A. I did not publish any that I thought did not have a bearing on the subject.

Q. And in that direction?—A. Without any regard to that.

Q. Have you had any communication with the officers or stockholders of the Bell Telephone Company in regard to this investigation or the matters out of which it grew?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you been requested by any of the Bell people to publish anything?—No, sir.

Q. Or send anything to the World?—A. I have not.

Q. Or any other paper?—A. No; I do not know a single official of the company.

Q. To your knowledge, has anything been paid to the World or to any of its correspondents for any matter published in relation to the Pan-Electric Bell affair?—A. Nothing has been paid that I know of, and I do not believe that there has been anything paid.

Q. As I understand, you were just gathering news?—A. That is all. Acting under orders from the editor of World. The editor of the World had no knowledge of these letters. He was here in Washington at the time. I did not say anything about them to him until after I had obtained them. I showed a part of them to him in his room at the Arlington. That was the first knowledge he had of them.

Q. Something has been said of a visit by Col. Young and others to your office after this publication. Will you state your recollection of what occurred at that time?—A. I did not print anything about it at that time.

Q. No, sir; you did not. You may state what occurred there at that time, as Col. Young has given a version of it, and perhaps others?—A. Well, ordinarily I do not repeat private conversations held in the office, but, as Col. Young has made a statement about it I will do so. He sent me a note during the day asking me when I would be at liberty to see him. He stated, I believe, in this note that he wished me meet Senator Harris, and General Johnston; that there had been a certain publication made in the World that he thought had placed him in a false light; something like that; that was the idea of it. I sent him word back that I would be in the office at 7 o'clock. I supposed at the time that he wished to make a statement.

Q. Was that after the publication of the history or letters?—A. After the publication of the history and after the scene in the room of Senator Harris. But the letters were not printed until the morning of the next day, the morning after that. I had sent for a stenographer, supposing they wished to make some statement. The interview was not very long. As I understood, the principal object of it was to call my attention to certain inaccuracies in the article, and ask me if I would not correct them upon my own responsibility. I said to them in general that they could make any statement they pleased; that I had instructions from the World to give them any amount of space. They said they did not care to engage in any newspaper controversy. They made some allusion to the occurrence in Senator Harris's room and they said, I think Col. Young said first that there had been some sort of reflection passed upon him, he being charged with furnishing the information, or it being charged that some information came from some member of the board, and he wanted to know if I had any objection to saying to those gentlemen present that he had not furnished the information, and I said, "None in the world." I said that he had not. Then Senator Harris said, "Then that puts the responsibility upon us," or something like that; I do not remember the exact phraseology, and I turned to him and said, "You did not furnish the information," and I turned to General Johnston and said, "You did not." Then I think there was a very brief conversation afterwards, and I think Senator Harris said he hoped I had not obtained the information from Dr. Rogers. He wanted to know first if I had. I did not say anything, as he did not consider him a responsible person; did not consider him worthy of belief. That is the idea of it. That is the substance of the conversation. Of course I repeated to them the offer of the editor of the World to give them any amount of space, and I assured them there was a stenographer there who would report them accurately and they could revise it. Col. Young, I believe, invited me over to the rooms to look at the books at any time. He said he would furnish me any information I wanted as an individual, but he did not care to take part in any newspaper controversy. I think that was the idea of it.

Q. Was that about all that occurred at that time?—A. That is all I recollect.

Q. Have you had any other interviews with any of these gentlemen?—A. I have had one or two interviews with Mr. Garland, but simply to ask him whether he wished to say anything or not. Each time he has declined. I had an interview with him in September, I think, or the early part of October after the publications in the Tribune, and I printed in the World at that time a brief conversation that I had with him and with Solicitor-General Goode.

Q. That was after his return from Arkansas?—A. That was after his return from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall any other matter in which your name has been mentioned, but if there is any, and if you desire to make any statement, you may do so.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke of there being an article sent to the World, and spoke of their having kept it for some time before they published it.—A. It was sent over in November, and I think it was kept back for the reason that the editor of the World was very anxious—I know the reason. He was very anxious to have it verified as completely as possible, so as to be sure that he was printing what was a correct statement. I think that was the only reason. That is the only reason I know. He wrote to me a great many times on the subject, and telegraphed me a great many times on the subject.

Q. What pains did you take to verify the statement?—A. Well, I had a number of conversations with Major Clark, who had made the original investigation upon the subject, and I talked some with Mr. Hill, and then I looked up some of these documents and papers. I took that in connection with the fact that none of the statements printed had been denied. The essential facts had been printed. There had been no complete history of it printed. The essential facts of it had been printed and had not been disputed.

Q. Had the Tribune, before you published the letters of Dr. Rogers, published those letters?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were the first to publish those letters?—A. Yes.

Q. And Dr. Rogers, as I understand you, put it on the ground that there had been charges made derogatory to him by these men, and he wanted to show by the letters that they were not true?—A. Yes, sir. He said he would not give them to the Tribune. He said, "It is best to settle your quarrels in your own congregation, now that the Democratic papers have taken hold of it."

Q. He seemed to think the letters would have been a vindication rather than an implication?—A. Yes, that was his idea.

Q. Can you fix the date when you furnished that general history? Something has been said about Mr. Pulitzer having sworn he kept it three months?—A. It was sent to him some time in November, and that would make it nearly that.

Q. Did you go through all the letters in Dr. Rogers' book?—A. Every one of them.

Q. The matters which seemed to implicate him that had come out prior to his surrendering the letters were the publication of the general statement drawn by Hill, and the account of the fracas at Senator Harris' room, where there was a knocking down of somebody, I forget who. Those were the only notes printed prior to Dr. Rogers coming to you?—A. No.

Q. What else was there?—A. I printed several dispatches on the subject during the fall.

Q. And when that occurred, the statement of Mr. Hill, or the publication thereof made, was that while the hearing before the Interior Department was going on?—A. I do not remember as to that.

Q. Was it before or after?—A. I do not remember as to that. I did not follow that hearing at the Interior Department very closely.

Q. You have spoken of some certain sums of money having been paid to Mr. Hill; did you take receipts from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got them?—A. I sent them over to the office as vouchers; I sent for them yesterday; I presume they have them there.

Q. Do you keep an account of expenses of that kind?—A. I generally do.

Q. Was your buying information—paying Mr. Hill what you did—out of the ordinary course of business, or is that in the ordinary course of business?—A. Not at all. I have general authority from the World to buy anything that comes along—to buy anything they would like.

Q. That is the general practice of newspapers, I suppose?—A. I do not know as to the general practice; that is the practice of our office.

Q. Anything you want you have to pay for?—A. That is the practice.

Q. Among a certain class of men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not pay members of Congress anything, I hope?—A. We pay them in another way.

Mr. RANNEY. Sometimes by abuse and sometimes by telling the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. They don't call it abuse.

Mr. RANNEY. What the members regard as abuse.

Q. (Resuming.) You have not seen Mr. Hill since?—A. No, sir. I would like to say this. You suggested something I would like to say. The editor of the World had given me instructions upon the subject; that he wanted merely to find out the facts, and I printed a good deal of matter, particularly in the final summary of the hearing before the Interior Department, that was adverse to the Bell Telephone Company. I prepared an article which I do not know whether it is among that collection or not [indicating] showing that Mr. Lamar's decision was based upon the facts submitted to him.

Q. And this article was not inserted in the World until you had taken pains to ascertain its reliability in relation to the facts, and until after you had assured Mr. Pulitzer that it was so. That is so?—A. Yes, sir.

At this point the committee adjourned to meet at 12 m. to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, April 30, 1886.

A quorum being present, the committee was called to order by the chairman, at 12.40 p. m.

A. B. UPSHAW, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you hold any official position under the General Government?—Answer. Yes, sir; I am chief clerk of the Indian Office. I was appointed the first day of July, 1885.

Q. Appointed by whom?—A. Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar.

Q. The Indian Office is the one of which General Atkins is the head?—A. Yes, sir; I was appointed upon the recommendation of General Atkins for the place, sir.

Q. Had you prior to that time held any official position under the Government?—A. No, sir.

Q. What had been your business prior to that?—A. Well, sir, I have been a journalist all my life until 1883, when I lost my health in a measure, and retired from journalism for a time.

Q. It has been stated that you were in some way connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or the company organized under a license from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company for Alabama?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that a fact?—A. Yes, sir; I reckon so.

Q. You say you reckon so. Do you not know?—A. That is a fact.

Q. Will you state what connection you had with that company?—A. Well, sir, I had a contract to organize a company in Alabama which I did. I am not an officer in the Alabama company nor am I a director in the Alabama company.

Q. With whom had you a contract to organize the company?—A. I do not remember who the contract is signed by, sir. It is in the hands of the Pan-Electric company here. It is on file. It will show for itself.

Q. A contract made between you and the Pan-Electric company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To organize a company in Alabama?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I do not exactly remember the contract. It is here. It shows for itself. It is better evidence probably than I could give two years afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. Are Col. Young's books here?

Mr. MILLARD. I have seen the contract. It has been in here.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) What was the name of the Alabama company?—A. It was called the Alabama Pan-Electric Company, I believe, sir.

Q. Was any other person a party to the contract with the company beside yourself?
—A. I think the contract was made in my name, sir. I do not think any other name appears on the book. Mr. Looney was interested with me in the organization of the company.

Q. Do I understand that you acquired no personal interest under this contract?
A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. You were acting merely as the agent of other persons for the establishment of the company?—A. Well, really, Mr. Boyle, I do not know exactly the capacity I held. I think, though, that I was to give them a given sum for the right, and I was to organize the State. That is my recollection about it, sir.

Q. That you were to give the Pan-Electric Company a certain sum for the right in the State of Alabama?—A. I think they were to have a certain sum. The company was to be organized. They made the transfer to the Alabama company. I did not do it. I do not think that the Alabama right was ever transferred to me. I think the transfer was made direct from the Pan-Electric Company here to the Alabama Company there.

Q. I am unable to gather from what you have said thus far whether you were the agent of the Pan-Electric company or a contractor with it.—A. They agreed to take so much for the State and I went down there and organized a company on that basis.

Q. They agreed to sell it to you?—A. They agreed to take so much, sir. As I stated, the contract sets forth that, and it can do it in a very much better and more clear manner than I can after two years. The contract is full and complete.

The CHAIRMAN (Referring to one of the company's books before him.) The contract does not seem to be recorded. I thought all the contracts were recorded?

Mr. MILLARD. The contract is a direct contract between Mr. Upshaw and the Pan-Electric company. The contract is in writing.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. I have seen it. The contract was for twenty thousand dollars, or something like that?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) With the right to establish a company in Alabama?—A. Yes, sir; really, I do not know whether the contract looked to me; I know this—that the Pan-Electric company made the transfer to the Alabama company; it is for Alabama.

Q. But the contract was with you?—A. The contract was with me, but the company made the transfer. Well, I suppose the contract is just like all the others, sir.

Q. (Submitting a paper to witness.) I show the witness a contract made between the Pan-Electric Telephone Company of the one part, and A. B. Upshaw, of the county of Davidson, State of Tennessee, of the other part, dated the 20th of August, 1884; state whether that is the contract you refer to?—A. (Referring to the contract.) Yes, sir; that is my signature.

Q. Was there any person interested with you in this contract?—A. Yes, sir; there was.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Looney was interested with me in the contract.

Q. Any other person?—A. T. C. Looney—R. F. Looney, jr.

Q. Two Looneys?—A. No, sir. Mr. R. F. Looney was interested with me.

Q. Any other person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you form a company in Alabama?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Known by what name?—A. The Alabama Pan-Electric Telephone Company, I think, sir.

Q. I see by this contract you were to pay to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company twenty thousand dollars. Did you pay them that much money?—A. Well, I have not had a full settlement with the Pan-Electric Company yet, sir.

Q. Well, sir, you may state whether you paid them that much?—A. I have not paid them that much yet, sir.

Q. How much did you pay?—A. Well, sir, I think they probably—well, I could not answer the question positively. I have paid them at different times. I know they got some stock and some cash; I do not remember the exact amount; I think four or five thousand dollars in cash, probably.

Q. Can you not be a little more explicit?—A. Well, that is about it. I don't know whether it was four or five thousand dollars; I cannot recollect positively.

Q. Who paid that money?—A. Well, I think I paid it, sir. I think their books will show what it is. I do not know.

Q. Have you any doubt as to whether you paid it?—A. Sir?

Q. Why do you say you think you paid it?—A. Well, I know I paid it.

Q. Well, is that all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you pay it?—A. I paid it almost directly after the organization of the company in 1884.

Q. What was the capital of the company you organized?—A. I think it was a half million dollars.

Q. For the State of Alabama?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the stock taken?—A. A stock-book was opened and stock was subscribed.

Q. The whole amount?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember by whom?—A. No, sir; I could not say now, sir.

Q. Can you name any of them at present?—A. Well, yes, sir; I can, I suppose. A man named—those people are all strangers to me, sir. I will give you their names. I do not know whether I can give you their initials or not. I know some of them. I never lived in Alabama. I was there only a short time.

Q. I wish you would do so.—A. Yes, sir. Well, Mr. Ansley and Mr. Gasser and Mr. Yates. Well, there were a number of them, sir. I cannot recall them now.

Q. Can you name any more?—A. I think there must have been thirty or forty stockholders, sir. I cannot recall their names now, sir.

Q. Can you name any more? I would like you to name all you can.—A. Yes, sir. I am just running it through my mind now, sir; but I have had so many things to look after since the winding up of this company that I have given it very little thought. (After reflecting.) I think Mr. Bang probably was a subscriber to it, and probably Mr. Collins was a subscriber; and a Dr. Jordan.

Q. Where in Alabama was it organized?—A. It was organized at Birmingham, sir.

Q. Did any of the banks or bankers there subscribe to the stock?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. If you can name any others please do so?—A. No; I cannot now recall them, sir. I might name them all if I had time to do it. If I had thought you wanted them I might have hunted them up and brought you the names of most of them.

Q. Have you the books of the company?—A. Oh, I never had the books. I never had anything to do with it. I am not an officer or director in the company. I have got nothing in the world to do with it. The company was organized; they elected their own officers and the right was transferred by the Pan-Electric Company to the Alabama Company, and there my labor ceased.

Q. What was your relation to the enterprise then?—A. I went down there and organized this company. Got these gentlemen to subscribe to the stock on this basis.

Q. As the agent of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Well, sir, as I stated, I think it is probable that I made the purchase of them. I think so. The contract sets forth what I was.

Q. I know. It seems to show you purchased the right yourself?—A. I do not think it does, sir. I think the contract bears me out on what I stated.

Mr. HALL. Shall I read it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the reporter need not take it.

Mr. HALL then read aloud to the committee the material portions of the contract.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. (Resuming.) You say that, in pursuance of that agreement, you did have a company incorporated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the laws of what State?—A. Under the laws of Alabama.

Q. With a capital of a half million dollars?—A. I think so, sir.

Q. How much money was paid in, if any?—I do not remember, sir.

Q. Was any?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A certain percentage; or how was it paid?—A. I think they arranged that among themselves, sir. They agreed to pay so much money. The organization was perfected after the stock was taken.

Q. To what extent were you concerned in organizing the company?—A. Just simply what I have stated—to get the parties to pay a certain amount of money, and then they organized the company themselves.

Q. You had nothing to do with the incorporation of the company, then?—A. I was not an officer nor a director in the company, sir.

Q. Well, you have said you paid the money to the Pan-Electric?—A. Well, I received it from the parties; yes, sir. I am interested in a branch company in Alabama, under this Alabama company. That I can tell you all about, because I am interested in it, own stock in it, am a director in it, and an officer in it.

Q. What is the name of that company?—A. The Noble Pan-Electric Company at Anniston, established August, 1884, and running ever since.

Q. How much territory does its right cover?—A. It covers that town and the county.

Q. What is its capital?—A. Ten thousand dollars.

Q. And who are the stockholders?—A. Well, sir, I am one of the stockholders. We bought the right from the Alabama Company, paid them a certain consideration for it, and went over there and established the company.

Q. How much did you pay?—A. Seven hundred and fifty dollars; I think we paid them in cash for that.

Q. Who were the stockholders?—A. Well, sir, Mr. Williams, of Anniston, and myself, Mr. Looney, a Mr. Pierson, and Mr. Lockwood, I believe. I think there were but five or six. We went into the organization. I had organized the company down there, and there was some talk about there being trouble, and I went over there and organized this company to show that, after having organized the company in Alabama, I was not afraid to put money in a company and start it, and I did.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Is either one of the Nobles in it?—A. I do not know whether they are or not, sir. (Submitting a paper.) Here is a list of the subscribers of the company. I simply organized that company to show that I did not ask the people to do things that I was afraid to do myself.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did you do this before or after the Alabama Company was incorporated?—A. The Alabama Company was incorporated first. We could not have made a contract with the Alabama Company until after it was incorporated.

Q. Then your contract was not made with individuals who afterwards became incorporators of the Alabama Company?—A. The Alabama Company, I think, was organized before the organization at Anniston. That is my recollection about it, sir.

Q. I do not get your meaning, I am bound to say that I do not follow you very clearly. I understand that you were authorized by the Pan-Electric under this contract to organize a company in Alabama.—A. I was.

Q. Well, did you organize it?—A. I did.

Q. The stock then was taken under your supervision, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And a company afterwards incorporated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did these persons who took this stock pay you anything?—A. They paid the amount they agreed to pay. They paid the money, notes, and collateral to me, and organized and subscribed to the stock.

Q. How much did they pay?—A. Well, I do not know, sir.

Q. Approximate it, if you can.—A. Well, sir, I am not positive about it, and I would rather not make a statement that I cannot substantiate. I am not positive about it.

Q. You cannot come near it?—A. Well, I have stated to you about the money I turned over to the other company.

Q. Well, that fact I have; but the other fact I want is what you got from the other side?—A. Well, I do not remember the exact amount; I forget; it was not very much either way from the amount I have paid the company.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. How much did you pay the company?—A. I have stated that once, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. State it again.—A. I paid them between four and five thousand dollars. I have not looked at their books lately and cannot say with exactness. I paid it at different times and in different ways. I sent them checks from Alabama, I sent them exchange on New York, and I paid the last payment that I think I made to Isham G. Harris in the city of Washington. I think that was five hundred dollars, the last money I turned over to them.

Q. What became of the difference between what you received and what you paid over?—A. I did not say there was any difference.

Q. You have not said there was not any difference; you leave us in doubt as to whether there was any difference; whether you paid more than you got or got more than you paid.—A. I say what I have paid; I think I paid to the Pan-Electric Company about all I got in Alabama; Mr. Looney was interested with me down in Alabama and he collected some money that was not turned over to the Pan-Electric Company; which fund was used to defray a part of our expenses.

Q. Then, must I understand from your connection with this enterprise that you got nothing whatever for yourself?—A. I got some stock in the Alabama company, sir, and still own it.

Q. You are a stockholder in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What proportion of the stock did you get?—A. I took some stock from parties who had subscribed and failed to take it; and then, I think, probably in addition to that, ten per cent. maybe.

Q. Did you get ten per cent. of the original stock?—A. Mr. Looney and myself, I think, got ten per cent. of the original stock. I think that was the understanding with the Alabama Company. And then there were some who failed to comply, as there are in all companies that organize. Parties subscribe and fail to take it, and that came up, and he and I took the stock.

Q. Was that the only consideration paid you and Mr. Looney by the corporation for the purchase of this right?—A. As I state, I have never had a full settlement with the company, sir.

Q. Was that all that was to be paid?

The WITNESS. Which?

The CHAIRMAN. Why ten per cent. of the stock?—A. We organized the company—

Q. (Interposing.) Mr. Upshaw, give us a plain statement of facts in regard to this matter.—A. Well, sir; I am trying to do that.

Q. Well, you are not succeeding very well. I want to know what consideration was paid to you and to Mr. Looney by the corporation that you organized in Alabama for the right to use the Pan-Electric instruments in that State?—A. I think, sir, we were to get all over a certain amount. They were to get $150,000 of stock, I think, which they got, and we were to get ten per cent. of the stock.

Q. What has become of the other $300,000 of stock?—A. Which other $300,000? The stockholders, I should say, would have some interest in that—the men who organized it.

Q. Well, then, who was to get the $150,000?—A. The Pan-Electric Company.

Q. The Pan-Electric Company, then, was to get $150,000?—A. They were to get 30 per cent. of the stock. We retained 10 per cent.

Q. And that was the only consideration that was to be paid to you, was it?—A. They were not to pay us anything.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the witness might extend the answer so far as to be in error. The contract itself specifies what the Pan-Electric is to get, and I suspect the 10 per cent. he talks about was not between him and the Pan-Electric, but between him and the subordinate company.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I understand that. I see the Pan-Electric was to have from him $20,000.

The WITNESS. It was $20,000.

Mr. MILLARD. That does not answer the chairman's question what was to be paid you.

The WITNESS. I made a contract with the company to go down there and organize this company.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not referring to that; but the chairman has asked you three or four times what amount of money you were to receive.

The WITNESS. I made a contract with the company to organize this company down there, and I did organize it. I organized it on this basis.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What basis?—A. On this $20,000 basis.

Q. What else; anything else?—A. No, sir. Mr. Looney and I organized the company in Alabama; we organized it on this $20,000 basis.

Q. The twenty thousand dollars cash that you paid the Pan-Electric?—A. It was to be paid. It was not all paid in cash. We took some paper.

Q. From your own statement they were to pay twenty thousand dollars cash, and thirty per cent. of the stock to the Pan-Electric company and ten per cent. to you?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Ten per cent. of the stock?—A. I said that we took ten per cent. of the stock originally.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. The subordinate company?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You went in with the other stockholders, taking stock as they did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you were to receive nothing?—A. What do you mean by receiving nothing?

Q. The corporation was to pay twenty thousand dollars and thirty per cent. of the stock to the Pan-Electric company?—A. That was the basis on which the company was organized.

Q. I do not care about that; and I do not see where you were to get anything, as you were a subscriber to the stock like any person who went into the enterprise; were the subscribers to the stock to pay anything for it?—A. They paid so much for the right and organizing the company; yes, sir.

Q. That is the twenty thousand dollars for the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they to pay anything more than the twenty thousand dollars?—A. They did not, sir.

Q. Were they to?—A. No, sir. Except the stock—this $150,000 of stock, thirty per cent. of the—

Q. (Interposing). Am I not right, then, in saying that for your part in this undertaking you were not to receive anything?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Well, then, what were you to receive?

Mr. HALL. Allow me to put a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. If you will allow me, I will put the question in this way: I understand that you went to work and organized an Alabama company upon a capital of $500,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you say that in subscribing for that stock the stockholders paid in $20,000 in cash?—A. No, sir; I did not say that.

Q. Well, how did they realize the $20,000 in cash?—A. Well, there was some paper given, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What percent. was it you say you were to have?—A. I say there was thirty per cent. to go to the company, and then we took ten per cent., which made forty, and that was the basis upon which the company was perfected.

Q. That did not give you control?—A. I do not say it did. I said the Alabama people had control. There was sixty per cent. for the Alabama people, which gave them control of the company.

Q. You did not subscribe like other people?—A. I did. I took some stock that was subscribed for by other parties.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You did not take this ten per cent. in that way?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you pay anything for that that you took?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Whether they gave paper or put in cash, was it not given in so-called pay for the stock originally subscribed for?—A. Yes.

Q. Then some of the members of that company did pay in cash, and some paid in paper obligations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, I want to ask whether, so far as the 10 per cent. you and Looney were to receive, you paid any cash or any paper, or whether that stock was given to you in consideration of the fact that you had organized the company?—A. I think that was the understanding; that the company and Mr. Looney and I should have 40 per cent. and this other company 60 per cent., thus giving them the control in Alabama.

Q. Then the real consideration received by you for organizing this company was the interest that was given you in the Alabama company?—A. Yes, sir; that is to say, from the Alabama Company. As to Pan-Electric, I decline to answer.

Mr. MILLARD. Then there is another question way back of that that I sympathize with the chairman in, and that is the amount of money he received from the Alabama company in addition to his stock.

The WITNESS. Well, I have answered that the best I can.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You are not able to say?—A. No.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did you receive anything in money?—A. I paid this company here between four and five thousand dollars, sir.

Q. Oh, no; but did you receive anything for your services?—A. I received that and turned it over to them.

Q. No, no; but for your services?—A. Well, I do not understand how I do stand with the company; it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to understand how I stand.

Mr. RANNEY. A Pennsylvania lawyer?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; or a Massachusetts lawyer, and another Pan-Electric investigating committee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It is not a question of what you did receive; it is a question of what you were to receive. What was your contract with this corporation?—A. You have the contract.

Q. No; I have not the contract with the Alabama corporation. I have the contract with the Pan-Electric. I just want to know what were the terms upon which you disposed of this right to the Alabama people?—A. The Alabama people were to pay, or agreed to pay, $20,000 and forty per cent. of the stock. That is as plain as I can answer it.

Q. Is that all they were to pay?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Is your contract with the Alabama company in writing?—A. The contract was made by the Pan-Electric Company with the Alabama company.

Q. Have you any contract in writing with the Alabama company?—A. No, sir; my part of it ceased when this company transferred——

Q. (Interposing.) You do not answer my question.—A. I say not, sir; that my contract ceased with them when this company stepped in and took it off my hands.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. But you agreed yourself personally to pay $20,000 in cash, or that it should be paid?

Mr. HALL. No, he did not agree that it should be. He said the corporation that organized should pay?

A. And the corporation which organized it satisfied the Pan-Electric company. One of its directors was present and made the transfer.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Upshaw, we will pass from that. Do you know of any public officers having been connected with any one of these companies?—A. Well, I am interested in the Alabama company as a stockholder. I am in a public office now.

Q. You were not a public officer at the time of organization?—A. Not at the time; no, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other?—A. Well, I suppose all these gentlemen are interested in it: Mr. Garland, Mr. Atkins, and Mr. Young.

Q. I want to know whether you know of any public officer who was a stockholder or interested in the Alabama Company?—A. Are not these gentlemen in public office and interested in the company? They got the stock, and were interested. I am answering it the best I can.

Q. That is quite apparent. That is not answering my question. I want to know whether any public officer was a stockholder in the Alabama Company?

The WITNESS. At the time of its organization?

The CHAIRMAN. At any time.

A. I do not think there was at the time, and do not think there is now.

Q. Do you know any in the subcompany?—A. No, sir; only myself.

Q. And you were not a public officer?—A. At that time; no, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say you have been connected with the press?—A. Yes.

Q. They call you General Upshaw. Were you a general?—A. I do not know that that is a pertinent question; I was on Governor Porter's staff while he was governor of the State of Tennessee, sir.

Q. It is only for the purpose of identification, as a mark of respect.—A. Thank you, sir; I notice you treat witnesses generally with very great respect.

Q. I understood you were connected with some press or newspapers formerly?—A. Well, sir, I owned two newspapers in Tennessee for a good long while, and I was subsequently connected with the Nashville American, the leading journal in the State of Tennessee.

Q. Were you connected with them when you made this contract?—A. I was not, sir.

Q. When did you become connected with them, and when did you cease to be connected?—A. Well, sir, I established the Columbia Journal at Columbia, Tennessee, in the year 1875. I conducted it until 1882, I think probably—1881 or 1882. I established a paper at Murfreesboro, in the county of Rutherford, Tennessee, in 1876. I owned both of those newspapers, weeklies, for some time.

Q. Do you own them now?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you cease to be connected with them?—A. I disposed of my Rutherford County paper I think in 1876, probably, and the other in 1881.

Q. And you have no interest in them now?—A. No, sir.

Q. With whom did you negotiate this original contract before it was drawn? I mean the original contract between you and the Pan-Electric company signed by Joseph E. Johnston, president of the Pan-Electric company, and A. B. Upshaw?—A. I think the first party that ever spoke to me about it, sir, was Mr. Looney, at Nashville.

Q. Who was the next?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Did you meet Casey Young about it?—A. I do not think I ever had any talk with Casey Young in my life about it.

Q. Or General Johnston?—A. No, sir.

Q. By this contract you agreed thus:

"And in consideration of said agreement to convey, the said A. B. Upshaw, agrees and binds himself to organize a corporation for the purpose of constructing telephone lines and exchanges and conducting a telephonic business in the said State of Alabama, in the next twenty days, and that immediately after the organization of said corporation it shall pay to the said party of the first part $20,000 in cash."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You by that clearly and manifestly bind yourself personally not only to organize the company within twenty days, but that the corporation shall pay $20,000 in cash. Those are the clear terms of agreement. Now, I understand that you never paid more than something like $5,000.

Mr. HALL. I object to that question on the ground that it is a legal question, asking for the opinion of the witness, and that the statement is not a correct statement according to the contract.

Mr. RANNEY. I wait for the ruling of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I cannot construe the contract.

Q. (Resuming.) Now, why did you not pay the remainder of the $20,000?

Mr. HALL. I say that that is asking the witness to answer as to the legal effect of that contract, which is a legal opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to make the statement upon his own responsibility as to the meaning of the contract, and then to put the question whether in point of fact he was to pay the money.

Mr. RANNEY. Why he did not pay it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not say that the question is right or wrong. If the witness does not agree with the construction put upon the contract, he can say he does not so understand it. But I think the question is not an improper one, so far as it is a question. Most of it is a statement.

Mr. OATES. The question ought to be whether he did not pay more than five thousand dollars?

The WITNESS. I have not said that I paid five thousand dollars. It was between four and five thousand dollars.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Why did you not pay the balance of the $20,000 according to this agreement?—

A. That is my private affair, that I do not think you have anything to do with.

Q. Do you decline answering it?—A. If the chairman thinks it is a proper question for me to answer, I will answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. I would not undertake to say that it is or is not a proper question. If you think it is a private matter that you ought not to answer, I do not say that you are compelled to.

Mr. HALE. It is a question that he may or may not answer.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you decline to answer? I claim the right to put the question in discharge of my own duty.

The CHAIRMAN (to the witness). You may state, sir.

A. I state this, sir—that I have not had a full settlement with the Pan-Electric company; that when the director came to Birmingham, Ala., and made this transfer to these gentlemen they were satisfied.

Q. You mean that they were satisfied to take five thousand dollars instead of $20,000?—A. I did not say that; I say they were satisfied with what I had done.

Q. What had you done that satisfied them as you understood it?—A. Well, I decline to answer that.

Q. Had you given them anything in place of the remaining $15,000?—A. I have stated time and time again, sir, that I had not finished settling with the Pan-Electric company.

Q. Do you understand that you owe them that now?—A. I do not understand that anybody has got anything to do with my private affairs or what I owe, and I decline to answer it.

Q. Did you give them a note for it?—A. I have not had a settlement with them, sir, hence I could not have given them a note.

Q. You mean that the balance of $15,000 remains unsettled, then, do you?—A. I do not mean anything of the sort.

Q. Well, what do you mean?—A. I mean that I have not had a full settlement with the Pan-Electric company, and that is a matter that is between myself and the Pan-Electric company, and a matter that I do not think the public have got anything to do with.

Q. And you decline to answer?—A. Positively; yes, sir.

Q. Under any instruction?—A. You might take me up to the bar of the House and have me do it.

The CHAIRMAN. He does not understand the question.

Q. Do you decline under any instruction from any quarter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you conferred with Casey Young about it?—A. I do not intend to permit people to insult me on the stand, Mr. Ranney. That is an impertinent question, and one that you would not put to me outside of this committee room.

Q. Have you conferred with Casey Young on the subject, is my question?

The WITNESS (to the chairman). Do you want me to answer the question?

The CHAIRMAN. You can answer it or not, as you see proper.

The WITNESS. I do not think that the gentleman has any right to insult me on the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. You can decline to answer it if you like.

The WITNESS. Sometimes people who are clothed in the protection of members of Congress say things that they would not otherwise say, and I think that any man that will attempt to browbeat a witness on the stand or to intimidate him acts cowardly.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that is uncalled for. If you desire you can decline to answer.

The WITNESS. I do not own any stock in the Bell Telephone Company, and never have owned any.

Mr. MILLARD. I would like to know whether he has his pistols with him or not, Mr. chairman.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the stenographer read my question to the witness?

The STENOGRAPHER (reading). "Have you conferred with Casey Young on the subject, is my question?"

The WITNESS. What subject?

Mr. RANNEY. The subject to which I was referring in my previous question.

The WITNESS. As to whether I should answer that question or not, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question you are to answer.—A. Positively not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. (Resuming.) Did the corporation give the parent company any note for the balance of the $20,000?—A. I have stated time and again that the company made a transfer to the Pan-Electric company in Alabama, and one of its directors was present and did it, and that they were satisfied with the organization, and there is still a settlement to be made between me and the company. As far as the Alabama company was concerned the Pan-Electric company have got nothing to do with them, and the Pan-Electric Company is thoroughly satisfied.

Q. Do you mean in the organization of the company you acted as the agent of the Pan-Electric company, and whatever you did they were satisfied with, whether you got the $20,000 or not?—A. No; I do not mean that. I never said that.

Q. What do you say or claim, then?—A. I said that this company was satisfied; that they did not look to the Alabama company for any more, and that they were satisfied as far as the Alabama was concerned with what they had gotten, and there is a settlement between me and the Pan-Electric company.

Q. They did not look to the Alabama Pan-Electric company for the balance of the $20,000. That you understood. Now I want to know if you mean that they did not look to you either for that balance?—A. As I stated, sir, there is a settlement between myself and the Pan-Electric company which they look to me for, I suppose.

Q. Will you answer my question? I repeat it. A. I have answered the best I know how.

Q. Well, I will repeat it so that you may understand it fully, and I will take your answer, such as you see fit to give. You say you paid the parent company, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, inside of $5,000—about that—and that you did not get any more than that from the corporation, and that the director came down there and was satisfied with it and did not ask anything more from the Alabama company?—A. No, I did not say that.

Q. If you did not say that, state how the fact was?—A. I stated that the Pan-Electric company was satisfied with what I did. They were satisfied with the contract that was made with me, and they were satisfied to transfer to the Alabama company—gave them a complete transfer and they are operating under it.

Q. And getting no more than the five thousand dollars you have paid?—A. That is all they have gotten up to now.

Q. Now, I want to know if you mean to be understood that the parent company was satisfied with that, and not to receive any more of the $20,000?—A. No; I do not mean to say any such thing.

Q. What do you mean to say?—A. They have never signified themselves as satisfied with that at all as a settlement between myself and the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. What else do they claim should be done?—A. Oh, I do not know.

Q. Will you be kind enough, now, to state what has been done in relation to the payment of the remaining $15,000; I use that for an even number?—A. I did not say there was $15,000.

Q. If less than five thousand dollars had been paid out of the $20,000, I want to know what was done in relation to that balance?—A. I have paid since the organization of that company some money to Senator Harris here.

Q. How much?—A. I do not know; I do not remember.

Q. Please state how much.—A. I do not remember; I think it was about $500, probably.

Q. Did you pay it to him individually or for the company?—A. For the company; and I think I took his receipt for it as vice-president.

Q. Or did he let you have the $500 which was paid to the company, and you pay it back to him?

The WITNESS. Who let me have $500?

Mr. RANNEY. Will the stenographer read the question?

The STENOGRAPHER (reading). "Or did he let you have the $500 which was paid to the company, and you pay it back to him?"—A. No; he never let me have any money. I paid him $500, I think. That was the last.

Q. Can you tell us about when it was?—A. It was some time in the latter part of 1884, I think.

Q. So that that was embraced in the $4,500 which you have heretofore stated, was it not?—A. If I understood your question, Mr. Ranney, it was whether I had paid anything since the organization of the company, and I tried to tell you that.

Q. You have told me it, and I ask you now whether that five hundred dollars is not embraced in the $4,500 you have stated you paid?—A. I do not know whether it is or not.

Q. How long has it been since you have had any talk with the company in relation to the things which remain unsettled as you before stated?—A. Well, I have talked to them occasionally. I do not know whether I have had anything to say to them recently or not. There has not been much said about it since. About that time there were some suits brought; one suit in Pennsylvania, I think, and I think that Senator Harris suggested to me that there ought not to be any steps taken to do anything further about asking people to pay that had agreed to pay down in Alabama, and under his instructions I have not done it. That is under his instructions and by his advice; I asked him about it.

Q. So that whether they can hold you for that $15,000 (about that) remains undetermined yet—unsettled, does it?—A. There is still a settlement between myself and the Pan-Electric company, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the stenographer read the question?

The STENOGRAPHER [reading]. "So that whether they can hold you for that $15,000 (about that) remains undetermined yet—unsettled, does it?—A. There has been nothing said about that, sir.

Q. Then, what did you mean by your previous answer when you said that the company was satisfied with what you had done, without anything more, as was implied?—A. I did not say that.

Q. It seemed to be implied?—A. Yes, implication and—

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). He stated that the company did not look to the Alabama company; it was between him and the Pan-Electric.

The WITNESS. I took some paper and other collateral in Alabama, Mr. Chairman.

Q. (Resuming.) You say the capital stock of the Alabama company was $500,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And now, as I understand you, the only amount of money paid to them was about $5,000, and that was all you got from the stockholders? Do I understand that is all the corporation got from the stockholders in cash for the stock taken?—A. That is about all they have got up to now, sir, I think.

Q. The capital stock subscribed for was $500,000. Was it all subscribed for by individuals?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. Individuals subscribed for the $500,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did they pay on their stock or were they to pay?—A. They organized a company themselves, sir. I had nothing to do with that.

Q. Do you not know what the subscribers who had got into that company were to pay for their stock?—A. I suppose they went into it on the basis of $20,000 to $500,000, sir. I suppose that was the basis upon which the company was organized.

Q. That is, if the par value of the stock was one hundred dollars, how much were they to pay on a share?—A. Well, sir, I think it was about one to fifteen probably. I think it would be about one to fifteen, would it not? I do not know; you can make the calculation.

Q. Twenty thousand is one-fifth part. That would be a fifteenth of five hundred?—A. Yes; twenty thousand, limited.

The CHAIRMAN. Four cents on the dollar, is it not?

Mr. HALL. Four cents on the dollar on five hundred is twenty dollars.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. (Resuming.) In other words, this fixes it that the patents were put into the corporation at $20,000?—A. Yes.

Q. And the subscribers for stock, in all, were to pay twenty thousand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that so when the parent company was going to have $150,000 of it?—A. As I remember it, they had three hundred thousand of the stock, and the parent company and Mr. Looney and myself had two hundred thousand, and they would pay as the twenty thousand is to three hundred thousand—about fifteen to one, sir.

Q. But all that was paid in by those who subscribed for it was about five thousand dollars?—A. I did not say that, Mr. Ranney, and you may question me all day and you cannot get me to say that, because that is not the fact; and your attempting to get me to say what is not the fact I will not submit to.

Q. Be kind enough to state the fact?—A. I have stated that I had some paper in Alabama; that some parties subscribed in Alabama that did not come up, and that I had taken some of the stock myself, and I feel that the Alabama company is relieved of any responsibility, and whatever responsibility there is I am responsible for to the Pan-Electric company.

Q. Well, would you be kind enough to state then what the fact is. How much was paid in if I have made the wrong inference?—A. Well, sir; I have stated all I know about it. I have given you as clear a statement of it as I can possibly do. I do not know what else I can say. I have tried to state it to you.

Q. Who is the treasurer of the Alabama company?—A. I do not know who is the treasurer now, sir.

Q. Who was when it was organized?—A. I think Mr. Lockwood was.

Q. What Lockwood?—A. I think Julius Lockwood is his name.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. He lives in Alabama.

Q. What part of Alabama?—A. Birmingham.

Q. Who was the president of the company?—A. Dr. Jordan.

Q. Be kind enough to give his given name.—A. I think his name is M. L. Jordan, sir.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. In Birmingham. I expect Mr. Oates knows him.

Q. You gave here what purports to be a list of stockholders?

The WITNESS. A list of what?

Mr. RANNEY. Stockholders, I understood.

A. A list of subscribers to instruments in Alabama.

Q. As I understood you, they were subscribers for the stock?—A. Oh, no; subscribers to an exchange in Alabama.

Q. You mean subscribers who took the instruments?—A. I mean there is an exchange in Alabama now, at Anniston, that had been running since August, 1884; subscribers just like you would be a subscriber here, taking an instrument and paying for it.

Q. Then you did not mean what I understood at the time. I thought you meant subscribers to the stock. That is what I understood the chairman to be talking about. Do you know who were subscribers to the stock?—A. I gave some of the names some time ago. I do not know many people in Alabama. I was there only a short time.

Q. How many in number were there?—A. Thirty-five or forty, sir, scattered all around.

Q. While you were engaged in organizing this corporation and attending to this business did you have a correspondence by letter with the parent company?—A. I do not know but what I did, sir. I suppose I did.

Q. How long a time were you engaged in it?—A. I was there, I suppose, probably forty to sixty days.

Q. With whom did you correspond?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Well, try and remember, if you please.—A. I cannot say, sir, who I corresponded with. I corresponded with the Pan-Electric company here, I think, sir.

Q. By name? Did you receive any letters in reply?—A. I take it I did, sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state where they are?—A. Oh, I have no idea, sir.

Q. Have you not kept them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what has become of the letters you wrote to the Pan-Electric company?—A. No, sir; I do not. I do not know whether I wrote any or not. I think I did, though.

Q. Well, now as to that subordinate company. Who is the president of that company?—A. Mr. Lockwood is the president, I think, sir.

Q. The same man that you mentioned before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who is the treasurer of the subordinate company?—A. I think Mr. Looney is, sir.

Q. That embraced only one company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was put in by the Alabama company?—A. Yes, sir; and they got $750 for it from this local company.

Q. What was the capital stock of that?—A. The capital stock was put at ten thousand dollars.

Q. How much of that was subscribed for?—A. It was all subscribed, taken by the parties.

Q. How much was paid for it?—A. I do not now recall. I think, though, that the agreement was that they were to establish an exchange there and build it up, which they did do.

Q. They gave the use of the patents for the territory embraced in that one county?

The WITNESS. Who did, sir?

Mr. RANNEY. The parent company; the Alabama company.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gave it to that company for $750?—A. And a certain percentage of their earnings.

Q. What per cent. of the earnings were they to have?—A. I think they were to have thirty per cent. of the local company—twenty-five, maybe.

Q. How much of the stock?—A. Twenty per cent. of the stock.

Q. Besides the $750?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were one of the organizers of that corporation?—A. Yes, sir; I am a stockholder and one of the directors in that company.

Q. Well, how much did the original parties subscribe for the company?—A. I think that they put in at the time—I do not remember positively about it, but I think that in all it cost about three thousand dollars or thirty-five hundred dollars.

Q. The subscription to the stock, I mean?—A. No; I mean the organization of the company.

Q. Were there ten thousand dollars subscribed for in that telephone company for stock?—A. Yes, sir; the stock was regularly subscribed.

Q. Did they pay you the par value of the stock?—A. Oh, no.

Q. How was that?—A. Oh, they just subscribed so much stock.

Q. Well, how much were they to pay for it?—A. I do not now recall, sir.

Q. Do you remember what you paid, or did you get your stock for nothing?—A. I have stated, sir, that we built the company there—started it. It was the understanding that we were to establish a company there, and that it was to have so many instruments, and that it was to be thoroughly equipped and ready for business.

Q. Well, you are now speaking of the subordinate company?—A. Yes; the company I know something about, being a stockholder.

Q. I ask whether you got your stock for organizing the company or whether you paid for it?—A. I paid for it just like other people paid for their stock.

Q. For the stock originally how much did you pay?—A. We agreed to establish a company and put it in running order.

Q. Did you subscribe for the stock?—A. We subscribed for the stock.

Q. And had to put in capital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the patents or the right to use the patents for the limited territory put in as a payment of capital?—A. Yes, sir; we made the purchase of the home company, the Alabama company, for the right in that county, for which we paid $750, and the directors took stock and subscribed for it.

Q. Was the stock put into the company as payment of the capital stock of $10,000, the right to the patent?—A. I do not believe I understand the question.

Q. You formed a company with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that capital stock paid by putting in the patents for it—that is, the right to use them?—A. I think so. I think we subscribed the stock, and we agreed to establish the company in addition. I think in addition to the money paid to the home company, the Alabama Company, that we agreed to put in active operation fifty instruments in Anniston.

Q. The patent or right of patent which you obtained was put in in payment of ten thousand dollars?—A. The right to the patent and fifty instruments and wires and poles and switch-boards and everything of that sort was put in the ten thousand dollars. That is what I stated, sir.

Q. Were not those poles set after the company was formed?—A. Yes; they were to be furnished without any extra cost, and we were to furnish them.

Q. Did the money subscribed for the capital stock exceed the $750 cash which you were to pay the Alabama Company?—A. I do not think I understand the question. I have tried to state it the best I know how.

Q. When a man got a share of the stock, how much in cash directly did he pay, for that stock; not what he paid in afterwards to develop the enterprise?—A. I think that was a part of the contract; that fifty instruments should be put up, the wires should be put up, and a switch board should be put up, and the Exchange should be put in active running order.

Q. And the expense of that was to be added to the $750 which you paid the Alabama Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did it amount to?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Can you not give us an idea?—A. I suppose it amounted to thirty-five hundred or four thousand dollars.

Q. Was that all that was subscribed for originally by the subscribers for the stock?—A. I do not know. I have given you a statement of all the facts I know about it.

Q. Was the original amount subscribed by the subscribers for the stock paid?—A. I have given you the clean-cut facts. I do not know.

Q. When you went to a man and asked him to subscribe for stock, supposing he subscribed one hundred shares, how much did you require him to pay in cash for those one hundred shares?—A. The stock was taken by five gentlemen, sir, for the Alabama company. We established a company there. Mr. Looney and myself were interested in the organization of the original company, the Alabama company.

Q. It was established by five gentlemen, and they took the whole stock?—A. They took the whole stock and agreed to furnish the right to the Pan-Electric for that county and to put fifty instruments in.

Q. They sold the stock on the market?—A. They never sold it.

Q. They hold it still?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was no definite sum which they were to pay for that stock?—A. I think not.

Q. And whatever they put in was for the benefit of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever put it on the market?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have the opinion of Mr. Garland in any circular down in Alabama as to that patent?—A. I think that there was an opinion of Mr. Garland generally circulated in the papers that it did not infringe any other telephone.

Q. Do you remember what opinion that was, to identify it?—A. It was an opinion given to some gentleman; I have forgotten the name, sir.

Q. Was it Myers?—A. It strikes me that it was.

Q. You had it printed and circulated?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Well, was it done?—A. I think it was in printed form.

Q. In what sort of printed form?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Was it a circular?—A. I cannot just now recall whether it was or not.

Q. Did you have the opinion of Senator Harris?—A. I think so.

Q. And that was printed and circulated, was it?—A. I do not know about that; I think it was, though.

Q. Did you have Mr. Young's opinion also?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Do you know about how many stockholders there were in the Alabama company?—A. I do not, sir; I could not say.

Q. Well, about how many?—A. Well, I haven't any idea.

Q. Was that confined to a few, or was it sold in the market?—A. It was taken generally, sir.

Q. It went generally in the market?—A. I do not think it was sold. I think the people just went into the company and subscribed at the time.

Q. Was there a number of stockholders amounting to one hundred?—A. Oh, no, I think not.

Q. You say your telephone company there is in operation now?—A. Yes, sir; it has been running since 1884.

Q. Did you have any correspondence with anybody about the bringing of the Government suit?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. Are you sure?—A. I am sure that I did not.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of it before it was brought?—A. I do not know that I did.

Q. Do you know that you did not?—A. I do not know really when it was brought, I paid so little attention to it.

Q. Where did you get your first information in regard to it and from whom?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Can you not recall?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is your office in the Interior Department?—A. I am in the Second National Bank.

Q. In the bank building?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the same place with General Atkins?—A. No, sir.

Q. On whose recommendation were you appointed?—A. I think, sir, that I was indorsed by the Tennessee Democratic delegation entire, by a number of prominent gentlemen from Tennessee and probably Mississippi.

Q. Did Senator Harris indorse and recommend you?—A. Yes; on paper.

Q. Casey Young?—A. Yes; on paper.

Q. John C. Brown?—A. I think so.

Q. Attorney-General Garland?—A. No, sir.

Q. Dr. Rogers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Senator Vest?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you your paper by which you were recommended?—A. I do not think anybody recommended me for the place that I was appointed to, sir, except the Commissioner.

Q. You were recommended to another place?—A. Yes, I was recommended by the entire Tennessee Democratic delegation for an inspector's place, and Mr. Young and Mr. Harris urgently, persistently, and in person recommended another man for the place, and never opened their mouths in my behalf at all, and if the other man had been appointed I should not have been.

Q. An inspector's place where?—A. Indian inspector.

Q. In the Indian Office?—A. Yes, sir; and neither one of them ever opened his mouth for me, and I felt right sore about it after they were committed on paper.

Q. You are now in the Indian Office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is the higher office, the place you have?—A. The inspector's place pays $3,000; the place I have pays $2,000.

Q. If they had recommended you for the higher place, that would have been under General Atkins?—A. No, sir; General Atkins had nothing under the heavens of God to do with it.

Q. Did not a good deal of dissatisfaction grow out of this in Alabama?—A. I do not know that there has been any great amount of dissatisfaction.

Q. What has been the extent of it?—A. I have not heard anything from Alabama recently. About the time of the bringing of this Pennsylvania suit there was some little feeling, I think, probably.

Q. Growing out of what?—A. Of the bringing of that suit in Pennsylvania.

Q. Feeling towards whom?—A. I do not know that there was any special feeling against anybody, sir. It was just the thought that they would probably have a law-suit and they did not expect any.

Q. None of the stockholders were dissatisfied?—A. I expect they were, sir. I have never known a stock company to be organized without some dissatisfaction.

Q. Is the Alabama company in operation?—A. I do not know, sir; I do not think it is.

Q. Did it ever get so far as to put up instruments and go into business?—A. There were a number of private telephones put up in Alabama, sold outright by them under their charter.

Q. Did they go into the telephone business, putting up lines?—A. The only telephone lines that I know of put up, a regular exchange, was at Anniston.

Q. That is a subordinate company?—A. Yes; but that is under control of the Alabama company.

Q. How do they control it?—A. They gave the Alabama company so much of their stock.

Q. I only want to understand you. The Alabama company, the general one, the first one organized, never has put up lines and gone into operation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They have?—A. I do not think they have—that is, the Alabama company. There is an exchange in Alabama running.

Q. That is at Anniston, a subordinate company?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What is your official position?—A. I am chief clerk of the Indian Office.

Q. Are you next to General Atkins?—A. I have charge of the entire office when he is away, sir.

Q. And were you appointed after or before you acquired this interest in the Alabama company?—A. I was appointed afterwards, sir.

Q. And about how long after?—A. Oh, eight or nine months, I take it, sir.

Q. Was General Atkins at the head of that Department at the time of your appointment?—A. He was the head of the Indian Office.

Q. At that time?—A. Yes; and I was appointed on his recommendation.

Q. You were appointed upon the recommendation of General Atkins, you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what way was the recommendation made?—A. Well, sir, the chief clerk of the Indian Office is a man that the Commissioner ought to have entire confidence in, and he asked that I be appointed to the place.

Q. Well, was the recommendation in writing?—A. I think not, sir. I think he went to the Secretary and asked to be allowed to appoint me to the place.

Q. Who went to the Secretary?—A. The Commissioner did. I think he asked him. I know Mr. Lamar previous to that time said he intended to give me a place. Mr. Lamar has known me ever since I was an infant.

Q. Did General Atkins ask Secretary Lamar?—A. Yes; I think it was done at his instance. I think he wanted it done.

Q. And you still hold the stock in the subcompany?—A. Yes, sir; I have got some stock in the subcompany.

Q. And you have got stock in the Alabama company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And consequently you are interested in the Government suit?—A. Well, I do not think I am, sir. As far as I am concerned individually I would very much rather the suit had never been brought, because I do not think it is going to benefit the Pan-Elctric company.

Q. Why, individually; you say individually you regret the suit was brought?—A. I do not think it is going to benefit the Pan-Elctric company. I do not think the suit, no matter how it is decided, will benefit the Pan-Elctric company. The annulling of the Bell patent, I take it, will turn all of them loose, and I do not think anybody's stock will be worth much.

Q. If the Bell patent is destroyed and yours takes its place it will benefit yours, will it not?—A. Well, I should say so, if it was destroyed and Pan Electric substituted. But that is hardly probable.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I want to ask you a few questions. I do not know that I fully understand the original transaction. Were you a resident of Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you got this contract you went down into Alabama as a promoter of a new company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you made an arrangement with a number of gentlemen to organize such a corporation?—A. Yes.

Q. On a capital of five hundred thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of that you provided that that company should pay over to you for the benefit of the interest received from the parent company two hundred thousand dollars?—A. Yes, sir. That was one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the Pan-Electric and fifty thousand dollars for Mr. Looney and myself.

Q. Did you say Mr. Looney was interested, and you were acting with him?—A. Mr. Robert F. Looney, jr.

Q. Well, upon the $300,000 that was retained by the local shareholders they were to pay enough money or its equivalent to pay the $20,000 provided in your contract with the Pan-Electric company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I understand you to say that some of those parties paid in cash and some gave their personal obligations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that cash and those personal obligations came into your hands?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the representative of this contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the Pan-Electric company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that after the organization had proceeded to that point an authorized director of the Pan-Electric company came down there to adjust matters as between the parent company and this newly-organized company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And pursuant to that arrangement the new company received its patent right and exercised its privileges in the State of Alabama?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was absolved from any further obligation except to pay royalties?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from that, on the adjustment for the money paid, and the notes given as the equivalent, rested between you and the company?—A. Between me as the representative of the Pan-Electric company and the Alabama company.

Q. And that fund thus coming into your hands was between four and five thousand dollars in cash?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you still hold notes, and there is an unadjusted and unsettled account between you and the company?—A. Yes, sir. I stated just right there that there were some parties who failed to take what they subscribed for, as there are in all companies.

Q. And you took that stock yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the local company organized on a basis of ten thousand dollars of stock. I understand five gentlemen met together, and having ascertained that the right to that county could be purchased for $750, and that the cost of equipping the company and putting it on its feet was another sum, they agreed to raise that sum of money themselves?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And pay the $750 to the Alabama company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Acquiring the equipment?—A. Yes, sir; giving them 20 per cent. of the stock.

Q. Giving them in payment of their contributions eight thousand in stock?—A. Giving the Alabama company two thousand.

Q. Which was regarded altogether as paid-up stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said a moment ago that the people generally subscribed in the Alabama company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Subscribed for it as people do in taking railroad stock, when there is an enterprise of that kind on foot?—A. Yes, sir. They agreed upon so much money for this right, and they got together and named the amount that they would capitalize the company at then, and the stock was issued.

Q. Now, was any of the fund that came into your hands from the Alabama company, whether it was money or notes, ever used by you for the purpose of influencing directly or indirectly any Government official?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has it ever been diverted from the trust under which it was originally placed in your hands?—A. Never on earth, sir.

Q. Was any of the stock of these companies ever issued for the purpose of influencing directly or indirectly any Government official?—A. Never on earth, sir; as far as I am concerned, or as I know.

Mr. HALL. I believe that is all.

The WITNESS. I would like to state that I am positive—to explain something about my appointment—that at the time of my appointment my having any connection with the Alabama Pan-Electric company or any other telephone company was not known by Mr. Atkins, or if it was it never entered his head, and any insinuation of that sort is without foundation in fact or at all.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. I have another question which I intended to ask you but it escaped me at the time. You spoke of a certain director going to Birmingham?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which one of the directors was that?—A. Col. Robert F. Looney.

Q. Of the Pan-Electric?—A. Yes, sir.

CECIL CLAY recalled and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question, Mr. Clay, you were to produce some papers from the Department?—Answer. Yes, sir; I have here certain papers where requests were refused in applications to bring suits to annul patents for inventions, going back as far as 1871, I think; I find six cases on the record. [Submitting papers.]

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. Going back to the time the Department of Justice was established?—A. Yes, sir; as far as the investigation from which that list of cases in which the applications had been granted went during the time covered by the list formerly furnished of cases in which the request had been allowed, I find the six cases in which the request was refused.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You have not made any other list of cases in which suits were allowed?—A. No, sir; these are the six cases, the original letters received. Those are the original letters received in each of those six cases, and, I think, certified copies in each of the six cases of the letters written from the Department, certified to separately, so as to accompany in each case the original letters received. It would be impossible to bring the original letters, but these certified copies were made from letter-press books.

Q. Have you a list of the applications granted?—A. (Submitting a paper.) This is a list of the applications granted, so that it can be seen in which cases reference was made, and in which cases no reference was made, to the Interior Department.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney may examine the Speaker. I do not know of any matter to which I desire to call his attention.

Mr. RANNEY. The Speaker knows to what the investigation relates. I would prefer he should make his own statement.

The WITNESS. I suppose, simply because I know of nothing else that I could testify in relation to, that the committee desire perhaps to hear whether I have ever received any letter or offer from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or any company connected or supposed to be connected with it. I know nothing about any other matter pending before the committee so far as I now remember.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as I know, that is the only matter.

Mr. RANNEY. Dr. Rogers has spoken of sending some stock to you, or letter about some stock. I do not remember just what his testimony was.

The WITNESS. I do not know whether I ever had a letter from Dr. Rogers or not. I do not know Dr. Rogers. But I have a letter from a gentleman who signs himself J. Harris Rogers.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; that is the one.

The WITNESS. About the first of May, 1884, I received this letter, which is dated on the 28th of April, 1884, at the Continental Hotel, in Philadelphia, and which I will read.

The CHAIRMAN. If you please.

The WITNESS (reading):

“APRIL 28TH, 1884.

“DEAR SIR:”

I believe that is the address.

“I am instructed by The Rogers Telephone and Telegraph Company corporators to advise you that you have been elected a director in the company and that $100,000 of the stock will be put to your credit for such occasional services as you may find it convenient to render. You will doubtless remember the cordial introduction given me to you by General Joseph E. Johnston, when I applied for the place of electrician of the House, and which you were anxious that I should obtain from the Architect. The new company will start under favorable auspices, with splendid instruments and the stock will appreciate in value as we build up.

“Requesting prompt reply and your acceptance, I have the honor to be

“Your obedient servant,

“J. HARRIS ROGERS,
“Secretary of the Board.”

That letter, as I say, must have been received about the 29th or 30th of April or 1st of May, because I find that my answer to it was made on the 1st of May. It frequently happens, and in fact is almost always the case, that I am a little behind with my correspondence, and sometimes do not reach for two or three days a letter on my table for the purpose of answering it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. 1883 or 1884?—A. 1884. I have had my private secretary copy my answer from his stenographic notes, and I presume that it is a correct copy.

The CHAIRMAN. You may read it.

The WITNESS. It is not signed by me, because it is merely a copy from his own book.

Q. But you replied to it and signed it?—A. Yes, sir; I will sign my name to this. I have no reason to believe that it is not a correct copy. He can tell about that himself (reading):

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1884.

J. HARRIS ROGERS,
Continental Hotel, Philadelphia:

DEAR SIR: Your favor, informing me that I have been elected a director of the Rogers Telephone-Telegraph Company, and that $100,000 of the stock would be placed to my credit as a consideration for such services as I may perform, has been received.

Before accepting the position or the stock it would be necessary for me to be advised on two points:

First, I desire to see the charter or prospectus of the company; and, secondly, I want to know whether or not it will under any circumstances be dependent upon Congressional action for any favors or benefits. So long as I remain a member of Congress I will not become interested in any company or enterprise concerning which Congressional legislation may be asked.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE.

And that is the last I have ever heard of the matter. I want to say that when I received this letter I had no recollection whatever of ever having seen Mr. Rogers at any time, but I did remember after reading it that General Johnston brought some gentleman into my room one morning, who said that he was an applicant for the position of electrician of the House, an appointment which belongs to the Architect, but which is made subject to the approval of the Speaker, and my recollection was then and is now that I said to him that I had nothing to do with the making of the appointment, but would approve anything the Architect of the Capitol did, as the responsibility for this place was upon him and not upon me. Perhaps I am more strongly under the impression I made this statement to him for the reason that that is the statement I almost invariably made to everybody who came to me for this place, that I would approve whatever the Architect of the Capitol did.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. There is an allusion in his letter to an anxiety on your part to have him appointed to that position. I suppose that is simply a mode of expression in his letter.—A. I certainly manifested no anxiety about it, and so far as I know or believe, never heard the Architect say a word upon the subject, and I would not know Mr. Harris Rogers now if I were to see him. I ought to say that a great many gentlemen who wanted positions under the Architect after I became Speaker of the House applied to me for my influence in their behalf, and I always told them that I would approve whatever the Architect did.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Were you aware of the resolution introduced on the subject of Mr. Rogers's appointment by Mr. Robinson, of New York, at that session; do you recollect anything about it?—A. I have no recollection whatever about it.

Q. I did not suppose you had?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you aware while you were in the House that the establishment of a Government postal telegraph company was the subject of legislation?—A. Of proposed legislation; yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect how long that had been pending before Congress; you were here some time?—A. I think that almost ever since I have been in the House there have been propositions of that sort either pending or talked about, perhaps bills introduced and referred to committees, and my recollection now is that there was at one time a bill reported back from the committee by Mr. Money, of Mississippi, not, I think, according to my present recollection, to purchase lines or to establish lines by the Government, but to employ some company to transmit messages for the Government.

Q. Do you recollect what term it was when Mr. Money reported that?—A. I think it was in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, the last Congress.

Q. Your recollection is that he reported it favorably?—A. I think he did, but the bill will show you how it was.

Mr. RANNEY. I had forgotten that.

The WITNESS. And while I did not have any reason to suppose that the purpose of this letter was to influence a public man in his official action, still I confess that I had a little shade of suspicion that something of this sort would come before Congress, as I knew that there were efforts being made to employ telegraph companies. This seems to have been a telephone and telegraph company, and, as my letter shows, I did not know but something of this sort might come up afterwards.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Speaker a question?

The CHAIRMAN. With the consent of the committee.

(No objection was made by any member of the committee.)

By Mr. YOUNG:

Q. Do you remember that the postal bill reported by Mr. Money had a clause that provided that no company could accept the terms of that bill that did not have a thousand miles of wire?—A. I would not like to state what the provisions of the bill were, because it has been a long time since I saw it; but I remember that I did examine it at the time, and was then familiar with its provisions.

Q. You do not remember what the last clause of that bill was?—A. No; I do not.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Mr. Speaker, you have no recollection of receiving a letter from J. W. Rogers?—A. I never received a letter from him in my life, that I know of.

(The Speaker here left the stand.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Beach, I see, is present.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, did you want to use me as a witness?

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose that is the purpose.

Mr. BEACH. I was told by the Sergeant-at-Arms to come down here. I was going to say that possibly I would be a more intelligent witness when I had the original letter that was sent to me. I suppose my being sent for relates to that?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEACH. I haven't that here with me; it is at my rooms.

Mr. MILLARD. We can show you a copy of that.

Mr. BEACH. Very well, sir.

Hon. LEWIS BEACH, M. C., sworn and examined.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. How many terms of Congress have you been a member?—Answer. I came in in the 47th Congress. This makes the fifth session.

Q. One of the witnesses here has testified to having sent to you by letter at some time some stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or some of the companies growing out of it, I do not remember which. Will you state your recollection about it?—A. I did receive a letter, and it was signed by, I think, J. W. Rogers or J. H. Rogers, and it contained a certificate for a hundred shares of the capital stock of the American Postal Telegraph Company, as I now remember. I would state to the committee that I wish I had the letters before me. I would be able to testify then in regard to the dates.

Q. You have preserved the letters, of course?—A. I have the original letter and the draft which I prepared in reply.

The CHAIRMAN. You can furnish those hereafter.

The WITNESS. I can furnish them hereafter.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You can state the substance of the letters and then they will speak for themselves when we get them.—A. The letter that I received from Dr. Rogers stated substantially that he inclosed a certificate for some shares of stock, and the idea was that it was to pay me for reading. He made some allusion to a poem. If Mr. Millard has the letter there before him—

Mr. MILLARD. (Interposing.) I will try and find it; but I doubt whether it has been published.

The CHAIRMAN. I doubt whether it has been published.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think we have had it.

Q. (Resuming.) That is enough to identify it. You can say what you did, and let the letters speak for themselves.—A. I received that letter in my morning mail at the Portland, where I was stopping at that time and where I am now stopping. I brought it up to the House with me, and on the floor of the House I consulted Judge Holman, and I showed it to Judge Holman, and when I returned to my rooms that afternoon I prepared an answer to the letter—

Q. (Interposing.) Can you state what your conversation was with Judge Holman, substantially?

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. I can see no reason why a conversation with Judge Holman should be put in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. It may relate to the propriety of his accepting.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be incompetent.

The WITNESS. No, it was not with regard to the propriety of accepting it, but in regard to the manner of returning the stock. He was an old member, and I had great confidence in his integrity and honesty. I thought it would be well for me to advise with him in regard to the particular manner of returning the stock.

Q. Is there objection to your stating the conversation with Judge Holman?—A. None, whatever.

Mr. RANNEY. If it is a private conversation it is not proper to state it.

The WITNESS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent to give an opinion expressed by Judge Holman as to the propriety or impropriety of his accepting the stock.

The WITNESS. He never expressed any. I did not consult him upon that point.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Proceed and state what you did.—A. Upon my return to my rooms I prepared a draft letter, which I have preserved. I made a copy of it, and went up stairs to the floor above me to the rooms of Mr. Spriggs, of New York, a member of Congress, a colleague of mine, and asked him to read the letter, which he did. I showed him the certificate of stock, and we took notice of that, and then in Mr. Spriggs' presence I folded my reply to Dr. Rogers, and inclosed the certificate of stock. Mr. Spriggs and myself both put our initials at the foot of the draft letter, in order to authenticate it and identify it. Mr. Spriggs then went down to the main floor of the Portland building, where the United States postal box is located, and witnessed my depositing the reply, with the stock in it, in the postal box.

Q. And that is the last you heard of it, I suppose?—A. That is the last I heard of it until this investigation was inaugurated.

Q. Was the certificate that was sent to you made out in your name or transferred to you?—A. It was in blank.

Q. You mean the name in blank?—A. It was in blank.

Q. Well, was it a signed, executed certificate?—A. It was executed in blank.

Q. You mean the name of the stockholder was left in blank so that you could fill it in?—A. So that it could be filled in, but duly executed, so as to be negotiable.

Q. The American Postal Telegraph Company, was it?—A. That is my recollection of it, but my letter characterizes the title of the company.

Q. Did you know that company?—A. No, I knew nothing of it whatever.

Q. Well, you have spoken about some poetry; was there any poetry in it?—A. There was no poetry in it, but it was accompanied by some literature or circulars in relation to the telegraph business, which probably found their way into the wastebasket, as I have never seen them since.

Q. Was it a printed circular?—A. I think it was some printed matter of some kind.

Q. Was it the printed circular relating to the American Postal Company or the Pan-Electric company?—A. That I could not say; I have no recollection of that.

Q. Do you recollect whether there was a descriptive pamphlet of patents?—A. I do not. I have no recollection of that whatever. In fact, the whole thing escaped my mind very shortly afterwards.

Q. I recollect Dr. Rogers's testimony about it. He said that he sent some man (I forget whether you were the one mentioned or not) a pamphlet, in which a reference was made to the American Postal Telegraph Company and the possibility that Congress might establish a postal telegraph company and buy some lines.—A. I have no recollection of any conversation with him. I never saw the man but for about three minutes. I would not know him if he was in the room to-day.

Q. Do you recollect the catalogue itself?

The WITNESS. The pamphlet?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; whether the pamphlet was inclosed in it?

A. I am inclined to think that came separately from the letter.

Q. Do you recollect how long it was—how many pages?—A. No, I do not.

Q. It was a printed document?—A. It was a printed document relating to the telegraph business.

Q. Was there a reference to some poetry in the letter?—A. There was; and I supposed that it was an attempt on the part of the writer to be facetious, and that the poem to which he referred was this printed literature. That was the construction that I put upon it at the time.

Q. That the poetry was in the stock or in the pamphlet?—A. It was in the pamphlet; at least in the letter—under the inclosure of the letter.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. One or two questions, Mr. Beach. Did you know the writer of the letter before its receipt? Had you any acquaintance with Mr. Rogers?—A. I never saw him, as I now recollect, but once, and that was when I was called out of the House and introduced to him in the corridor.

Q. Well, what was the object; who called you out, do you recollect?—A. I was called out by a Dr. Hathel.

Q. Of New York?—A. Of New York. Dr. Hathel was a dentist. He is a dentist to-day, I believe, in New York City. A great many years ago he was the dentist of my family, and the dentist of my mother's family before me. I had not seen Dr. Hathel up to that time probably for fifteen years before. I have never had any personal acquaintance with him except as a dentist in New York City.

Q. When was the date of this transaction? What was the date of the letter?—A. That is the reason I desired the letter, because it will show for itself. My impression is it was somewhere along in the early part of May.

Q. 1884 or 1883?—A. That I could not say. I am not good at remembering dates.

Mr. RANNEY. The letters will show.

The WITNESS. Yes, the letter will speak for itself.

Q. Can you give the substance of the reasons you gave for not accepting the stock?

The CHAIRMAN. We had better have the letter.

The WITNESS. The letter speaks for itself. I can remember its contents very well. I stated I would not accept of anything that I could not pay—

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state. Let the letter be produced.

Mr. RANNEY. The reason is stated in the letter.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. (Resuming.) You have the letter?—A. I have the draft letter.

Q. You have the original letter you received from Rogers?—A. I have the original letter I received from Rogers.

Q. And you have a copy of the one you sent?—A. No; I have the original draft.

Q. You sent a copy of this draft?—A. I sent a copy of this draft, and it was an exact copy of the draft, and so certified at its foot by Mr. Spriggs's initials and my own.

Q. Now, will you state why you had Mr. Spriggs certify to the duplicate?—A. That was for my self-protection, to show that I had returned the stock, and that this letter was written at the time in answer to it.

Q. Did you know of the existence of the Pan-Electric company at that time?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Are you sure that this was a certificate purporting to be issued by the Pan-Electric company?—A. No; my letter, which is the best evidence upon that point, states that I return the certificate for so many shares of the American Postal Telegraph Company, I think. The letter will tell what it was I received.

Q. Do I understand that this interview between you and the New York gentleman, the dentist, was before or after receiving this letter?—A. Oh, it was before; I met him for about three minutes in the corridor.

Q. Was that the interview at which you were introduced to Dr. Rogers?—A. That was the interview at which I was introduced, and that is the only connection or conversation I ever had with Dr. Rogers.

Q. Did anything occur at that interview that would justify or explain the sending of this letter?—A. Not at all. It was a complete surprise to me that I had received anything of the kind, and I felt so humiliated by the fact that it was sent to me that I never mentioned it to my wife. I mentioned it to Judge Holman and one or two others.

Q. You did not know but what it might be some improper scheme to entrap you?—A. That was the construction that I put upon it, sir.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Do you remember what name was signed to the certificate?—A. No, I do not; and since this investigation has arisen I have thought that I was not as prudent as I might have been; that I might have made a copy of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did you come into Congress?—A. I came in in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Q. And have been in continuously since?—A. Continuously since then.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, M. C., sworn and examined.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Mr. Randall, I am desired by the chairman to examine you. You are called here because of what Dr. Rogers has testified—that he sent you some letter or stock?

The WITNESS. Does he testify that he sent me some letter or stock?

Mr. RANNEY. Both. That you declined to receive it and sent it back.

Q. (Continuing.) Did you ever receive anything from Dr. Rogers of any kind?—A. I have no distinct recollection of ever having received a letter from Dr. Rogers, but it is possible that I received a letter, and answered it, as is my rule, which answer must show for itself, and in all human probability states a courteous and respectful declination to embark in any such enterprise.

Q. Did you retain the letter that you received?—A. I have made search for such letter since, unsuccessfully.

Q. Do you remember what enterprise or stock it was?—A. No, sir; I have no distinct recollection, but I know just what my course would be in such a matter as that.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, we do not question that. I wanted to see if it alluded to any stock or any particular enterprise?—A. I have no recollection whatever of ever having seen a paper which purported to be stock.

Q. Or any letter which alluded to any poem being inclosed?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect anything about the letter as I said at first, and I would not be much disposed to stop to read poetry.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any pamphlet inclosed in it?—A. I do not, sir. I have no distinct recollection on that subject. If it came to me, as I said before, I gave in all human probability a respectful reply, which must have been a declination.

Q. Had you any acquaintance with Dr. J. W. Rogers or with Mr. J. Harris Rogers?—A. There was one of these gentlemen who was once connected with the House during my term as Speaker. I do not know which one of the gentlemen it was.

Q. However it may be, you had no acquaintance with him?—A. I may have had a speaking acquaintance. I never had any conversation with him on this subject. If he was the officer of the House that I think, he must have brought letters to me recommending him, but from whom I do not recollect.

Q. Do you remember his attempt, or that on the part of his friends, to get him appointed again electrician at the beginning of the 48th Congress—the 49th?—A. No, sir; I was not Speaker during that Congress, and I think the position he held, if it is the one I mean—well, there is a law on the subject. I think the electrician is appointed by Mr. Clark, who is the Architect.

Q. With the approval of the Speaker?—A. May be that is so. I know I was brought in contact with the appointment some way.

Q. In the Forty eighth Congress you were not Speaker?—A. No, sir.

Q. It has been testified to here that he made an attempt to get appointed again after having been out some years?—A. He never did with me, that I recollect. No one ever attempted any influence. It is not likely he applied to me, I not having any connection with the appointment.

Q. He seemed to have had a letter from Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Cox?—A. Quite likely.

Q. He had a letter from Senator Garland to Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Cox, introducing him.—A. I never had any intercourse with Senator Garland on these subjects, either by letter or otherwise.

Mr. OATES. A mere letter of introduction to Messrs. Cox & Hewitt.

The WITNESS. I do not think he had any to me from Mr. Garland. Perhaps I may have had as to his office years ago.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Senator Harris and Mr. Garland speak of going and doing something about it personally?—A. Well, they did not come to me.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you keep a copy of your letter?—A. No, sir; I do not keep copies. I have not time to keep copies, but I take care that letters I write the public can see.

Q. I understand that, and believe it, too. Can you give us about the dates?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection about the dates.

Q. You have been a member of Congress for how many years?—A. I was first chosen in 1862.

Q. And you have been ever since consecutively?—A. I was sworn in in December, 1863, and I have been re-elected eleven times.

Q. Now, will you state the impropriety of a member of Congress receiving such stock?—A. I am not here to give opinions on such subjects.

Q. You know you would not receive it?—A. You can put it that way. I am quite sure I would not receive it; I mean, not if it had any connection with legislation.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Suppose it had no connection with legislation?—A. Well, a man must judge for himself in all those matters.

Q. It depends upon circumstances?—A. Upon circumstances.

Q. The company spoken of by Dr. Rogers in his testimony is the Rogers Telephone Company?—A. Well, I do not know one from another.

Q. Do you know anything of the Rogers Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. It is a Pennsylvania company?—A. It may be.

Mr. RANNEY. In some cases it was Pan-Electric stock that he sent.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to Mr. Randall, he said the Rogers Telephone Company.

The WITNESS. I have never read his testimony. I know nothing about that. Surely he does not say in any part of his testimony that he sent me any stock?

By Mr. HALL:

Q. There is no letter of yours that appears in the evidence as far as I know. But as I understand you, as a matter of memory, you do not affirm or deny that you ever received such a letter or wrote such a letter?—A. No. I do say that the probabilities are that if I received any such letter I answered it, and which answer would show that I declined it, just as I have told you.

Q. You speak of probabilities? What are the probabilities of your having received a letter proposing to give you quite a large amount of stock in a corporation of that kind?—A. I say very distinctly, no one sent me any stock.

The CHAIRMAN. My recollection is Dr. Rogers did not say he sent you any stock, but that he made a proposition to you of some sort.

Mr. RANNEY. That he assigned it to him. He says distinctly that you declined it at once.

The WITNESS. I do not think I ever saw a share of the stock in my life, but I think the probabilities are that Mr. Rogers may be stating truthfully; that he may have written me a letter; that is, he thinks so; I do not recollect; but if he did, I answered it in all human probability, because I answer nineteen out of every twenty letters that come to me.

Mr. MOFFATT. The testimony of Mr. Rogers was [reading]:

"I wrote to Mr. Randall, telling him that if he would go into that Pennsylvania enterprise we would give him, I think, $100,000; I am not sure; it may have been $50,000, but I wanted him specially because he is a Pennsylvanian.

"Q. What was the capital of your Pennsylvania company?

"A. Five million dollars.

"Q. You may proceed?—A. Mr. Randall wrote me a very courteous letter saying that he did not know enough about the matter——

"Mr. RANNEY (interposing). Have you got the letter?

"The WITNESS. I think my son has a part of it, which says: 'Yours, respectfully, Samuel J. Randall.' But the balance of it is missing. His clerk probably keeps copies of his letters. The amount of it was that he did not know enough about the matter, and I think he intimated that he wanted to hear more about it."

The WITNESS. I think not.

Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT, M. C., sworn and examined:

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Your name has been brought into this investigation. I think you were here once yourself?—Answer. Yes; I heard some testimony given by Dr. Rogers.

Q. Were you solicited ever to embark in this Pan-Electric enterprise and offered a one-tenth interest?—A. I was solicited to embark in it and an interest was offered to me, but I do not remember whether it was a tenth or not.

Q. From whom did you first hear of it, and by whom were you spoken to?—A. The first person who ever spoke to me about it was Gen. Atkins, now Indian Commissioner.

Q. When was that?—A. My recollection is that it was just at the close of the 47th Congress, when Gen. Atkins——

Q. (Interposing.) That would be somewhere before March, 1883?—A. Yes, sir; when Gen. Atkins's term of office as a Representative was about to expire or had expired.

Q. Will you be kind enough to state what occurred then? What was said between you and Mr. Atkins?—A. I think that we were talking about his future in some way. He said to me that he was going out of Congress; that he had been many years in Congress, giving very devoted service, and that it was necessary for him to do something or other to make a living; and I think out of that grew this reference to this thing. I think he stated to me that a proposition had been made to him to take up some telegraph matter, and he asked me what I thought about it. Of course I expressed no opinion about the matter, as I knew nothing about it; but I did express interest in General Atkins, whose public service had been very valuable, and whose integrity was unquestioned.

Q. What was said about stock?—A. I think he said if the enterprise were taken up it would not require the payment of money or any considerable amount of money to get the interest.

Q. What did he say about your going into it?—A. He asked me if I would be willing to join him in an enterprise of that sort. I cannot remember the precise terms of my answer except that I know I did not say I would go in it any way, because I did not know anything about it. I have no doubt I spoke kindly to him about it, and with sincere desire to be of use to him.

Q. Did you make any remark like this to him in the course of the conversation: that he was going out of Congress and you were going in?—A. I do not think I made any such remark; I may have made it, but I do not remember it. I do not think the subject of going in or out of Congress was mentioned, because no suggestion was made that any Congressional action would be required in the matter.

Q. Do you know the grounds on which you declined?—A. On that occasion I do not know that I absolutely declined; I must have answered in some general way. I had subsequent interviews which I will state whenever you are ready.

Q. You may state them —A. I heard no more of this matter until some time I think in the month of May, possibly the end of April, 1883, when I was called upon at my office, as Dr. Rogers testified, by himself and Senator Harris and General Atkins. I am not quite certain whether there was a fourth person or not; I cannot recall. The truth is if I had not heard his testimony—the thing had passed so entirely out of my mind—I should scarcely have recalled that interview. But it is as he stated. They came to my office and proposed to me to take an interest in this company and I declined to take an interest. There were very good reasons why I should decline at that time. Mr. Cooper had just died and I was charged with the care of his estate and many obligations, and I was in very bad health at the close of that session of Congress and generally I did not feel disposed to take any new obligations of any kind, and I declined. But I treated them very courteously, and after talking over the matter said I thought possibly the Western Union Telegraph Company who were interested in the Bell Company might, and I would give them a letter to General Eckert, and I think I did write the letter and give it to them and they took it.

Q. Do you remember the reasons you stated for declining?—A. I do not remember, except having heard Dr. Rogers state, and I have no doubt he stated them correctly.

Q. You gave real reasons?—A. If I gave any I gave real reasons. I know I was unwell at the time, and I was charged with these heavy duties and I did not wish to take up any new matter whatever.

Q. You knew Dr. Rogers or the son, or both, perhaps?—A. If you mean by knowledge, having seen one or the other, and possibly both, I did know them; but nothing more than having been introduced to one or the other, or both, during my term of office here.

Q. A letter has been put in evidence here from Senator Garland, directed to you and Mr. Cox, introducing, or purporting to introduce, or calling your attention to Mr. Rogers. I do not remember the exact language of it. Do you remember the letter being presented?—A. I think I do. If that be a letter which is addressed to me, "Dear friend," or "My dear friends," I would recall it.

Q. I will read you the letter.—A. If you will kindly do so. I think I remember a letter from Senator Garland.

Q. (Reading:)

"UNITED STATES SENATE, January 18, 1884.

"DEAR SIRS AND FRIENDS:"

The WITNESS. Yes; that is it.

Q. (Continuing to read:)

"Permit me to introduce to you Messrs. J. W. Rogers and son, accomplished and scientific gentlemen of this city, who desire to speak with you on some business.

"Please show them all proper attentions and command me when you will.

"Your friend,

"A. H. GARLAND.

"Hons. S. S. COX and A. S. HEWITT,

"House of Representatives."

A. I remember that letter, and I believe the day I was here Dr. Rogers testified that it was never shown to me or delivered to me, and yet I think he must be mistaken, because I remember a letter from Mr. Garland which was unusual in having the word "friends." I was struck with the address. That was all. I remember such a letter, and this must be the letter, for I do not remember ever to have seen any other one. Whether Mr. Cox brought it and showed it to me, and then went out and saw these gentlemen, I do not know; but I certainly remember seeing a letter of that kind.

Q. I think he testified that, to do justice to Senator Garland, he did not know what his purpose was. I believe Senator Garland says he did come to see you?—A. I think he came to see me. That is my impression.

Q. State what occurred.—A. I cannot state very well what occurred, but the letter recalls the fact that somebody came to see me, and I only remember at that or some other time some suggestion was made about the employment of the son as electrician at the Capitol, and I think I was asked at one time to speak to Mr. Clark or the Speaker on the subject.

Q. Who requested you to do that?—A. I can only give an impression again. I should think it was Dr. Rogers who did it.

Q. Do you remember whether father and son were together?—A. I do not.

Q. Or where you met them?—A. I cannot remember, except if I met them it was in the Capitol. They never came to my house.

Q. Do you remember whether, when they sent in a card, you went out and saw them in the corridor?—A. Well, I have a vague impression that I did see them in the corridor. I have a sort of an impression that I saw them either in the appropriations committee room or at the door of the appropriations committee room. It is simply an impression.

Q. Do you remember whether Senator Garland saw you at that time or subsequently?—A. I do not remember that Senator Garland ever saw me on the subject.

Q. Do you remember Senator Harris seeing you?

The WITNESS. In this interview in New York?

Mr. RANNEY. With regard to the appointment?—A. No; he never came to me, as far as I remember.

Q. Do you remember this matter of appointing his son to the office being canvassed?—A. I do not remember of anything that would perhaps justify the word canvass. I remember hearing about it, that he wanted to be appointed; but I never discussed the subject with any one, unless it was with Mr. Clark. I think I may have spoken to Mr. Clark on the subject, and I have a recollection of having spoken to Mr. Clark on the subject, because I remember his saying that the young man was a competent man.

Q. Please state the conversation with Mr. Clark.—A. Well, beyond that I cannot state any. I only remember that I got the impression that the young man was a competent electrician. He had been in the Capitol in the service of Mr. Clark, and he thought well of him.

Q. Do you remember whether when you went to see Mr. Clark you went alone, or whether Mr. Cox was with you?—A. Oh, no; if I saw Mr. Clark about it, I went alone. I certainly did not go with Mr. Cox.

Q. Were you in company with any one when you went to see him?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Did you go with a view of advocating his appointment?—A. You know I am bound to say that my memory is very indistinct of having gone at all, and yet from the fact that I remember Mr. Clark saying to me that he was a competent electrician, I must have seen him. But beyond that I cannot go. If I did it, it was because Senator Garland asked me to go, simply as a matter of good nature. I had no personal interest in it.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Clark saying anything about Mr. Rogers being connected with this telegraph company and it would create a scandal?—A. No, I do not. In fact, I do not remember that anybody ever said that to me.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Clark giving that as a reason why he should not be appointed?—A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you remember his giving any reason why he should not be appointed?—A. No, I do not. I do not remember any special reason.

Q. Were you aware of the introduction of the resolution by Mr. Robinson, of New York, relating to this appointment?—A. I never heard of it until it was testified to here.

Q. When they came to you to get you to take an interest in that enterprise do you remember whether they wanted to sell you an interest or whether they wanted to give it to you to come in on the same terms as the others did?—A. I do not think it ever got to the point of either selling or giving. I think they came to ask me to go into the enterprise, and I declined before we got to any discussion of terms, and I remembered then, as I remember now, what General Atkins had said to me previously, that it was not going to take much money to go into the enterprise.

Q. What did he say it was?—A. Oh, he said they were patents which had value, in his judgment, and that they would be capitalized in such way as to represent what he thought to be the value, and that parties could get in without the payment of much money, or any money, as far as I remember. At any rate, the money question never seemed to have made any impression on my mind.

Q. Are you aware that their telephone was on exhibition during the last part of that Congress?—A. No, I do not know it.

Q. At the Congressional Hotel?—A. I never heard it. I never gave it the slightest attention.

Q. Do you remember Dr. Rogers inviting you over to see it?—A. I do not remember it.

Q. Did you hear it talked of in the House?—A. I did not, further than this single conversation with General Atkins.

Q. Did you ever talk with Casey Young about it?—A. I do not recall any conversation with Col. Young about it.

Q. Are you aware that he was interested in it?—A. Not until these developments came out. I had no knowledge of his being interested in it.

Q. Did you know any member of the House that ever had any of it?—A. I never had the slightest idea that anybody in the House had any interest in it.

Q. You never had any information on that subject?—A. None whatever, except what I have got through the publications of the testimony here. That is all. I have seen the testimony.

Q. You did not know of its being canvassed in the House?—A. Never. No one ever spoke to me about it, except General Atkins, as far as I remember.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. A single question. Will you state the names of the gentlemen who called upon you in New York?—A. Yes, sir; Senator Harris, General Atkins, and Mr. Rogers, as I remember—three.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The father or son?—A. The father. The son may have been with him, but it left no impression on my mind if he was.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Senator Harris, General Atkins, and Mr. Rogers. Was Colonel Young there?—A. I think not; I do not remember seeing Colonel Young. I do not remember ever seeing him in connection with this business.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Mr. Hewitt, I just wish to call your attention to your testimony a moment. You said, as I understood you, that if you called on Mr. Clark or had any conversation with him it was out of regard for Senator Garland. You meant Senator Harris?—A. Yes; that is the only way I ever came to be brought into it.

Q. You used the expression "Senator Garland." You meant Senator Harris?—A. Oh, no; the letter brought to me was from Senator Garland. I never had any letter from Senator Harris.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You do not mean to say you never had any interview with Senator Garland?—A. I never had any interview with him on the subject.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have been asked whether you gave to these gentlemen who called on you in New York your actual reasons for refusing to go into the enterprise?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you had been so situated in the matters that you speak of that you might have gone into an enterprise of this kind for the development of new and untried patents (that is, untried in the way of successful business operation) would it have been an objection on your part that a share in them was offered to you without the payment of a money consideration, you binding yourself to contribute to the development of them?—A. Not at all, if it had no relation to my public duties. If it had had any relation to my public duties I should have thought it a very great objection. Otherwise I would not. It is a very common thing in business. I suppose it has happened to me many hundreds of times in business for people to come to me and propose that very kind of thing, and people take them up or refuse as they think proper. No, there is nothing improper in it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Let me propose one question in that line. Supposing you were a member of Congress and a man should come to you and offer you a one-tenth interest in patents, many of which were completed, in actual operation, on exhibition, and you had examined them and satisfied yourself of their utility and great value, present or prospective, and you were to pay no money for them and to be liable to be assessed afterwards no sum exceeding $150, and that to cover expenses, what would you assert to that proposition?—A. I should be put very much on my guard by such a proposition, and I should look at it very carefully to see how it might embarrass me.

Q. But supposing you added to that fact that there was pending before Congress the question, whether it should adopt the establishing of a postal-telegraph company, and these inventions involved an electrical system which might be adopted, or it was supposed would be adopted by the Government, what would you think of it then if you were a member of Congress?—A. Assuming your statement to be correct I should decline absolutely to have anything to do with it.

Q. Why?—A. Simply for the reason I have already given: that if I thought the proposition would bring me in any way in conflict with my public duties, or in suspicious relations with my public duties, I should be careful to avoid it. It might be the most honest enterprise in the world, but one holding a public trust should be like Cæsar's wife—above suspicion.

Q. If you had examined it and concluded it would be worth presently or prospectively a half a million dollars and you were to see nothing wrong, what would you think of it then?—A. Well, I should want to look at the source from which such an offer came. If my father or father-in-law, if I had them, were to offer me such an offer, I should take it instantly; but if I knew nothing of the parties, I should be very suspicious. I do not know that I should decline a half a million dollars if it was offered to me. I will take it under the will of Mr. Tilden to-morrow, if he should give it to me.

Q. But if you suspected it had any relation as a gift involving your official action, I do not think you would take it, would you?—A. I certainly would not.

Q. If it was simply for your name and influence because you were a member of Congress?—A. If it was because I was a member of Congress, I certainly would not; but if it was because I was a man engaged in business and was willing to take the risk of failure, which I am very willing to do always, I should probably take it; if it was offered because I was a member of Congress, I should decline it.

Q. Do you believe in the saying, "Beware of the Greeks when bearing gifts"?—A. Well, it depends upon whether they are "the Greeks."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand you would be controlled, in deciding the matters suggested by the questions put by Judge Ranney, by the fact whether it was intended to or would affect your official action.—A. I think so. If I thought the gift was proposed in order to affect my official action, I should decline it without reference to the value of it.

Q. Would the fear of being misunderstood by the public control you so as to prevent you accepting?—A. On the contrary, since I have been a member of Congress, I have gone into many enterprises, in which I had to pay very much money, without fear of being misunderstood by the public.

Q. Something has been said about the liability being limited to $150. Suppose you were to be liable to unlimited assessments for the purpose of developing the enterprise, would that fact make a difference?—A. It would be no objection in my business capacity. It might be an objection in my Congressional capacity.

Q. If it affected your official relations?—A. Yes. There are two enterprises that are usually started in that way, speculative ones—one, mines or mining, and the other patents; and the value of a mine or patent in advance no man knows. It has to be determined by experiments and the expenditure of money. You must open the mine or develop the patent. It takes money. Now, I know of patents that cost a very small amount of money and that have realized millions; the Bell patent for one, and the india-rubber patent for another. Those patents cost a very small amount of money, and whether you call the capital ten millions on paper or ten thousand dollars, it does not make a bit of difference as to the value of the property.

Q. Do you know of any patent that is untried in a business way, that is not put into operation for business purposes, that would be worth in the market five millions?

The WITNESS. In advance of its—

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I have known of such cases. I can give you a patent which has produced a great deal more than five million dollars, which really was sold for twenty thousand pounds originally; that is, the Bessemer patent. Mr. Bessemer's patent has yielded to the owners many millions of dollars, and yet the patent was originally sold to the Dowlais Works for twenty thousand pounds, and repurchased by Mr. Bessemer for the money they had given him.

Q. Do you know anything about the development of the Bell patents?—A. I know nothing.

Q. A two-third interest seems to have been parted with by the inventor for nothing.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to that if it is to go into the case.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the truth, and I desire to have it go in.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not know about that.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is quite enough to let the witness argue without the chairman entering into the argument himself.

Mr. MILLARD. You are putting the very questions you would not let Mr. Randall answer that I put.

The CHAIRMAN. I am following Mr. Ranney.

Mr. RANNEY. You are asking for an opinion on a supposed fact.

The CHAIRMAN. This fact as to the Bell patents has appeared in evidence, but I will not go further.

By Mr. MOFFATT :

Q. In developing these patents generally are gentlemen invited into them who have large experience and means?—A. As a rule.

Q. They do not go to impecunious people to contribute?—A. There are impecunious men that cannot contribute money that can contribute brains.

The CHAIRMAN. And character?

The WITNESS. And character.

Mr. MILLARD. And influence?

The WITNESS. And influence.

Mr. MILLARD. And official influence?

The WITNESS. I suppose it is possible. I have no experience in that line.

By Mr. HALL :

Q. In regard to this matter of business interests which may ultimately involve some legislation in Congress or be effected rather by some legislation in Congress, is it not practically impossible to enter upon any large business enterprise which ultimately might not be affected by legislation in Congress?—A. I should think it exceedingly difficult. Congress is assuming jurisdiction over everything and I think it very difficult indeed.

Q. And when you speak of being very careful of entering into enterprises of this kind, you mean looking to the immediate condition of things?—A. If I supposed, in looking at the enterprise, that it was going to be the subject of legislation in Congress I should let it alone—if it were outside the ordinary things that have been the subjects of legislation from time immemorial. I should not object to it. For example, I am in the iron business. I cannot sit in the House, never could have sat in the House and failed to see that the tariff question was in some way affecting my interests, either favorably or adversely. Other people in the iron business think I am a fool, and am going against my own interests all the time. Therefore I feel relieved from any public censure.

Q. When you speak of the subject of Congressional legislation, do you mean where it appears to you that it is a scheme going to depend on Congressional legislation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or do you mean a scheme that, without design of the promoters, sometime may be affected by legislation?—A. Well, the probability of such a thing would have weight in my mind—the probability that I might be called upon to act upon it. I would keep out of it if I could. If I thought it was improbable that I should be called upon to do anything about it, then it would not influence my judgment. But if I thought I was likely to be called to vote upon the question connected with the enterprise, I should certainly keep out of it.

Q. Would not your being in the iron business to-day involve a question?—A. No; I think the question has been well settled by precedent in the House for a long time. For instance, a banker, whether he can vote upon questions affecting the banking business, and a man in the iron business can vote upon questions affecting the tariff.

Q. Take the case of telegraph companies. Do you regard legislation of that character so remote and problematical as to come within the rule of being interested in telegraph companies?—A. Oh, no. I think if it was remote and problematical it would not be a serious question in my mind. But if it did come, I should refrain from voting if I thought it affected my immediate personal interests.

Q. I ask you, then, whether it is not true of nearly all lines of business that the fact that ultimately some legislation might affect the business would not preclude persons from entering Congress?—A. I answer that by saying that I have not the least hesitation on the question of tariff affecting iron, because in my mind I know I am controlled by general principles which address themselves to my conscience without relation to my personal interest, and I never have hesitated to express my opinion. That is a question of personal judgment, and I feel strong enough before the public and my own conscience to sit there and do it.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. Is it not your experience and judgment that with honorable men, insensible biases and influences have more control over their minds than direct bribes?—A. With highly honorable men the fact is, they are so straight they bend backwards and go the other way, as a rule. I think that if an honorable gentleman is conscious of having an interest he is apt to lean to the other side—not in favor of but against it; and I have seen gentlemen refrain from voting upon important questions in the House for fear they might be misunderstood.

Q. I refer to the question of insensible bias.—A. Well, if you ask me about an insensible bias, I am not sensible to any insensible bias.

The CHAIRMAN (laughing). I have never before been able to understand the reason for your course on the tariff.

SERENO E. PAYNE sworn and examined.

By RANNEY:

Question. I desire to examine you. How long have you been a member of Congress?—Answer. I came in in the 48th Congress.

Q. Do you know Mr. Casey Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Since soon after that Congress was organized. He was chairman of the committee on which I was appointed.

Q. Did you ever own or have offered to you any Pan-Electric stock?—A. Well, I can tell you all there was about it.

Q. That is what we want. I do not know what you do know.—A. The House appointed a subcommittee, consisting of Mr. Young as chairman, and Mr. Storm of Pennsylvania and myself, to go down to Hot Springs, Ark., and examine into the conduct of the Government property there. On the way down, I think it was, I had some conversation with Mr. Young in which he was relating an experiment with the Pan-Electric telephone he had witnessed shortly before that, and he characterized it as a very wonderful invention, and Mr. Rogers, the inventor of it, as a wonderful electrician. I think he said that Mr. Rogers had at one time been electrician of the House. He said that they had organized or were organizing a company, and told who was connected with it; mentioned Senator Harris and Senator Garland and himself; I do not know but others, and said that they were organizing, I believe, under the laws of Tennessee, and that they paid in nothing for their stock except an assessment by way of paying expenses to develop the telephone, and that he thought it was going to be a profitable undertaking.

In the course of the conversation I suggested to him that I had understood that the Bell patents antedated everything else telephonic, and that I thought there would be a conflict with the Bell company in such an undertaking; and he said that Senator Garland was counsel for the incorporators, and they had a written opinion where he had examined the subject very carefully, and that they had nothing to fear from the Bell patents. I do not think he stated what the points were in which they were able to meet the Bell patent, and in the course of the conversation he said that if I wanted some stock he could get some for me on the same basis that the others had theirs. I think I asked him if the stock was not assessable under the Tennessee laws—if the parties were not liable not only for the amount but additional amounts in case the company became involved, and I think he told me they were not, and I finally told him it looked to me a good deal like investing in a law-suit or litigation, and that I did not care for any of it, and that closed the conversation, and we did not have any other.

Q. He told you if you wanted some of it you could go in at the same price the others were going in for?—A. Well, on the same terms. I understood him to say that they contributed ratably for the expense of developing the telephone and carrying on whatever litigation they might have.

Q. Did he tell you there was a limitation of $150, and the rest of it was not to exceed that, unless by authority of the majority of his associates?—A. No, sir; I do not think he went into details of that kind. I do not know but he told me how much they had paid. I am not certain about that.

Q. Where was this conversation?—A. I think it was on the cars on the way to Hot Springs. What part of the journey it was I cannot say.

Q. Can you give the time more definitely?—A. I know we were there in Hot Springs on St. Patrick's day, and it was in the year 1884. It must have been some time in February or March that we went there. We were there for a week or more.

Q. Was there anybody else with you and Mr. Young at that time?

The WITNESS. During this conversation?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I have an impression Mr. Storm was there a part of the time, but I am not certain about that. There were others in the car—Mr. Storm, Mr. Ranney, the stenographer, and Col. Low.

Q. Mr. Linney?—A. Mr. Linney was the stenographer. Col. Low of the Architect's Office was there.

Q. Whose stenographer was Mr. Linney?—A. He was the stenographer of the committee.

Q. You were at that time a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Young on the committee?—A. He was chairman of the committee. It was a subcommittee from the Committee on Expenses of the Interior Department. Mr. Young was chairman of the committee and of the subcommittee.

Q. Do you remember who in the house he named was in the matter?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that he named any member of the House. I think he mentioned General Johnston's name and Senator Garland and Senator Harris.

Q. And you have never heard anything about it since until this matter came up?—A. No, sir.

(Here the witness left the stand.)

CECIL CLAY resumed the stand.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Have you looked up the items which you were requested to look up in a letter of mine—I mean all of them?—Answer. All of them, except to bring the papers which resulted in suits. There was one of the cases mentioned in the original papers which resulted in suits. Those papers are being gotten up, and can be brought here in the morning if you want them.

Q. The first list was where they were refused?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those are how many in number?—A. Six cases—five which were absolute and one which seemed to be.

Q. You have produced all the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many were referred to the Interior Department?—A. All of them.

Q. How many of them?—A. All of the five in which there was a definite refusal. One case in which I thought best to bring the papers was an application, I think, for general information as to how the thing should be gotten out, and the letter was written by the Department, and after that no further steps seem to have been taken by the applicant.

Q. How many cases did you find where application was granted?—A. I think ten in that original paper.

Q. How many were referred to the Interior Department?—A. All, I think, but one. That is my recollection of the list.

Q. And which is that one?—A. That one, I think, is the Roberts torpedo case—something or other. I do not know what it is. I think it is a patent for exploding oil-wells.

Q. What was done with that? This is a new list.—A. That list is got out in reply to one of the requests in your note as to stating which of the ten cases mentioned in the original list had been referred to the Interior Department.
